Informers' privilege. The government's privilege to withhold from disclosure the identity of persons who furnish information on violations of law to officers charged with enforcement of that law. Roviaro v. United States, 353 U.S. 53, 59, 77 S.Ct. 623, 627, 1 L.Ed.2d 639. In the exercise of its power to formulate evidentiary rules for federal criminal cases, the Supreme Court has consistently declined to hold that an informer's identity need always be disclosed in a federal criminal trial or in a preliminary hearing. McCray v. Illinois, 386 U.S. 300, 312, 87 S.Ct. 1056, 1063, 18 L.Ed.2d 62. A defendant is entitled to a veracity hearing if he makes a substantial preliminary showing that an affidavit knowingly and intentionally, or with reckless disregard for the truth, included in a warrant affidavit a false statement necessary to the finding of probable cause. However, the deliberate falsity or reckless disregard whose impecachment is permitted is only that of the affiant, not of any nongovernmental informant. Franks v. Delaware, 438 U.S. 154, 171, 98 S.Ct. 2674, 2684, 57 L.Ed.2d 667.

In foro /ín forow/. In a (or the) forum, court, or tribunal.

In foro conscientiae /ín forow konshaenishiyawel/. In the tribunal of conscience; conscientiously, considered from a moral, rather than a legal, point of view.

In foro contentioso /ín forow kantensihiyawsow/. In the forum of contention or litigation.

In foro ecclesiastico /ín forow akiliyiszatowel/. In an ecclesiastical forum; in the ecclesiastical court.

In foro seculari /ín forow sekyaléray/. In a secular forum or court.

Infornitium, homicide per /ín forow howmasayd pír infartyúwn-iýam/. Where a man doing a lawful act, without intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another. Inferred by order of fact; by implication; as, infra corpus civitatis, within the body of the country; infra præsidia, within the guards. So of time, during: infra furorem, during the madness. This use is not classical. The use of infra for intra seems to have sprung up among the barbarians after the fall of the Roman empire.

Infra annos nubiles /ín forow áños n(y)úwbaliyaz/. Under marriageable years; not yet of marriageable age.

Infra annum /ín forow ánám/. Or under or within a year.

Infra annum luctus /ín forow ánám láktas/. (Within the year of mourning.) The phrase is used in reference to the marriage of a widow within a year after her husband's death, which was prohibited by the civil law.

Infra brachia /ín forow brykiyowel/. Within her arms. Used of a husband de jure, as well as de facto. Also inter brachia. It was in this sense that a woman could only have an appeal for murder of her husband inter brachia sua.

Infra civitatem /ín forow sivtétyam/. Within the state.

Infra corpus comitatus /ín forow kórps komítétyas/. Within the body (territorial limits) of a county. In English law, waters which are infra corpus comitatus are exempt from the jurisdiction of the admiralty.

Infraction. A breach, violation, or infringement; as of a law, a contract, a right or duty. A violation of a statute for which the only sentence authorized is a fine and which violation is expressly designated as an infringement.

Infra dignitatem curiae /ín forow dignétyam kyiuriyewel/. Beneath the dignity of the court; unworthy of the consideration of the court. Where a bill in equity is brought upon a matter too trifling to deserve the attention of the court, it is demurrable, as being infra dignitatem curiae.

Infra furorem /ín forow fyróram/. During madness; while in a state of insanity.

Infra hospitium /ín forow hospihiyewel/. Within the inn. When a traveler's baggage comes infra hospitium, i.e., in the care and under the custody of the innkeeper, the latter's liability attaches. Davidson v. Madison Corporation, 231 App.Div. 421, 247 N.Y.S. 789, 795.

Infra jurisdictionem /ín forow jyuréddzétyowené/. Within the jurisdiction.

Infra praesidium /ín forow prásidiiyewel/. Within the protection; within the defenses. In international law, when a prize, or other captured property, is brought into a port of the captors, or within their lines, or otherwise under their complete custody, so that the chance of rescue is lost, it is said to be infra praesidia.

In fraudem creditororum /íñ fródam kredéstoróram/. In fraud of creditors; with intent to defraud creditors.

In fraudem legem /íñ fródam liyayjas/. In fraud of the law. With the intent or view of evading the law.

Infringement /ínfrinjment/. A breaking into; a trespass or encroachment upon; a violation of a law, regulation, contract, or right. Used especially of invasions of the rights secured by patents, copyrights, and trademarks. See also Encroachment; Trespass.

Contributory infringement. The intentional aiding of one person by another in the unlawful making or selling of a patented invention; usually done by making or selling one part of the patented invention, or one element of the combination, with the intent and purpose of so aiding.

Criminal infringement. Any person who infringes a copyright willfully and for purposes of commercial advantage or private financial gain is subject to a fine and/or imprisonment. Copyright Act, § 506 (17 U.S.C. A.).

Infringement of copyright. Unauthorized use of copyrighted material; i.e. use without permission of copyright holder. In determining whether there is a copyright infringement, and not a "fair use" exemption, the factors to be considered include: (1) the purpose and character of the use, including whether such use is of a commercial nature or is for nonprofit educational purposes; (2) the nature of the copyrighted work; (3) the amount and substantiality of the portion used in relation to the copyrighted work as a whole; and (4) the effect of the use upon the potential market for or value of the copyrighted work. Copyright Act, § 107 (17 U.S.C.A.).

Remedies for copyright infringement include injunctive relief, impounding and disposition of infringing articles, and recovery of actual damages and profits. In lieu of actual damages, the federal Copyright Act provides for statutory damages which will vary as to whether the infringement was willful or unintentional. Copyright Act, § 504 (17 U.S.C.A.).

See also Fair use doctrine; Fragmented literal similarity.

Infringement of patent. The unauthorized making, using, or selling for practical use, or for profit, of an invention covered by a valid claim of a patent during the life of the patent. It may involve any one or all of the acts of making, using, and selling. Phillips Electronic & Pharmaceutical Industries Corp. v. Thermal & Electronics Industries, Inc., D.C.N.J., 311 F.Supp. 17, 39.

To constitute infringement of a patent claim there must be present in the infringing device or combination every element of such claim or its equivalent, so combined as to produce substantially the same result operating in substantially the same way. Montgomery Ward and Co. v. Clair, C.C.A.Mo., 123 F.2d 878, 881. See 35 U.S.C.A. § 100 et seq. See also Contributory infringement.

Infringement of trademark. The unauthorized use, or colorable imitation of the mark already appropriated by another, on goods of a similar class. Northam Warren Corporation v. Universal Cosmetic Co., C.C.A.Ill., 18 F.2d 774, 775. It exists if words or designs used by defendant are identical with or so similar to plaintiff's that they are likely to cause confusion, or deceive or mislead others. One who affixes the trademark of another to similar articles in such way that his use of it is liable to cause confusion in the trade, or is calculated to mislead purchasers and induce them to buy infringer's articles as goods of the other thus depriving the latter of the full benefit of his property. James Heddon's Sons v. Millsite Steel & Wire Works, C.C.A.Mich., 128 F.2d 6, 8.

See 15 U.S.C.A. § 1051 et seq. See also Likelihood of confusion.

Infringer. One who infringes the rights secured by copyright, patent or trademark holders. See Infringement.

In full. Relating to the whole or full amount; as a receipt in full. Complete; giving all details.

In full life. Continuing in both physical and civil existence; that is, neither actually dead nor civiliter mortuus.

In futuro /in f(ý)atyúrow/. In future; at a future time; the opposite of in præsenti.

In generalibus versatur error /in jénaréýlbas varséytor éhrar/. Error dwells in general expressions.

In generali passagio /in jénaréýlay páséyjíyow/. In the general passage; that is, on the journey to Palestine with the general company or body of Crusaders. This term was of frequent occurrence in the old law of essoins, as a means of accounting for the absence of the party, and was distinguished from simplex passagium, which meant that he was performing a pilgrimage to the Holy Land alone.

In genere /in jénaríy/. In kind; in the same genus or class; the same in quantity and quality, but not individually the same. For example, laws on the same subject. See in pari materia. In the Roman law, things which may be given or restored in genere are distinguished from such as must be given or restored in specie; that is, identically.

For easement in gross, see Easement.

Ingenuitas /inj(ý)uwaťás/. Lat. Freedom; liberty; the state or condition of one who is free. Also liberty given to a servant by manumission.

Ingenuitas regni /inj(ý)uwaťás régnay/. In old English law, the freemen, yeomanry, or commonalty of the kingdom. Applied sometimes also to the barons.

Ingenuus /injényuwa/. In Roman law, a person who, immediately that he was born, was a free person. He was opposed to libertinus, or libertus, who, having been born a slave, was afterwards manumitted or made free. It is not the same as the English law term "generosus", which denoted a person not merely free, but of good family. There were no distinctions among ingenui; but among libertinii there were (prior to Justinian's abolition of the distinctions) three varieties, namely: Those of the highest rank, called "Cives Romani"; those of the second rank, called "Latini Juniani"; and those of the lowest rank, called "Dediticii".

Ingratitude. In Roman law, ingratitude was accounted a sufficient cause for revoking a gift or recalling the liberty of a freedman. Such is also the law of France with respect to the first case. But the English and American law has left the matter entirely to the moral sense. Ungrateful.

In gremio legis /in griýmũyow liyjás/. In the bosom of the law; in the protection of the law; in abeyance.
INGRESS

Ingress. The act, or right of, entering. Access; entrance.

Ingress, egress, and regress. These words express the right (e.g. of a lessee) to enter, go upon, and return from the lands in question.

Ingressu /ingrēs(y)u/. In English law, an ancient writ of entry, by which the plaintiff or complainant sought an entry into his lands. Abolished in 1833.

Ingressus /ingrēss/us/. In old English law, ingress; entry. The relief paid by an heir to the lord was sometimes so called.

In gross. In a large quantity or sum; without deduction, division, or particulars; by wholesale. At large, in one sum; not annexed to or dependent upon another thing. Common in gross is such as is neither appendant nor appurtenant to land, but is annexed to a man's person. See also in bulk.

For easement in gross, see Easement.

Ingrossator /ingrōsatory/. In old English law, an engrosser. Ingrossator magni rotuli /ingrōsatory māgnay rōtyslay/, engrosser of the great roll; called "clerk of the pipe".

Ingrossing. The act of making a fair and perfect copy of any document from a rough draft of it, in order that it may be executed or put to its final purpose. See Engrossment.

Inhabit. Synonymous with dwell, live, reside, sojourn, stay, rest. See also Domicile; Residence.

Inhabitant. One who resides actually and permanently in a given place, and has his domicile there. Ex parte Shaw, 145 U.S. 444, 12 S.Ct. 935, 36 L.Ed. 768.

The words "inhabitant," "citizen," and "resident," as employed in different constitutions to define the qualifications of electors, means substantially the same thing; and, in general, one is an inhabitant, resident, or citizen at the place where he has his domicile or home. But the terms "resident" and "inhabitant" have also been held not synonymous, the latter implying a more fixed and permanent abode than the former, and importing privileges and duties to which a mere resident would not be subject. A corporation can be an inhabitant only in the state of its incorporation. Sperry Products v. Association of American Railroads, C.C.A.N.Y., 132 F.2d 408, 411. See also Domicile; Residence.

In hac parte /in hāc pārti/. In this behalf; on this side.

In hac verba /in hiyk vārba/. In these words; in the same words.

In heredes non solent transire actiones quae pœnales ex maleficio sunt /in haridyiz nōn sōvlant trenzáziriy ākshiyōwiyiz kwiy pānēyiyiz ēkss sfish(ī)yow sānt/. Penal actions arising from anything of a criminal nature do not pass to heirs.

Inhere /inhir/. To exist in and inseparable from something else; to stick fast. To be inherent.

Inherently dangerous. Danger inhering in instrumentality or condition itself at all times, so as to require special precautions to prevent injury; not danger arising from mere casual or collateral negligence of others with respect thereto under particular circumstances. Brown v. City of Craig, 350 Mo. 836, 168 S.W.2d 1080, 1082. An object which has in itself the potential for causing harm or destruction, against which precautions must be taken. Dangerous per se, without requiring human intervention to produce harmful effects; e.g., explosives.

See also Dangerous instrumentality; Dangerous weapon; Strict liability.

Inherent or latent defect. Fault or deficiency in a thing, no matter the use made of such, which is not easily discoverable and which is fixed in the object itself and not from without. See also Latent defect; Strict liability.

Inherent powers /inhirant pāwar/. An authority possessed without its being derived from another. A right, ability, or faculty of doing a thing, without receiving that right, ability, or faculty from another. Powers originating from the nature of government or sovereignty, i.e., powers over and beyond those explicitly granted in the Constitution or reasonably to be implied from express grants; e.g., in the foreign policy area, the Executive's inherent powers have been held to confer authority upon the President to settle the claims of American nationals against a foreign state as part of a diplomatic agreement. Charles T. Main Int'l, Inc. v. Khuzestan Water & Power Author., C.A.Mass., 651 F.2d 800, 809-10. See also Power.

Inherent powers of court. The "inherent power" of a court is that which is necessary for the proper and complete administration of justice and such power is resident in all courts of superior jurisdiction and essential to their existence; e.g., sentencing and contempt powers. People v. Cirillo, 100 Misc.2d 527, 419 N.Y.S.2d 820, 824; power to enjoin vexatious litigation. In re Martin-Trigona v. Lavien, et al., C.A.Conn., 737 F.2d 1254.

Inherent right. One which abides in a person and is not given from something or someone outside itself. A right which a person has because he is a person. See inalienable rights.

Inheretrix /inhēhrstriks/. The old term for "heiress".

Inherit /inhēhr/. To take or receive by inheritance; to take by descent as a matter of law as heir on death of ancestor; though this item has also come to mean to receive by devise (i.e., by will). Acquisition of property by descent and distribution. The word is also used in its popular sense as the equivalent of to take or receive. See also Descent; Inheritance.

Inheritable blood. Blood which has the purity (freedom from attainder) and legitimacy necessary to give its possessor the character of a lawful heir. That which is capable of being the medium for the transmission of an inheritance.

Inheritance /inhérəndəs/. That which is inherited or to be inherited. Property which descends to heir on the intestate death of another. An estate or property which a person has by descent, as heir to another, or which he may transmit to another, as his heir. See Bequest; Descent; Heirs; Inherit; Legacy.

Civil law. The succession of the heir to all the rights and property of the estate-leaver. It is either testamentary, where the heir is created by will, or ab intestato, where it arises merely by operation of law.

Inheritance tax. Tax imposed in some states upon the privilege of receiving property from a decedent at death as contrasted with an estate tax which is imposed on the privilege of transmitting property at death. A tax on the transfer or passing of estates or property by legacy, devise, or intestate succession; not a tax on the property itself, but on the right to acquire it by descent or testamentary gift. Compare Estate tax.

Inhibition /inhibitʃən/. Restraining or holding back. In Ecclesiastical law, a writ issuing from a superior ecclesiastical court, forbidding an inferior judge to proceed further in a cause pending before him. In this sense it is closely analogous to the writ of prohibition at common law. Also the writ of a bishop or ecclesiastical judge that a clergyman shall cease from taking any duty.

In old English law, the name of a writ which forbids a judge from further proceeding in a cause pending before him; it was in the nature of a prohibition. In the civil law, a prohibition which the law makes or a judge ordains to an individual. See Immigration.

In his enim quae sunt favorabilia animae, quamvis sunt damnosa rebus, fiat aliquando extensio statuti /in his enim kwiy sınt mırıy fıkáltēytas nı́gıkwam pras Kıbrıstər/. Prescription does not run against a mere power or faculty to act.

In individuo /in indavıd(y)uwow/. In the distinct, individual, or individual form; in specie.

In infinitum /in infoninguw/. Infinitely; indefinitely. Imports indefinite succession or continuance.

In initio /in śnishinguw/. In or at the beginning. In initio litis, at the beginning, or in the first stage of the suit.

In integrum /in antegram/. To the original or former state.

In invidiam /in anvid(y)uwom/. To excite a prejudice. In invitum /in anvątwom/. Against an unwilling party; against one not assenting. A term applied to proceedings against an adverse party, to which he does not consent.

In ipsis faucibus /in ipswa fósabas/. In the very throat or entrance. In ipsis faucaibus of a port, actually entering a port.

Iniquissima pax est anteposenda justissimo bello /inikwisima préks ěst āntapənända ġăstisumow bólov/. The most unjust peace is to be preferred to the justest war.

Iniquum est alios permettere, alios inhibere mercaturem /náyıkwam ěst éyk(ı)yows parmitəri, éyk(ı)yows inh(ı)bəriy márktəryúram/. It is inequitable to permit some to trade and to prohibit others.

Iniquum est ali quem rei sui esse judicem /náyıkwam ěst álakwam rıyay s(y)úwáy ěşıy júwdəsam/. It is wrong for a man to be a judge in his own cause.

Iniquum est ingenius hominis non esse liberam rerum suarum alienationem /náyıkwam ěst ĭnjen-yuwa hámmínabas nón ěsíy lıbrəm rırim s(y)úwəram ěyliyéyshiyównäm/. It is unjust that freemen should not have the free disposal of their own property.

Initial. That which begins or stands at the beginning. The first letter of a person’s name.

Initial appearance. After arrest, the first appearance of the accused before a judge or magistrate. See Arraignment; Preliminary hearing.

Initial carrier. In the law of bailments, the carrier who first receives the goods and begins the process of their transportation, afterwards delivering them to another carrier for the further prosecution or completion of their journey. But it has also been defined as the one contracting with the shipper, and not necessarily the one whose line constitutes the first link in transportation.

Initial determination. With respect to social security benefit claims, refers to first determination of agency of claimants’ application for benefits. Several levels of appeal are provided for from an initial claim denial. 42 U.S.C.A. § 405(b).

Initiate. Commence; start; originate; introduce; inchoate. Curtesy initiate is the interest which a husband has in the wife’s land after a child is born who may inherit, but before the wife dies. To propose for approval—as schedule of rates. Idaho Power Co. v. Thompson, D.C. Idaho, 19 F.2d 547, 579.

Initiation fee. The sum paid on joining an organization or club for privileges of membership. Derby v. U. S., D.C.Mass., 17 F.2d 119, 120.

Initiative. An electoral process whereby designated percentages of the electorate may initiate legislative or constitutional changes through the filing of formal petitions to be acted on by the legislature or the total electorate. The power of the people to propose bills and laws, and to enact or reject them at the polls, independent of legislative assembly. Hughes v. Bryan, Okl., 425 P.2d 952, 954. Not all state constitutions provide for initiative. See also Referendum.

In itinere. In eyre; on a journey or circuit. In old English law, the justices in itinere (or in eyre) were those who made a circuit through the kingdom once in seven years for the purposes of trying causes. In course of transportation; on the way; not delivered to the vendee. In this sense the phrase is equivalent to "in transitu."

In judgment. In a court of justice; in a seat of judgment.

In judiciis, minori statui succurrirritur. In Roman law, in the course of an actual trial; before a judge (judex). A cause, during its preparatory stages, conducted before the pr reactor, was said to be in jure; in its second stage, after it had been sent to a judex for trial, it was said to be in judicio.

In judicio non creditur nisi juratis. In a trial, credence is given only to those who are sworn.
Injure. To violate the legal right of another or inflict an actionable wrong. To do harm to, damage, or impair.

To hurt or wound, as the person; to impair the soundness of, as health; to damage. Ziolkowski v. Continental Casualty Co., 284 Ill.App. 505, 1 N.E.2d 410, 412. As applied to a building, "injure" means to materially impair or destroy any part of the existing structure. See Injury.

Injuries to those rights which a person possesses as being a member of society.

Absolute injuries. Injuries to those rights which a person possesses as being a member of society.

Injuries. Any wrong or damage done to another, either in his person, rights, reputation, or property. The invasion of any legally protected interest of another. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 7.

Accidental injury. A bodily injury by accident.

Within worker's compensation acts, one which occurs in the course of the employment, unexpectedly, and without the affirmative act or design of the employee; it being something which is unforeseen and not expected by the person to whom it happens. Any injury to an employee in the course of his employment due to any dispute, and which may either be discharged or made perpetual, according to the result of the controversy, as soon as the rights of the parties are determined. Fed.R.Civ.P. 65.

Preventive injunction. One which prohibits the defendant from doing a particular act or commands him to refrain from it.

Prohibitory injunction. An order of a court in the form of a judgment which directs one not to do a certain thing; sometimes called a restraining order. See Restraining order.

Provisional injunction. Another name for a preliminary or temporary injunction or an injunction pendente lite.

Restraining order. See Order; Restraining order; Temporary restraining order.

Temporary injunction. A preliminary or provisional injunction, or one granted pendente lite; as opposed to a final or perpetual injunction. A provisional remedy to preserve subject matter of controversy pending trial. Electronic Data Systems Corp. v. Powell, Tex.Civ.App., 508 S.W.2d 137, 139. It is one which operates until dissolved by interlocutory order or until final hearing on matter. Brines v. McIlhaney, Tex., 596 S.W.2d 519, 523. See also Temporary restraining order.

INJURY
occurrence referable to a definite time, and of the happening of which he can give notice to his employer, regardless of whether the injury is a visible hurt from external force, or disease or infection induced by sudden and castastrophic exposure. Lerner v. Rump Bros., 212 App.Div. 747, 209 N.Y.S. 698, 701. The term is to receive a broad and liberal construction with a view to compensating injured employes where injury resulted through some accidental means, was unexpected and undesigned and may be the result of mere mishance or miscalculation as to effect of voluntary action. It includes an accident causing injury to the physical structure of the body, notwithstanding a natural weakness predisposing to injury. For purposes of workers' com-penation act, a "pain" can be classified as an "injury," Herndon v. Albuquerque Public Schools, App., 92 N.M.
635, 593 P.2d 470, 475; as can mental ailments or nervous conditions directly resulting from physical injury, Campbell v. Kiser Corp. & Diecast, 137 Ind.App. 366, 208 N.E.2d 727, 730. The words indicate, not so much the existence of an accident, but rather the idea that the injury was unexpected or unintended.

See also Accident; Compensable injury; Continuous injury; Damages; Disability; Great bodily injury; Harm; Loss; Malicious injury; Pain and suffering; Pecuniary injury.

Bankruptcy law. Willful and malicious conversion is an "injury" within meaning of Bankruptcy Code section stating that individual is not discharged from debt for willful and malicious "injury" by debtor. Bankruptcy
Code § 523. In re Holtz, Bkrtcy.N.D.Iowa, 62 B.R. 782, 785.

Bodily injury. Physical pain, illness or any impairment of physical condition. "Serious bodily injury" means bodily injury which creates a substantial risk of death or which causes serious, permanent disfigurement, or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ. Model Penal Code, § 210.0.

Civil injury. Injuries to person or property, resulting from a breach of contract, delict, or criminal offense, which may be redressed by means of a civil action. An infringement or privation of the civil rights which belong to individuals considered as individuals.

Injury in fact. Such as is required to give a plaintiff standing to sue means concrete and certain harm and, to warrant granting of standing, there must also be reason to think that the harm can be redressed by relief the court can grant. National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n

Irreparable injury. This phrase does not mean such an injury as is beyond the possibility of repair, or beyond possible compensation in damages, or necessarily great damage, but includes an injury, whether great or small, which ought not to be submitted to, on the one hand, or imflicted, on the other; and which, because it is so large or so small, or is of such constant and frequent occurrence, or because no certain pecuniary standard exists for the measurement of damages, cannot receive reasonable redress in a court of law. Wrongs of a repeated and continuing character, or which occasion damages that are estimated only by conjecture, and not by any accurate standard, are included. The remedy for such is commonly in the nature of injunctive relief. "Irreparable injury" justifying an injunction is that which cannot be adequately compensated in damages or for which damages cannot be compensable in money. Caffery v.
Powell, La.App., 320 So.2d 223, 226. Contrast Reparable injury, below. See Injunction; Temporary restraining order.

Permanent injury. An injury that, according to every reasonable probability, will continue throughout the remainder of one's life.

Personal injury. In a narrow sense, a hurt or damage done to a man's person, such as a cut or bruise, a broken limb, or the like, as distinguished from an injury to his property or his reputation. The phrase is chiefly used in this connection with actions of tort for negligence and under worker's compensation statutes. But the term is also used (usually in statutes) in a much wider sense, and as including any injury which is an invasion of personal rights, and in this signification it may include such injuries to the person as libel or slander, criminal conversation, malicious prosecution, false imprisonment, and mental suffering. Gray v. Wallace, 319 S.W.2d 582.

In worker's compensation acts, "personal injury" means any harm or damage to the health of an employee, however caused, whether by accident, disease, or otherwise, which arises in the course of and out of his employment, and incapacitates him in whole or in part.
The occurrence of disability or impairment. Such includes the aggravation of a preexisting injury.

Private injuries. Infringements of the private or civil rights belonging to individuals considered as individuals.

Public injuries. Breaches and violations of rights and duties which affect the whole community as a community.

Real injury. A real injury is inflicted by any act by which a person's honor or dignity is affected.

Relative injuries. Injuries to those rights which a person possesses in relation to the person who is immediate-lly affected by the wrongful act done.

Reparable injury. The general principle is that an injury, the damage from which is merely in the nature of pecuniary loss, and can be exactly and fully repaired by compensation in money, is a "reparable injury." Contrast Irreparable injury, above.

Unknown injury rule. Under this rule, release of claims for personal injuries may be avoided on the ground of mutual mistake if parties at the time of signing the agreement were mistaken as to the existence of injury, as opposed to unknown consequences of known injuries.
LaFleur v. C.C. Pierce Co., Inc., et al., 398 Mass. 254, 496
N.E.2d 827.

Verbal injury. See Libel; Slander.

Violation of constitutional rights. "Injury" within meaning of state Tort Claims Act includes damage caused by violation of constitutional rights. Lloyd v.
Borough of Stone Harbor, 179 N.J.Super. 496, 432 A.2d 572, 580.

Injustice. The withholding or denial of justice. In law, almost invariably applied to the act, fault, or omission of a court, as distinguished from that of an individual. "Fraud" is deception practiced by the party; "injustice" is the fault or error of the court. They are not equivalent words in substance, or in a statute authorizing a new trial on a showing of fraud or injustice. Fraud is always the result of contrivance and deception; injustice may be done by the negligence, mistake, or omission of the court itself. Silvey v. U. S., 7 Ct.Cl. 305, 324.

Injustum est, nisi tota lege inspecta, de una aliqua contraventione respondiri. It is unjust to decide or respond as to any particular part of a law without examining the whole of the law.

In jus vocare /in jas vokery/ To call, cite, or summon to court. In jus vocando, summoning to court.

In kind. Of the same species or category. In the same kind, class, or genus. A loan is returned "in kind" when not the identical article, but one corresponding and equivalent to it, is given to the lender. See Distribution in kind; In genus; Like-kind exchange.

Inlagare /inlagery/. In old English law, to restore to protection of law. To restore a man from the condition of outlawry. Opposed to utlagare.

Inlagation /inlagyshan/. Restoration to the protection of law. Restoration from a condition of outlawry.

Inlagh /inlo/. A person within the law's protection; contrary to utlagh, an outlaw.

Inland. Within a country, state or territory; within the interior part of a land mass.

In old English law, inland was used for the demesne (q.v.) of a manor; that part which lay next or most convenient for the lord's mansion-house, as within the view thereof, and which, therefore, he kept in his own hands for support of his family and for hospitality; in distinction from outland or utland, which was the portion let out to tenants.

Inland bill of exchange. A bill of which both the drawer and drawee reside within the same state or country. Otherwise called a "domestic bill," and distinguished from a "foreign bill." See Bill.

Inland marine insurance. See Insurance.

Inland navigation. Within the meaning of the legislation of congress upon the subject, this phrase means navigation upon inland waters (q.v.).

Inland trade. Trade wholly carried on at home; as distinguished from foreign commerce. See Commerce.

Inland waters. Such waters as canals, lakes, rivers, watercourses, inlets and bays, within, or partly within, the United States, exclusive of the open sea, though the water in question may open or empty into the ocean.

Inlantal, inlantale /inlantal, inlanteyly/. Demesne or inland, opposed to delantal, or land tenanted.

Inlaughe /inlo/. Sax. In old English law, under the law (sub lege), in a frank-pledge, or decennary.

Inlaw. To place under the protection of the law.

In law. In the intentment, contemplation, or inference of the law; implied or inferred by law; existing in law or by force of law. See In fact.

In laws. Persons related by marriage rather than blood; e.g. relationship of parents of wife to husband.

In lecto mortali /in lektow morteylay/. On the deathbed.

Inlet. A narrow strip of water running into the land or between islands. Burns v. Coastal Petroleum Co., Fla. App., 194 So.2d 71, 75.

In liberam elemosinam /in liberam iyalmosnam/. In free alms. Land given for a charitable motive was said to be so given. See Frankalmoign.

In lieu of /in lyuy av/. Instead of; in place of; in substitution of. It does not mean "in addition to." Glassman Const. Co. v. Baltimore Brick Co., 246 Md. 478, 228 A.2d 472, 474.

In limine /in limaniy/. On or at the threshold; at the very beginning; preliminarily. Any motion, whether used before or during trial, by which exclusion is sought of anticipated prejudicial evidence. Braden v. Hendricks, Okl., 695 P.2d 1343, 1348. See Motion in limine.

In litem /in layment/. For a suit; to the suit.

In loco /in lówkow/. In place; in lieu; instead; in the place or stead.

In loco parentis /in lówkow paréntas/. In the place of a parent; instead of a parent; charged, factitiously, with a parent's rights, duties, and responsibilities.

"Loco parentis" exists when person undertakes care and control of another in absence of such supervision by latter's natural parents and in absence of formal legal approval, and is temporary in character and is not to be likened to an adoption which is permanent. Griego v. Hogan, 71 N.M. 280, 377 P.2d 953, 955.

In majorem cautelam /in majóre kotiylam/. For greater security.

In majore summa continetur minor /in majóriy sámó köntåniytar máynar/. In the greater sum is contained the less.

In malam partem /in målam pártam/. In a bad sense, so as to wear an evil appearance.

In maleficiis voluntas spectatur, non exitus /in målafis(h)iylas valåntås spektyeytar, nón egzåtas/. In evil deeds regard must be had to the intention, and not to the result.

In maleficio, ratihabito mandato comparatur /in målafis(h)iylow, réytayhahsh(iy)ow måndéytow kompərəytər/. In a case of malfeasance, ratification is equivalent to command.
INNATE

Inmate. A person confined to a prison, penitentiary, or the like. A person who lodges or dwells in the same house with another, occupying different rooms, but using the same door for passing in and out of the house.

In maxima potentia minima licentia /in mæksəmə patənəsh(y)iə minəma əsənəsh(y)iə/. In the greatest power there is the least freedom.

In medias res /in mɪdɪəs rɪə/. Into the heart of the subject, without preface or introduction.

In mercibus illicitis non sit commercium /in mərsəbəs əliˈstəs nən sɨt kəˈmɜrs(h)iəˈsiəm/. There should be no commerce in illicit or prohibited goods.

In mercy. To be in mercy is to be at the discretion of the king, lord, or judge in respect to the imposition of a fine or other punishment. See Clemency.

In misericordia /in mɪsərəˈkɔrd(i)ə/. The entry on the record where a party was in mercy was, “Ideo in misericordia,” etc. Sometimes “misericordia” means the being quit of all amercements.

