

GBPPR Mind Control Devices and Experiments

Overview

During our ongoing projects to manipulate the minds of people we don't like, the GBPPR laboratories have also been dabbling in the fine arts of mind control and brainwashing.

Seriously...

While the vast majority of the information available to the public is nothing more than hearsay, some of these "mind control" ideas appear to be plausible - even for the amateur experimenter!

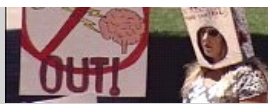

Brainwashing seems to be everywhere these days. People will say one thing, then do the other. They then run off to their isolated, private gated communities to live off their huge bank accounts - further isolating themselves from the common folk.

"A UHF remote stimulation system working in the 915 MHz band is described, which generates current pulses in three stimulation channels. The amplitude, duration, repetition rate and channel can be controlled from a remotely located control panel. This system has been installed at Holloman Air Force Base, New Mexico, to stimulate the brain of free ranging chimpanzees and study the induced modifications on individual and social behavior."

Example of a test conducted at Yale which used the famous "Stimoceiver," so named because it receives an impulse via radio control to deliver trains of electrical pulses. It also picks up the natural activity of the human brain and transmits it to a sensing station at a computer. It was this setup that formed the first direct connection between a human brain and a computer. When the amygdala showed electrical activity, an inhibitory center was stimulated. The amygdala controls aggression. (i.e. When the animal became disgruntled or aggressive, the sensor would detect it and deliver a train of pulses to make it literally impossible to feel anger.)