In mitiori sensu /in mɪˈtiəri sənˈsu/. In the milder sense; in the less aggravated acceptance.

In actions of slander, it was formerly the rule that, if the words alleged would admit of two constructions, they should be taken in the less injurious and defamatory sense, or in mitiori sensu.

In modum assise /in məˈwədəm əˈsəːzi/. In the manner or form of an assize. In modum jurate, in manner of a jury.

In mora /in mərə/. In default; literally, in delay. In the civil law, a borrower who omits or refuses to return the thing loaned at the proper time is said to be in mora.

In mortua manu /in mɔrtəˈyuə mænˈyuə/. Property owned by religious societies was said to be held in mortua manu, or in mortmain, since religious men were civiliter mortui.

Inn. A public lodging establishment. A lodging house where all who conduct themselves properly, and who are able and ready to pay for their entertainment, are received, if there is accommodation for them, and who, while there, are supplied at a reasonable charge with their meals, their lodging, and such services and attention as are necessarily incident to the use of the house as a temporary home. A place where the public will be received and accommodations provided to guests for compensation. Edwards v. City of Los Angeles, 48 Cal. App.2d 62, 119 P.2d 370, 373, 374. A hotel, tavern, motel, or hostel.

Innamium /iˈnəmiəˈjəm/. In old English law, a pledge.

Innavigability. In insurance law, the condition of being innavigable (q.v.). The term is also applied to the condition of streams which are not large enough or deep enough, or are otherwise unsuited, for navigation.

Innavigable. As applied to streams, not capable of or suitable for navigation; impassable by ships or vessels. As applied to vessels in the law of marine insurance, it means unfit for navigation; so damaged by misadventures at sea as to be no longer capable of making a voyage. Compare Navigable waters.

Inner barrister. A serjeant or king's counsel, in England, who is admitted to plead within the bar. See also, Outer Bar.

Innings. In old records, lands recovered from the sea by draining and banking.

Innkeeper. One who keeps an inn, hotel, motel or house for the lodging and entertainment of travelers.

Innocence. The absence of guilt. See also Presumption of innocence.

Innocent. Free from guilt; acting in good faith and without knowledge of incriminatory circumstances, or of defects or objections. See Not guilty.

Innocent agent. In criminal law, one who, being ignorant of any unlawful intent on the part of his principal, is merely the instrument of the guilty party in committing an offense; one who does an unlawful act at the solicitation or request of another, but who, from defect of understanding or ignorance of the inculpatory facts, incurs no legal guilt.

Innocent construction rule. In libel law, this rule requires that allegedly libelous words that are capable of being read innocently must be so read and declared nonactionable as matter of law. Belmonte v. Rubin, 68 Ill.App.3d 700, 25 Ill.Dec. 430, 386 N.E.2d 904.

Innocent conveyances. A technical term of the old English law of conveyancing, used to designate such conveyances as may be made by a leasehold tenant without working a forfeiture. These are said to be lease and re-lease, bargain and sale, and, in case of a life-tenant, a covenant to stand seised.

Innocent party. Person who did not consciously or intentionally participate in event, transaction, etc.

Innocent purchaser. One who, by an honest contract or agreement, purchases property or acquires an interest therein, without knowledge, or means of knowledge sufficient to charge him in law with knowledge, of any infirmity in the title of the seller. Treit v. Oregon Auto. Ins. Co., 262 Or. 549, 499 P.2d 335, 336. Person is "innocent purchaser" when he purchases without notice, actual or constructive, of any infirmity and pays valuable consideration and acts in good faith. Morehead v. Harris, 262 N.C. 330, 137 S.E.2d 174, 182, 185. See also Good faith purchaser.

Innocent trespass. A trespass to land, committed, not recklessly, but through inadvertence or mistake, or in good faith, under an honest belief that the trespasser was acting within his legal rights.

Innocent trespasser. One who enters another's land unlawfully, but inadvertently or unintentionally, or in the honest, reasonable belief of his own right so to do,
In novo casu, novum remedium apponendum est. "In novo casu, novum remedium apponendum est" Restatement, Second, Torts, § 164.

Innominate contracts. Literally, are the "unclassified" contracts of Roman law. They are contracts which are neither re, verbis, litteris, nor consensu simply, but some mixture of or variation upon two or more of such contracts. They are principally the contracts of permutatio, de astimato, precarium, and transactio.

In nomine Dei, Amen. "In nomine Dei, Amen" was a species of exemplification of charters of feoffment and removes sand or other material therefrom, is an "innocent trespasser." Restatement, Second, Torts, § 164.

In nostre casus, novum remedium apponendum est. "In nostre casus, novum remedium apponendum est" Restatement, Second, Torts, § 164.

In nullius bonis /in náléyos bównas/. Among the goods or property of no person; belonging to no person, as treasure-trove and wreck were anciently considered.

In obscura voluntate manumittentis, favendum est libertati /in óbskýuró yóntéyti mán(y)amstéyndas, favéndam est libértàytay/. Where the expression of the will of one who seeks to manumit a slave is ambiguous, liberty is to be favored.

In obscureis, inspici solere quod verisimilius est, aut quod plerumque fieri solet /in óbskýuró yóntéyti mán(y)amstéyndas, favéndam est libértàytay/. In obscure cases, we usually look at what is most probable, or what most commonly happens.

In obscuris, quod minimum est sequimur /in óbskýuró yóntéyti mán(y)amstéyndas, favéndam est libértàytay/. In obscure or doubtful cases, we follow that which is the least.

In odium spoliatoris /in ówd(i)yam spówil(y)ástóra/. In hatred of a despoiler, robber, or wrongdoer.

In odium spoliatoris omnia presumuntur /in ówd(i)yam spówil(y)ástóra ómniya priýzy(y)amstár/. To the prejudice (in condemnation) of a despoiler all things are presumed; every presumption is made against a wrongdoer.

Inofficiosum /insif(i)iyówsam/. In the civil law, inofficious; contrary to natural duty or affection. Used of a will of a parent which disinherited a child without just cause, or that of a child which disinherited a parent, and which could be contested by querela inofficiosi testamenti.

Inofficious testament /insifishás tétamant/. A will not in accordance with the testator's natural affection and moral duties. But particularly, in the civil law, a will which deprives the heirs of that portion of the estate to which the law entitles them, and of which they cannot legally be disinherited. A testament contrary to the natural duty of the parent, because it totally disinherits the child, without expressly giving the reason therefor.

Inofficiosidad. /inowfyisyówspyó/d/. In Spanish law, everything done contrary to a duty or obligation assumed, as well as in opposition to the piety and affection dictated by nature: inofficiosum dicitur id omne quod contra pietatis officium factum est. The term applies especially to testaments, donations, dower, etc., which may be either revoked or reduced when they affect injuriously the rights of creditors or heirs.

In all actione ubi dure concurrunt districtiones, in omni actione ubi dure concurrunt districtiones, in omnibus. In all things; on all points.

In omnibus /in ómnbas/. In all things; on all points.

In omnibus contractibus, sive nominatis sive innominatis, permutatio continetur /in ómnbas kontrækštbas, sáviy nómanéytas sáviy ínománéytas, pármwytwéysh(iy)ów konántniydar/. In all contracts, whether nominate or innominate, an exchange [of value, i.e., a consideration] is implied.

In omnibus obligationibus in quibus dies non ponitur, præsenti die debetur /in ómnbas oblagéyshiyównbas in kwébs daiyíy non pównatár, prǽnthéy dáiyí dábýtar/. In all obligations in which a date is not put, the debt is due on the present day; the liability accrues immediately.

In omnibus (fere) penalibus judiciis, et atati et imprudentie succurritur /in ómnbas (fíriy) pányélabas jédishiyas, éd étátyay ét ímprowúdéshiy(iy) sakkárta/. In nearly all penal judgments, immaturity of age and imbecility of mind are favored.

In omnibus quidem, maxime tamen in jure, æquitas spectanda sit /in ómnbas kwáydam máksamíy téyman in júriy, lykwásas spékénténday sit/. In all things, but especially in law, equity is to be regarded.

In omni re nascitur res quae ipsum rem exterminat /in ómnbay ríy néástar ríy kwíy ipasm rém asktármat/. In everything there arises a thing which destroys the thing itself. Everything contains the element of its own destruction.

Inops consili /inops kanáliyay/. Lat. Destitute of counsel; without legal counsel. A term applied to the acts or condition of one acting without legal advice, as a testator drafting his own will.

Inordinatus /inórdánéytas/. An intestate.

In pacato solo /in pakétow sólow/. In a country which is at peace.

In pace Dei et regis /in péysi diiyay ét riýjas/. In the peace of God and the king. Formal words in old appeals of murder.

In pais /in péyi(s)/. This phrase, as applied to a legal transaction, primarily means that it has taken place without legal proceedings. Thus a widow was said to make a request in pais for her dower when she simply applied to the heir without issuing a writ. So conveyances are divided into those by matter of record and those by matter in pais. In some cases, however, "matters in pais" are opposed not only to "matters of record," but also to "matters in writing," i.e., deeds, as where estoppel by deed is distinguished from estoppel by matter in pais. See also Pais.

In pais, estoppel /ástopál in péyi(s)/. An estoppel not arising from deed or record or written contract. The doctrine is that a person may be precluded by his act or conduct or silence, when it is his duty to speak, from asserting a right which he otherwise would have had. Marshall v. Wilson, 175 Or. 506, 154 P.2d 547, 551. The effect of a party's voluntary conduct whereby he is precluded from asserting rights as against another person who has in good faith relied upon such conduct and has been led thereby to change his condition for the worse and who acquires some corresponding right of property or contract. Oswego Falls Corporation v. City of Fulton, 148 Misc. 170, 265 N.Y.S. 436.

Elements or fundamentals of "estoppel in pais" include admission, statement, or act inconsistent with claim afterwards asserted, National Match Co. v. Empire Storage & Ice Co., 227 Mo.App. 1115, 58 S.W.2d 797; change of position to loss or injury of party claiming estoppel, Malloy v. City of Chicago, 369 Ill. 97, 15 N.E.2d 861, 865; circumstances such that party estopped knew or should have known facts to be otherwise or pretended to know facts which he did not know; false representation or concealment of material facts, Pickens v. Maryland Casualty Co., 141 Neb. 105, 5 N.W.2d 393, 396; inducement to alter position; intention that false representation or concealment be acted on, Peterson v. City of Parsons, 139 Kan. 701, 33 P.2d 715, 720; knowledge of facts, by party to be estopped; lack of knowledge or means of knowledge of party claiming estoppel, Sinclair Refining Co. v. Jenkins Petroleum Process Co., C.C.A. Me., 99 F.2d 9, 13, 14; misleading of one person by another person to his prejudice or injury, Current News Features v. Pulitzer Pub. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 81 F.2d 288,
In pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis [defense of possession]. In equal fault or guilt; equally culpable or criminal. A common law defense that prohibited a plaintiff from suing if it had been a participant in the contract or conspiracy that led to the violation of law at issue. As a general rule, the defense of in pari delicto is not recognized in the anti-trust laws. See also Equitable estoppel.

In paper. In old English law, a term formerly applied to the proceedings in a cause before the record was made up. Probably from the circumstance of the record being always on parchment. The opposite of "on record."

In pari causa /in péray kóza/péray*/. In equal fault or guilt; equally culpable or criminal. A common law defense that prohibited a plaintiff from suing if it had been a participant in the contract or conspiracy that led to the violation of law at issue. As a general rule, the defense of in pari delicto is not recognized in the anti-trust laws. See also Unclean hands doctrine.

In pari causa possessor potior haberi debet /in péray kóza pozésor pówshiy)yr habiray débet/. In an equal cause he has the possession should be preferred.

In pari delicto /in péray dalikto/péray/. In equal fault; equally culpable or criminal; in a case of equal fault or guilt. A person who is in pari delicto with another differs from a particeps criminis in this, that the former term always includes the latter, but the latter does not always include the former.

In pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis [defense of possession] /in péray dalikto*péray*/. In a case of equal or mutual fault [between two parties] the condition of the party in possession [or defending] is the better one. Where each party is equally in fault, the law favors him who is actually in possession. Where the fault is mutual, the law will leave the case as it finds it.

In pari materia /in péray matiri)ys/. Upon the same matter or subject. Statutes "in pari materia" are those relating to the same person or thing or having a common purpose. Undercofier v. L.C. Robinson & Sons, Inc, 111 Ga.App. 411, 141 S.E.2d 847, 849. This rule of statutory construction, that statutes which relate to the same subject matter should be read, construed and applied together so that the legislature's intention can be gathered from the whole of the enactments, applies only when the particular statute is ambiguous. Kimes v. Bechtold, W.Va., 342 S.E.2d 147, 150.

In patiendo /in páshiyéndow/. In suffering, permitting, or allowing.

In pectore judicis /in péktori jáwdas/as/. In the breast of the judge. A phrase applied to a judgment.

In pejorem partem /in pàjorém pàrtém/. In the worst part; on the worst side.

Inpeny and outpeny /inpeniy ánd áwtpeniy/. In old English law, a customary payment of a penny on entering into and going out of a tenancy (pro exitu de tenura, et pro ingressu).

In perpetuam rei memoriam /in perpétyuwam riyaw smóriyam/. In perpetual memory of a matter; for preserving a record of a matter. Applied to depositions taken in order to preserve the testimony of the deponent.

In perpetuity /in párp tyúwatiy/. Endless duration; lasting; forever.

In perpetuum rei testimonium /in perpétyuwam riyaw tèstamówni(lyam)/. In perpetual testimony of a matter; for the purpose of declaring and settling a thing forever.

In person. A party, plaintiff or defendant, who sues out a complaint, writ or other process, or appears to conduct his case in court himself, instead of through a solicitor or counsel, is said to act and appear in person. See Proceedings of a court.

In personam /in persownam/. Against the person. Action seeking judgment against a person involving his personal rights and based on jurisdiction of his person, as distinguished from a judgment against property (i.e. in rem). Type of jurisdiction or power which a court may acquire over the defendant himself in contrast to jurisdiction over his property. See also In personam jurisdiction; in rem; Jurisdiction in personam.

In personam actio est, qua cum eo agimus qui obligatus est nobis ad faciendum aliquid vel dandum /in persownam ákshiy)ow ést, kwéy kám i yow ájhamas kwái óblagéyéts ést nówbas ád féys(h)iyéndam álaktwid vél dándam/. The action in personam is that by which we sue him who is under obligation to us to do something or give something.

In personam jurisdiction. Power which a court has over the defendant himself in contrast to the court's power over the defendant's interest in property (quasi in rem) or power over the property itself (in rem). A court which lacks personal jurisdiction is without power to issue an in personam judgment. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714, 24 L.Ed. 565. See also In rem; Jurisdiction in personam.

In pios usus /in píysas yúwsaz/. For pious uses; for religious purposes. 2 Bl.Comm. 505.

In plena vita /in plíyna váyt/a/. In full life.

In pleno comitatu /in plínow kómátéty(y)uw/. In full county court. 3 Bl.Comm. 36.

In pleno lumine /in plínow l(y)úmáníy/. In public; in common knowledge; in the light of day.

In pocnalibus causis benignius interpretandum est /in panéylabas kózas bánígn(ú)yas intétrapaténdam ét/. In penal causes or cases, the more favorable interpretation should be adopted.

In posse /in pósíy/. In possibility; not in actual existence. See In esse.

In potestate parentis /in pówstétytíy paréntas/. In the power of a parent. 2 Bl.Comm. 498.

In premisorum fidem /in prémísayórm fáydám/. In confirmation or attestation of the premises. A notarial phrase.

purpose. The instrument of writing on which their decision is made is also called an inquisition. In its broadest sense, "inquisition," includes any judicial inquiry. See Inquest.

Inquisition after death. See Inquest; Inquisitio.

Inquisitor /ænkwɪzɪtər/. A designation of sheriffs, coroners super visum corporis, and the like, who have power to inquire into certain matters.

In Ecclesiastical law, the name of an officer who is authorized to inquire into heresies, and the like, and to punish them. A judge.

In quo quis delinquit, in eo de jure est puniendus /ɪn kʰwɔ́ kwɪs dɑːlɪŋkwɔt, ɪn ɪˈwɔ́ dɪ ɪ ˈjʊəri ˈɛst puːnɪn ⟨ˈwɪnds⟩/. In whatever thing one offends, in that is he rightfully to be punished. The punishment shall have relation to the nature of the offense.

In re /ɪn rɪ/. In the affair; in the matter of; concerning; regarding. This is the usual method of entitling a judicial proceeding in which there are not adversary parties, but merely some res concerning which judicial action is to be taken, such as a bankrupt's estate, an estate in the probate court, a proposed public highway, etc. It is also sometimes used as a designation of a proceeding where one party makes an application on his own behalf, but such proceedings are more usually entitled "Ex parte _________."

In rebus /ɪn rɪbəs/ (Lat.) In things, cases, or matters.

In rebus manifestis, errat qui auctoritates legum allegat; quia perspicua vera non sunt probanda /ɪn rɪbəs mənɪˈfæstəs, ɛrɑt kwɪ ˈɑktərətɪtəz ˈleɡəm əˈlɛɡət; kwɪ̯ə ˈpɜːrspɪkjuwə vɪrə nɔn sɔnt prɔbəndə/. In clear cases, he mistakes who cites legal authorities; for obvious truths are not to be proved. Applied to cases too plain to require the support of authority; "because," says the report, "he who endeavors to prove them obscures them."

In rebus quae sunt favorabilia anima, quamvis sunt damnosa rebus, fiat aliquando extensio statuti /ɪn rɪbəs kwə ˈsɑnt fəˈvɔrəbəli̯ə(ɨ)ˈʃı̯əmvi, kwəmˈvɪs sɑnt dəmˈnəʊsə rɪbəs, fɪət ˈælikwəndəʊ ˈɛkstənʃi(ɨ)ˈʃʊəʊ ˈstætəwɪət/; In things that are favorable to the spirit, though injurious to a thing, an extension of a statute should sometimes be made.

In re communi potior est conditio probidentes /ɪn rɪ kəmˈjuːnə wɜːni ˈpɒtiər ˈɛst kəndiʃi(ɨ)ˈwɜːr ˌprəˈwɪnbiənts/. In a partnership the condition of one who forbids is the more favorable.

In re dubia, benigneorem interpretatione sequi, non minus justius est quam tutius /ɪn rɪ djuˈbɪə beniˈnaɪɡrəm ɪnˌprɪtərˈtʃɔnərn ˈsiːkwi nɔŋ ˈmaɪnəs ˈjʌstɪəs ˈɛst kəm ˌtjuːtɪəs/. In a doubtful matter, the denial or negative is to be understood [or regarded], rather than the affirmative.

In regard to /ɪn rɪˈɡɑːrd tʉː/. Concerning; relating to; in respect of; with respect to; about. Hart v. Hart, 181 Iowa 527, 164 N.W. 849, 850.

In re lutanari, testes lutanares admittentur /ɪn rɪ ləˈpʊnərə ˈtɛstiz ləˈpʊpəˈnɛriəz ədˈmɪtəntər/; In a matter concerning a brothel, prostitutes are admitted as witnesses.

In rem /ɪn rɪm/; A technical term used to designate proceedings or actions instituted against the thing, in contradistinction to personal actions, which are said to be in personam.

"In rem" proceedings encompass any action brought against person in which essential purpose of suit is to determine title to or to affect interests in specific property located within territory over which court has jurisdiction. ReMine ex rel. Liley v. District Court for City and County of Denver, Colo., 709 P.2d 1379, 1382. It is true that, in a strict sense, a proceeding in rem is one taken directly against property, and has for its object the disposition of property, without reference to the title of individual claimants; but, in a larger and more general sense, the terms are applied to actions between parties, where the direct object is to reach and dispose of property owned by them, or of some interest therein. Such are cases commenced by attachment against the property of debtors, or instituted to partition real estate, foreclose a mortgage, or enforce a lien. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714, 24 L.Ed. 565. In the strict sense of the term, a proceeding "in rem" is one which is taken directly against property or one which is brought to enforce a right in the thing itself.

Actions in which the court is required to have control of the thing or object and in which an adjudication is made as to the object which binds the whole world and not simply the interests of the parties to the proceeding. Flesch v. Circle City Excavating & Rental Corp., 137 Ind.App. 695, 210 N.E.2d 865. See also In personam; In rem jurisdiction; Quasi in rem jurisdiction.

Judgment in rem. See that title.

Quasi in rem. A term applied to proceedings which are not strictly and purely in rem, but are brought against the defendant personally, though the real object is to deal with particular property or subject property to the
In rem actio est per quam rem nostram quae ab alio possidetur petimus, et semper adversus eum est qui rem possidet. In rem actio est per quam rem nostram quae ab alio possidetur, et semper adversus eum est qui rem possidet. The action in rem is that by which we seek our property which is possessed by another, and is always against him who possesses the property. In re pari potiore causam esse prohibentis constat. In re pari potior causam esse prohibentis constat. In a thing equally shared [by several] it is more closely a quasi in rem action because it is directed to the extinguishment of the rights of mortgagor as well as all others. In rem actio est per quam rem nostram quae ab alio possidetur petimus, et semper adversus eum est qui rem possidet. In rem possidet. In rem jurisdiction. Refers to an action that is taken directly against the defendant's property. The term may be contrasted with in personam jurisdiction. Power over a thing possessed by a court which allows it to seize and hold the object for some legal purpose; e.g., boat on which narcotics are found. Calero Toledo v. Pearson Yacht Leasing Co., 416 U.S. 663, 94 S.Ct. 2080, 40 L.Ed.2d 452. See also Jurisdiction in rem; Jurisdiction quasi in rem. In rem mortgage. Foreclosure of mortgage is in the nature of an in rem proceeding but it approximates more closely a quasi in rem action because it is directed to the extinguishment of the rights of mortgagor as well as all others. In render. A thing is said to lie in render when it must be rendered or given by the tenant; as rent. It is said to lie in prender when it consists in the right in the lord or other person to take something. See In prender. In re pari potiorem causam esse prohibentis constat. In a thing equally shared [by several] it is clear that the party refusing [to permit the use of it] has the better cause. A maxim applied to partnerships, where one partner has a right to withhold his assent to the acts of his copartner. In re propria iniquum admodum est alicui licentiam tribuere sententiae. In re propria iniquum admodum est alicui licentiam tribuere sententiae. The action in rem is that by which we seek our property which is possessed by another, and is always against him who possesses the property. In respect of decedent. See Income in respect of decedent. In restitutionem, non in pecem hares succedit. In restitutionibus benignissima interpretatio facienda est. The most benignant interpretation is to be made in restitutions. Insane delusion. An "insane delusion" is a conception of a disordered mind which imagines facts to exist of which there is no evidence and belief in which is adhered to against all evidence and argument to contrary, and which cannot be accounted for on any reasonable hypothesis. In re Nigro's Estate, 243 Cal.App.2d 152, 52 Cal.Rptr. 128, 133. Insanity. The term is a social and legal term rather than a medical one, and indicates a condition which renders the affected person unfit to enjoy liberty of action because of the unreliability of his behavior with concomitant danger to himself and others. The term is more or less synonymous with mental illness or psychosis. In law, the term is used to denote that degree of mental illness which negates the individual's legal responsibility or capacity. Insanity as Defense to Crime There are various tests used by the courts to determine criminal responsibility, or lack thereof, of a defendant who asserts the defense that he or she was insane at the time of the crime. A frequently used test as provided in Section 4.01 of the Model Penal Code is as follows: "A person is not responsible for criminal conduct if at the time of such conduct as a result of mental disease or defect he lacks substantial capacity either to appreciate the criminality (wrongfulness) of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the requirements of law." Under this test there must be a sufficient causal link between the defendant's mental disease or defect and his inability to control his behavior. U.S. v. Jackson, 553 F.2d 109, 113, 179 U.S.App.D.C. 375. This test, as defined by the American Law Institute, has been adopted (sometimes with slight modifications) by a number of states and also in most federal courts. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 4241. If a defendant intends to rely upon the defense of insanity at the time of the alleged crime, he is required to notify the attorney for the government of such intention. Fed.R.Crim.P. 12.2.; 18 U.S.C.A. § 4242. It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under any Federal statute that, at the time of the commission of the acts constituting the offense, the defendant, as a result of a severe mental disease or defect, was unable to appreciate the nature and quality or the wrongfulness of his acts. Mental disease or defect does not otherwise constitute a defense. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 17(a), 4241.

In certain states, once the insanity defense is made the burden is on the prosecution to prove that the defendant is mentally competent, while in others the burden is on the defense to prove the defendant is insane. In federal criminal cases, the defendant has the burden of proving the defense of insanity by clear and convincing evidence. 18 U.S.C.A. § 17.

See also Automatism; Diminished responsibility doctrine; Durham rule; irresistible impulse; M’Naghten Rule and Right and wrong test, for various other tests used by courts to determine criminal responsibility of defendant who asserts insanity defense. See also Competency; Incompetency; Insane delusion; Lucid interval; Lunacy; Melancholia; Sanity hearing; Substantial capacity test; Uncontrollable impulse.

Insanity as Affecting Capacity

Capacity to make a will includes an intelligent understanding of the testator’s property, its extent and items, and of the nature of the act he is about to perform, together with a clear understanding and purpose as to the manner of its distribution and the persons who are to receive it. Lacking these, the testator is not mentally competent. The presence of insane delusions is not inconsistent with testamentary capacity, if they are of such a nature that they cannot reasonably be supposed to have affected the dispositions made by the will; and the same is true of the various forms of monomania and of all kinds of eccentricity and personal idiosyncrasy. But imbecility, senile dementia, and all forms of systematized mania which affect the understanding and judgment generally disable the person from making a valid will. To constitute “senile dementia,” incapacitating one to make a will, there must be such a failure of the mind as to deprive the testator of intelligent action. See also Capacity.

As a ground for voiding or annulling a contract or conveyance, insanity does not mean a total deprivation of reason, but an inability, from defect of perception, memory, and judgment, to do the act in question or to understand its nature and consequences. The insanity must have entered into and induced the particular contract or conveyance; it must appear that it was not the act of the free and untrammeled mind, and that on account of the diseased condition of the mind the person entered into a contract or made a conveyance which he would not have made if he had been in the possession of his reason.

Most state statutes provide for annulment of a marriage because of insanity. Insanity sufficient to justify the annulment of a marriage means such a want of understanding at the time of the marriage as to render the party incapable of assenting to the contract of marriage. Also, under most state statutes, insanity, if sufficient in degree and/or duration, constitutes a ground for divorce. In general, the same degree of mental capacity which enables a person to make a valid deed or will is sufficient to enable him to marry.

As a ground for restraining the personal liberty of the person (i.e. commitment), it may be said in general that the form of insanity from which he suffers should be such as to make his going at large a source of danger to himself or to others, though this matter is largely regulated by statute, and in many places the law permits the commitment of persons whose insanity does not manifest itself in homicidal or other destructive forms of mania, but who are incapable of caring for themselves and their property or who are simply fit subjects for treatment in hospitals and other institutions specially designed for the care of such patients. See Commitment.

To constitute insanity such as will authorize the appointment of a guardian or conservator, there must be such a deprivation of reason and judgment as to render him incapable of understanding and acting with discretion in the ordinary affairs of life, a want of sufficient mental capacity to transact ordinary business and to take care of and manage his property and affairs.

Insanity as a plea or proceeding to avoid the effect of the statute of limitations means practically the same thing as in relation to the appointment of a guardian. On the one hand, it does not require a total deprivation of reason or absence of understanding. On the other hand, it does not include mere weakness of mind short of imbecility. It means such a degree of derangement as renders the subject incapable of understanding the nature of the particular affair and his rights and remedies in regard to it and incapable of taking discreet and intelligent action. The time of sanity required in order to allow the statute to begin to run is such as will enable the party to examine his affairs and institute an action, and is for the jury.

There are a few other legal rights or relations into which the question of insanity enters, such as the capacity of a witness or of a voter; but they are governed by the same general principles. The test is capacity to understand and appreciate the nature of the particular act and to exercise intelligence in its performance. A witness must understand the nature and purpose of an oath and have enough intelligence and memory to relate correctly the facts within his knowledge. So a voter must understand the nature of the act to be performed and be able to make an intelligent choice of candidates. In either case, eccentricity, feeble-mindedness not amounting to imbecility, or insane delusions which do not affect the matter in hand, do not disqualify. District of Columbia v. Armes, 107 U.S. 519, 2 S.Ct. 840, 27 L.Ed. 618.

Insanus est qui, abjecta ratione, omnia cum impetu et fureore facit /inséynæs ét kwáy abjékta réyshiyówny ommiáa kóm impést(y)uw ét fyrörié féysat/. He is insane who, reason being thrown away, does everything with violence and rage.

In satisfactionibus non permissitur amplius fieri quam semel factum est /in sétasfákshiyównab nón permititar ámbiliós fáyaray kwámêm sémál fáktem ét/. In payments, more must not be received than has been received once for all.
Inscribed. Entered (e.g., a name) on a list or in a register. Type of government bonds, such as Series E, whose records are kept by the Federal Reserve Bank rather than by the Treasury Dept.

Inscribere /inskrilbriy/. Lat. In the civil law, to subscribe an accusation. To bind one’s self, in case of failure to prove an accusation, to suffer the same punishment which the accused would have suffered had he been proved guilty.

Inscriptio /inskrilshiyow/. Lat. In the civil law, a written accusation in which the accuser undertakes to suffer the punishment appropriate to the offense charged, if the accused is able to clear himself of the accusation.

Inscription. In evidence, anything written or engraved upon a metallic or other solid substance, intended for great durability; as upon a tombstone, pillar, tablet, medal, ring, etc.

The entry of a mortgage, lien, or other document at large in a book of public records, corresponding to “recording” or “registration.”

In civil law, an engagement which a person who makes a solemn accusation of a crime against another enters into that he will suffer the same punishment, if he has accused the other falsely, which would have been inflicted upon him had he been guilty.

Inscriptions /inskrilshiyowniyz/. The name given by the old English law to any written instrument by which anything was granted.

Insecure. Unsafe and dangerous. Not secure or safe; not certain. Impairment or loss of security. See Acceleration clause; Insecurity clause.

Insecurity clause. Provision in contract that allows a creditor to make an entire debt come due if there is good reason to believe that the debtor cannot or will not pay. See also Acceleration clause.

In separali /in sépárélyay/. In several; in severalty.

Insider. With respect to federal regulation of purchase and sale of securities, refers to anyone who has knowledge of facts not available to the general public (e.g., officers, directors, key employees, relatives). 15 U.S.C.A. § 78p(a). An insider is liable for insider trading under section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and SEC Rule 10b-5. Two elements for establishing a violation of section 10(b) and Rule 10b-5 by corporate insiders are the existence of a relationship affording access to inside information intended to be available only for a corporate purpose, and the unfairness of allowing a corporate insider to take advantage of that information by trading without disclosure. Chiarella v. United States, 445 U.S. 222, 100 S.Ct. 1108, 63 L.Ed.2d 348; Dirks v. S.E.C., 463 U.S. 646, 103 S.Ct. 3255, 77 L.Ed.2d 911. See Insider.

Insidaiatieres viarum /insidiaytöriyz vayéram/. Lat. Highwaymen; persons who lie in wait in order to commit some felony or other misdemeanor.

Insignia /insigniyos/. Ensigns or arms; distinctive marks; badges; indicia; characteristics.

Insiliarius /insiliyériyas/. An evil counsellor.

Insilium /insiliyum/. Evil advice or counsel.

In simili materia /in símalay mastir(i)ya/. Dealing with the same or a kindred subject-matter.

Insimul /insamal/. Lat. Together; jointly.

Insimul computassent /insamal komputyasent/. They accounted together. In common law pleading, the name of the count in assumpti upon an account stated; if being averred that the parties had settled their accounts together, and defendant engaged to pay plaintiff the balance.
Insinul tenuit /insamal ténwywst/. One species of the writ of formedon brought against a stranger by a coparcener on the possession of the ancestor, etc.

Insinuación /ïnshiynuwayson/. In Spanish law, the presentation of a public document to a competent judge, in order to obtain his approbation and sanction of the same, and thereby give it judicial authenticity.

Insinuare /însinyuwériy/. Lat. In the civil law, to put into; to deposit a writing in court, answering nearly to the modern expression “to file.” Si non mandatum actis insinuatam est, if the power or authority be not deposited among the records of the court. To declare or acknowledge before a judicial officer; to give an act an official form.

Insinuatio /însinyuwéysliyow/. Lat. In old English law, information or suggestion. Ex insinuatione, on the information.

Insinuation. To hint or suggest doubt or suspicion.

In the civil law, the transcription of an act on the public registers like our recording of deeds. It was not necessary in any other alienation but that appropriated to the purpose of donation.

Insinuation of a will. In the civil law, the first production of a will, or the leaving it with the registrar, in order to its probate.

In solido /în sóלוðow/. In the civil law, for the whole; as a whole. An obligation in solido is one where each of the several obligors is liable for the whole; that is, it is joint and several. Henderson v. Wadsworth, 115 U.S. 264, 6 S.Ct. 40, 29 L.Ed. 377. Possession in solidum is exclusive possession. When several persons obligate themselves to the obligee by the terms “in solido,” or use any other expressions which clearly show that they intend that each one shall be separately bound to perform the whole of the obligation, it is called an “obligation in solido” on the part of the obligors.

In solidum /în sółədəm/. For the whole. Si plures sint fidejussores, quotquot erunt numero, singuli in solidum tenetur, if there be several sureties, however numerous they may be, they are individually bound for the whole debt. In parte sive in solidum, for a part or for the whole.

In solo /în sówlow/. In the soil or ground. In solo alieno, in another's ground. In solo proprio, in one's own ground.

Insolvency. The condition of a person or business that is insolvent; inability or lack of means to pay debts. Such a relative condition of a person's or entity's assets and liabilities that the former, if all made immediately available, would not be sufficient to discharge the latter. Under bankruptcy law, the condition of a person or firm that is unable to pay debts as they fall due, or in the usual course of trade or business. Financial condition such that businesses' or person's debts are greater than aggregate of such debtor's property at a fair valuation. American Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago, Ill. v. Bone, C.A.Mo., 333 F.2d 984, 987. In general, state insolvency laws have been superseded by the Federal Bankruptcy Code (11 U.S.C.A.). See Bankruptcy proceedings.

"Insolvency" under the Bankruptcy Code is defined in § 101.

"Technical" insolvency is a situation in which a firm is unable to meet its current obligations as they come due, even though the value of its assets may exceed its liabilities.

Under U.C.C., a person is insolvent who either has ceased to pay his debts in the ordinary course of business or cannot pay his debts as they fall due or is insolvent within the meaning of the Federal Bankruptcy Law. U.C.C. § 1–201(23).

Insolvency proceeding. Any proceeding intended to liquidate or rehabilitate the estate of the person involved, including any assignment for the benefit of creditors and any chapter proceeding under federal bankruptcy law. U.C.C. § 1–201(22). See Bankruptcy proceedings.

In specie /în spîysliyiy/. Specific; specifically. Thus, to decree performance in specie is to decree specific performance. In kind; in the same or like form. A thing is said to exist in specie when it retains its existence as a distinct individual of a particular class.

Inspector. A prosecutor or adversary.

Inspection. To examine; scrutinize; investigate; look into; check over; or view for the purpose of ascertaining the quality, authenticity or conditions of an item, product, document, residence, business, etc. Word has broader meaning than just looking, and means to examine carefully or critically, investigate and test officially, especially a critical investigation or scrutiny. State ex rel. State Farm Mutual Auto. Ins. Co. v. Rickhoff, Mo. App., 509 S.W.2d 485, 487. See also Freedom of Information Act; In camera inspection; Privacy laws.

Discovery practice. Rights of parties in civil actions to inspect papers, documents, land, etc. of opposing party are governed by Fed.R. Civil P. 26 and 34. Similar rights of prosecutor and defendant in criminal cases are governed by Fed.R.Crim.P. 16. Under discovery rules and statutes, "inspection" is sufficiently broad to include testing of evidence, and is not necessarily confined to visual observation but is ordinarily understood to embrace tests and examinations. State ex rel. Remington Arms Co., Inc. v. Powers, Okl., 552 P.2d 1150, 1152. See also Inspection of documents; Jencks Act; Subpoena duces tecum.

Reasonable inspection. As relates to duty of employer to provide employee with proper instrumentalities with which to work, does not mean such an inspection as would necessarily or infallibly disclose a defect if one existed, but only such inspection as reasonably prudent man, in the exercise of ordinary care, would make.

Inspection laws. Laws authorizing and directing the inspection and examination of various kinds of merchandise intended for sale, especially food, with a view to ascertaining its fitness for use, and excluding unwholesome or unmarketable goods from sale that do not conform to standards prescribed by regulations, and directing the appointment of official inspectors for that purpose; e.g. grain or meat inspection laws. Patapsco Guano Co. v. Board of Agriculture, 171 U.S. 345, 18 S.Ct. 862, 43 L.Ed. 191. State and federal inspection laws may also be concerned with employment safety conditions (e.g. Occupational Safety and Health Act (OSHA)); building construction safety (e.g. building ordinances); health conditions of restaurants or food processors; and safety conditions of motor vehicles. See Food and Drug Administration; Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

If a resident refuses permission to a fire, health, building, etc. inspector to inspect the premises, a search warrant will be required. Camara v. Municipal Court of etc. San Francisco, 387 U.S. 523, 87 S.Ct. 1727, 18 L.Ed.2d 930. A warrant is likewise required for inspection of business premises by OSHA inspectors. Marshall v. Barlow's, Inc., 496 U.S. 307, 98 S.Ct. 1816, 56 L.Ed.2d 305. See also Freedom of Information Act; Inspection rights; Inspection searches; Privacy laws.

Inspection of documents. This phrase refers to the right of a party, in a civil action, to inspect and make copies of documents which are essential or material to the maintenance of his cause, and which are either in the custody of an officer of the law or in the possession of the adverse party. Fed.R. Civil P. 26, 34 and 37. Such opportunity for inspection in criminal cases is afforded both the prosecutor and defendant under Fed. R.Crim.P. 16. See also Subpoena duces tecum.

Inspection rights. Buyer of goods has right to inspect them before payment or acceptance at any reasonable place and time and in any reasonable manner. U.C.C. § 2-513(1). See also Inspection.

With respect to discovery in civil actions, Fed.R. Civil P. 26 and 34 affords a party the right to inspect documents, records, land, etc. of the other party. Similar rights are afforded the prosecutor and defendant under Fed.R.Crim.P. 16. See also Inspection of documents; Subpoena duces tecum.

Inspection, trial by. A mode of trial formerly in use in England, by which the judges of a court decided a point in dispute, upon the testimony of their own senses, without the intervention of a jury. This took place in cases where the fact upon which issue was taken must, from its nature, be evident to the court from ocular demonstration, or other irrefragable proof; and was adopted for the greater expedition of a cause.

Inspector. The name given to certain officers whose duties are to examine and inspect things over which they have jurisdiction. Officers whose duty it is to examine the quality of certain articles of merchandise, food, weights and measures, working conditions of business, structural soundness of building, etc.; e.g. federal grain or meat inspectors; OSHA inspectors; building inspectors; health inspectors. See also Inspection laws.

Inspector general. Various agencies of the federal government have an office of Inspector General whose primary function is to conduct and supervise audits and investigations relating to programs and operations of the particular agency. 5 U.S.C.A.App.

Inspectorship, deed of. In old English law, an instrument entered into between an insolvent debtor and his creditors, appointing one or more persons to inspect and oversee the winding up of such insolvent's affairs on behalf of the creditors.

Inspectimus /inspektasmos/ (Lat.) We have seen. A word sometimes used in letters patent, reciting a grant, inspectimus such former grant, and so reciting it verbally; it then grants such further privileges as are thought convenient.

Install. To place in a seat, give a place to; to set, place, or instate in an office, rank, or order, etc. To set up or fix in position for use or service.

Installation. The ceremony of inducing or investing with any charge, office, or rank, as the placing a bishop into his see, a dean or prebendary into his stall or seat, or a knight into his order. The act by which an officer is put in public possession of the place he is to fill. The President of the United States, or a governor, is installed into office, by being sworn agreeably to the constitution and laws.

Installment contract. Type of agreement calling for periodic performances and payments.

An "installment contract" is one which requires or authorizes the delivery of goods in separate lots to be separately accepted, even though the contract contains a clause "each delivery is a separate contract" or its equivalent. U.C.C. § 2-612.

See Installment land contract; Installment sale; Retail installment contract.

Installment credit. Commercial arrangement in which buyer undertakes to pay in more than one payment and seller agrees to sell on such basis and in which a finance charge may be exacted. Such agreements are common-Installment sale. A loan made to be repaid in specified, usually equal, amounts over a certain number of months. The contract specifies the amount and method of payment. Consumer installment loan contracts are subject to disclosure requirements of Truth-in-Lending Act (q.v.). See also Annual percentage rate; Balloon payment; Installment credit; Installment sale.

Installment method. A method of accounting enabling a taxpayer to spread the recognition of gain on the sale of property over the payout period. Under this elective procedure, the seller computes the gross profit percentage from the sale (i.e., the gain divided by the selling price) and applies it to each payment received to arrive at the gain to be recognized. Effective for tax years beginning after 1987, a restriction has been placed on the use of the installment method and dealers in real estate or personal property are not permitted to use the installment method to report gains from the sale of property. I.R.C. § 453.

Installment note. See Installment loan.

Installment plan. Commercial sales arrangement by which goods are sold and buyer pays for them in periodic payments. See also installment contract; Installment credit; Installment loan; Installment sale.

Installment sale. Commercial arrangement by which buyer makes initial down payment and signs a contract for payment of the balance in installments over a period of time. In accounting for such sales, the seller may either account for the profits on basis of each installment payment received or the entire amount in the period of the sale; in latter case, reserves are established for bad debts, collection expenses and costs of reconditioning returned merchandise. See also installment contract; Installment credit; Installment loan; Installment method; Truth-in-Lending Act.

Retail installment sale. The sale of goods or the furnishing of services by a retail seller to a retail buyer for a deferred payment price payable in installments. Retail installment sales contracts are governed with respect to disclosure of terms and finance charges by Truth-in-Lending Act (q.v.). See also Annual percentage rate.

Instance court. In English law, that division or department of the court of admiralty which exercised all the ordinary admiralty jurisdiction, with the single exception of prize cases, the latter belonging to the branch called the "Prize Court." Now part of High Court.

Instancia /instánstia/. In Spanish law, the institution and prosecution of a suit from its commencement until definitive judgment. The first instance, "primera instancia," is the prosecution of the suit before the judge competent to take cognizance of it at its inception; the second instance, "segunda instancia," is the exercise of the same action before the court of appellate jurisdiction; and the third instance, "tercera instancia," is the prosecution of the same suit, either by an application of revision before the appellate tribunal that has already decided the cause, or before some higher tribunal, having jurisdiction of the same.

Instans est finis unius temporis et principium alterius /instànz est fàynas yanàyas tèmpòras èt prìnsípìiyam òltàaráyas/. An instant is the end of one time and the beginning of another.

Instant. Present, current, as instant case.

Instantaneous crime. An "instantaneous" crime is one which is fully consummated or completed in and by a single act (such as arson or murder) as distinguished from one which involves a series or repetition of acts.

Instantaneous death. See Death.

Instanter /instàntar/. Immediately; instantly; forthwith; without delay. Trial instanter was had where a prisoner between attainder and execution pleaded that he was not the same who was attainted. When a party was ordered to plead instanter, he was required to plead the same day. The term was usually understood to mean within twenty-four hours.

Instantly. Immediately; directly; without delay; at once.

Instar /instár/. Lat. Likeness; the likeness, size, or equivalent of a thing. Instar dentium, like teeth. Instar omnium, equivalent or tantamount to all.

In statu quo /in stàtiyùw kwòw/ "stàti(y)`ùw/”. In the condition in which it was. Status quo.

Instigate /instègeyt/. To stimulate or goad to an action, especially a bad action; one of its synonyms is "abet". Hughes v. Van Bruggen, 44 N.M. 534, 105 P.2d 494, 499. See Aid and abet; Entrapment.

Instigation /instégéyshan/. Incitation; urging; solicitation. The act by which one incites another to do something, as to commit some crime or to commence a suit. See Aid and abet; Entrapment; Incite.

In stipulationibus cum quiritur quid actum sit verba contra stipulatorum interpretanda sunt /in stipulyléshiyównàbas kàm kwirìtàr kwìd ìktìmât sit várba kòntà stipylátòrám intàprétsàndà sànt/ . In the construction of agreements words are interpreted against the person using them. Thus, the construction of the stipulatio is against the stipulator, and the construction of the promissio against the promissor.

In stipulationibus, id tempus spectatur quo contrahimus /in stipulyléshiyównàbas id tèmpòs spékîtèytàr kwòw kàntràhùshòmàs/. In stipulations, the time when we contract is regarded.

Instirpare /instîpèriy/. To plant or establish.

In stirpes /in stàrípiyz/. In the law of intestate succession, according to the roots or stocks; by representation; Institutes.

Institutes. A name sometimes given to textbooks containing the elementary principles of jurisprudence, arranged in an orderly and systematic manner. For example, the Institutes of Justinian, of Gaius, of Lord Coke.

Institutes of Gaius. An elementary work of the Roman jurist Gaius, important as having formed the foundation of the Institutes of Justinian (q.v.). These Institutes were discovered by Niebuhr in 1816, in a codex rescriptus of the library of the cathedral chapter at Verona, and were first published at Berlin in 1820.

Institutes of Justinian. One of the four component parts or principal divisions of the Corpus Juris Civilis, being an elementary treatise on the Roman law, in four books. This work was compiled from earlier sources (resting principally on the Institutes of Gaius), by a commission composed of Tribonian and two others, by command and under direction of the emperor Justinian, and was first published November 21, A.D. 533.

Institutes of Lord Coke. The name of four volumes by Lord Coke, published A.D. 1628. The first is an extensive comment upon a treatise on tenures, compiled by Littleton, a judge of the common pleas, temp. Edward IV. This comment is a rich mine of valuable common law learning, collected and heaped together from the ancient reports and Year Books, but greatly defective in method. It is usually cited by the name of "Co. Litt.," or as "1 Inst." The second volume is a comment upon old acts of parliament, without systematic order; the third a more methodical treatise on the pleas of the crown; and the fourth an account of the several species of courts. These are cited as 2, 3, or 4 "Inst.,” without any author's name.

Theophilus' Institutes. A paraphrase of Justinian, made, it is believed, soon after A.D. 533. This paraphrase maintained itself as a manual of law until the eighth or tenth century. This text was used in the time of Hexabiblos of Harmenipulus, the last of the Greek jurists. It is also conjectured that Theophilus was not the editor of his own paraphrase, but that it was drawn up by some of his pupils after his explanations and lectures, inasmuch as it contains certain barbarous phrases, and the texts of the manuscripts vary greatly from each other.

Institutio heredes /instat(y)uwsh(iy)ow harlydas/. Lat. In Roman law, the appointment of the hares in the will. It corresponds very nearly to the nomination of an executor in English law. Without such an appointment the will was void at law, but the prætor (i.e., equity) would, under certain circumstances, carry out the intentions of the testator.

Institution. The commencement or inauguration of anything, as the commencement of an action. The first establishment of a law, rule, rite, etc. Any custom, system, organization, etc., firmly established. An elementary rule or principle. See also Institute.

An establishment, especially one of eleemosynary or public character or one affecting a community. An established or organized society or corporation. It may be private in its character, designed for profit to those composing the organization, or public and charitable in its purposes, or educational (e.g. college or university). In re Peabody's Estate, 21 Cal.App.2d 690, 70 P.2d 249, 250. A foundation, as a literary or charitable institution. Prescott Courier v. Board of Sup'rs of Yavapai County, 49 Ariz. 423, 67 P.2d 483, 486.

Civil law. The appointment of an heir; the act by which a testator nominates one or more persons to succeed him in all his rights active and passive.

Political law. A law, rite, or ceremony enjoined by authority as a permanent rule of conduct or of government. An organized society, established either by law or the authority of individuals, for promoting any object, public or social.

A system or body of usages, laws, or regulations, of extensive and recurring operation, containing within itself an organism by which it effects its own independent action, continuance, and generally its own further development. Its object is to generate, effect, regulate, or sanction a succession of acts, transactions, or productions of a peculiar kind or class. We are likewise in the habit of calling single laws or usages "institutions," if their operation is of vital importance and vast scope, and if their continuance is in a high degree independent of any interfering power.

Practice. Commencement of civil action or criminal prosecution. See Commence.
Public institution. One which is created and exists by law or public authority, for benefit of public in general; e.g., a public hospital, charity, college, university, etc.

Institutional investors. Large investors, such as mutual funds, pension funds, insurance companies, and others who largely invest other people's money.

Institutional lender. Banks, savings and loan associations, and other businesses which make loans in the ordinary course of business, rather than individuals, credit unions, or companies which may make loans to employees.

Institutes /inst(y)uwshiyowniyz/. Lat. Works containing the elements of any science; institutions or institutes. One of Justinian's principal law collections, and a similar work of the Roman jurist Gaius, are so entitled. See Institutes.

Instruct. To convey information as a client to an attorney, or as an attorney to a counsel, or as a judge to a jury. To authorize one to appear as advocate; to give a case in charge to the jury.

Instructions to jury. See Jury instructions.

Instrument. A formal or legal document in writing, such as a contract, deed, will, bond, or lease. A writing that satisfies the requisites of negotiability prescribed by U.C.C. Art. 3. A negotiable instrument (defined in U.C.C. § 3--104), or a security (defined in U.C.C. § 8--102) or any other writing which evidences a right to the payment of money and is not itself a security agreement or lease and is of a type which is in ordinary course of business transferred by delivery with any necessary indorsement or assignment. U.C.C. § 9--105(1).

Anything reduced to writing, a document of a formal or solemn character, a writing given as a means of affording evidence. A document or writing which gives formal expression to a legal act or agreement, for the purpose of creating, securing, modifying, or terminating a right. A writing executed and delivered as the evidence of an act or agreement. Moore v. Diamond Dry Goods Co., 47 Ariz. 128, 54 P.2d 553, 554. Anything which may be presented as evidence to the senses of the adjudicating tribunal.

Incomplete instrument. A paper whose contents show, at the time of signing, that it is intended to become an instrument but that is not an instrument because a necessary element is missing. See U.C.C. § 9--115(1).

See also Bearer instrument; Bill; Commercial paper; Negotiable instruments; Note.

Instrumenta /instruménta/. Lat. That kind of evidence which consists of writings not under seal; as court-rolls, accounts, and the like.

Instrumental. Serviceable, helpful; serving as a means or agent; something by which an end is achieved.

Instrumentality. Something by which an end is achieved; a means, medium, agency. Perkins v. State, 61 Wis.2d 341, 212 N.W.2d 141, 146.

Instrumentality rule. Under this rule, corporate existence will be disregarded where a corporation (subsidiary) is so organized and controlled and its affairs so conducted as to make it only an adjunct and instrumentality of another corporation (parent corporation), and parent corporation will be responsible for the obligations of its subsidiary. Taylor v. Standard Gas & Electric Co., C.C.A.Okl., 96 F.2d 693, 704.

The so-called “instrumentality” or "alter ego" rule states that when a corporation is so dominated by another corporation that the subservient corporation becomes a mere instrument and is really indistinct from controlling corporation, then the corporate veil of dominated corporation will be disregarded, if to retain it results in injustice. National Bond Finance Co. v. General Motors Corp., D.C.Mo., 238 F.Supp. 248, 255.

Instrument of appeal. The document by which an appeal is brought in an English matrimonial cause from the president of the probate, divorce, and admiralty division to the full court. It is analogous to a petition.

Instrument of evidence. Instruments of evidence are the media through which the evidence of facts, either disputed or required to be proved, is conveyed to the mind of a judicial tribunal; and they comprise persons and living things as well as writings. Demonstrative evidence.

Insubordination. State of being insubordinate; disobedience to constituted authority. Refusal to obey some order which a superior officer is entitled to give and have obeyed. Term imports a wilful or intentional disregard of the lawful and reasonable instructions of the employer. Porter v. Pepsi-Cola Bottling Co. of Columbia, 247 S.C. 370, 147 S.E.2d 620, 622.

Insufficiency of evidence to support verdict. This phrase in a motion for new trial, motion for directed verdict, or for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, means that there is some evidence, but not enough in light of the evidence to the contrary to support a verdict. Arnold v. Haskins, 147 S.W.2d 469, 472, 347 Mo. 320. It does not mean that evidence is factually insufficient to support affirmative finding on an issue, but that there is no evidence to warrant submission of the issue. Gannett Outdoor Co. of Texas v. Kubeczka, Tex.App.—Hous. (14 Dist.), 710 S.W.2d 79, 87. See also Directed verdict; Dismissal; Judgment (Judgment notwithstanding verdict). Compare Sufficiency of evidence.

Insufficient. Not sufficient; inadequate to some need, purpose, or use; wanting in needful value, ability, or fitness; incompetent; unfit, as insufficient food; insufficient means. It is the antonym of "sufficient." Nissen v. Miller, 44 N.M. 487, 105 P.2d 324, 325.

Insufficient funds. Bank term meaning that the drawers deposit balance is less than the amount of the check drawn on such account. See Bad check.

Insula /ins(y)ala/. Lat. An island; a house not connected with other houses, but separated by a surrounding space of ground.

Black's Law Dictionary 6th Ed.—18
Insular courts. Federal courts established by Congress with jurisdiction over insular possessions of the United States.

Insular possessions. Island territories of the U.S., e.g. Puerto Rico.

Insulation period. The sixty days immediately preceding the expiration of a collective bargaining agreement when no representation petition may be filed. This is to permit the employer and incumbent union the opportunity to negotiate a new contract without rival claims for recognition.

Insuper /ins(y)úwpər/. Lat. Moreover; over and above. An old English exchequer term, applied to a charge made upon a person in his account.

Insurable. Capable of being insured against loss, damage, illness, death, etc.; proper to be insured as based on standards of insurer; affording a sufficient ground for insurance. Greenberg v. Continental Casualty Co., 24 Cal.App.2d 506, 75 P.2d 644, 649.

Insurable interest. Such a real and substantial interest in specific property as will prevent a contract to indemnify the person interested against its loss from being a mere wager policy. Such an interest as will make the loss of the property of pecuniary damage to the insured. A right, benefit, or advantage arising out of the property or dependent thereon, or any liability in respect thereof, or any relation thereto or concern therein, of such a nature that it might be so affected by the contemplated peril as to directly damnify the insured. Generally, an "insurable interest" exists where insured derives pecuniary benefit or advantage by preservation and continued existence of property or would sustain pecuniary loss from its destruction. Hinojosa v. Allstate Ins. Co., Tex. Civ.App., 520 S.W.2d 936, 938.

In the case of life insurance, a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the continued life of another; also, a reasonable ground, founded upon the relation of the parties to each other, either pecuniary or of blood or affinity, to expect some benefit or advantage from the continuance of the life of the assured. Connecticut Mut. Life Insurance Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U.S. 457, 460, 24 L.Ed. 251. Essential thing being that policy be obtained in good faith, not for purpose of speculating on hazard of life in which insured has no interest. Alexander v. Griffith Brokerage Co., 228 Mo.App. 773, 73 S.W.2d 418, 423.

Insurable value. Value of property for insurance purposes. Based on the value of the property, less indestructible parts (land) for fire insurance. For title insurance purposes, the sales price (market value) is used.

Insurance. A contract whereby, for a stipulated consideration, one party undertakes to compensate the other for loss on a specified subject by specified perils. The party agreeing to make the compensation is usually called the "insurer" or "underwriter;" the other, the "insured" or "assured;" the agreed consideration, the "premium;" the written contract, a "policy;" the events insured against, "risks" or "perils;" and the subject, right, or interest to be protected, the "insurable interest." A contract whereby one undertakes to indemnify another against loss, damage, or liability arising from an unknown or contingent event and is applicable only to some contingency or act to occur in future. An agreement by which one party for a consideration promises to pay money or its equivalent or to do an act valuable to other party upon destruction, loss, or injury of something in which other party has an interest.

Classification

Accident insurance. Form of insurance which undertakes to indemnify the assured against expense, loss of time, and suffering resulting from accidents causing him physical injury, usually by payment at a fixed rate per month while the consequent disability lasts, and sometimes including the payment of a fixed sum to his heirs in case of his death by accident within the term of the policy. See also, Casualty insurance below.

Accounts receivable insurance. Insurance coverage designed to protect against inability to collect because of damage to records which support the accounts.

Additional insured. A person other than the named insured, such as the insured's spouse, who is protected under the terms of the contract.

Air travel insurance. Form of life insurance which may be purchased by air travelers according to the terms of which the face value of the policy is paid to the named beneficiary in the event of death resulting from a particular flight.

All-risk insurance. Type of insurance policy which ordinarily covers every loss that may happen, except by fraudulent acts of the insured. Miller v. Boston Ins. Co., 218 A.2d 275, 278, 420 Pa. 566. Type of policy which protects against all risks and perils except those specifically enumerated.

Annuity insurance. An insurance contract calling for periodic payments to the insured or annuitant for a stated period or for life.

Assessment insurance. A species of mutual insurance in which the policyholders are assessed as losses are incurred. A contract by which payments to insured are not unalterably fixed, but dependent on collection of assessments necessary to pay amounts insured, while an "old-line policy" unalterably fixes premiums and definitely and unchangeably fixes insurer's liability.

Automobile insurance may embrace insurance against loss of or damage to a motor vehicle caused by fire, windstorm, theft, collision, or other insurable hazards, and also against legal liability for personal injuries or damage to property resulting from operation of the vehicle. Policy of indemnity to protect the operator and owner from liability to third persons as a result of the operation of the automobile. See also Collision insurance; and No-fault auto insurance, below, this topic.

Business insurance. Type of insurance which protects a business on the disability or death of a key employee. See also Key man life insurance, below.

Business interruption insurance. Type of insurance which protects a business from losses due to inability to operate because of fire or other hazards.

Cargo insurance. Insures risk that cargo will not be delivered in the same condition in which it was initially shipped.

Casualty insurance. That type of insurance that is primarily concerned with losses caused by injuries to persons and legal liability imposed upon the insured for such injury or for damage to the property of others.

Coinsurance. Provision in a policy that the liability of the insurer is limited to that proportion of the loss which the amount of insurance bears to a particular percentage of the value of property at the time of the loss. See also Coinsurance.

Collision insurance. A form of automobile insurance that covers loss to the insured vehicle from its collision with another vehicle or object, but not covering bodily injury or liability also arising out of the collision. Type of coverage which protects insured for damage to his own property in an accident as contrasted with liability insurance which protects him in an action or claim for loss to another's property.

See also Convertible collision insurance, below.

Commercial insurance. Indemnity agreements, in the form of insurance bonds or policies, whereby parties to commercial contracts are to a designated extent guaranteed against loss by reason of a breach of contractual obligations on the part of the other contracting party. To this class belong policies of contract credit and title insurance.

Comprehensive insurance. See All-risk insurance, above.

Concurrent insurance. Insurance coverage under two or more similar policies of varying dates and amounts.

Convertible collision insurance. Type of collision coverage generally carrying lower premium but requiring higher premium after first loss or claim; an alternative form of deductible collision coverage.

Convertible insurance. A policy that may be changed to another form by contractual provision and without evidence of insurability. Usually used to refer to term life insurance convertible to permanent insurance.

Convertible life insurance. Generally a form of term life insurance which gives the insured the right to change policy to permanent life insurance without medical examination.

Cooperative insurance. Type of non-stock mutual insurance in which the policyholders are the owners; may be assessable or nonassessable.

Credit insurance. Type of insurance protection against losses due to death, disability, insolvency or bankruptcy of debtor. Policy covers balance of debt due, with proceeds payable to creditor. Commonly offered by banks and other lenders. Terms and conditions of such are regulated by federal and state statutes; e.g. Truth-in-Lending laws. See also Credit insurance.

Crime insurance. Type of insurance which protects insured from losses due to criminal acts against insured such as burglary, etc. Such insurance is sponsored by federal government for residents of certain high-crime localities.

Crop insurance. Insurance coverage against financial loss due to destruction of agricultural products resulting from rain, hail, and other elements of nature. Such insurance is sponsored by Federal Crop Insurance Corporation.

Decreasing term insurance. A term insurance policy where the premiums are uniform throughout its life, but the face value of the policy declines. Sometimes called a home protection plan because the face value declines much in the same way a mortgage due on a house declines. A form of life insurance that provides a death benefit of amount declining throughout the term of the contract to zero at the end of the term.

Deposit insurance. Federally sponsored (Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.) insurance coverage against loss of deposits due to bank or savings and loan closings.

Directors' and officers' (D & O) liability insurance. Such insures corporate directors and officers against claims based on negligence, failure to disclose, and to a limited extent, other defalcations. Such insurance provides coverage against expenses and to a limited extent fines, judgments and amounts paid in settlement.

Disability insurance. See Disability insurance.

Employer's liability insurance. In this form of insurance the risk insured against is the liability of the assured to make compensation or pay damages for an accident, injury, or death occurring to a servant or other employee in the course of his employment, either at common law or under statutes imposing such liability on employers. Coverage which protects employer as to claims not covered under worker's compensation insurance.

Endowment insurance. Type of protection which combines life insurance and investment so that if the insured outlives the policy the face value is paid to him. If he does not outlive it, the face value is paid to his beneficiary.

Errors and omissions insurance. Insurance that indemnifies the insured for any loss sustained because of an error or oversight on his part.

Excess insurance. Coverage against loss in excess of a stated amount or in excess of coverage provided under another insurance contract.

Extended term insurance. A non-forfeiture provision in most policies which continues the existing amount of life insurance for as long a period of time as the contract's cash value will purchase term coverage.

Family income insurance. Type of term insurance designed to give maximum coverage during the period of maximum family dependency.

Fidelity insurance. Form of insurance in which the insurer undertakes to guaranty the fidelity of an officer, agent, or employee of the assured, or rather to indemnify the latter for losses caused by dishonesty or a want of fidelity on the part of such a person. See also Fidelity and guaranty insurance.

Fire insurance. A contract of insurance by which the underwriter, in consideration of the premium, undertakes to indemnify the insured against all losses in his houses, buildings, furniture, ships in port, or merchandise, by means of accidental fire happening within a prescribed period. See also Loss payable clause; Pro rata distribution clause.

First party insurance. Insurance which applies to the insured's own property or person.

Fleet policy insurance. Type of blanket policy covering a number of vehicles of the same insured; e.g. covers pool or fleet of vehicles owned by business.

Floater insurance. A form of insurance that applies to moveable property whatever its location, if within the territorial limits imposed by the contract.

Flood insurance. Insurance indemnifying against loss by flood damage. Required by lenders in areas designated as potential flood areas. The insurance is privately issued but federally subsidized.

Fraternal insurance. The form of life or accident insurance furnished by a fraternal beneficial association, consisting in the undertaking to pay to a member, or his heirs in case of death, a stipulated sum of money, out of funds raised for that purpose by the payment of dues or assessments by all the members of the association.

Government insurance. Life insurance underwritten and offered by Federal government to war veterans. See also National service life insurance; War risk insurance, below.

Group health insurance. Provides protection to employees or other members covered under group policy for hospital, surgical and other medical expenses.

Group insurance. A form of insurance whereby individual lives of a group of persons, usually employees, are in consideration of a flat periodical premium based on average age and paid either by employer in whole or partially by both employer and employee, insured each in a definite sum so long as insured remains in such employment and the premiums are paid. Holland v. Lincoln Nat. Life Ins. Co., 45 N.J.Super. 66, 131 A.2d 428, 429. Coverage of number of individuals by means of single or blanket policy. McFarland v. Business Men's Assur. Co. of America, 105 Ga.App. 209, 124 S.E.2d 432, 433. Type of insurance (life, medical, dental, automobile, legal) offered to employees or other homogeneous group under a single master policy. Generally, each employee receives a certificate of participation instead of a policy.

Group term life insurance. Life insurance coverage permitted by an employer for a group of employees. Such insurance is renewable on a year-to-year basis and does not accumulate in value (i.e., no cash surrender value is built up). The premiums paid by the employer on such insurance are not taxed to an employee on coverage of up to a specified amount per year.

Guaranty or fidelity insurance. A contract whereby one, for a consideration, agrees to indemnify another against loss arising from the want of integrity or fidelity of employees and persons holding positions of trust, or embezzlements by them, or against the insolvency of debtors, losses in trade, loss by non-payment of notes, or against breaches of contract.

Hail insurance. Type of insurance which provides protection against loss of crops, grain, etc. because of hail storms. See also Crop insurance, above.

Health insurance. A contract or agreement whereby an insurer is obligated to pay or allow a benefit of pecuniary value with respect to the bodily injury, disablement, sickness, death by accident or accidental means of a human being, or because of any expense relating there­to, or because of any expense incurred in prevention of sickness, and includes every risk pertaining to any of the enumerated risks.

Homeowners insurance. Policy insuring individuals against any, some, or all of the risks of loss to personal dwellings or the contents thereof or the personal liability pertaining thereto.

Hull insurance. Marine or aviation insurance covering loss to vessel or plane or its machinery or equipment.

Indemnity insurance. Insurance which provides indemnity against loss, in contrast to contracts which provide for indemnity against liability. The latter are known as liability contracts or policies, and the former as indemnity contracts or policies.

Inland marine insurance. Originally, a form of insurance protection for goods transported other than on the ocean. Now, term applies to a variety of coverages on floating personal property and to general liability as a bailee.

Joint life insurance. Form of life insurance on two or more persons and payable on the death of the first to die.

Key man life insurance. Type of life insurance written on the life of an important or key officer or employee in a business organization. The business is the beneficiary and is entitled to the proceeds on his death. See also Key man insurance.

Last survivor insurance. Life insurance on two or more persons, the benefits of which are payable on the death of the last survivor.
Lease insurance. Protects against the loss sustained through the termination of a lease by hazards specifically insured against such as, for example, fire.

Level premium insurance. Type of insurance in which the cost is spread evenly over the premium paying period.

Liability insurance. Insurance that covers suits against the insured for such damages as injury or death to other drivers or passengers, property damage, and the like. It is insurance for those damages for which the driver can be held liable.

Liability insurance is that form of insurance which indemnifies against liability on account of injuries to the person or property of another. It is distinguished from "indemnity insurance" (see that title, above), and may be issued to cover the liability of, for example, carriers, contractors, employers, landlords, manufacturers, drivers.

Life insurance. A contract between the holder of a policy and an insurance company (i.e., the carrier) whereby the company agrees, in return for premium payments, to pay a specified sum (i.e., the face value or maturity value of the policy) to the designated beneficiary upon the death of the insured.

That kind of insurance in which the risk contemplated is the death of a particular person; upon which event (if it occurs within a prescribed term, or, according to the contract, whenever it occurs) the insurer engages to pay a stipulated sum to the legal representative of such person, or to a third person having an insurable interest in the life of such person.

See also Life insurance proceeds; Life insurance trust; Term insurance (this topic).

Group life insurance. Type of life insurance commonly offered by companies to their employees in which there is a master insurance contract providing life insurance benefits to each covered employee who holds a certificate indicating his participation. See also Group term life insurance, above.

Limited payment life insurance. Type of life insurance for which premiums are payable for a definite period after which the policy is fully paid.

Straight life insurance or whole life insurance is insurance for which premiums are collected so long as the insured may live, whereas, term insurance is insurance which promises payment only within a stipulated term covered by the policy; though such term policies are commonly renewed each term. The premium for whole life insurance remains the same whereas the premium for term insurance increases with the age of the insured, i.e., as the risk increases. Also, whole life policies build up cash reserves, whereas term policies do not. See also Term insurance, below.

Universal life insurance. Insurance over a specified period of time, which builds a cash value for policyholders over time. This coverage emphasizes the separation of the portion of the premium that is used to cover the insurance protection from the portion of the premium allocated to an investment that is used to build the policy's cash value. Investments are usually selected with a view to maximizing the rate of return.

Variable life insurance. A distinct type of whole-life insurance in which some amount of death benefit is guaranteed by the insurer, but the total death benefit and the cash-value of the insurance before death depend on the investment performance of that portion of the premium which is allocated to a separate fund. Some variable-life insurance policies allow the insured to decide how the separate account is to be invested. Whole life insurance. A life insurance policy in which the insured pays a level premium for his or her entire life and in which there is a constantly accumulating cash value against which the insured can withdraw or borrow. Sometimes referred to as straight life insurance.

Limited policy insurance. Type of coverage which offers protection against specific perils or accidents and against no others.

Major medical insurance. Insurance protection against large medical, surgical and hospital expenses of the insured.

Malpractice insurance. Type of liability insurance which protects professional people (e.g., doctors, lawyers, accountants) against claims of negligence brought against them.

Manual rating insurance. Type of insurance in which the premium is set from a manual classifying types of risk on a general basis such as a particular industry without reference to the individual case.

Marine insurance. A contract whereby one party, for a stipulated premium, undertakes to indemnify the other against certain perils or sea-risks to which his ship, freight, and cargo, or some of them, may be exposed during a certain voyage, or a fixed period of time. An insurance against risks connected with navigation, to which a ship, cargo, freighthage, profits, or other insurable interest in movable property may be exposed during a certain voyage or a fixed period of time. See also Inland marine insurance, above.

Mortgage insurance. Insurance from which the benefits are intended by the policyowner to pay off the balance due on a mortgage upon the death of the insured or to meet the payments on a mortgage as they fall due in case of the death or disability of the insured. Insurance against loss to the mortgagees in the event of default and a failure of the mortgaged property to satisfy the balance owing plus costs of foreclosure.

National service life insurance. Life insurance on servicemen. The contract is between the U.S. Government and private insurers for benefit of servicemen.

No-fault auto insurance. Type of automobile insurance in which claims for personal injury (and sometimes property damage) are made against the claimant's own insurance company (no matter who was at fault) rather than against the insurer of the party at fault. Under such state "no-fault" statutes only in cases of serious personal injuries and high medical costs may the injured bring an action against the other party or his insurer. No-fault statutes vary from state to state in terms of scope of coverage, threshold amounts, threshold types (e.g. monetary or verbal), etc.

Nonassessable insurance. Type of insurance in which the rate of premium is guaranteed and no additional assessments may be made against the policyholder.

Old line life insurance. Insurance on a level or flat rate plan where, for a fixed premium payable without condition at stated intervals, a certain sum is to be paid upon death without condition.

Ordinary life insurance. Whole life and permanent insurance as distinguished from term, group and industrial insurance.

Paid-up insurance. Insurance policy on which all premiums have been paid and on which no further premiums are due and for which benefits company is liable.

Participating insurance. Type of insurance issued by a mutual company on which policyholder may participate in dividend distributions.

Partnership insurance. Life insurance on lives of partners designed to enable surviving partners to buy out deceased partner’s estate. Life or health insurance sold to a partnership, usually for guaranteeing business continuity in case of disability or death of a partner.

Patent insurance. Insurance against loss due to infringement of the insured’s patent, or due to claim of infringement of the other’s patent by the insured.

Product liability insurance. Type of liability coverage which protects manufacturers and suppliers from claims for accidents arising out of the use of their products.

Profits insurance. Policy that pays the insured for loss of profits he would have had if the damage or loss had not occurred.

Public liability insurance. Insurance liability protection against claims arising out of the insured’s property, conduct or the conduct of his agent.

Reciprocal insurance. Type of insurance plan administered by an exchange rather than an insurance company and in which each insured is the insurer of the other members of the plan.

Renewable term insurance. Type of term insurance in which the premiums are level during each term, but increases at each new term with the age of the insured. The insured generally has the right to renew for additional terms without a medical examination.

Retirement income insurance. Type of insurance in which the insurer guarantees payment of the policy if the insured dies before a certain age and an annuity if the insured survives beyond the specified period.

Self insurance. Plan in which the insured (e.g. business) places aside in a fund sufficient sums to cover liability losses that may be sustained. Commonly, under such plan the business will self-insure itself up to a certain amount and then carry regular liability insurance to cover any excesses.

Single premium insurance. Type of policy on which the insured makes but one premium payment.

Social insurance. A comprehensive welfare plan established by law, generally compulsory in nature, and based on a program which spreads the cost of benefits among the entire population rather than on individual recipients. The federal government began to use social insurance programs in 1935 with the passage of the Social Security Act. The basic federal and state approaches to social insurance presently in use are: Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance (i.e. social security); Medicare and Medicaid; unemployment insurance; and worker’s compensation.

Split dollar insurance. Type of insurance in which the insurer divides the premium dollar between life insurance protection and investment for the benefit of the insured.

Step-rate premium insurance. Type of insurance in which the premium may vary from time to time at the option of the insurer.

Surety and fidelity insurance. Form of insurance which more approximates a bond which protects the insured against dishonesty of employees, agents and the public.

Term insurance. Form of pure life insurance having no cash surrender or loan value and generally furnishing insurance protection for only a specified or limited period of time; though such policy is usually renewable from term to term. See also Convertible life; Decreasing term; Extended term; Family income; Group term; Renewable term insurance, above.

Title insurance. A policy issued by a title company after searching the title, representing the state of that title and insuring the accuracy of its search against claims of title defects. Insurance against loss or damage resulting from defects or failure of title to a particular parcel of realty, or from the enforcement of liens existing against it at the time of the insurance. This form of insurance is taken out by a purchaser of the property or one loaning money on mortgage, and is furnished by companies specially organized for the purpose, and which keep complete sets of abstracts or duplicates of the records, employ expert title-examiners, and prepare conveyances and transfers of all sorts. A “certificate of title” furnished by such a company is merely the formally expressed professional opinion of the company’s examiner that the title is complete and perfect (or otherwise, as stated), and the company is liable only for a want of care, skill, or diligence on the part of its examiner; whereas an “insurance of title” warrants the validity of the title in any and all events. It is not always easy to distinguish between such insurance and a “guaranty of title” given by such a company, except that in the former case the maximum limit of liability is fixed by the policy, while in the latter case the undertaking is to make good any and all loss resulting from defect or failure of the title. See also Back title letter.

Trust insurance. A trust, the res of which consists in whole or in part of insurance policies.
Unemployment insurance. Form of taxation collected from business to fund unemployment payments and benefits.

War risk insurance. Insurance offered by the federal government to protect persons against wartime loss of vessels and property on the high seas, and death or injury while in the armed forces. Insurance covering damage caused by acts of war. War risk insurance refers to those contracts which were brought into being by the United States government during the first World War to replace ordinary life and accident insurance which was no longer available to those in the hazardous occupation of military service. See also National service life insurance, above.

Worker's compensation insurance. Type of protection purchased by employers to cover payments to employees who are injured in accidents arising out of and in the course of their employment; governed by statutes in all jurisdictions. See also Employer's liability insurance, above.

Other Insurance Terms

Aviation clause. Insurance clause limiting the liability of the insurer in case of death or injury is connected in a specified degree with aviation.

Blanket policy. Policy covering more than one type of property in one location, or one or more types of property at more than one location.

Claims made policy. Under this type policy the insured is indemnified for claims made during the policy period regardless of when the acts giving rise to those claims occur. Appalachian Ins. Co. v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., C.A.Pa., 676 F.2d 56, 59. Also called "discovery" policy. Compare Occurrence policy, below.

Comprehensive coverage. A simple and convenient form of indemnity now commonly available in contracts of automobile insurance. It includes not only the conventional coverages against loss caused by fire, theft, wind, water, or malicious mischief, but is generally designed to protect against all damage to the insured vehicle except collision or upset.

Concurrent insurance. That which to any extent insures the same interest against the same casualty, at the same time, as the primary insurance, on such terms that the insurers would bear proportionately the loss happening within the provisions of both policies.

Contract of insurance. See Contract of insurance.

Discovery policy. See Claims made policy, above.

Double insurance. See Double.

Excess insurance. See Excess insurance, above.

General and special insurance. In marine insurance, a general insurance is effected when the perils insured against are such as the law would imply from the nature of the contract considered in itself and supposing none to be specified in the policy. In the case of special insurance, further perils (in addition to implied perils) are expressed in the policy.

Insurance adjuster. One undertaking to ascertain and report the actual loss to the subject-matter of insurance due to the peril insured against. The adjuster also settles claims against the insurer. Such adjuster may be employed either by the insurer or the insured. See Adjuster.

Insurance agent. Person authorized to represent insurer in dealing with third parties in matters relating to insurance. Travelers Indem. Co. v. National Indem. Co., C.A.Minn., 292 F.2d 214, 219. An agent employed by an insurance company to solicit insurance business. Agents of insurance companies are called "general agents" when clothed with the general oversight of the companies' business in a state or large section of country, and "local agents" when their functions are limited and confined to some particular locality. See also Insurance broker, below.

Insurance binder. A memorandum of the insurance coverage agreement. It extends temporary protection pending issuance of the formal policy, while the insurer is investigating the risks and setting appropriate premium rates. Blackburn v. Crum & Forster, C.A.Tex., 611 F.2d 102, 103.

Insurance broker. One who acts as middleman between insured and company, and who solicits insurance from public under no employment from any special company and places order of insurance with company selected by insurer or, in absence of any selection, with company selected by such broker. Broker is agent for insured though at same time for some purposes he may be agent for insurer, and his acts and representations within scope of his authority as such agent are binding on insured. An "insurance agent" is tied to his company, whereas an "insurance broker" is an independent middleman not tied to a particular company. Osborn v. Ozlin, Va., 310 U.S. 53, 60 S.Ct. 758, 761, 84 L.Ed. 1074.

Insurance commissioner. A public officer in most states, whose duty is to supervise the business of insurance as conducted in the state by foreign and domestic companies, for the protection and benefit of policy-holders, and especially to issue licenses, approve rates, make periodic examinations into the condition of such companies, and receive, file, and publish periodical statements of their business as furnished by them.

Insurance company. A corporation or association whose business is to make contracts of insurance. They are generally either mutual companies or stock companies. A "mutual" insurance company is one whose fund for the payment of losses consists not of capital subscribed or furnished by outside parties, but of premiums mutually contributed by the parties insured, or in other words, one in which all persons insured become members of the association and contribute either cash or assessable premium notes, or both, to a common fund, out of which each is entitled to indemnity in case of loss. A "stock" company is one organized according to the usual form of business corporations, having a capital stock divided into shares, which, with current income and accumulated surplus, constitutes the fund for the payment of losses, policy-holders paying fixed premiums and not being members of the association unless they also happen to be stockholders. See also Joint-stock insurance company.

Insurance contract. See Policy of insurance.

Insurance policy. See Policy of insurance.

Insurance pool. Combining together of several insurers to share premiums and losses so as to spread risks.

Insurance rating. Process by which the premium for a policy is set after considering the risks involved.

Insurance trust. An agreement between insured and trustee, whereby proceeds of policy are paid directly to trustee for investment and distribution to designated beneficiaries in manner and at such time as insured has directed in trust agreement. See also Trust.

Insuring clause. Provision in insurance policy or bond which recites the agreement of the insurer to protect the insured against some form of loss or damage.

Interinsurance. Insurance system whereby several individuals, partnerships, or corporations, through common attorney in fact, underwrite one another's risks against loss under agreement that underwriters act separately and severally. Hoopeston Canning Co. v. Cullen, 318 U.S. 313, 63 S.Ct. 602, 604, 87 L.Ed. 777. It is distinguishable from all other forms of insurance, in that every insured is interinsurer, and every insurer is insured.

Loss. See Loss.

Mutual insurance company. See that term.

Occurrence policy. This type policy provides for indemnity, regardless of when claim is made or reported, if act giving rise to the claim occurred during policy period. Yazoo County, Miss. v. International Surplus Lines Inc. Co., D.C.Miss., 616 F.Supp. 153, 154. Compare Claims made policy, above.

Over-insurance. Insurance effected upon property, either in one or several companies, to an amount which, separately or in the aggregate, exceeds the actual value of the property. See Excess insurance, above.

Policy of insurance. See that title.

Reinsurance. Insurance of an insurer; a contract by which an insurer procures a third person (usually another insurance company) to insure it against loss or liability, or a portion of such, by reason of the original insurance.

Standard policy. A form of insurance contract which is required, or recommended, to be issued in a particular state. Such is regulated by various state statutes and administrative officials.

Umbrella policy. A form of insurance protection against losses in excess of the amount covered by other liability insurance policies. Type of supplemental or excess liability policy that provides coverage above basic or normal limits of liability.

Under-insurance. Insurance coverage for less than the value of the property. Under such policy, coverage for loss or damage to property will be reduced by percentage of under-insurance.

Underwriter. Party (insurer) who assumes a risk in return for the payment of a premium. See Insurer; Underwriter.

Insure. To make sure or secure, to guarantee, as, to insure safety to any one. To engage to indemnify a person against pecuniary loss from specified perils or possible liability. To provide insurance. See also Underwrite.

Insured. The person who obtains or is otherwise covered by insurance on his health, life, or property. The “insured” in a policy is not limited to the insured named in the policy, but applies to anyone who is insured under the policy. Midwest Contractors Equipment Co. v. Bituminous Cas. Corp., 112 Ill.App.2d 134, 251 N.E.2d 349, 352. The owner of a policy of insurance. Detrick v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., Iowa, 158 N.W.2d 99, 104.

Insurer. The underwriter or insurance company with whom a contract of insurance is made. The one who assumes risk or underwrites a policy, or the underwriter or company with whom contract of insurance is made. National Securities, Inc. v. Johnson, 14 Ariz.App. 31, 480 P.2d 368, 370. See also Underwriter.

Insurgent. One who participates in an insurrection; one who opposes the execution of law by force of arms, or who rises in revolt against the constituted authorities. An enemy.

Insurrection. A rebellion, or rising of citizens or subjects in resistance to their government. Insurrection consists in any combined resistance to the lawful authority of the state, with intent to cause the denial thereof, when the same is manifested, or intended to be manifested, by acts of violence. It is a federal crime to incite, assist, or engage in a rebellion or insurrection against the United States. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2383. See also Internal security acts.

Intakes. In old English law, temporary inclosures made by customary tenants of a manor under a special custom authorizing them to inclose part of the waste until one or more crops have been raised on it.

In tali casu editum et provisum /in téylay kéys(y)uw édstam êt prŷwz(y)em/. See in casu proviso.

Intangible asset. Property that is a "right" such as a patent, copyright, trademark, etc., or one which is lacking physical existence, such as goodwill. A nonphysical, noncurrent asset which exists only in connection with something else, such as the goodwill of a business. An intangible asset generally has a life longer than one year, and is amortized over the period benefited, not to exceed forty years. See Amortization; Intangible property.

Intangible drilling costs. Costs incurred incident to and necessary for the drilling and preparation of oil or gas wells for production that have no salvage value. Under I.R.C. § 263, such costs may be deducted in the year paid rather than capitalized and depreciated.

Intangible property. As used chiefly in the law of taxation, this term means such property as has no intrinsic and marketable value, but is merely the representative or evidence of value, such as certificates of stock, bonds, promissory notes, copyrights, and franchises. See Intangible asset. Compare Tangible property.

Intangibles. Property that is a "right" such as a patent, copyright, trademark, etc., or one which is lacking physical existence; such as goodwill. See Amortization; General intangibles; Intangible asset.

Intangibles tax. In certain states such tax is imposed on every resident for right to exercise following privileges: (a) Signing, executing and issuing intangibles; (b) selling, assigning, transferring, renewing, removing, consigning, mailing, shipping, trading in and enforcing intangibles; (c) receiving income, increase, issues and profits of intangibles; (d) transmitting intangibles by will or gift or under state laws of descent; (e) having intangibles separately classified for taxes.

Intangible value. Nonphysical value of such assets as patents, copyrights, goodwill.

Integral. Whole; untouched. Res integra /riyζ intagre/ means a question which is new and undetermined.

Integrated agreement. See Integrated contract; Integrated writing.

Integrated bar. The act of organizing the bar of a state into an association, membership in which is a condition precedent to the right to practice law. Integration is generally accomplished by enactment of a statute conferring authority upon the highest court of the state to integrate the bar, or by rule of court in the exercise of its inherent power. Integration of Bar Case, 244 Wis. 8, 11 N.W.2d 604.

A "unified bar" or an "integrated bar" is qualitatively different from a "voluntary bar"; membership in a unified or integrated bar is compulsory, whereas membership in a voluntary bar is voluntary, and in effect, one is not at liberty to resign from a unified bar, for, by so doing, one loses the privilege to practice law. Petition of Chapman, 128 N.H. 24, 509 A.2d 753, 756.

Integrated contract. Contract which contains within its four corners the entire agreement of the parties and parol evidence tending to contradict, amend, etc., is inadmissible; the parties having made the contract the final expression of their agreement.

An agreement is integrated where the parties thereto adopt the writing or writings as the final and complete expression of the agreement and an "integration" is the writing or writings so adopted. Wilson v. Viking Corporation, 134 Pa.Super. 153, 3 A.2d 180, 183. See Integrated writing.

Partial integration. Such exists where only a certain part of transaction is embodied in writing and the remainder is left in parol. Schwartz v. Shapiro, 299 C.A.2d 238, 40 Cal.Rptr. 189, 197.

Integrated property settlements. Contract commonly made on separation or divorce of spouses wherein the parties intend that the contract become part of the court order, decree or judgment.

Integrated writing. The writing or writings adopted by the parties to an agreement as the final and complete expression of the agreement. Restatement, Second, Contracts, § 209. Pettett v. Cooper, 62 Ohio App. 377, 24 N.E.2d 299, 302. See also Integrated contract.

Integration. The act or process of making whole or entire. Bringing together different groups (as races) as equals.

Horizontal integration. Combination of two or more businesses of the same type such as manufacturers of the same type of products. Such combinations may violate antitrust laws under certain conditions. See also Merger.

Vertical integration. Combination of two or more businesses on different levels of operation such as manufacturing, wholesaling and retailing the same product. See also Merger.

Integrity. As used in statutes prescribing the qualifications of public officers, trustees, etc., this term means soundness or moral principle and character, as shown by one person dealing with others in the making and performance of contracts, and fidelity and honesty in the discharge of trusts; it is synonymous with "probity," "honesty," and "uprightness."

Intelligibility. In pleading, the statement of matters of fact directly (excluding the necessity of inference or argument to arrive at the meaning) and in such appropriate terms, so arranged, as to be comprehensible by a person of common or ordinary understanding. "Each averment of a pleading shall be simple, concise, and direct." Fed.R. Civil P. 8(e).

Intemperance. A lack of moderation. Habitual intemperance is that degree of intemperance from the use of intoxicating liquor which disqualifies the person a great portion of the time from properly attending to business, or which would reasonably inflict a course of great mental anguish upon an innocent party. Habitual or excessive use of liquor. See Intoxication.

Intend. To design, resolve, propose. To plan for and expect a certain result. To apply a rule of law in the nature of presumption; to discern and follow the probabilities of like cases. See also Intent.
Intendant. One who has the charge, management, or direction of some office, department, or public business.

Used in the constitutional and statutory law of some European governments to designate a principal officer of state corresponding to the cabinet or secretaries of the various departments of the United States government, as, "intendant of marine," "intendant of finance."

Intended to be recorded. Phrase used in conveyances, when reciting some other conveyance which has not yet been recorded, but which forms a link in the chain of title.

Intended use doctrine. In determining "intended use" for which products must be reasonably safe, manufacturer has duty to take into consideration the environment in which product will be used. Larsen v. General Motors Corp., C.A.Minn., 391 F.2d 495, 501. In product liability cases, two factors are considered: the market­ ing scheme of the maker, and the foreseeability of the risks which are inherent in the product when used for the purposes intended. Helene Curtis Industries, Inc. v. Pruitt, C.A.Tex., 385 F.2d 841.

Intendente /intendéntey/. In Spanish law, the immediate agent of the minister of finance, or the chief and principal director of the different branches of the revenue, appointed in the various departments in each of the provinces into which the Spanish monarchy is divided.

Intendment of law. The true meaning, the correct understanding or intention of the law. A presumption or inference made by the courts.

Common intendment. The natural and usual sense; the common meaning or understanding; the plain meaning of any writing as apparent on its face without straining or distorting the construction.

Intent. Design, resolve, or determination with which person acts. Witters v. United States, 70 U.S.App.D.C. 316, 106 F.2d 837, 840. A state of mind in which a person seeks to accomplish a given result through a course of action. As used in intentional torts, "intent" is desire to bring about result that will invad­ e interests of another. Wager v. Pro, C.A., 603 F.2d 1005, 1010, 195 U.S.App.D.C. 423. A mental attitude which can seldom be proved by direct evidence, but must ordinarily be proved by circumstances from which it may be inferred. State v. Gantt, 26 N.C.App. 554, 217 S.E.2d 3, 5. A state of mind existing at the time a person commits an offense and may be shown by act, circumstances and inferences deducible therefrom. State v. Evans, 219 Kan. 515, 548 P.2d 772, 777.

The word "intent" is used throughout the Restate­ ment of Torts, 2nd, to denote that the actor desires to cause consequences of his act, or that he believes that the consequences are substantially certain to result from it. Sec. 8A. See Intentional tort.

Intent and motive should not be confused. Motive is what prompts a person to act, or fail to act. Intent refers only to the state of mind with which the act is done or omitted.

See also Aforethought; Constructive intent; Intention; Larcenous intent; Legislative intent; Malice aforethought; Manifestation of intention; Mens rea; Predatory intent; Premeditation; Presumed intent; Scienter; Specific intent; Willful.

Common intent. The natural sense given to words.

Criminal intent. See Criminal; Knowingly; Mens rea Premeditation.

General intent. In criminal law, the intent to do that which the law prohibits. It is not necessary for the prosecution to prove that the defendant intended the precise harm or the precise result which eventuated.

Specific intent. In criminal law, the intent to accomplish the precise act which the law prohibits; e.g. assault with intent to rape.

Transferred intent. In tort law, if A, intending to strike B, misses B and hits C instead, the intent to strike B is transferred and supplies the necessary intent for the tort against C. See also Transferred intent doctrine.

Intentio /inténsh(i)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, the formal complaint or claim of a plaintiff before the prator.

In old English law, a count or declaration in a real action (narratio).

Intentio cæca mala /inténsh(i)yow síykœ málœ/. A blind or obscure meaning is bad or ineffectual. Said of a testator's intention.

Intentio inservire debet legibus, non leges intentioni /inténsh(i)yow inservávryí debôt liýjâbas, nôn liyîjyz inténshîyôwnay/. The intention [of a party] ought to be subservient to [or in accordance with] the laws, not the laws to the intention.

Intentio mea imponit nomen operi meo /inténsh(i)yow miyô impómñst nówmán óparay miyow/. My intent gives a name to my act.

Intention. Determination to act in a certain way or to do a certain thing. Meaning: will; purpose; design. "Intention," when used with reference to the construction of wills and other documents, means the sense and meaning of it, as gathered from the words used therein. When used with reference to civil and criminal responsibility, a person who contemplates any result, as not unlikely to follow from a deliberate act of his own, may be said to intend that result, whether he desires it or not. See also Four corners rule; Intent; Intentionally.

Intentional. See Intent; Intention.

Intentionally. To do something purposely, and not accidentally. State v. Marshall, 15 Ohio App.2d 187, 239 N.E.2d 755, 758. Person acts "intentionally" if he desires to cause consequences of his act or he believes consequences are substantially certain to result. State v. Bright, 78 App. 239, 337 S.E.2d 87, 89. For purposes of criminal statute means willfully or purposely, and not accidentally or involuntarily. State v. Schott, 222 Neb. 456, 384 N.W.2d 620, 624. See also Intent; Intention.
Intentional tort. A tort in which the actor is expressly or impliedly judged to have possessed intent or purpose to injure.

Intentione /intënshiówni/. In old English law, a writ that lay against him who entered into lands after the death of a tenant in dower, or for life, etc., and held out to him in reversion or remainder.

Intent to kill. An element in certain aggravated assaults and batteries which requires the prosecution to prove the intent to kill in addition to the other elements of the assault and battery. See Aggravated assault; Malice aforethought; Premeditation.

Inter /intr/. Lat. Among; between.

Inter alia /intar éyl(i)yəz/éliya/. Among other things. A term anciently used in pleading, especially in reciting statutes, where the whole statute was not set forth at length. Inter alia enactatum fuit, among other things it was enacted.

Inter alias causas acquisitionis, magna, celebris, et famosa est causa donationis /intar éyliya kózə akwəzhiównəs, məguna, sələbras, et fəməwsə est kóza danəşhiównəs/. Among other methods of acquiring property, a great, much-used, and celebrated method is that of gift.

Inter alios /intar éyliyas/. Between other persons; between those who are strangers to a matter in question.

Inter alios res gestas alis non posse præjudicium facere sepe constitutum est /intar éyliyas rıy jëstəs éliyas nón pósıy prajwudkəndəm fēsarlıy slyphiy kənəstəyəvətəm əst/. It has been often settled that things which took place between other parties cannot prejudice.

Inter apices juris /intar éypəsiy jyrəs/. Among the subtleties of the law. See Apex juris.

Inter arma silent leges /intar ārma səyəltənt liyjyəz/. In time of war the laws are silent. It applies as between the state and its external enemies; and also in cases of civil disturbance where extrajudicial force may supersede the ordinary process of law.

Inter brachia /intar brékιyəs/. Between her arms.

Inter cæteros /intar sətarəws/. Among others; in a general clause; not by name (nominativum). A term applied in the civil law to clauses of disinheritance in a will.

Intercalare /intəkalərjə/. Lat. In the civil law, to introduce or insert among or between others; to introduce a day or month into the calendar; to intercalate.

Intercedere /intəsərdjərə/. Lat. In the civil law, to become bound for another's debt.

Intercept. As used in federal wiretapping statute, means the aural acquisition of the contents of any wire or oral communication through the use of any electronic, mechanical, or other device. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2510. See Eavesdropping; Interception; Wiretapping.

Interception. Within Federal Communications Act, prohibiting interception of communication by wire or radio, indicates taking or seizure by the way or before arrival at destined place, and does not ordinarily connote obtaining of what is to be sent before, or at the moment, it leaves the possession of the proposed sender, or after, or at the moment, it comes into possession of intended receiver. Communications Act of 1934, § 605, 47 U.S.C.A. § 605; Goldman v. United States, N.Y., 316 U.S. 129, 62 S.Ct. 993, 995, 86 L.Ed. 1322. See Eavesdropping; Wiretapping.

Interchangeably. By way of exchange or interchange. This term properly denotes the method of signing deeds, leases, contracts, etc., executed in duplicate, where each party signs the copy which he delivers to the other.

Inter conjuges /intar kónjaɡiyəs/. Between husband and wife.

Intercourse. Communication; literally, a running or passing between persons or places; commerce; sexual relations.

Interdict /intərdikjə/. A prohibitory decree.

Ecclesiastical law. An ecclesiastical censure, by which divine services (i.e. sacraments) are prohibited to be administered either to particular persons or in particular places.

Roman and civil law. A decree of the prætor by means of which, in certain cases determined by the edict, he himself directly commanded what should be done or omitted, particularly in causes involving the right of possession or a quasi possession. In the modern civil law, interdicts are regarded precisely the same as actions, though they give rise to a summary proceeding.

Interdicts are either prohibitory, restorative, or exhibitory; the first being a prohibition, the second a decree for restoring possession lost by force, the third a decree for the exhibiting of accounts, etc.

An interdict was distinguished from an "action" (actio) properly so called, by the circumstance that the prætor himself decided in the first instance (principaliter), on the application of the plaintiff, without previous­ly appointing a judex, by issuing a decree commanding what should be done, or left undone. It might be adopted as a remedy in various cases where a regular action could not be maintained, and hence interdicts were at one time more extensively used than were the actiones themselves. Afterwards, however, they fell into disuse, and in the time of Justinian were generally dispensed with.

Interdiction /intərdikʃən/. French law. Every person who, on account of insanity, has become incapable of controlling his own interests, can be put under the control of a guardian, who shall administer his affairs with the same effect as he might himself. Such a person is said to be "interdit," and his status is described as "interdiction."

Civil law. A judicial decree, by which a person is deprived of the exercise of his civil rights.
French-Canadian law. A proceeding instituted for the purpose of obtaining a curator of the person and property, and includes the calling of a family council and a petition to the court or its prothonotary, followed by a hearing.

International law. An "interdiction of commercial intercourse" between two countries is a governmental prohibition of commercial intercourse, intended to bring about an entire cessation for the time being of all trade whatever. The Edward, 1 Wheat. 272, 4 L.Ed. 86.

Interdum event ut exceptio qua prima facie justa videtur, tamen inique noceat. It sometimes happens that a plea which seems prima facie just, nevertheless is injurious and unequal.

Interesse /intəˈrɛsə/. Lat. Interest. The interest of money; also an interest in lands.

Interesse termini. An interest in a term. That species of interest or property which a lessee for years acquires in the lands demised to him, before he has actually become possessed of those lands; as distinguished from that property or interest vested in him by the demise, and also reduced into possession by an actual entry upon the lands and the assumption of ownership therein, and which is then termed an "estate for years."

Pro interesse suo. For his own interest; according to, or to the extent of, his individual interest. Used (in practice) to describe the intervention of a party who comes into a suit for the purpose of protecting interests of his own which may be involved in the dispute between the principal parties or which may be affected by the settlement of their contention.

Interest. The most general term that can be employed to denote a right, claim, title, or legal share in something. In its application to real estate or things real, it is frequently used in connection with the terms "estate," "right," and "title." More particularly it means a right to have the advantage accruing from anything; any right in the nature of property, but less than title.

The word "interest" is used throughout the Restatement of Torts, Second, to denote the object of any human desire. Sec. 1.

The word "interest" is used in the Restatement of Property both generically to include varying aggregates of rights, privileges, powers and immunities and distributively to mean any one of them. Sec. 5.

"Interest" which may disqualify a judge from hearing a suit is a personal proprietary or pecuniary interest or one affecting individual rights of the judge, and liability, gain or relief to judge must turn on outcome of suit. Mears v. Hall, 263 Ark. 827, 569 S.W.2d 91, 94.

See also Add on interest; Adverse interest; Against interest; Beneficial interest; Community of interest; Compelling state interest; Compound interest; Conflict of interest; Contingent interest in personal property; Coupons; Equitable interest; Executory interests; Future interests; Identity of interests; Insurable interest; Leasehold interest; Legal interest; Lessee's interest; Lessor's interest; New York interest; Ownership; Pecuniary interest; Possessory interest; Public interest; Security interest; Senior interest; Terminable interest; Usury; Vested interest.

Absolute interest. Person has absolute interest in property when such is so completely vested in individual that no contingency can deprive him of it without his consent. So, too, he is the owner of such absolute interest who must necessarily sustain the loss if the property is destroyed. See also Fee simple; Title.

Easement. An easement is an "interest" in land and involves the title. Allen v. Smith, Mo.App., 375 S.W.2d 874, 878. See Easement.

For use of money. Interest is the compensation allowed by law or fixed by the parties for the use or forbearance of borrowed money. Jones v. Kansas Gas & Electric Co., 222 Kan. 390, 565 P.2d 597, 604. Basic cost of borrowing money or buying on installment contract. Payments a borrower pays a lender for the use of the money. Cost of using credit or funds of another. A corporation pays interest on its bonds to the bondholders.

Accrued interest. Interest earned but not yet paid. See also Accruing interest.

Accumulated interest. Interest on bonds and other debts which is due or overdue but not yet paid.

Boston interest. See Boston interest.

Compound interest. Interest upon interest; i.e. interest paid on principal plus accrued interest. Exists where accrued interest is added to the principal sum, and the whole treated as a new principal for the calculation of the interest for the next period. Interest added to principal as interest becomes due and thereafter made to bear interest. Wieland v. Loon, 79 S.D. 608, 116 N.W.2d 391, 393.

Conventional interest. Interest at the rate agreed upon and fixed by the parties themselves, as distinguished from that which the law would prescribe in the absence of an explicit agreement.

Excessive interest. See Usury.

Ex-interest. In the language of stock exchanges, a bond or other interest-bearing security is said to be sold "ex-interest" when the seller reserves to himself the interest already accrued and payable (if any) or the interest accruing up to the next interest day.

Gross interest. The total interest paid by the borrower which includes administrative costs and expenses to lender.

Interest rate. See Interest rate.

Interest upon interest. See Compound interest, above.

Legal interest. See Legal interest.

New York interest. Computation of interest on the exact number of days in a month and not on a thirty day month. See also Boston interest.

Nominal interest. The interest stated on the security and not the rate based on the price of the security.
Ordinary interest. Interest computed entirely on the principal with no interest computed on the interest past due.

Simple interest. That which is paid for the principal or sum lent, at a certain rate or allowance, made by law or agreement of parties. Interest calculated on principal where interest earned during periods before maturity of the loan is neither added to the principal nor paid to the lender. That paid on the principal lent as distinguished from compound interest which is interest paid on unpaid interest. B. F. Saul Co. v. West End Park North, Inc., 250 Md. 707, 246 A.2d 591, 598.

Difference between "simple interest" and "compound interest" is that "simple interest" does not merge with principal and thus does not become part of base on which future interest is calculated. Stewart v. Isbell, 155 Mich.App. 65, 399 N.W.2d 440, 446.

Imputed interest. In taxation, taxable income resulting from the purchase at a bargain of assets for less than their fair value; such occurs when one is so placed as to take advantage of an opportunity not available to others. An estimated charge for interest for use of capital though no cash payment is provided. See also Cost (Imputed cost).

For certain long-term sales of property, the IRS has the authority to convert some of the gain from the sale into interest income if the contract does not provide for a minimum rate of interest to be paid by the purchaser. The application of this procedure has the effect of forcing the seller to recognize less long-term capital gain and more ordinary income (i.e., interest income). I.R.C. § 483. See also Cost (Imputed cost).

Insurance. See insurable interest.

Intervention. Word "interest" as used in provision of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure that on timely application anyone shall be permitted to intervene in an action when representation of his "interest" by existing parties is or may be inadequate and he is or may be bound by judgment in action means specific legal or equitable interest in case. Toles v. U. S., C.A.N.M., 371 F.2d 784, 785, 786. See Fed.R.Civ. P. 24.

Interest sufficient to support intervention as of right must be significant, must be direct rather than contingent, and must be based on a right which belongs to the proposed intervenor rather than to an existing party to the suit. Vazman, S. A. v. Fidelity Intern. Bank., D.C. N.Y., 418 F.Supp. 1084, 1085. An "interest" in the subject of an action so as to render the holder thereof a necessary party or a proper intervenor does not include a mere, consequential, remote or conjectural possibility of being in some manner affected by the result of the action but must be such a direct claim upon the subject matter of the action that the holder will either gain or lose by direct operation of the judgment to be rendered. Bunting v. McDonnell Aircraft Corp., Mo., 522 S.W.2d 161, 169.

Penalty. Interest as a penalty is exaction for past-due obligations; it is compensation for delay in payment (e.g., interest impose by IRS on overdue taxes). Wayne Tp. in Passaic County v. Ricmin, Inc., 124 N.J.Super. 509, 308 A.2d 27, 30. See also Penalty.

Interested party. For purposes of administrative hearing, are those who have a legally recognized private interest, and not simply a possible pecuniary benefit. First Nat. Bank v. Oklahoma Sav. and Loan Bd., Okl., 569 P.2d 993, 996.

Interest equalization tax. Tax imposed on each acquisition by a U.S. person of stock of a foreign issuer, or of a debt obligation of a foreign obligor if such obligation has a period remaining to maturity of a year or more. I.R.C. § 4911(a). This tax expired in 1974.

Interest-free loans. Bona fide loans that carry no interest (or a below-market rate). If made in a nonbusiness setting, the imputed interest element is treated as a gift from the lender to the borrower. If made by a corporation to a shareholder, a constructive dividend could result. In either event, the lender may have interest income to recognize. I.R.C. § 7872.

Interest rate. The percentage of an amount of money which is paid for its use for a specified time. Commonly expressed as an annual percentage rate (APR). Federal and state laws regulate interest rate amounts and disclosures on consumer loans. See Annual percentage rate; Coupon rate of interest; Truth-in-Lending Act; Usury.

Lock rate. An interest rate established at the time of the mortgage application and guaranteed for a specified period, usually until closing. A rate can be "locked" for varying periods—30, 60 or 90 days, in most cases.

Nominal interest rate. The periodic rate of interest that is stated in a loan agreement or security. Frequently the effective interest rate is greater than the nominal rate because of factors like the frequency of compounding and the deduction of interest in advance.

Prime rate. The most favorable interest rates charged by a commercial bank on short-term loans to its best (i.e., most credit worthy) customers.

Real interest rate. The inflation-adjusted rate charged for borrowing funds.

Variable interest rate. A flexible rate of interest which increases or decreases according to current market rates.

Interest reipublicæ ne maleficia remaneant impunita /întârêst riayâpòâslisy nîy mälàfis(h)i(y)i yàmàniyânt împàyànt împiiyânta/. It concerns the state that crimes remain unpunished.

Interest reipublicæ ne sua quis male utatur /întârêst riayâpòâslisy nîy s(y)yûwa kwaî liyâ yàtëyàtâ/. It concerns the state that persons do not misuse their propery.

Interest reipublicæ quod homines conserventur /întârêst riayâpòâslisy kwôd hômàniyâ kônsàrvèntâ/. It concerns the state that [the lives of] men be preserved.

Interest reipublicæ res judicatas non rescindì /întârêst riayâpòâslisy riyà jûwâkèyàtâ nûn râsìndà/. It concerns the state that things adjudicated be not Interest reipublicae suprema hominum testamentam rata haberi /interést riyyaệpblasiy śyöapripyma hómanam těstaménta réyta habiray/. It concerns the state that men's last wills be held valid (or allowed to stand).

Interest reipublicae ut carceres sint in tuto /interést riyyañanablasiy ât káršariziy sint in t(y)úuwtw/. It concerns the state that prisons be safe places of confinement.

Interest (imprimis) reipublicae ut quilibet re sua bene utatur /interést riyyaanjaqabslasiy ât kwâlyalat riý s(y)ýwá blyniy yaéyart/. It is the concern of the state that every one uses his property properly.

Interest reipublicae ut quilibet re sua bene utatur /interést riyyaњaplasiy ât kwâyâlabt riý s(y)ýwá blyniy yaéyart/. It concerns the state that there be an end of lawsuits. It is for the general welfare that a period be put to litigation.

Interference. To check; hamper; hinder; infringe; encroach; trespass; disturb; intervene; intermeddle; interfere. To enter into, or to take part in, the concerns of others. People ex rel. Benefit Ass'n of Railway Employees v. Miner, 387 Ill. 393, 56 N.E.2d 353, 356.

Interference. A Patent and Trademark Office proceeding to determine priority of invention between two or more parties claiming patentably indistinct subject matter. An interference may be between two or more patent applicants or one or more patentees and at least one patent applicant. It may be declared sua sponte by the Patent and Trademark Office or requested by a patent applicant. An interference is decided by the Board of Patent Appeals. 35 U.S.C.A. § 135. See also Infringement.

Interference with business relationship. The elements of this tort are the existence of a business relationship under which the plaintiff has legal rights, an intentional and unjustified interference with that relationship by defendant, and damage to plaintiff as result of breach of that business relationship. Gerber v. Keyes Co., Fla.App. 3 Dist., 443 So.2d 199, 200.

Interim /interam/. Lat. In the meantime; meanwhile; temporary; between. An assignee ad interim is one appointed between the time of bankruptcy and appointment of the regular assignee. See also Interlocutory.

Interim committitur /intaram kamitatar/. "In the meantime, let him be committed." An order of court (or theocket-entry noting it) by which a prisoner is committed to prison and directed to be kept there until some further action can be taken, or until the time arrives for the execution of his sentence.

Interim curator /intaram kyréytar/"kyürütar/. In old English law, a person appointed by justices of the peace to take care of the property of a felon convict, until the appointment by the crown of an administrator or administrators for the same purpose.

Interim financing. A short-term loan secured to cover interim costs associated with building construction, corporate takeovers, or the like, until permanent financing (e.g., mortgage, bonds) is obtained. Also called a bridge loan.

Interim order. One made in the meantime, and until something is done.

Interim receipt. A receipt for money paid by way of premium for a contract of insurance for which application is made. If the risk is rejected, the money is refunded, less the pro rata premium.

Interim statements. In accounting, statements issued for periods less than the regular, annual accounting period. Most corporations are required to issue interim statements on a quarterly basis.

Interinsurance exchange /interinshrans aksčeynj/. Reciprocal exchange (q.v.).

Interior Department. Executive level department of federal government overseeing agencies concerned with Indian affairs, mining, fish and wildlife, geologic research, land management, national parks and monuments, territories, flood control, conservation, public works, and related areas. See also Bureau of Land Management.

Interlaqueare /intarÌַeškwiyéry/. In old English practice, to link together, or interchangeably. Writs were called "interlaqueata" where several were issued against several parties residing in different counties, each party being summonsed by a separate writ to warrant the tenant, together with the other warrantors.

Interlineation. The act of writing between the lines of an instrument; also what is written between lines. See also Interpolate.

Interlining. The practice whereby a carrier, whose certificated routes do not reach the shipment destination, transfers the shipment to another carrier for delivery. Gilbertville Trucking Co. v. U. S., Mass., 371 U.S. 115, 83 S.Ct. 217, 221, 9 L.Ed.2d 177. See also Joint through rate.

Interlocking confession. Confessions which are substantially the same and consistent concerning the major elements of the crime involved. They are admissible in joint trials. State v. Chaffee, 285 S.C. 21, 328 S.E.2d 464, 469.

Interlocking directors. Persons who serve simultaneously on the boards of directors of two or more corporations that have dealings with each other. Federal antitrust law prohibits interlocking directors of competing businesses (15 U.S.C.A. § 19); such directors may also create problems involving fiduciary duties.

Interlocutory /intəˈlɔːktəri/. Provisional; interim; temporary; not final. Something intervening between the commencement and the end of a suit which decides some point or matter, but is not a final decision of the whole controversy. An interlocutory order or decree is one which does not finally determine a cause of action but only decides some intervening matter pertaining to the cause, and which requires further steps to be taken in order to enable the court to adjudicate the cause on the merits. In re Merle’s Inc., C.A.Wash., 481 F.2d 1016, 1018.

As to interlocutory Costs; Decree; Injunction; Judgment; Order; and Sentence, see those titles. See also Intermediate order.

Interlocutory appeal. An appeal of a matter which is not determinable of the controversy, but which is necessary for a suitable adjudication of the merits. See also Final decision rule.

Interlocutory Appeals Act. Federal Act which grants discretion to the courts of appeals to review any interlocutory order whatever in a civil case if the trial (i.e., federal district court) judge, in making the order, has stated in writing that the order involves a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and that an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of litigation. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1292.

Interlocutory decision. Any decision prior to a final decision. See Interlocutory. Compare Final decision or judgment.

Interloper. Persons who interfere or intermeddle into business to which they have no right. Persons who enter a country or place to trade without license. One who meddles in affairs which are none of his business and for which he has no responsibility; an intruder; an intermeddler. Encroachment on rights of others.

Intermarriage. See Miscegenation.

Intermeddle. To interfere wrongly with property or the conduct of business affairs officiously or without right or title. See also Interfere; Interloper.

Not a technical legal term, but sometimes used with reference to the acts of an executor de son tort or a negotiorum gestor in the civil law.

Intermediary. An arbitrator or mediator. A broker; one who is employed to negotiate a matter between two parties, and who for that purpose may be agent of both; e.g., insurance broker. See also Finder.

Intermediary bank. Any bank to which an item is transferred in the course of collection except the depository or payor bank. U.C.C. § 4-105(c).

Intermediate. Intervening; interposed during the progress of a suit, proceeding, business, etc., or between its beginning and end. See Interlocutory; Intervention.

Intermediate account. In probate law, an account of an executor, administrator, or guardian filed subsequent to his first or initial account and before his final account. An account filed with the court for the purpose of disclosing the acts of the person accounting and the state or condition of the fund in his hands, and not made the subject of a final judicial settlement.

Intermediate courts. Those courts which have general jurisdiction, either trial or appellate or both, but which are below the court of last resort in the jurisdiction.

Intermediate order. An order made between the commencement of the action and its final determination, incident to and during its progress, which does not determine the cause but only some intervening matter relating thereto; one that is not directly appealable. See Interlocutory.

Intermediation. A financial term which refers to the placement of funds with a bank or other financial institution, also known as an intermediary, with the objective of investing such funds in stocks, bonds, etc.

In terminis terminantibus /in tärmanəntəbəs/. In terms of determination; exactly in point. In express or determine terms.

Intermittent easement. See Easement.

Intermittent stream. A stream, the flow of which in the state of nature is interrupted either from time to time during the year or at various places along its course, or both. U. S. v. Fallbrook Public Utility Dist., D.C.Cal., 109 F.Supp. 28, 78.

Intermixture of goods. Confusion of goods; the confusing or commingling together of goods belonging to different owners in such a way that the property of no particular owner can be separately identified or extracted from the mass. See also Confusion of goods.

Intern. To restrict or confine a person or group of persons, particularly in time of war (e.g., enemy aliens). An advanced student or recent graduate in a professional field; e.g., one trained in a profession allied to medicine who undergoes a period of practical clinical experience prior to practicing his profession. Regents of University of Mich. v. Michigan Employment Relations Commission, 38 Mich.App. 55, 195 N.W.2d 875, 878. See also Internment.

Internal. Relating to the interior; comprised within boundary lines; of interior concern or interest; domestic, as opposed to foreign.

Internal act. That which transpires within a person or organization or government as contrasted with a happening outside such.

Internal audit. See Audit.
INTERNAL AFFAIRS OF CORPORATION

Internal affairs of corporation. In conflicts, the rights and liabilities of a corporation are determined by the local law of the state which has the most significant relationship to the occurrence and the parties. Restatement, Second, Conflicts, § 302(1). Such affairs are generally left to courts of the state of incorporation.

Internal commerce. See Commerce.

Internal financing. Financing of business from funds generated from normal operations in contrast to financing from borrowed funds or stock issues.

Internal improvements. With reference to governmental policy and constitutional provisions restricting taxation or the contracting of public debts, this term means works of general public utility or advantage, designed to promote facility of intercommunication, trade, and commerce, the transportation of persons and property, or the development of the natural resources of the state, such as railroads, public highways, turnpikes, and canals, bridges, the improvement of rivers and harbors, systems of artificial irrigation, and the improvement of water powers; but it does not include the building and maintenance of state institutions.

Internal police. A term sometimes applied to the police power, or power to enact laws in the interest of the public safety, health, and morality, which is inherent in the legislative authority of each state, is to be exercised with reference only to its domestic affairs and its own citizens, and is not surrendered to the federal government. See also Police power.

Internal revenue. Governmental revenues from internal sources by way of taxes as contrasted with revenues from customs and foreign sources.

Internal Revenue Code (I.R.C.). That body of law which codifies all federal tax laws including income, estate, gift, excise, etc. taxes. Such laws comprise Title 26 of the U.S. Code, and are implemented by the Internal Revenue Service and through it by Treasury Regulations; Revenue Rulings, etc. Because of the extensive revisions to the tax statutes that occurred with the Tax Reform Act of 1986, Title 26 of the U.S. Code is now known as the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

Internal Revenue Service. The Internal Revenue Service (I.R.S.) is responsible for administering and enforcing the internal revenue laws, except those relating to alcohol, tobacco, firearms, explosives, and wagering. It is a part of the Department of the Treasury. Basic I.R.S. activities include providing taxpayer service and education; determination, assessment, and collection of internal revenue taxes; determination of pension plan qualification and exemption organization status; and preparation and issuance of rulings and regulations to interpret the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code.

Internal security. That branch of law and government (e.g. CIA, FBI) dealing with measures to protect the country from subversive activities.

Internal security acts. Federal Acts (Smith Act, 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 2385, 2386; McCarran Act, 50 U.S.C.A. § 781 et seq.) controlling and making illegal subversive activities of communist organizations and other groups whose purpose is to overthrow or disrupt the government.

Internal waters. Such as lie wholly within the body of the particular state or country. See also inland waters.

International agreements. Treaties and other agreements of a contractual character between different countries or organizations of states (foreign) creating legal rights and obligations between the parties.

International commerce. See Commerce.

International Court of Justice. Judicial arm of the United Nations. It has jurisdiction to give advisory opinions on matters of law and treaty construction when requested by the General Assembly, Security Council or any other international agency authorized by the General Assembly to petition for such opinion. It has jurisdiction, also, to settle legal disputes between nations when voluntarily submitted to it. Its judgments may be enforced by the Security Council. Its jurisdiction and powers are defined by statute, to which all member states of the U.N. are parties. Judges of such court are elected by the General Assembly and Security Council of U.N.

International jurisdiction. Power of a court or other organization to hear and determine matters between different countries or persons of different countries or foreign states. See International Court of Justice.

International law. Those laws governing the legal relations between nations. Rules and principles of general application dealing with the conduct of nations and of international organizations and with their relations inter se, as well as with some of their relations with persons, whether natural or juridical. Restatement Foreign Relations (Third) § 101. Body of consensual principles which have evolved from customs and practices civilized nations utilize in regulating their relationships and such customs have great moral force. Zenith Radio Corp. v. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd., D.C.Pa., 494 F.Supp. 1161, 1178. International customs and treaties are generally considered to be the two most important sources of international law.

International Monetary Fund. Agency of United Nations established to stabilize international exchange and promote balanced international trade. See also World Bank.

International Shoe Case. Due process requires that a foreign corporation be "present" within a state by a measure of minimal activity within the state for suits to be maintained against it in the state. International Shoe Co. v. State of Washington, etc., 326 U.S. 310, 66 S.Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed. 95. See also McGee v. International Life Ins. Co., 355 U.S. 220, 78 S.Ct. 199, 2 L.Ed.2d 223; Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 78 S.Ct. 1228, 2 L.Ed.2d 1283. See Minimum contacts.

International Trade Court. See Court of International Trade.

Internment. The detention or confinement of enemy aliens or persons suspected of disloyalty in specially Inter partes /intərˈpærɪtz/. Between parties, between those who stand on a level or equality, as respects diligence, opportunity, responsibility, etc.

Inter partes /ˈɪntərˌpærɪts/. Between parties, in which two persons unite, each making conveyance to, or engagement with, the other, are called “papers inter partes.”

Interpellate /ɪntərpɛlət/ˈpɛlət/. To address with a question, especially when formal and public; originally used with respect to proceedings in the French legislature. Used in reference to questions by the court to counsel during an argument.

Interpellation /ɪntərˌpɛləˈʃən/. The act of interpellating; the words interpellated. See also Interlineation; Interpretation.

Interposition /ɪntərˈpəzɪʃən/. The doctrine that a state, in the exercise of its sovereignty, may reject a mandate of the federal government deemed to be unconstitutional or to exceed the powers delegated to the federal government. The doctrine denies constitutional obligation of states to respect Supreme Court decisions with which they do not agree. Bush v. Orleans Parish School Bd., D.C.La., 188 F.Supp. 416. The concept is based on the 10th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States reserving to the states powers not delegated to the United States. Historically, the doctrine emanated from Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (Dall.) 419, wherein the state of Georgia, when sued in the Supreme Court by a private citizen of another state, entered a remonstrance and declined to recognize the court’s jurisdiction. The U.S. Supreme Court rejected this doctrine of interposition in Cooper v. Aaron, 358 U.S. 1, 78 S.Ct. 1401, 3 L.Ed.2d 5.

Interpret. To construe; to seek out the meaning of language; to translate orally from one tongue to another.

Interpretare et concordare leges legibus, est optimus interpretandi modus /ɪntərprɛtɛrē ˈɛt kɔŋˌkɔrdɛrē lɪˈʒes lɛɡɪbʊs, ɛst ɔˈtɪməs ɪntərprɛtɛndɪˈmi dəʊm/. To interpret, and [in such a way as] to harmonize laws with laws, is the best mode of interpretation.

Interpretatio chartarum beneigne facienda est, ut res magis valeat quam pereat /ɪntərprɛtɛˈtʃɪərəm ˈbənjɪɡnɪ fəˈsaɪndə ɛst ʊt ˈreɪs ˈmeɪdʒəs væˈlɛɪt kwɑːm ˈpɛɾeɪət/. The interpretation of deeds is to be liberal, that the thing may rather have effect than fail.

Interpretatio fienda est ut res magis valeat quam pereat /ɪntərprɛtɛˈtʃɪərəm ˈfaɪˌdə ɛst ʊt ˈreɪs ˈmeɪdʒəs væˈlɛɪt kwɑːm ˈpɛɾeɪət/. Such an interpretation is to be adopted that the thing may rather stand than fall.

Interpretation. The art or process of discovering and ascertaining the meaning of a statute, will, contract, or other written document. The discovery and representation of the true meaning of any signs used to convey ideas.

It is said to be either “legal,” which rests on the same authority as the law itself, or “doctrinal,” which rests Interpolar. International Criminal Police Organization; a coordinating group for international law enforcement.

Interpolate /ɪntərˈpə lest/. To insert (additional or false) words in a complete instrument or document, thus altering meaning of such. See also Interlineation.

Interpolated terminal reserve. The method used in valuing insurance policies for gift and estate tax purposes when the policies are not paid-up at the time of their transfer.

Judgment inter partes. See Judgment in personam or inter partes.

Interpleader. An equitable proceeding to determine the rights of rival claimants to property held by a third person having no interest therein. Balish v. Farnham, 92 Nev. 133, 546 P.2d 1297, 1299. When two or more persons claim the same thing (or fund) of a third, and he, laying no claim to it himself, is ignorant which of them has a right to it, and fears he may be prejudiced by their proceeding against him to recover it, he may join such claimants as defendants and require them to interplead their claims so that he may not be exposed to double or multiple liability. A defendant exposed to similar liability may obtain such interpleader by way of cross-claim or counterclaim. Interpleader in federal court is governed by the federal Interpleader Act, 28 U.S.C.A. § 1335, and Fed.R.Civ.P. 22. Similar statutes and court rules govern interpleader in state courts.

Statutory interpleader. A federal statutory right (28 U.S.C.A. § 1335) whereby disinterested stakeholder from whom several people claim same proceeds may require claimants to litigate matter among themselves without designated areas; e.g. Japanese during World War II. Johnson v. Eisentrager, 339 U.S. 763, 70 S.Ct. 936, 94 L.Ed. 1255.

Internuncio /ɪntərnəns(h)iˈyəs/. A messenger between two parties; a go-between. Applied to a broker, as the agent of both parties.

Internuncius /ɪntərnəns(h)iˈyəs/. A messenger between two parties; a go-between. Applied to a broker, as the agent of both parties.
upon its intrinsic reasonableness. Legal interpretation may be either "authentic," when it is expressly provided by the legislator, or "usual," when it is derived from unwritten practice. Doctrinal interpretation may turn on the meaning of words and sentences, when it is called "grammatical," or on the intention of the legislator, when it is described as "logical." When logical interpretation stretches the words of a statute to cover its obvious meaning, it is called "extensive;" when, on the other hand, it avoids giving full meaning to the words, in order not to go beyond the intention of the legislator, it is called "restrictive."

As to strict and liberal interpretation, see Construction. See also Broad interpretation; Last antecedent rule.

Construction distinguished. In the strict usage of this term, "construction" is a term of wider scope than "interpretation;" for, while the latter is concerned only with ascertaining the sense and meaning of the subject-matter, the former may also be directed to explaining the legal effects and consequences of the instrument in question. Hence interpretation precedes construction, but stops at the written text. Interpretation and construction of written instruments are not the same. A rule of construction is one which either governs the ascertainment of the meaning of the maker of the instrument. In re Union Trust Co., 89 Misc. 69, 151 N.Y.S. 246, 249.

These two terms are however, commonly used interchangeably.

Close or strict interpretation (interpretatio restricta) is adopted if just reasons, connected with the formation and character of the text, induce us to take the words in their narrowest meaning. This species of interpretation has generally been called "literal."

Extensive interpretation (interpretatio extensa, called, also, "liberal interpretation") adopts a more comprehensive signification of the word.

Extravagant interpretation (interpretatio excedens) is that which substitutes a meaning evidently beyond the true one. It is therefore not genuine interpretation.

Free or unrestricted interpretation (interpretatio soluta) proceeds simply on the general principles of interpretation in good faith, not bound by any specific or superior principle.

Limited or restricted interpretation (interpretatio limitata) is when we are influenced by other principles than the strictly hermeneutic ones.

Predestined interpretation (interpretatio predestinata) takes place if the interpreter, laboring under a strong bias of mind, makes the text subservient to his preconceived views or desires. This includes artful interpretation (interpretatio vafer), by which the interpreter seeks to give a meaning to the text other than the one he knows to have been intended.

In the civil law, authentic interpretation of laws is that given by the legislator himself, which is obligatory on the courts. Customary interpretation (also called "usual") is that which arises from successive or concurrent decisions of the court on the same subject-matter, having regard to the spirit of the law, jurisprudence, usages, and equity; as distinguished from "authentic" interpretation, which is that given by the legislator himself.

Interpretation clause. A section of a statute which defines the meaning of certain words occurring frequently in the other sections.

Interpretatio talis in ambiguis semper fienda est ut evitetur inconveniens et absurdum /intrprêtésh(y)-ow tàêls in ambugyúwas sempñr fêyênda êst êt êvêtiytar inkânyñi(y)enz êt ëtsárdam/. In cases of ambiguity, such an interpretation should always be made that what is inconvenient and absurd may be avoided.

Interpreter. A person sworn at a trial to interpret the evidence of a foreigner or a deaf person to the court.

Interpretative rule. Rule which is promulgated by administrative agency to interpret, clarify or explain statutory regulations under which agency operates. Young v. South Carolina Dept. of Highways and Public Transp., 287 S.C. 108, 336 S.E.2d 879, 881.

Inter quatuor parietes /intrár kwótwôwar paráyâdiy/. Between four walls.

Inter regalia /intrár rágyéli(y)ya/. In English law, among the things belonging to the sovereign. Among these are rights of salmon fishing, mines of gold and silver, forests, forfeitures, casualties of superiority, etc., which are called "regalia minora," and may be conveyed to a subject. The regalia majora include the several branches of the royal prerogative, which are inseparable from the person of the sovereign.

Interregnum /intrârégnâm/. An interval between reigns. The period which elapses between the death of a sovereign and the election of another. The vacancy which occurs when there is no government.

Interrogation. In criminal law, the process of questions propounded by police to person arrested or suspected to seek solution of crime. Such person is entitled to be informed of his rights, including right to have counsel present, and the consequences of his answers. If the police fail or neglect to give these warnings, the questions and answers are not admissible in evidence at the trial or hearing of the arrested person. Miranda v. State of Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 16 L.Ed.2d 694. As conceptualized in the Miranda decision of the United States Supreme Court, constitutionally protected interrogation must reflect a measure of compulsion above and beyond that inherent in custody itself. Rhode Island v. Innis, R.I., 446 U.S. 291, 100 S.Ct. 1682, 1688, 64 L.Ed.2d 297. See also Confession; Custodial interrogation; Exclusionary Rule; Investigatory interrogation; Miranda Rule.

Custodial interrogation. Questioning initiated by law enforcement officers after a person has been taken into custody or otherwise deprived of his freedom of action in any significant way. See also Miranda Rule.
Interrogatories /interrogatɔːri/. A set or series of written questions drawn up for the purpose of being propounded to a party, witness, or other person having information of interest in the case.

A pretrial discovery device consisting of written questions about the case submitted by one party to the other party or witness. The answers to the interrogatories are usually given under oath, i.e., the person answering the questions signs a sworn statement that the answers are true. Fed.R. Civil P. 33.

The court may submit to the jury, together with appropriate forms for a general verdict, written interrogatories upon one or more issues of fact the decision of which is necessary to a verdict. See Fed.R. Civil P. 49.

See also Deposition; Discovery; Special interrogatories.

In terrorem /in terəˈrɔrm/. Lit. In fright or alarm or terror. In terror or warning; by way of threat. Applied to legacies given upon condition that the recipient shall not dispute the validity or the dispositions of the will; such a condition being usually regarded as a mere threat. See in terrorem clause.

In terrorem clause. A provision in a document such as a lease or will designed to frighten a beneficiary or lessee into doing or not doing something; e.g., clause in a will providing for revocation of a bequest or devise if the legatee or devisee contests the will. A condition “in terrorem” is a provision in a will which threatens beneficiaries with forfeiture of their legacies and bequests should they contest validity or dispositions of will. Taylor v. Rapp, 217 Ga. 654, 124 S.E.2d 271, 272. Such provisions are unenforceable in many states.

In terrorem populi /in terəˈrɔrm pɔˈpiːslə/. Lat. To the terror of the people. A technical phrase formerly necessary in indictments for riots.

Interruptio /intərˈpɹʃəˈrɔ/. Lat. Interruption. A term used both in the civil and common law of prescription.

Interruptio multiplex non tollit prescriptionem semel obtentam /intərˈpɹʃəˈrɔ məˈplɛks nɔn tɔlˈtər prəˌskripʃəˈrɔnəm sɛməl əbˈtɛntəm/. Frequent interruption does not take away a prescription once secured.

Intersection. As applied to a street or highway means the space occupied by two streets at the point where they cross each other. Space common to both streets or highways, formed by continuing the curb lines. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Dickson, 27 Tenn.App. 752, 173 S.W.2d 714, 718.

Point of intersection of two roads is the point where their middle lines intersect. But the term may also mean the point which each of two approaching vehicles will reach at the same moment. “Intersection” may also apply where street or highway runs into but without crossing another; e.g., a “T” intersection.

Inter se or inter sese /intər səˈsiː/. Lat. Among or between themselves; used to distinguish rights or duties between two or more parties from their rights or duties to others.

Interspousal. Between husband and wife.

Interspousal immunity. See Husband-wife tort actions.

Interstate. Between two or more states; between places or persons in different states; concerning or affecting two or more states politically or territorially. Compare intrastate commerce.

Interstate agreements. See Interstate compact.

Interstate and foreign commerce. Commerce between a point in one State and a point in another State, between points in the same State through another State or through a foreign country, between points in a foreign country or countries through the United States, and commerce between a point in the United States and a point in a foreign country or in a Territory or possession of the United States, but only insofar as such commerce takes place in the United States. The term “United States” means all the States and the District of Columbia. 49 U.S.C.A. § 10102.

Interstate commerce. Traffic, intercourse, commercial trading, or the transportation of persons or property between or among the several states of the Union, or from or between points in one state and points in another state; commerce between two states, or between places lying in different states. Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. (9 Wheat.) 1, 6 L.Ed. 23; Wabash, etc. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U.S. 557, 7 S.Ct. 4, 30 L.Ed. 424. It comprehends all the component parts of commercial intercourse between different states. Furst v. Brewster, 282 U.S. 493, 51 S.Ct. 295, 296, 75 L.Ed. 478. See Balancing of interests.

Interstate Commerce Act. The act of congress of February 4, 1887 (49 U.S.C.A. § 10101 et seq.), designed to regulate commerce between the states, and particularly the transportation of persons and property, by carriers, between interstate points.

Interstate Commerce Commission. The Interstate Commerce Commission regulates interstate surface transportation, including trains, trucks, buses, water carriers, freight forwarders, transportation brokers, and a coal slurry pipeline. The regulatory laws vary depending on the type of transportation; however, they generally involve certification of carriers seeking to provide transportation for the public, rates, adequacy of service, purchases, and mergers. The Commission assures that the carriers it regulates will provide the public with rates and services that are fair and reasonable. 49 U.S.C.A. § 10301 et seq.

Interstate compact. A voluntary agreement between two or more states which is designed to meet common problems of the parties concerned. Compacts on major matters must receive the consent of the U.S. Congress as specified in Article I, Section 10 of the Constitution. They usually relate to such things as conservation, boundary problems, education, port control, flood control, water rights, and penal matters.

Interstate extradition. The reclamation and surrender, according to due legal proceedings, of a person who, having committed a crime in one of the states of the Union, has fled into another state to evade justice or escape prosecution. Art. IV, § 2, U.S. Const.; 18 U.S.C.A. § 3181 et seq. See Extradition; Interstate rendition.

Interstate Land Sales Full Disclosure Act. Federal Act (15 U.S.C.A. § 1701 et seq.), the purpose of which is to provide purchasers and lessees of undeveloped land with the information they need in order to make an informed decision with regard to the land being sold or leased. As indicated by its title, this is a "disclosure" act.

Interstate law. That branch of law which affords rules and principles for the determination of controversies between citizens of different states in respect to mutual rights or obligations, in so far as the same are affected by the diversity of their citizenship or by diversity in the laws or institutions of the several states.

Interstate rendition. Right of one state to demand from asylum state surrender of a fugitive from justice from the demanding state when the fugitive is found in the asylum state. Art. IV, § 2, U.S. Const. Application of Dugger, 17 Ariz.App. 297, 497 P.2d 413. Nearly all states have adopted the Uniform Criminal Extradition Act. See Extradition; Interstate extradition.

Interval ownership. Type of ownership of second (i.e., vacation) home whereby the property is owned for only part of the year. Each owner receives a deed covering his interval period. See also Timesharing.

Intervening act. Such act of third person in order to break chain of causation and obviate liability for original breach of duty must be a superseding cause and one which original wrongdoer was not bound to anticipate as the natural or ordinary result of his acts. Littell v. Argus Production Co., C.C.A.Kan., 78 F.2d 955, 957. See also Intervening agency; Superseding cause.

Intervening agency. To render an original wrong a remote cause, an "intervening agency" must be independent of such wrong, adequate to produce the injury, so interrupting the natural sequence of events as to produce a result different from what would have been produced, and one that could not have been reasonably expected from the original wrong. An independent "intervening agency" which will protect the original wrongdoer must be the efficient cause of the injury of which complaint is made, and not a negligent act or omission of such agency concurring with or succeeding the original negligence permitted by the original wrongdoer to continue and which in the natural course of events results in such injury. In short, the result prevented by the intervening agency must be the injury complained of, and not the requisite for that injury. Swanson v. Slagal, 212 Ind. 394, 8 N.E.2d 993, 1000. See also Intervening cause.

Intervening cause. In tort law, as will relieve of liability for an injury, is an independent cause which intervenes between the original wrongful act or omission and the injury, turns aside the natural sequence of events, and produces a result which would not otherwise have followed and which could not have been reasonably anticipated. Kopriva v. Union Pacific R. Co., 592 P.2d 711, 713. An act of an independent agency which destroys the causal connection between the negligent act of the defendant and the wrongful injury; the independent act being the immediate cause, in which case damages are not recoverable because the original wrongful act is not the proximate cause. An "intervening efficient cause" is a new and independent force which breaks the causal connection between the original wrong and injury, and itself becomes direct and immediate cause of injury. Philippaum v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co., 315 Ill. 131, 145 N.E. 806, 808.

In criminal law, a cause which comes between an antecedent and a consequence; it may be either independent or dependent, but in either case it is sufficient to negate criminal responsibility. See also Intervening act; Intervening agency; Superseding cause.

Intervening damages. See Damages.

Intervening force. One which actively operates in producing harm to another after defendant's act or omission has been committed. Intervening force will not break a causal connection if that force was itself probable or foreseeable by the original wrongdoer. Kerns v. Engelke, 54 Ill.App.3d 323, 12 Ill.Dec. 270, 369 N.E.2d 1284, 1293. See Intervening cause.

Intervenor. An intervenor is a person who voluntarily interposes in an action or other proceeding with the leave of the court. See Intervention.

Intervention. The procedure by which a third person, not originally a party to the suit, but claiming an interest in the subject matter, comes into the case, in order to protect his right or interpose his claim. The grounds and procedure are usually defined by various state statutes or Rules of Civil Procedure; e.g., Fed.R.Civ.P. 24; 28 U.S.C.A. § 2403. Intervention may exist either as a matter of right (Rule 24(a)) or at the discretion of the court (Rule 24(b)).

In English ecclesiastical law, the proceeding of a third person, who, not being originally a party to the suit or proceeding, but claiming an interest in the subject-mat-
Inter vivos trust.

Inter vivos /inter váyvows/.

Inter vivos gift. Gift made when donor is living and provides that gift take effect while donor is living as contrasted with testamentary gift which is to take effect on death of donor (testator).

Intestate succession. A succession is called "intestate" when the deceased has left no will or when his will has been revoked or annulled as irregular. In such case the property of the deceased will be disposed of under the laws of descent and distribution. See Intestate.

Intestatose /intestatéytw/.

Intestable. One who has not testamentary capacity; e.g., an infant, lunatic, or person civilly dead.

Intestacy /intéstasíy/.

In the course of employment. The phrase "in the course of" employment, as used in workers’ compensation acts, relates to time, place and circumstances under which an accident occurred, and means injury happened while worker was at work in his or her employer’s service. Peter Kiewitt Sons’ Co. v. Industrial Commission, 88 Ariz. 164, 354 P.2d 28, 30. See also Arising out of and in the course of own employment; Course of employment.

In the civil law, a notification to a party, that the court above will hear the appeal. Particularly, a notice given by the party taking the appeal, to the other party, that the court above will hear the appeal.

Intimacy /intámasíy/.

Intimation. In the civil law, a notification to a party that some step in a legal proceeding is asked or will be taken. Particularly, a notice given by the party taking an appeal, to the other party, that the court above will hear the appeal.

Intimidation. Unlawful coercion; extortion; duress; putting in fear.
To take, or attempt to take, "by intimidation" means willfully to take, or attempt to take, by putting in fear of bodily harm. Such fear must arise from the willful conduct of the accused, rather than from some mere temperamental timidity of the victim; however, the fear of the victim need not be so great as to result in terror, panic, or hysteria.

Intitle. An old form of "entitle."

Into. A preposition signifying to the inside of; within. It expresses entrance, or a passage from the outside of a thing to its interior, and follows verbs expressing motion. It has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "at," "inside of," and "to," and has been distinguished from the words "from" and "through."

Intol and uttol /intal and átal/. Toll or custom paid for things imported and exported, or bought in and sold out.

In totidem verbis /in towdáydam várbos/. In so many words; in precisely the same words; word for word.

In toto /in tówtow/. In the whole; wholly; completely; as the award is void in toto.

In toto et pars continetur /in tówtow ét párz köntanítétar/. In the whole the part also is contained.

Intoxicated. Affected by an intoxicant, under the influence of an intoxicating liquor. Taylor v. Joyce, 4 Cal. App.2d 612, 41 P.2d 967, 968. See Intoxication.

Intoxicating liquor. Any liquor intended for use as a beverage or capable of being so used, which contains alcohol, either obtained by fermentation or by the additional process of distillation, or commonly produces entire or partial intoxication. Any liquor intended for use as a beverage or capable of fermentation or by the additional process of distillation, in such proportion that it will produce intoxication when imbibed in such quantities as may practically be drunk. Frisvold v. Leahy, 15 Cal.App.2d 752, 60 P.2d 151, 153. See also Alcoholic liquors.

Intoxication. Term comprehends situation where, by reason of taking intoxicants, an individual does not have the normal use of his physical or mental faculties, thus rendering him incapable of acting in the manner in which an ordinarily prudent and cautious man, in full possession of his faculties, using reasonable care, would act under like conditions. Hendy v. Geary, 105 R.I. 419, 252 A.2d 435, 441.

A disturbance of mental or physical capacities resulting from the introduction of substances into the body. Model Penal Code, § 2.08.

The fact that a person charged with a crime was in an intoxicated condition at the time the alleged crime was committed is a defense only if such condition was involuntarily produced and rendered such person substantially incapable of knowing or understanding the wrongfulness of his conduct and of conforming his conduct to the requirements of law. An act committed while in a state of voluntary intoxication is not less criminal by reason thereof, but when a particular intent or other state of mind is a necessary element to constitute a particular crime, the fact of intoxication may be taken into consideration in determining such intent or state of mind.

Under most state statutes dealing with driving while intoxicated, "intoxication" includes such by alcohol or by drug or by both. See Driving while intoxicated.

Confirmed habits of intoxication caused by voluntary and excessive use of liquor is a ground for divorce under many state divorce statutes.

See also Habitual drunkenness or intoxication; Intemperance.

Public intoxication. Public intoxication is being on a highway or street or in a public place or public building while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, narcotics or other drug to the degree that one may endanger himself or other persons or property, or annoy persons in his vicinity.

Voluntary intoxication. The voluntary introduction of any substances into the body which the defendant knows or should know are likely to have intoxicating effects. The Model Penal Code (§ 2.08) uses the term "self-induced intoxication" to refer to this idea. Evidence of voluntary or self-induced intoxication can be admitted in some circumstances but not others.

Intoxilyzer. Breath analysis. A device used to measure the concentration of alcohol in the blood of motorists suspected of driving while under the influence of intoxicating liquor. California v. Trombetta, 467 U.S. 479, 481, 104 S.Ct. 2528, 2530, 81 L.Ed.2d 413. See Breathalyzer test; Intoximeter.

Intoximeter. A trade name for scientific breath testing device that operates on assumption that concentration of blood alcohol bears fixed relation to concentration of alcohol in the deep lung, or alveolar air. Also commonly called breathalyzer test. See Breathalyzer test.

Intra /intra/. Lat. In; near; within. "Intra" or "inter" has taken the place of "infra" in many of the more modern Latin phrases.

Intra anni spatium /intra ánay spéysh(i)yom/. Within the space of a year.

In traditionibus scriptorum, non quod dictum est, sed quod gestum est, inspicitur /in trádishiyownabás skripórám, nón kwód dikám est, séd kwód jéstam ést, anspísstár/. In the delivery of writings, not what is said, but what is done, is looked to.

Intra fidelim /intra fáydom/. Within belief; credible.

In trajectu/in trájek(y)uw/. In the passage over; on the voyage over.

Intraliminal /intralíinion/. In mining law, the term "intraliminal rights" denotes the right to mine, take, and possess all such bodies or deposits of ore as lie within the four planes formed by the vertical extension downward of the boundary lines of the claim; as distinguished from "extraliminal," or more commonly "extra­lateral," rights.

Intra luctus tempus /intra làktas témpas/. Within the time of mourning.
Intrastate commerce. A term applied to domestic or menial servants.

Intramural. Within the walls. Existing within. The confines of an institution or governmental body. The powers of a municipal corporation are "intramural" and "extramural"; the one being the powers exercised within the corporate limits, and the other being those exercised without.

In transitu /in transitu/. In transit; on the way or passage; while passing from one person or place to another. In the course of transportation.

Intra parietes /intra parietes/. Between walls; among friends; out of court; without litigation.

Intra præsidia /intra præsidia/. Within the defenses. See Infra præsidia.

Intra quatuor maria /intra quatuor maria/. Within the four seas.

Intrastate commerce. Commerce within a state, as opposed to commerce between states (i.e. interstate). See also Balancing of interests; Commerce; compare Interstate commerce.

Intra vires /intra vires/. An act is said to be intra vires ("within the power") of a person or corporation when it is within the scope of his or its powers or authority. It is the opposite of ultra vires (q.v.).

Intrinsecum servitium /intrinsecum servitium/. To confer a trust upon; to deliver to another. In old English law, common and ordinary duties with the lord's court.

Intrinsicus. Internal; inherent. Pertaining to the essential nature of a thing.

Intrinsicus evidence. Evidence brought out by the examination of the very witness testifying. Compare Circumstantial evidence; Extrinsic evidence.

Intrinsicus fraud. That fraud which occurs within framework of actual conduct of trial and pertains to and affects determination of issues presented therein, and it may be accomplished by perjury, or by use of false or forged instruments, or by concealment or misrepresentation of evidence. Auerbach v. Samuels, 10 Utah 2d 152, 349 P.2d 1112, 1114. Fraud is "intrinsic fraud" when judgment is founded on fraudulent instruments or perjured evidence or the fraudulent actions pertain to an issue involved in original action and litigated therein. Alleghany Corp. v. Kirby, D.C.N.Y., 218 F.Supp. 164, 183. Species of fraud which renders the document void as, for example, an instrument signed by one who had neither knowledge nor reasonable opportunity to obtain knowledge of its character or its essential terms, is not enforceable even by a holder in due course because such fraud is intrinsic. U.C.C. § 3-305(2)(c).

Intrinsicus value. The true, inherent and essential value of thing, not depending upon accident, place or person but same everywhere and to everyone. King v. U.S., D.Colo., 292 F.Supp. 767, 776. The value of the thing itself, rather than any special features which make its market value different (e.g. value of silver in coin).

Introduction. The part of a writing which sets forth preliminary matter, or facts tending to explain the subject.

Intromissio. Introduction; admission.

In English law, term means dealings in stock, goods, or cash of a principal coming into the hands of his agent, to be accounted for by the agent to his principal.

Intruder. One who enters upon land without either right of possession or color of title. In a more restricted sense, a stranger who, on the death of the ancestor, enters on the land, unlawfully, before the heir can enter. Williams v. Alt, 226 N.Y. 283, 123 N.E. 499, 500. Also one who intrudes on office and assumes to exercise its functions without legal title or color of right thereto. Alleger v. School Dist. No. 16, Newton County, Mo.App., 142 S.W.2d 660, 663. See Encroachment; Intrusion; Trespass.

Intrusion. Act of wrongfully entering upon or taking possession of property of another. See also Encroachment; Trespass.

At common law, a species of injury by ouster or amotion of possession from the freehold, being an entry of a stranger, after a particular estate of freehold is determined, before him in remainder or reversion. Boylan v. Deinzer, 45 N.J.Eq. 485, 18 A. 119, 121.

Intrust. To confer a trust upon; to deliver to another something in trust or to commit something to another with a certain confidence regarding his care, use or disposal of it. See also Bailment; Fiduciary; Trust.

Intuitus /intuitus/. Lat. A view; regard; contemplation. Diverso intuitu (q.v.), with a different view.

Inundation. To flood or swamp. The overflow of waters by coming out of their natural bed or confines. See also Backwater; Flood; Water; Water course.

Inure /inure/. To take effect; to result. In property law, to come to the benefit of a person or to fix his interest therein.

Inurement /inurement/. Useful, beneficial; serving to the use or benefit of a person or thing. Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U.S. 578, 25 L.Ed. 618.

Inutilis labor et sine fructu non est effectus legis /inutilis labor et sine fructu non est effectus legis/. Useless and fruitless labor is not the effect of law. The law forbids such recoveries whose ends are vain, chargeable, and unprofitable.

In utroque jure /in utroque jure/. In both laws; i.e., the civil and canon law.

Invadiare /invadiare/. To pledge or mortgage lands.

Invadiatio /invadiatio/. A pledge or mortgage.

Invadiarius /invadiarius/. One who is under pledge; one who has had sureties or pledges given for him.
Invalid. Vain; inadequate to its purpose; not of binding force or legal efficacy; lacking in authority or obligation. See also Illegal; Void; Voidable.

Invasion. An encroachment upon the rights of another. The incursion of an army for conquest or plunder. Act of invading; intrusion; encroachment.

Invasiones /in'veyz(h)yó'winiyz/. The inquisition of serjeanties and knights' fees.

Invasion of corpus principal. Payments made from the sum created to generate income (e.g. trust res) and not from the income so generated.

Invasion of privacy. The unwarranted appropriation or exploitation of one's personality, publicizing one's private affairs with which public has no legitimate concern, or wrongful intrusion into one's private activities, in such a manner as to cause mental suffering, shame or humiliation to person of ordinary sensibilities. Shorter v. Retail Credit Co., D.C.S.C., 251 F.Supp. 329, 330. Violation of right which one has to be left alone and unnoticed if he so chooses. Such invasion by an individual or the government may constitute an actionable tort; though public figures have less protection than private persons. See Eavesdropping; Privacy laws.

Invecta et illata /in'vektâ ed sêlê'ta/. Lat. In the civil law, things carried in and brought in. Articles brought into a hired tenement by the hirer or tenant, and which became or were pledged to the lessor as security for the rent.

Inveigle. To "inveigle" means to lure or entice or lead astray, by false representations or promises, or other deceitful means.

Inveniens libellum famosum et non corrumpens punitur /in'veyn(i)yé'nz labélam famô'ssem et nôn ká'pâmpnz pýû'wntar/. He who finds a libel and does not destroy it is punished.

Invent. To find out something new. To devise, contrive, and produce something not previously known or existing, by the exercise of independent investigation and experiment; particularly applied to machines, mechanical appliances, compositions, and patentable inventions of every sort. To create. E. W. Bliss Co. v. United States, 248 U.S. 37, 39 S.Ct. 42, 43, 63 L.Ed. 112. See also Invention; Patent.

Invenio /in'ven'sho'w/. In the civil law, finding; one of the modes of acquiring title to property by occupancy.

In old English law, a thing found; as goods or trove. The plural, "inveniones," is also used.

Invention. In patent law, the act or operation of finding out something new; the process of contriving and producing something not previously known or existing, by the exercise of independent investigation and experiment. Also the article or contrivance or composition so invented. Smith v. Nichols, 88 U.S. (21 Wall.) 112, 22 L.Ed. 566; Hollister v. Mfg. Co., 113 U.S. 59, 5 S.Ct. 717, 28 L.Ed. 901.

Invention is a concept; a thing involved in the mind; it is not a revelation of something which exists and was unknown, but is creation of something which did not exist before, possessing elements of novelty and utility in kind and measure different from and greater than what the art might expect from skilled workers. Pursche v. Atlas Scraper & Engineering Co., C.A.Cal., 300 F.2d 467, 472. The finding out—the contriving, the creating of something which did not exist, and was not known before, and which can be made useful and advantageous in the pursuits of life, or which can add to the enjoyment of mankind. Not every improvement is invention; but to entitle a thing to protection it must be the product of some exercise of the inventive faculties and it must involve something more than what is obvious to persons skilled in the art to which it relates. Mere adaptation of known process to clearly analogous use is not invention. Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. v. U. S. Rubber Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 79 F.2d 948, 952, 953.

Inventive skill has been defined as that intuitive faculty of the mind put forth in the search for new results, or new methods, creating what had not before existed, or bringing to light what lay hidden from vision; it differs from a suggestion of that common experience which arose spontaneously and by a necessity of human reasoning in the minds of those who had become acquainted with the circumstances with which they had to deal. Hollister v. Mfg. Co., 113 U.S. 59, 5 S.Ct. 717, 28 L.Ed. 901. Invention, in the nature of improvements, is the double mental act of discerning, in existing machines, processes or articles, some deficiency, and pointing out the means of overcoming it.

For Examination of invention, see Examination. See also Patent; Reduced to practice.

Inveniones /in'venshiyó'winiyz/. See Inventio.

Inventor. One who invents or has invented. One who finds out or contrives some new thing; one who devises some new art, manufacture, mechanical appliance, or process; one who invents a patentable contrivance. See Invention.

Inventory. A detailed list of articles of property; a list or schedule of property and other assets, containing a designation or description of each specific article; quantity of goods or materials on hand or in stock; an itemized list of the various items or articles constituting a collection, estate, stock in trade, etc., with their estimated or actual values. In law, the term is often applied to such a list made by an executor, administrator, or trustee in bankruptcy.

In accounting, refers to segment of financial statement reflecting value of businesses' raw materials, work in process, and finished goods. The two primary types of inventory accounting methods are First-in, first-out, and Last-in, first-out. See FIFO and LIFO.

Goods held for sale or lease or furnished under contracts of service; also, raw materials, work in process or materials used or consumed in a business. U.C.C. § 9-109(4). Also, written schedule of such goods.

Inventory search. An inventory search is not an independent legal concept but rather an incidental administrative step following arrest and preceding incarcera-

Invest /invest/ . L. Fr. In his mother’s womb; spoken of an unborn child.

Investment advisor. Any person who, for compensation, engages in the business of advising others, either directly or through publications or writings, as to the value of securities or as to the advisability of investing in, purchasing, or selling securities, or who, for compensation and as a part of a regular business, issues or promulgates analyses or reports concerning securities. Uniform Securities Act, § 401(f).

Investment. An expenditure to acquire property or other assets in order to produce revenue; the asset so acquired. The placing of capital or laying out of money in a way intended to secure income or profit from its employment. Securities & Exchange Commission v. Wickham, D.C.Minn., 12 F.Supp. 245, 247. To purchase securities of a more or less permanent nature, or to place money or property in business ventures or real estate, or otherwise lay it out, so that it may produce revenue or gain (or both) in the future. See also Investment contract.

Investiture. To clothe one with the possession of a fief or benefice.
which, among other things, requires registration of investment advisors.

Investment banker. A financial institution that underwrites and sells new securities. In general, investment bankers assist firms in obtaining new financing. An underwriter, the middleman or broker between the corporation issuing new securities and the public. The usual practice is for one or more investment bankers to buy outright from a corporation a new issue of stocks or bonds. The group forms a syndicate to sell the securities to individuals and institutions. Investment bankers also distribute very large blocks of stocks or bonds—perhaps held by an estate. Thereafter the market in the security may be over-the-counter or on a stock exchange. See also Underwriter.

Investment banking. Underwriting and selling primarily new issues of stocks and bonds to investors. See Investment banker.

Investment bill. Type of bill of exchange purchased at a discount and intended to be held to maturity in the form of an investment.

Investment company. Any issuer which: (1) is or holds itself out as being engaged primarily, or proposes to engage primarily, in the business of investing, reinvesting, or trading in securities; (2) is engaged or proposes to engage in the business of issuing face-amount certificates of the installment type, or has been engaged in such business and has any such certificates outstanding; or (3) is engaged or proposes to engage in the business of investing, reinvesting, owning, holding, or trading in securities, and owns or proposes to acquire investment securities having a value exceeding 40 percentum of the value of such issuer's total assets (exclusive of Government securities and cash items) on an unconsolidated basis. Investment Company Act, § 3.

A company or trust which uses its capital to invest in other companies. The most common kind of investment company is the mutual fund. An investment company differs from a holding company in that the latter seeks control of the ventures in which it invests while an investment company seeks the investment for its own sake and normally diversifies its investments. There are two principal types: the closed-end and the open-end, or mutual fund. Shares in closed-end investment companies are readily transferable in the open market and are bought and sold like other shares. Capitalization of these companies remains the same unless action is taken to change. Open-end funds sell their own new shares to investors, stand ready to buy back their old shares, and are not listed. Open-end funds are so called because their capitalization is not fixed; they issue more shares as demanded. See also Mutual fund.

Investment contract. A contract, transaction or scheme whereby a person invests his money in a common enterprise and is led to expect profits solely from the efforts of the promoter or a third party. S. E. C. v. W. J. Howey Co., 328 U.S. 293, 298, 66 S.Ct. 1100, 1103, 90 L.Ed. 1244, 1249. The placing of capital or laying out of money in a way intended to secure income or profit from its employment. State by Spannaus v. Coin Wholesalers, Inc., Minn., 250 N.W.2d 583.

To fall within scope of the federal securities acts an "investment contract" must involve three elements: (1) an investment of money, (2) in a common enterprise, and (3) an expectation of profits solely from the efforts of others. Hector v. Wiens, C.A.Mont., 533 F.2d 429, 432.

Investment credit. See Investment tax credit.

Investment indebtedness. Debt incurred to carry or acquire investments by the taxpayer in assets that will produce portfolio income. Limitations are placed upon interest deductions that are incurred with respect to such debt (i.e., generally to the corresponding amount of investment income).

Investment property. Generally, any property purchased for the primary purpose of profit. The profit may be from income or from resale.

Investment security. Under U.C.C., an instrument issued in bearer or registered form as a type commonly recognized as a medium for investment and evidencing a share or other interest in the property or enterprise of the issuer. § 8-102(1)(a). See also Investment contract; Security.

Investment tax credit. Federal legislation designed to stimulate investment by business in capital goods and equipment by allowing a percentage of the purchase price as a credit against individual and corporate taxes due and not merely as a deduction from taxable income. The Tax Reform Act of 1986 generally repealed this credit retroactively for most property placed in service after January 1, 1986. See also Recapture of investment tax credit.

Investment trust. A company which sells its own stock and invests the money in stocks, real estate, and other investments. See also Investment company; Mutual fund; Real estate investment trust.

Invidious discrimination. Term "invidious" in context of claim that difference in treatment amounts to "invidious" discrimination in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, means arbitrary, irrational and not reasonably related to a legitimate purpose. Eaton v. State, Del., 363 A.2d 440, 441.

In vinculis /in viŋk(ˈ)yləs/ . In chains; in actual custody. Applied also, figuratively, to the condition of a person who is compelled to submit to terms which oppress and his necessities impose on him.

Inviolability /ɪnvɪəˈlɪbilətɪ/ . The attribute of being secured against violation. Safe from trespass or assault.

In viridi observans /ɪn vɪɹdi əʊˈzɜːrvənʃ(ɪ)əs/. Present to the minds of men, and in full force and operation.
Invitation. In the law of negligence, and with reference to trespasses on realty, invitation is the act of one who solicits or incites others to enter upon, remain in, or make use of, his property or structures thereon, or who so arranges the property or the means of access to it or of transit over it as to induce the reasonable belief that he expects and intends that others shall come upon it or pass over it. Thus the proprietor of a store, theatre or amusement park "invites" the public to come upon his premises for such purposes as are connected with its intended use.

The differences in duties of care owed as between and among licensees, business guests and social guests have been eliminated in many jurisdictions so that today reasonable care is owed to all lawful visitors and this phrase includes all but trespassers. Mounsey v. Ellard, 363 Mass. 693, 297 N.E.2d 43.

An invitation may be express, when the owner or occupier of the land by words invites another to come upon it or make use of it or of something thereon; or it may be implied when such owner or occupier by acts or conduct leads another to believe that the land or something thereon was intended to be used as he uses them, and that such use is not only acquiesced in by the owner or occupier, but is in accordance with the intention or design for which the way or place or thing was adapted and prepared and allowed to be used.

See also Attractive nuisance doctrine; Invitee.

Invitation to bid. Type of advertisement used by one who desires bids to be submitted for a particular job; it usually contains sufficient specifications to permit an intelligent bid.

Invited error. Doctrine of "invited error" provides that when the court acquiesces in course of conduct urged by defendant, defendant is estopped on appeal from raising as error that conduct or its result. People v. Crespin, Colo.App., 682 P.2d 58, 59. See also Error.

Invitee. A person is an "invitee" on land of another if (1) he enters by invitation, express or implied, (2) his entry is connected with the owner's business or with an activity the owner conducts or permits to be conducted on his land and (3) there is mutuality of benefit or benefit to the owner. Madrazo v. Michaels, 1 Ill.App.2d 583, 274 N.E.2d 635, 638. Person who is on property of another for economic benefit of owner or for the economic benefit of both parties. Joseph v. Calvary Baptist Church, Ind.App. 4 Dist., 500 N.E.2d 250, 253.

The leading English case of Indermaur v. Dames laid down the rule that as to those who enter premises upon business which concerns the occupier, and upon his invitation express or implied, the latter is under an affirmative duty to protect them, not only against dangers of which he knows, but also against those which with reasonable care he might discover. The case has been accepted in all common law jurisdictions, and the invitee, or as he is sometimes called the business visitor, is placed upon a higher footing than a licensee. The typical example, of course, is the customer in a store. There is however a conflict of decisions as to whether certain visitors are to be included in the definition of invitee. The minority view is that there must be some economic benefit to the occupier before his duty to the visitor attaches. The majority view holds however that the basis of liability is not any economic benefit to the occupier, but a representation to be implied when he encourages others to enter to further a purpose of his own, that reasonable care has been exercised to make the place safe for those who come for that purpose; e.g. persons attending free public lectures, persons using municipal parks, playgrounds, libraries and the like. The element of "invitation" however must exist.

See also Guest; Licensee; Public invitee.

Invito /in-vay-tow/. Lat. Being unwilling. Against or without the assent or consent.

Invito beneficium non datur /in-vay-tow be-nfish(i)yam non deytar/. A benefit is not conferred on one who is unwilling to receive it; that is to say, no one can be compelled to accept a benefit.

In vocibus videndum non a quo sed ad quid sumatur /in vovkas bahdendam non ey kwow sed ad kwid samaytars/. In discourses, it is to be considered not from what, but to what, it is advanced.

Invoice. A written account, or itemized statement of merchandise shipped or sent to a purchaser, consignee, factor, etc., with the quantity, value or prices and charges annexed, and may be as appropriate to a consignment or a memorandum shipment as it is to a sale. Joseph B. Cooper & Son, Inc. v. Finlay Depts., Inc., 11 Misc.2d 382, 174 N.Y.S.2d 265, 269. Document showing details of a sale or purchase transaction. A list sent to a purchaser, factor, consignee, etc., containing the items, together with the prices and charges of merchandise sent or to be sent to him. A writing made on behalf of an importer, specifying the merchandise imported, and its true cost or value. See also Consular invoice.

Invoice book. A book in which invoices are copied.

Involuntary. Without will or power of choice; opposed to volition or desire. An involuntary act is that which is performed with constraint (q.v.) or with repugnance, or without the will to do it. An action is involuntary, then, which is performed under duress, force, or coercion. See Coercion; Duress.

As to involuntary Dismissal; Indebtedness; Nonsuit; and Trust, see those titles. For involuntary bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy proceedings.

Involuntary alienation. A loss of or parting with property by attachment, levy, sale for taxes or other debts. See also Involuntary conveyance.

Involuntary confession. Confession is "involuntary" if it is not the product of an essentially free and unrestrained choice of its maker or where maker's will is overborne at the time of the confession. People v. Pickerel, 32 Ill.App.3d 822, 336 N.E.2d 778, 780. Term refers to confessions that are extracted by any threats of violence, or obtained by direct or implied promises, or by exertion of improper influence. Phillips v. State, Okl. Cr., 330 P.2d 209, 214.

Involuntary conversion. The loss or destruction of property through theft, casualty, or condemnation. Any gain realized on an involuntary conversion can, at the whole or in part; or (2) theft; or (3) actual seizure; or (4) requisition or condemnation or threat or imminence of requisition or condemnation. Hitke v. C. I. R., C.A. Mo., 296 F.2d 639, 643, 644.

See also Confession; Interrogation; Self-incrimination.

Involuntary conveyance. A transfer of real property without the consent of the owner, such as in a divorce, in condemnation, etc. See also Involuntary alienation; Sheriff's sale.

Involuntary deposit. In the law of bailments, one made by the accidental leaving or placing of personal property in the possession of another, without negligence on the part of the owner, or, in cases of fire, shipwreck, inundation, riot, insurrection, or the like extraordinary emergencies, by the owner of personal property committing it out of necessity to the care of any person.

Involuntary discontinuance. A discontinuance is involuntary where, in consequence of technical omission, without the consent of the owner, rather than a mortgage lien, to which the owner agrees.

Involuntary lien. A lien, such as a tax lien, judgment lien, etc., which attaches to property without the consent of the owner, rather than a mortgage lien, to which the owner agrees.

Involuntary manslaughter. The unlawful killing of a human being in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to felony, or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection. An unlawful homicide, unintentionally caused by an act which constitutes such disregard of probable harmful consequences to another as to constitute wanton or reckless conduct. Com. v. McCauley, 355 Mass. 554, 246 N.E.2d 425, 428. See also Manslaughter.

Involuntary payment. One obtained by fraud, oppression, or extortion, or to avoid the use of force to coerce it, or to obtain the release of the person or property from detention.

Involuntary servitude. The condition of one who is compelled by force, coercion, or imprisonment, and against his will, to labor for another, whether he is paid or not. Ex parte Wilson, 114 U.S. 417, 5 S.Ct. 935, 29 L.Ed. 89; In re Slaughterhouse Cases, 83 U.S. (16 Wall.) 69, 21 L.Ed. 394; Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U.S. 275, 17 S.Ct. 326, 41 L.Ed. 715. Slavery,peonage, or compulsory labor for debts; all of which are prohibited by the 13th Amendment, U.S.Const.

Involuntary transfer. See Involuntary conveyance.

Involuntary trust. An implied trust which arises because the law imposes trust-like consequences on certain transactions where, for example, an agent breaches his fiduciary duty and buys property in his own name which rightfully should have been purchased for the benefit of his principal (constructive trust) or A supplies the funds for purchase of property by B with the understanding that A will own it but title will be taken in the name of B (resulting trust).

In witness whereof /in witn/as (h)wéróv/. The initial words of the concluding clause in deeds: "In witness whereof the said parties have hereunto set their hands", etc. A translation of the Latin phrase "in cujus rei testimonium".

IOLTA. Interest on Lawyers' Trust Accounts. In some states, lawyers turn over such interest to public service institutions (e.g., Mass.).

Iota. The minutest quantity possible. Iota is the smallest Greek letter. The word "jot" is derived therefrom.

IOU. A memorandum of debt, consisting of these letters ("I owe you"), a sum of money and the debtor's signature, is termed an "IOU".

Ipse leges cupiunt ut jure regantur /ipisy liyjyz kyúwpipyan ąt júriy ragąñña/ . The laws themselves require that they should be governed by right.

Ipse /ipisy/ . Lat. He himself; the same; the very person.

Ipse dixit /ipisy dikst/ . He himself said it; a bare assertion resting on the authority of an individual.

Ipsissimis verbis /ipissimas varbas/ . In the identical words; opposed to "substantially".

Ipsos facto /iposow fákto/. By the fact itself; by the mere fact. By the mere effect of an act or a fact.

Ipsos jure /iposow júriy/. By the law itself; by the mere operation of law.

IRA. Individual Retirement Account.

Ira fuser brevis est /áyra fyúrār bryyvās et/. Anger is a short insanity.

Ira motus /áyra mówts/ . Lat. Moved or excited by anger or passion. A term sometimes formerly used in the plea of son assault demesne.

IRAN. Individual Retirement Annuity.
IRB. Individual Retirement Bond.
I.R.C. Internal Revenue Code.
I.R.D. Income in respect of decedent.

Ire ad largum /'aɪri əd ˈlɑːrgəm/. Lat. To go at large; to escape; to be set at liberty.

Iron-safe clause. A clause in policies of fire insurance, requiring the insured to preserve his books and inventory in an iron or fireproof safe, or in some secure place not exposed to a fire which would destroy the building. This provision casts on the insured the responsibility for the loss of books and records if due to the wrongful act or negligence of himself or his employees in failing to comply with the requirement.

Irrational. Unreasonable, foolish, illogical, absurd; a person may be irrational in such sense, and still not be insane in the legal sense.

Irreconcilable differences. No-fault ground for dissolution of marriage under many state divorce statutes. See also irretrievable breakdown of marriage.

Irrecusable /ɪrˈskjuːwzəbəl/. A term used to indicate a certain class of contractual obligations recognized by the law which are imposed upon a person without his consent and without regard to any act of his own. They are distinguished from recusable obligations which are the result of a voluntary act on the part of a person on whom they are imposed by law. A clear example of an irrecusable obligation is the obligation imposed on every man not to strike another without some lawful excuse. A recusable obligation is based upon some act of a person bound, which is a condition precedent to the genesis of the obligation. These terms were first suggested by Prof. Wigmore in 8 Harv.Law Rev. 200.

Irregular. Not regular; not according to established law, method, or usage; not conformable to nature, to rules of moral rectitude, or to established principles; not normal, disorderly. Sultan Turkish Bath, Inc. v. Board of Police Com'rs of City of Los Angeles, 169 C.A.2d 188, 337 P.2d 203, 210. As to irregular Deposit; Indorsement; Process; and Succession, see those titles.

Irregularity. The doing or not doing that, in the conduct of a suit at law, which, conformably with the practice of the court, ought or ought not to be done. Violation or nonobservance of established rules and practices. The want of adherence to some prescribed rule or mode of proceeding; consisting either in omitting to do something that is necessary for the due and orderly conducting of a suit, or doing it in an unreasonable time or improper manner. The technical term for every defect in mechanics of proceedings, or the mode of conducting an action or defense, as distinguishable from defects in pleadings (see e.g. Fed.R.Civil P. 32(d), irregularities in taking of depositions). Term is not synonymous with "illegality."

In Canon law, any impediment which prevents a man from taking holy orders.

Irregular judgment. One rendered contrary to the method of procedure and practice allowed by the law in some material respect. Davidson Chevrolet, Inc. v. City and County of Denver, 138 Colo. 171, 330 P.2d 1116, 1118, 1119.

Irrelevancy. The absence of the quality of relevancy, as in evidence or pleadings. The quality or state of being inapplicable or impertinent to a fact or argument. Irrelevancy, in an answer, consists in statements which are not material to the decision of the case; such as do not form or tender any material issue. Such irrelevancy in pleadings may be stricken on motion of party. Fed.R.Civil P. 12(f). See also Immaterial; Irrelevant allegation; Irrelevant evidence.

An allegation is irrelevant, where the issue made by its denial has no effect upon the cause of action or no connection with the allegation. In this connection, "redundant" is almost a synonym for "irrelevant". Irrelevant matters may be stricken from pleadings on motion of party. Fed.R.Civil P. 12(f).

Irrelevant answer. See Answer.

Irrelevant evidence. Not relevant; immaterial; not relating or applicable to the matter in issue; not supporting the issue or fact to be proved. Evidence is irrelevant where it has no tendency to prove or disprove any issue of fact involved. Irrelevant evidence is commonly objected to and disallowed at trial. Fed.Evid.R. 402. See also Immaterial; Impertinence; Irrelevancy.

Irreparable damages. See Damages.

Irreparable harm. See Injury (Irreparable injury).

Irreparable injury. See Damages; Injunction; Injury (Irreparable injury).

Irrepleviable /ɪrˈpleɪviəbəl/. That cannot be repleved or delivered on sureties. Spelled, also, "irreplevisable" /ɪrˈpleɪvəzəbəl/.

Irresistible force. A term applied to such an interposition of human agency as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncontrollable; as the inroads of a hostile army. See also Act of God.

Irresistible impulse. As used as insanity defense, an "irresistible impulse" means an impulse to commit an unlawful or criminal act which cannot be resisted or overcome because mental disease has destroyed the freedom of will, the power of self-control, and the choice of actions. Snider v. Smyth, D.C.Va., 187 F.Supp. 299, 302. The "irresistible impulse" test for insanity is a test which is broader than the M'Naghten test. Under the "irresistible impulse" test a person may avoid criminal responsibility even though he is capable of distinguish-Irreparable breakdown of marriage. As a no-fault ground for divorce means a condition in which either or both spouses are unable or unwilling to cohabit as husband and wife and for which there are no prospects for reconciliation. Harwell v. Harwell, 233 Ga. 89, 209 S.E.2d 625. In some jurisdictions, it is the sole ground for so-called no-fault divorce. See also irreconcilable differences.

Irrevocable letter of credit. A confirmed irrevocable letter of credit, irrevocable letter, or a confirmed credit is a contract to pay on compliance with its terms, and needs no formal acknowledgment or acceptance other than is therein stated. See also Letter of credit.

Irrevocable offer. An offer which cannot be revoked or recalled by the offeror without liability. U.C.C. 2–205. See Firm offer.

Irrevocable trust. See Trust.

Irrigation company. A private corporation, authorized and regulated by statute in several states, having for its object to acquire exclusive rights to the water of certain streams or other sources of supply, and to convey it by means of ditches or canals through a region where it can be beneficially used for agricultural purposes, and either dividing the water among stockholders, or making contracts with consumers, or furnishing a supply to all who apply at fixed rates.

Irrigation district. A public and quasi-municipal corporation authorized by law in several states, comprising a defined region or area of land which is susceptible of one mode of irrigation from a common source and by the same system of works. These districts are created by proceedings in the nature of an election under the supervision of a court, and are authorized to purchase or condemn the lands and waters necessary for the system of irrigation proposed and to construct necessary canals and other works, and the water is apportioned ratably among the landowners of the district.

Irrigare /ir·ə·gər·e/ · Lat. In the civil law, to impose or set upon, as a fine. To inflict, as a punishment. To make or ordain, as a law.

Irrotulatio /əˈrotələˌēsh(ə)n/ · L. Lat. An enrolling; a record.

I.R.S. Internal Revenue Service.

Irrotulatio. See also "Securities", below.

Is. This word, although normally referring to the present, often has a future meaning, but is not synonymous with "shall have been." It may have, however, a past signification, as in the sense of "has been."

Is. Insanity; M'Naughten Rule.

Is. This word, although normally referring to the present, often has a future meaning, but is not synonymous with "shall have been." It may have, however, a past signification, as in the sense of "has been."

Is. Island. A piece of land surrounded by water. Land in a navigable stream which is surrounded by water only in times of high water is not an island within the rule that the state takes title to newly formed islands in navigable streams.

Is. Isolated sale. Isolated sale which does not entail implied warranty of merchantability is one which occurs only once or at least very infrequently within ordinary course of business. McHugh v. Carlton, D.C.S.C., 369 F.Supp. 1271, 1277.

Is qui cognoscit /ɨs kwɔˈɪət/ · Lat. The cognizor in a fine. Is qui cognoscitur /ɨs kəˈɪət/ · the cognizee.

Issei /ɨˈsē/ · Jap. A term used to describe alien Japanese residing in the United States.

Issuable. Leading or tending to, or producing, an issue; relating to an issue or issues.

Issuable defense. In common law pleading, a technical expression meaning a plea to the merits, properly setting forth a legal defense, as distinguished from a plea in abatement, or any plea going only to delay the case.

Issuable plea. In common law pleading, a plea to the merits; a traversable plea. A plea such that the adverse party can join issue upon it and go to trial. It is true a plea in abatement is a plea, and if it be properly pleaded, issues may be found on it. In the ordinary meaning of the word "plea," and of the word "issuable," such pleas may be called "issuable pleas," but, when these two words are used together, "issuable plea," or "issuable defense," they have a technical meaning, to-wit, pleas to the merits.

Issuable terms. In the former practice of the English courts, Hilary term and Trinity term were called "issuable terms," because the issues to be tried at the assizes were made up at those terms. But the distinction was superseded by the provisions of the judicature acts of 1873 and 1875.

Issue, v. To send forth; to emit; to promulgate; as, an officer issues orders, process issues from a court. To put into circulation; as, the treasury issues notes. To send out, to send out officially; to deliver, for use, or authoritatively; to go forth as authoritative or binding. When used with reference to writs, process, and the like the term is ordinarily construed as importing delivery to the proper person, or to the proper officer for service, etc. With respect to securities, refers to act or process of offering stocks or bonds for sale to public or institutional investors.

In financial parlance the term "issue" has two phases of meaning. "Date of issue" when applied to notes, bonds, etc., of a series, usually means the arbitrary date fixed as the beginning of the term for which they run, without reference to the precise time when convenience or the state of the market may permit of their sale or delivery. When the securities are delivered to the purchaser, they will be "issued" to him, which is the other meaning of the term. See also "Securities", below.
Issue, n. The act of issuing, sending forth, emitting or promulgating; the giving a thing its first inception; as the issue of an order or a writ.

See also Date of issue.

Pleading and Practice

A single, certain, and material point, deduced by the allegations and pleadings of the parties, which is affirmed on the one side and denied on the other. A fact put in controversy by the pleadings; such may either be issues of law or fact. An "issue" is a disputed point or question to which parties to action have narrowed their several allegations and upon which they are desirous of obtaining either decision of court on question of law or of court or jury on question of fact. Muller v. Muller, 235 Cal.App.2d 341, 45 Cal.Rptr. 182, 184.

Real or feigned. A real or actual issue is one formed in a regular manner in a regular suit for the purpose of determining an actual controversy. A feigned issue is one made up by direction of the court, upon a supposed case, for the purpose of obtaining the verdict of a jury upon some question of fact collaterally involved in the cause. Such issues are generally ordered by a court of equity, to ascertain the truth of a disputed fact. They are also used in courts of law, by the consent of the parties, to determine some disputed rights without the formality of pleading; and by this practice much time and expense are saved in the decision of a cause. The name is a misnomer, inasmuch as the issue itself is upon a real, material point in question between the parties, and the circumstances only are fictitious.

Ultimate issue. Signifies either such an issue as within itself is sufficient and final for the disposition of the entire case or one which in connection with other issues will serve such end. First State Bank of Seminole v. Dillard, Tex.Civ.App., 71 S.W.2d 407, 410.

See also Failure of issue; Feigned issue; Genuine issue; Issue of fact; Issue of law; Issue preclusion; Lawful issue; Legal issue; Ultimate issue.

Commercial Transactions

Issue. The first delivery of an instrument to a holder or remitter. U.C.C. § 3-102(1)(a). The term also applies to documents and refers to the first delivery of a document by the person who created it. See U.C.C. § 7-102(1)(g) (definition of "issuer"). Also describes the act of the issuer of a letter of credit in sending the credit for the purpose of establishing it.

Descendant’s Estates

All persons who have descended from a common ancestor. Offspring; progeny; descent; lineage; lineal descendants. In this sense, the word includes not only a child or children, but all other descendants in whatever degree, and it is so construed generally in deeds. But, when used in wills, it is, of course, subject to the rule of construction that the intention of the testator, as ascertained from the language used by him; and hence issue may, in such a connection, be restricted to children, or to descendants living at the death of the testator, where such an intention clearly appears.

The term "issue" and "descendants" have been held to be co-extensive and interchangeable. In re Radt’s Will, 6 Misc.2d 716, 167 N.Y.S.2d 817, 818.

"Issue" within its normal usage in wills connotes at least all progeny or blood descendants. In re Wolf's Estate, 98 N.J.Sup. 89, 236 A.2d 166, 170.

The word "issue" in a will is generally a word of limitation, and when so used, is sometimes said to be equivalent to "heirs of the body". But it has been pointed out in other cases that this word is not as strong a word of limitation as the words "heirs of the body"; and yields readily to a context indicating its use as a work of purchase.

Formerly, this term included only legitimate issue. Large v. National City Bank of Cleveland, Ohio Prob., 170 N.E.2d 309, 312; contra Will of Hoffman, 53 A.D.2d 55, 385 N.Y.S.2d 49. This limitation, however, is changing as a result of Supreme Court cases which prohibit unjustified discrimination against children born out of wedlock. Reed v. Campbell, 476 U.S. 852, 106 S.Ct. 2234, 90 L.Ed.2d 858; Trimble v. Gordon, 430 U.S. 762, 97 S.Ct. 1459, 52 L.Ed.2d 31. In New York, for example, an illegitimate child shares in the intestate estate of the father. N.Y.EPTL 4-1.2(a)(2)(c). In Massachusetts, the word "issue" in a trust was formerly construed to mean legitimate children. In trusts executed after April 16, 1987, however, the word "issue" is to be construed to include all biological descendants unless the donor clearly expresses a contrary intent. Powers v. Wilkinson, 399 Mass. 650, 506 N.E.2d 842.

Many state intestacy statutes provide that an adopted child is "issue" of his or her adopted parents.

Securities

Any of a corporation’s or government’s securities offered for sale at a certain time to the public, or the act or process of distributing (i.e. offering) such for sale by a corporation or government entity. A class or series of bonds, debentures, etc., comprising all that are emitted or process of distributing (i.e. offering) such for sale by a corporation or government entity. A class or series of bonds, debentures, etc., comprising all that are emitted from the same organization.

Hot issue. A public offering where securities, after their initial sale to the public, are resold in the open market at prices substantially higher than the original public offering price.

New issue. A stock or bond sold by a corporation for the first time. Proceeds may be used to retire outstanding securities of the company, for new plant or equipment, or for additional working capital.

Issue of fact. An issue of fact arises when a fact is presented to the court for determination. It is a disputed point or question to which parties to an action have narrowed their several allegations and upon which they are desirous of obtaining either decision of court on question of law or of court or jury on question of fact. Muller v. Muller, 235 Cal.App.2d 341, 45 Cal.Rptr. 182, 184.

See also Failure of issue; Feigned issue; Genuine issue; Issue of fact; Issue of law; Issue preclusion; Lawful issue; Legal issue; Ultimate issue.
ISSUE OF LAW

Issue of law. An issue of law arises where evidence is undisputed and only one conclusion can be drawn therefrom. Chaison v. Stark, Tex.Civ.App., 29 S.W.2d 500, 503. An issue of law arises upon a demurrer to the complaint, cross-complaint, or answer, or to some part thereof; or, upon a motion to strike. Calif.C.C.P. § 589.

In making motion for summary judgment, party must show that only issues of law exist for court to consider; i.e. must show that there is no genuine issue of material facts. Fed.R.Civil P. 56.

In pleading, an issue upon matter of law, or consisting of matter of law, being produced by a demurrer on the one side, and a joinder in demurrer on the other. The term "issue" may be so used as to include one of law raised by demurrer to the complaint, as well as one raised by answer.

Issue preclusion. Term means that when a particular issue has already been litigated, further litigation of same issue is barred. Hawkeye Sec. Ins. Co. v. Ford Motor Co., Iowa, 199 N.W.2d 373, 379. As it relates to civil actions, concept of "issue preclusion" is in substance that any fact, question or matter in issue and directly adjudicated or necessarily involved in determination of action before court of competent jurisdiction in which judgment or decree is rendered on merits, is conclusively settled by judgment therein and cannot be relitigated in any future action between parties or privies, either in same court or court of concurrent jurisdiction, while judgment remains unreversed or unvacated by proper authority, regardless of whether claim or cause of action, purpose or subject matter of two suits is same. Palma v. Powers, D.C.Ill., 295 F.Supp. 924, 933. See also Collateral estoppel doctrine; Res (Res judicata).

Issuer. Corporation, governmental bodies, and other entities that issue and distribute securities. With respect to obligations on or defenses to investment securities "issuer" includes a person who: (a) places or authorizes the placing of his name on a security (otherwise than as authenticating trustee, registrar, transfer agent or the like) to evidence that it represents a share, participation or other interest in his property or in an enterprise or to evidence his duty to perform an obligation evidenced by the security; or (b) directly or indirectly creates fractional interests in his rights or property which fractional interests are evidenced by securities; or (c) becomes responsible for or in place of any other person described as an issuer in this section. U.C.C. § 8-201(1). Every person who issues or proposes to issue any securities; generally the legal entity owning the securities and which has the responsibility for causing the same to be offered publicly or privately. See also Issue (Securities).

As regards letters of credit, means a bank or other person issuing a credit. U.C.C. § 5-103(1)(c).

As regards documents of title, means a bailee who issues a document except that in relation to an unaccepted delivery order it means the person who orders the possessor of goods to deliver. Issuer includes any person for whom an agent or employee purports to act in issuing a document if the agent or employee has real or apparent authority to issue documents, notwithstanding that the issuer received no goods or that the goods were misdescribed or that in any other respect the agent or employee violated his instructions. U.C.C. § 7-102(g).

Issue roll. In English practice, a roll upon which the issue in actions at law was formerly required to be entered, the roll being entitled of the term in which the issue was joined. It was not, however, the practice to enter the issue at full length, if triable by the country, until after the trial, but only to make an incipit on the roll. It was abolished by the rules of Hilary Term, 1834.

Issues and profits. As applied to real estate, comprehend every available return therefrom, whether it arise above or below the surface. "Issues" are goods and profits of the land. Costanzo v. Harris, 71 Wash.2d 264, 427 P.2d 963, 965.

Ita est /āty̆a ēst/. Lat. So it is; so it stands. In modern civil law, this phrase is a form of attestation added to exemplifications from a notary's register when the same are made by the successor in office of the notary who made the original entries.

Ita lex scripta est /āty̆a lēks skrip̆tam ēst/. Lat. So the law is written. The law must be obeyed notwithstanding the apparent rigor of its application. 3 Bl.Comm. 430. We must be content with the law as it stands, without inquiring into its reasons. 1 Bl.Comm. 32.

Ita semper fiat relatio ut valeat dispositio /āty̆a sēmpor fāyat rōlēsh(i)yow āt vālīyat dispōžish(i)yow/. Let the interpretation be always such that the disposition may prevail.

Ita te Deus adjuvet /āty̆a t(y)u wəd̆ adʒəvət/. Lat. So help you God. The old form of administering an oath in England, generally in connection with other words, thus: Ita te Deus adjuvet, et sacramenta Dei Evangelia, So help you God, and God's holy Evangelists. Ita te Deus adjuvet et omnes sancti, So help you God and all the saints.

Ita utere tuo ut alienum non ladas /āty̆a wətəre t(y)u wəd̆ tət ləd̆as/. Use your own property and your own rights in such a way that you will not hurt your neighbor, or prevent him from enjoying his. Frequently written "Sic utere tuo", etc. (q.v.).

Item /āyt̄am/. Also; likewise; in like manner; again; a second time. This word was formerly used to mark the beginning of a new paragraph or division after the first, whence is derived the common application of it to denote a separate or distinct particular of an account or bill. One of the portions, equal or unequal, into which anything is divided, or regarded as divided; something less than a whole; a number, quantity, mass, or the like, regarded as going to make up, with others or another, a larger number, quantity, mass, etc., whether actually separate or not; a piece, fragment, fraction, member or constituent. A separate entry in an account or a schedule, or a separate particular in an enumeration of a total. An "item" in an appropriation is an indivisible sum of money dedicated to a stated purpose. Common-

For commercial paper purposes, a negotiable or non-negotiable writing for the payment of money that is collected through the collection process governed by U.C.C. Article 4. U.C.C. § 4-104(1)(g).

Itemize. To set down by items. To state each item or article separately. Used commonly with reference to tax accounting.

Itemized deductions. Certain personal expenditures allowed by the Internal Revenue Code as deductions from adjusted gross income if an individual taxpayer chooses not to use the standard deduction and total itemized deductions exceed the standard deduction. Examples include certain medical expenses, interest on home mortgages, state income taxes, and charitable contributions.

Iter. Lat. In the civil law, a way; a right of way belonging as a servitude to an estate in the country (prædium rusticum). The right of way was of three kinds: (1) iter, a right to walk, or ride on horseback, or in a litter; (2) actus, a right to drive a beast or vehicle; (3) via, a full right of way, comprising right to walk or ride, or drive beast or carriage. Or, as some think, they were distinguished by the width of the objects which could be rightfully carried over the way; e.g., via, 8 feet; actus, 4 feet, etc.

In old English law, a journey, especially a circuit made by a justice in eyre, or itinerant justice, to try causes according to his own mission.

In maritime law, a way or route. The route or direction of a voyage; the route or way that is taken to make the voyage assured. Distinguished from the voyage itself.

Iteratio. Lat. Repetition. In the Roman law, a bonitary owner might liberate a slave, and the quititary owner's repetition (iteratio) of the process effected a complete manumission.

Iter est jus eundi, ambulandi hominis; non etiam jumentum agendi vel vehiculum. A way is the right of going or walking, and does not include the right of driving a beast of burden or a carriage.

Itinerant. Wandering or traveling from place to place; formerly applied to justices who made circuits. Also applied in various statutory and municipal laws (in the sense of traveling from place to place) to certain classes of merchants, traders, and salesmen.

Itinerant peddling. The going about of a merchant from place to place, meeting and dealing with his customers where he finds them. See Good Humor Corporation v. City of New York, 264 App.Div. 620, 36 N.Y.S.2d 85, 91. See Hawker.

Itinerant vendor. This term is variously defined in statutes; e.g., a person engaged in transient business either in one locality or in traveling from place to place selling goods. See Hawker; Peddler.

Ius cogens. A peremptory norm of general international law. For the purposes of the present convention, a peremptory norm of general international law is a norm accepted and recognized by the international community of states as a whole as a norm from which no derogation is permitted and which can be modified only by a subsequent norm of general international law having the same character. (cf. Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1958, Article 53.)

Jac. An abbreviation for "Jacobus"; the Latin form of the name James; used principally in citing statutes enacted in the reigns of the English kings of that name; e.g., "St. 1, Jac. II."

Jacens /jeksens/. Lat. Lying in abeyance, as in the phrase "hæreditas jacens," which is an inheritance or estate lying vacant or in abeyance prior to the ascertainment of the heir or his assumption of the succession.

Jacens hereditas /jeksens herydastes/. See Hæreditas jaceres.

Jacobus /jakówbəs/. A gold coin an inch and three-eighths in diameter, in value about twenty-five shillings, so called from James I., in whose reign it was first coined. It was also called broad, laurel, and broad-piece. Its value is sometimes put at twenty-four shillings, but Macaulay speaks of a salary of eight thousand Jacobuses as equivalent to ten thousand pounds sterling.

Jactitation /jektətəshan/. Boasting of something which is challenged by another. A false boasting; a false claim; assertions repeated to the prejudice of another's right.

The species of defamation or disparagement of another's title to real estate known at common law as "slanders of title" comes under the head of jactitation, and in some jurisdictions (as in Louisiana) a remedy for this injury is provided under the name of an "action of jactitation."

Jactitation of marriage. In English ecclesiastical law, the boasting or giving out by a party that he or she is married to some other, whereby a common reputation of their matrimony may ensue. To defeat that result, the person may be put to a proof of the actual marriage, failing which proof, he or she is put to silence about it. 3 Bl.Comm. 93. The High Court has jurisdiction over such actions.

Jactitation of tithes. In English ecclesiastical law, the boasting by a man that he is entitled to certain tithes, to which he has legally no title.
Jaques. In old English law, small money.

Jason clause. Clause in bills of lading which obligates cargo owners to contribute in general average in cases of danger, damage, or disaster resulting from faults or errors in navigation or in management of vessel, her machinery or appurtenances, provided that shipowner shall have exercised due diligence to make vessel in all respects seaworthy, and to have her properly manned, equipped, and supplied. Merklen v. Johnson & Higgins, D.C.N.Y., 3 F.Supp. 897, 898.

Javelin-men /jæv(o)lənˈmɛn/. In old English law, yeomen retained by the sheriff to escort the judge of assize.

Jay walking. Proceeding diagonally across a street intersection. Also, crossing a street between intersections, or at a place other than a crosswalk.

J.D. Short for "Juris Doctor" or "Doctor of Jurisprudence." This is now the basic law degree, replacing the "LL.B." in the late 1960's.

Jedburgh justice /ˈjɛdbərə ˈjæstəs/. Summary justice inflicted upon a marauder or felon without a regular trial, equivalent to "lynch law." So called from a Scotch town, near the English border, where raiders and cattle lifters were often summarily hung. Also written "Jeddart" /ˈjɛdərt/ or "Jedwood" /ˈjɛdwaʊd/ justice.

Jencks Act or Rule. A criminal defendant in a Federal Court is entitled to access to government documents for assistance in cross-examination of witnesses in order to impeach for prior inconsistent statements. Jencks v. U. S., 353 U.S. 657, 77 S.Ct. 1007, 1 L.Ed.2d 1103. Following this case, a federal statute was enacted to the same effect; 18 U.S.C.A. § 3500. See also Fed.R.Crim.P. 26.2.

Jefeyll. L. Fr. I have failed; I am in error.

Jocus partitus. A little manor or farm.

Jeopardy. Danger; hazard; peril.

The danger of conviction and punishment which the defendant in a criminal action incurs when a valid indictment has been found, and a petit jury has been impaneled and sworn to try the case and give a verdict in a court of competent jurisdiction. Hanley v. State, 83 Nev. 461, 434 P.2d 440, 442. The condition of a person when he is put upon trial, before a court of competent jurisdiction, upon an indictment or information which is sufficient in form and substance to sustain a conviction, and a jury has been charged with his deliverance. For purpose of constitutional prohibition against double jeopardy, a court proceeding which may result in incarceration places a person, adult or juvenile, in "jeopardy." Fain v. Duff, C.A.Fla., 488 F.2d 218, 225.

The terms "jeopardy of life and liberty for the same offense," "jeopardy of life or limb," "jeopardy for the same offense," "in jeopardy of punishment," and other similar provisions used in the various constitutions, are to be construed as meaning substantially the same thing.

See also Double jeopardy; Former jeopardy; Legal jeopardy.

Jeopardy assessment. If the Internal Revenue Service believes that the collection of a tax deficiency is in jeopardy due to delay, the IRS may assess and collect the tax immediately and without the usual formalities. I.R.C. § 6861.

Jetsam /ˈjetsəm/. Goods which, by the act of the owner, have been voluntarily cast overboard from a vessel, in a storm or other emergency, to lighten the ship. See also Jactus; Jettison.

Jettison /ˈjɛtəsən/. The act of throwing overboard from a vessel part of the cargo, in case of extreme danger, to lighten the ship. The thing or things so cast out; jetsam. A carrier by water may, when in case of extreme peril it is necessary for the safety of the ship or cargo, throw overboard, or otherwise sacrifice, any or all of the cargo or appurtenances of the ship. Throwing property overboard for such purpose is called "jettison," and the loss incurred thereby is called a "general average loss." See also Jactus; Jetsam.

Jetty. A projection of stone or other material serving as a protection against the waves.

Jeux de bourse /ʒュー də bʊʁ/ Fr. In French law, speculation in the public funds or in stocks; gambling speculations on the stock exchange; dealings in "options" and "futures."

A kind of gambling or speculation, which consists of sales and purchases which bind neither of the parties to deliver the things which are the object of the sale, and which are settled by paying the difference in the value of the things sold between the day of the sale and that appointed for delivery of such things.

J.N.O.V., Abr. Judgment non obstante veredicto; judgment notwithstanding verdict. See Non obstante veredicto.

Job. The whole of a thing which is to be done. A specific task or piece of work to be done for a set fee or compensation. Employment position. Criminal act (e.g. robbery).

Jobber. One who buys and sells goods for others. One who buys or sells on the stock exchange; a dealer in stocks, shares, or securities. One who buys and sells articles in bulk and resells them to dealers. A merchant buying and selling in job lots. In general, a middleman in the sale of goods; one who buys from a wholesaler and sells to a retailer. Person who does piecework. See also Agent; Broker; Factor; Middleman; Wholesaler.

Jocelit /jɒs(ə)lət/. A little manor or farm.

Jocus /jʊwˈkəʊs/. In old English law, a game of hazard.

Jocus partitus /jʊwˈkəʊs pɑːrtɪtəs/. In old English practice, a divided game, risk, or hazard. An arrangement which the parties to a suit were anciently sometimes allowed to make by mutual agreement upon a certain hazard, as that one should lose if the case turned out in a certain way, and, if it did not, that the other should gain.
JOHN DOE

John Doe. A fictitious name frequently used to indicate a person for the purpose of argument or illustration, or in the course of enforcing a fiction in the law. The name which was usually given to the fictitious lessee of the plaintiff in the mixed action of ejectment. He was sometimes called “Goodtitle.” So the Romans had their fictitious personages in law proceedings, as Titius, Seius.

The name “John Doe” is, and for some centuries has been, used in legal proceedings as a fictitious name to designate a party until his real name can be ascertained. State v. Rossignol, 22 Wash.2d 19, 153 P.2d 882, 885. When “John Doe” is used in a search warrant, case report, textbook, or other legal document, it refers to an unknown or nonexistent person. Garner v. State, 220 Tenn. 680, 423 S.W.2d 480, 482.

John Doe summons. A summons used when the defendant’s name is unknown and which is therefore made out to John Doe. After the true name of the defendant is known, it is substituted.

Join. To unite; to come together; to combine or unite in time, effort, action; to enter into an alliance.

Joinder. Joining or coupling together; uniting two or more constituents or elements in one; uniting with another person in some legal step or proceeding; union; concurrence.

The consent to an agreement or document by a party who has an interest in the subject matter of the agreement or document, but who is not himself an active party to the agreement or document.

Collusive joinder. The joinder of a defendant, commonly a nonresident, for purpose of removal to or conferring jurisdiction on a Federal Court. Bentley v. Halliburton Oil Well Cementing Co., D.C.Tex., 174 F.2d 788, 791.

Compulsory joinder. A person must be joined in an action if complete relief cannot be afforded the parties without his joinder or if his interest is such that grave injustice will be done without him. Fed.R.Civ.P. 19(a).

See Joinder of parties, below.

Joinder in demurrer. In common law pleading, when a defendant in an action tenders an issue of law (called a "demurrer"), the plaintiff, if he means to maintain his action, must accept it, and this acceptance of the defendant’s tender, signified by the plaintiff in a set form of words, is called a "joinder in demurrer."

Joinder in issue. In common law pleading, a formula by which one of the parties to a suit joins in or accepts an issue in fact tendered by the opposite party. Also called "similiter".

Joinder in pleading. In common law pleading, accepting the issue, and mode of trial tendered, either by demurrer, error, or issue, in fact, by the opposite party.

Joinder of claims. Under rules practice, a party asserting a claim to relief as an original claim, counterclaim, cross claim or third party claim may join as many claims as he has against an opposing party whether they are legal or equitable. Fed.R.Civ.P. 18(a); New York C.P.L.R. § 601.

Joinder of defendants. Two or more defendants may be charged in the same indictment or information if they are alleged to have participated in the same act or transaction or in the same series of acts or transactions constituting an offense or offenses. Such defendants may be charged in one or more counts together or separately and all of the defendants need not be charged in each count. Fed.R.Crim.Proc. 8(b).

Joinder of error. In proceedings on a writ of error in criminal cases, the joinder of error is a written denial of the errors alleged in the assignment of errors. It answers to a joinder of issue in an action.

Joinder of indictments or informations. The court may order two or more indictments or informations or both to be tried together if the offenses, and the defendants if there is more than one, could have been joined in a single indictment or information. The procedure shall be the same as if the prosecution were such single indictment or information. Fed.R.Crim.P. 13.

Joinder of issue. The act by which the parties to a cause arrive at that stage of it in their pleadings, that one asserts a fact to be so, and the other denies it.

Joinder of offenses. Two or more offenses may be charged in the same indictment or information in a separate count for each offense if the offenses charged, whether felonies or misdemeanors or both, are of the same or similar character or are based on the same act or transaction or on two or more acts or transactions connected together or constituting parts of a common scheme or plan. Fed.R.Crim.Proc. 8(a).

Joinder of parties. The act of uniting as parties to an action all persons who have the same rights or against whom rights are claimed, as either co-plaintiffs or co-defendants. Fed.R.Civil P. 19 and 20.

Necessary and indispensible parties. Prior to 1966 the federal, and most state, courts used classifications to determine if a person should or must be joined in an action. The label “indispensible” was used if the connection to the action of the absentee party was so close that the action should be dismissed unless the party was joined. The label “necessary” was used if the party was one who ought to be joined if this was possible. These classifications proved unsatisfactory and in 1966 Fed.Rule of Civil Proc. 19 was replaced with a new Rule 19, "Joinder of Persons needed for Just Adjudication." Rule 19(a) defines the class of persons who are needed for just adjudication. If an absentee meets this test, and is subject to process, the court must require that he be joined. If the absentee is needed for just adjudication and is not subject to process, Rule 19(b) states the factors to be considered in deciding whether to proceed in his absence or to dismiss the action.

Proper parties. If a party has some relation to the action, but it is not so close as to make him a person needed for just adjudication within Rule of Civil Proc. 19(a), he is a "proper" party, and the plaintiff has an option whether to join him if the tests of Rule 20 are met.
Joint of remedies. Whenever a claim is one theretofore cognizable only after another claim has been prosecuted to a conclusion, the two claims may be joined in a single action; but the court will grant relief in that action only in accordance with the relative substantive rights of the parties. In particular, a plaintiff may state a claim for money and a claim to have set aside a conveyance fraudulent as to him, without first having obtained a judgment establishing the claim for money.

Misjoinder. The improper joining together of parties to a suit, as plaintiffs or defendants, or of different causes of action. Misjoinder, however, is not a ground for dismissal. The improper party is merely dropped on motion of any party or on courts own motion. Fed.R.
Civil P. 21. Relief from prejudicial joinder of offenses or defendants in an indictment or information is permitted

Misjoinder in a criminal prosecution is the charging in separate counts of separate and distinct offenses arising out of wholly different transactions having no connection or relation with each other. Optner v. U. S., Nonjoinder. The omission to join some person as party to a suit, whether as plaintiff or defendant, who ought to have been so joined. An omitted party may be added on motion of any party or on courts own motion. Fed.R.

Civil P. 21.

Permissive joinder. All persons may join in one action as plaintiffs if they assert any right to relief jointly, severally, or in the alternative in respect of or arising out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences and if any question of law or fact common to all these persons will arise in the action.
All persons (and any vessel, cargo or other property subject to admiralty process in rem) may be joined in one action as defendants if there is asserted against them jointly, severally, or in the alternative, any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences and if any questions of law or fact common to all defendants will arise in the action. A plaintiff or defendant need not be interested in obtaining or defending against all the relief demanded. Judgment may be given for one or more of the plaintiffs according to their respective rights to relief, and against one or more defendants according to their respective liabilities. Fed.
R.Civ.P. 20(a).

Joint. United; combined; undivided; done by or against two or more unitedly; shared by or between two or more; coupled together in interest or liability.

The term is used to express a common property interest enjoyed or a common liability incurred by two or more persons. Thus, it is one in which the obligors (being two or more in number) bind themselves jointly but not severally, and which must therefore be prosecuted in a joint action against them all; distinguished from "joint and several" obligation.

As to joint Annuity; Ballot; Committee; Contract; Covenant; Creditor; Custody; Fiat; Fine; Indictment; Obligation; Obligee; Obligor; Owner; Rate; Resolution; Session; Tenancy; Tenant; Trespass; Trespasser; Trustee; Will, see those titles. As to joint-stock banks, see Bank; joint-stock company, see Company; joint-stock corpo-ratation, see Corporation.

Joint account. An account (e.g. bank or brokerage account) in two or more names. Harbour v. Harbour, 207 Ark. 551, 181 S.W.2d 805, 807.

Joint action. An action brought by two or more as plaintiffs or against two or more as defendants. See Joinder.

Joint adventure. Any association of persons to carry out a single business enterprise for profit, for which purpose they combine their property, money, effects, skill, and knowledge. A "joint adventure" exists where there is a special combination of two or more persons jointly seeking to profit in some specific venture without actual partnership or corporate designation; it is an association of persons to carry out a single business enterprise for profit, for which purpose they combine their property, money, effects, skill, and knowledge.
Fulton v. Fulton, Mo.App., 528 S.W.2d 146, 155. See also Community of interest; Joint enterprise; Joint venture.

Joint and several contracts. Contracts in which the parties bind themselves both individually and as a unit (jointly).

Joint and several liability. Describes the liability of copromisors of the same performance when each of them, individually, has the duty of fully performing the obligation, and the obligee can sue all or any of them upon breach of performance. A liability is said to be joint and several when the creditor may demand payment or sue one or more of the parties to such liability separately, or all of them together at his option. A joint and several bond or note is one in which the obligors makers bind themselves both jointly and individually to the obligee or payee, so that all may be sued together for its enforcement, or the creditor may select one or more as the object of his suit.

Term also refers to the liability of joint tortfeasors
(i.e., liability that an individual or business either shares with other tortfeasors or bears individually without the others). See Contribution; Indemnity; Joint liability; Joint tort-feasors; Liability.

Such liability permits the Internal Revenue Service to collect a tax from one or all of several taxpayers. A husband and wife that file a joint income tax return usually are collectively or individually liable for the full amount of the tax liability. I.R.C. § 6013.

Joint authorship. As to literary property, such exists where there is a common design to the execution of which several persons contribute. Mere alterations, additions or improvements, whether with or without the sanction of the author, will not entitle the person making them to claim to be a joint author of the work.
JOINT AUTHORSHIP

Joint bank account. An account in the names of two or more persons who have equal right to it, generally with the right of survivorship.

Joint cause of action. See Joinder.

Joint debtors. Persons united in a joint liability or indebtedness. Two or more persons jointly liable for the same debt.

Joint debtors' acts. Statutes enacted in many of the states, which provide that judgment may be given for or against one or more of several defendants, and that, "in an action against several defendants, the court may, in its discretion, render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others, whenever a several judgment is proper". The name is also given to statutes providing that where an action is instituted against two or more defendants upon an alleged joint liability, and some of them are served with process, but jurisdiction is not obtained over the others, the plaintiff may still proceed to trial against those who are before the court, and, if he recovers, may have judgment against all of the defendants whom he shows to be jointly liable. Hall v. Lanning, 91 U.S. 160, 168, 23 L.Ed. 271.

Joint defendants. Persons who are sued and tried together. In criminal law, persons who are indicted for the same crime and tried together. See Joinder; Trial.

Joint defense doctrine. This doctrine generally allows defendant to assert attorney-client privilege to protect his statements made in confidence not to his own lawyer, but to attorney for codefendant for common purpose related to defense of both. U.S. v. Keplinger, C.A.Ill., 23 L.Ed. 271.

Joint enterprise. Also called "common enterprise". The joint prosecution of common purpose under such circumstances that each has authority express or implied to act for all in respect to the control, means or agencies employed to execute such common purpose. The necessary elements are: (1) an agreement among the group's members, either express or implied; (2) a common purpose that the group intends to carry out; (3) community of pecuniary interest among members of the group in that purpose; and (4) an equal right to a voice in control and direction of the enterprise which gives an equal right of control. Fredrickson v. Kluever, 82 S.D. 776 F.2d 678, 701.

Joint estate. Joint estate involves unity of interest, unity of title, unity of time, and unity of possession, and joint tenants must have the same interest accruing under the same conveyance, commencing at the same time, and held under the same undivided possession. Mosser v. Dolsay, 132 N.J.Eq. 121, 27 A.2d 155. See also Joint tenancy.

Joint executors. Co-executors; two or more who are joined in the execution of a will. See also Co-executor.

Joint rate. See Joint through rate; Rate.

Jointress, jointuress. A woman who has an estate settled on her by her husband, to hold during her life, if she survives him.

Joint return. See Joint tax return.

Joint-stock association or company. An unincorporated business enterprise with ownership interests represented by shares of stock. This type enterprise was recognized at common law and by statute is generally treated as a corporate entity for certain purposes. Such entities bear a resemblance to both a corporation and a partnership. They appear to be like corporations to the extent that they have capital stock, but are not treated as corporations in many jurisdictions. Brocki v. American Express Co., C.A.Mich., 279 F.2d 785, 787.

Joint-stock company. See Joint-stock association or company.

Joint-stock insurance company. See Stock insurance company.

Joint tax return. Tax return filed for federal or state taxes by a husband and wife together and each is individually liable. Such return includes the income of both spouses, though one spouse need not have any income. It is usually more beneficial from a tax standpoint for spouses to file a joint return than as "married filing separately".

Joint tenancy. See Tenancy.

Joint through rate. Transportation charge applicable from a point on one transportation line to a point on another transportation line. Occurs when freight is to be shipped to its destination by more than one carrier.

Joint tort. Where two or more persons owe to another the same duty and by their common neglect such other is injured, the tort is "joint." See Contribution; Joint negligence; Joint tort-feasors.

Joint tort-feasors. Term refers to two or more persons jointly or severally liable in tort for the same injury to person or property. American Tobacco Co. v. Transport Corp., D.C.Va., 277 F.Supp. 457, 461. Those persons who have acted in concert in their tortious conduct and are, accordingly, jointly and severally liable. Those who act together in committing wrong, or whose acts if independent of each other, unite in causing single injury. Bowen v. Iowa Nat. Mut. Ins. Co., 270 N.C. 486, 155 S.E.2d 238, 242. Several states have adopted the Uniform Contribution Among Tortfeasors Act. See also Contribution.

Joint trial. The trial of two or more persons for the same or similar offenses conducted within the framework of one trial. See also Joinder; Trial.

Jointure. A freehold estate in lands or tenements secured to the wife, and to take effect on the decease of the husband, and to continue during her life at the least, unless she be herself the cause of its determination. Property provision for wife, made prior to marriage, in lieu of dower.

Joint venture. A legal entity in the nature of a partnership engaged in the joint undertaking of a particular transaction for mutual profit. Tex-Co Grain Co. v. Happy Wheat Growers, Inc., Tex.Civ.App., 542 S.W.2d 934, 936. An association of persons or companies jointly undertaking some commercial enterprise; generally all contribute assets and share risks. It requires a community of interest in the performance of the subject matter, a right to direct and govern the policy in connection therewith, and duty, which may be altered by agreement, to share both in profit and losses. Russell v. Klein, 33 Ill.App.3d 1005, 339 N.E.2d 510, 512.

A one-time grouping of two or more persons in a business undertaking. Unlike a partnership, a joint venture does not entail a continuing relationship among the parties. A joint venture is treated like a partnership for Federal income tax purposes. I.R.C. § 7701(a).

See also Community of interest; Joint adventure; Joint enterprise. Compare Corporation; Partnership.

Joint venture corporation. See Corporation.

Joint verdict. Jury verdict covering more than one party to the action and combining two or more verdicts in one. See also Verdict.

Joint will. See Will.

Joint work. In copyright law, a "joint work" is a work prepared by two or more authors with the intention that their contributions be merged into inseparable or interdependent parts of a unitary whole. Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C.A. § 101.

Joker. In political usage, a clause in legislation that is ambiguous or apparently immaterial, inserted to render it inoperative or uncertain without arousing opposition at the time of passage.

Jones Act. Federal statute passed in 1920 which provides that a seaman injured in the course of his employment by the negligence of the owner, master or fellow crew members can recover damages for his injuries. 46 U.S.C.A. § 688. Similar remedies are available under the Act to the personal representative of a seaman killed in the course of his employment. See also Longshore and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act.

Jornale /jór'nély/ly/jur//. In old English law, as much land as could be plowed in one day.

Josh. To ridicule or tease, or make fun of in a joke, to lure or tease by misrepresenting the facts.

Jouir /zhúwr/. A French word, meaning to enjoy; to have enjoyment of; or to possess.

Jour /zhür/jur/. A French word, signifying "day."

Jour en banc /jür an běcg/.

Jour in court /jür an kör/.

Jury. A French word, designating a group of persons selected to hear the testimony and determine the facts at the trial of a case. The jury should act as neutral judges of the facts in a case, and decide according to the evidence and not to the dictates of personal prejudice or passion; or, in the case of criminal proceedings, to the dictates of public policy and public opinion. The jury is considered to be a part of the人民 from which the judge and the attorneys draw their opinions. The jury is a body of men and women whose composition is determined by the law and the method of selection is determined by the law and the method of selection is determined by the law and the method of selection is determined by the law.

Jury verdict covering more than one party to the action and combining two or more verdicts in one. See also Verdict.

Jour in court /jür an kört/. In old practice, day in court; day to appear in court; appearance day. Every process gives the defendant a day in court."
Journal. A daily book; a book in which entries are made or events recorded from day to day. The place where transactions are recorded as they occur. The book of original entry.

In maritime law, the journal (otherwise called "log" or "log-book") is a book kept on every vessel, which contains a brief record of the events and occurrences of each day of a voyage, with the nautical observations, course of the ship, account of the weather, etc. In the system of double-entry bookkeeping, the journal is an account-book into which are transcribed, daily or at other intervals, the items entered upon the day-book, for more convenient posting into the ledger. In the usage of legislative bodies, the journal is a daily record of the proceedings of either house. It is kept by the clerk, and in it are entered the appointments and actions of committees, introduction of bills, motions, votes, resolutions, etc., in the order of their occurrence.

Journal entry. A recording in an accounting journal of equal debits and credits, with, when necessary, an explanation of the transaction.

Journal entry rule. Regularity of enactment of statute may be inquired into by examining legislative journals.

Journalists' privilege. In the law of defamation, a publisher is protected in actions of defamation if the publication constitutes fair comment on the subject of public officers and employees in matters of public concern. Such privilege is qualified and hence is lost on proof of malice which, in this context, consists in publishing material either knowing it to be false or heedless in the reckless disregard of whether it is true or false when, in fact, it is false. New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686. See also Libel; Shield laws.

Journeyman. A craftsman who has progressed through an apprenticeship and is qualified in his trade.

Journeys account. In English practice, a new writ which the plaintiff was permitted to sue out within a reasonable time after the abatement, without his fault, of the first writ. This time was computed with reference to the number of days which the plaintiff must spend in journeying to reach the court; hence the name of journeys account, that is, journeys accomplis or counted.

Joyriding. The temporary taking of an automobile without intent to deprive owner permanently of the vehicle. People v. Rivera, 185 Colo. 337, 524 P.2d 1082, 1083. Called in some jurisdictions the crime of use of motor vehicle without authority which is commonly a misdemeanor in contrast to larceny of motor vehicle which is a more serious offense.

J.P. Justice of the Peace.

Jubere (/jubɛr/) Lat. In the civil law, to order, direct, or command. The word jubio (I order) in a will, was called a "word of direction," as distinguished from "precatory words." To assure or promise. To decree or pass a law.

Judex (/jʊwɛdɛks/). Lat. In Roman law, a private person appointed by the prator, with the consent of the parties, to try and decide a cause of action commenced before him. He received from the prator a written formula instructing him as to the legal principles according to which the action was to be judged. Hence the proceedings before him were said to be in judicio, as those before the prator were said to be in jure. A judge who conducted the trial from beginning to end; magistratus.

The practice of calling in judices was disused before Justinian's time: therefore, in the Code, Institutes, and Novels, judex means judge in its modern sense. The term judex is used with very different significations at different periods of Roman law.

In later and modern civil law, a judge.

In old English law, a juror. A judge, in modern sense, especially—as opposed to justicarius, i.e., a common-law judge—to denote an ecclesiastical judge.

Judex ad quem (/jʊwɛdɛks əd kwɛm/). A judge to whom an appeal is taken.

Judex a quo (/jʊwɛdɛks ə kwɔ/). A judge from whom, as judex ad quem is the judge to whom, an appeal is made or taken.

Judex ante oculos /jʊwɛdɛks əntɪˈɔʊkwɔləs/ (I order) okulus, spectat debet/. A judge ought always to regard equity.

Judex ante oculos aestimatem semper habere debet (/jʊwɛdɛks əntɪˈɔʊkwɔləs əˈɛstɪˌmætəm ˈsɛmpər həˈbɪri ˈdɛbɛt/). A judge ought always to have equity before his eyes.

Judex a quo (/jʊwɛdɛks ə kwɔ/). In civil law, the judge from whom, as judex ad quem is the judge to whom, an appeal is made or taken.

Judex bonus nihil ex arbitrio suo faciat, nec proposito domesticae voluntatis, sed juxta leges et jura pronunciet (/jʊwɛdɛks ˈboʊnɪs ˈnæ(k)əl ɛks əˈarbɪtrɪjɒw ˈsɪ(ə)ˌˈwɪdɛks ˈfɪʃɪˌkwɔləs ˈsɛmpər həˈbɪri ˈdɛbɛt/). A judge should do nothing of his own arbitrary will, nor on the dictate of his personal inclination, but should decide according to law and justice.

Judex damnatur cum nocens absolvatur (/jʊwɛdɛks ˈdæmənˈtɔr kʊm ˈnɒsəns ˈæbəlˈsɔlvətər/). The judge is condemned when a guilty person escapes punishment.

Judex datus (/jʊwɛdɛks ˈdeɪtəs/). In Roman law, a judge given, that is, assigned or appointed, by the prator to try a cause.

Judex debet judicaret secundum allegata et probata (/jʊwɛdɛks ˈdeɪbɛt ˈdʒɪdɪkərət ˈsɛkʊndəm ˈæləɡətə ət ˈprəbətə/). The judge ought to decide according to the allegations and the proofs.

Judex delegatus (/jʊwɛdɛks ˈdɛləɡətəs/). A delegated judge; a special judge.

Judex est lex loquens (/jʊwɛdɛks ˈɛst lɛks ˈlokwənz/). A judge is the law speaking [the mouth of the law].

Judex fiscalis (/jʊwɛdɛks ˈfɪskəlɪs/). A fiscal judge; one having cognizance of matters relating to the fiscus (q.v.).

Judex habere debet duos sales,—seam sapientiae, ne sit insipidus; et salem conscientiae, ne sit diabolus
Judge non potest esse testis in propria causa
/Judex non potest esse testis in propria causa
A judge cannot be a witness in his own cause.

Judge non potest injuriam sibi datam punire
/Judex non potest injuriam sibi datam punire
A judge cannot punish a wrong done to himself.

Judge non reddit plus quam quod petens ipse requirit /Judex non reddit plus quam quod petens ipse requirit
A judge does not give more than what the complaining party himself demands.

Judge ordinarius
/Judex ordinarius
In the civil law, an ordinary judge; one who had the right of hearing and determining causes as a matter of his own proper jurisdiction (ex proprio iurisdictione), and not by virtue of a delegated authority. According to Blackstone judges ordinarii determined only questions of fact. 3 Bl.Comm. 315.

Judge pedaneus
/Judex pedaneus
In Roman law, inferior judge; deputy judge. The judge who was commissioned by the prætor to hear a cause was so-called, from the low seat which he anciently occupied at the foot of the prætor's tribunal.

Judge questionis
/Judex questionis
A select or selected judge. The judges in criminal suits selected by the prætor. These judices selecti were used in criminal causes, and between them and modern jurors many points of resemblance have been noticed; 3 Bl.Comm. 366.

Judge selectus
/Judex selectus
A select or selected judge. The judges in criminal suits selected by the prætor. These judices selecti were used in criminal causes, and between them and modern jurors many points of resemblance have been noticed; 3 Bl.Comm. 366.

Judge. An officer so named in his commission, who presides in some court; a public officer, appointed to preside and to administer the law in a court of justice; the chief member of a court, and charged with the control of proceedings and the decision of questions of law or discretion. Todd v. U. S., 158 U.S. 278, 15 S.Ct. 889, 39 L.Ed. 982. A public officer who, by virtue of his office, is clothed with judicial authority. State ex rel. Hodshire v. Bingham, 218 Ind. 490, 33 N.E.2d 771. As opposed to a special judge who is appointed to act in a particular case, such judge is appointed to act during the absence of the regular judge and exercises all of the powers of the regular judge during that period.

Judge advocate corps. Staff of Judge Advocate General.

Judge Advocate General. Senior legal officer and chief legal advisor of the Army, Navy, and Air Force and, except when the Coast Guard is operating as a service in the Navy, the General Counsel of the Department of Transportation. 10 U.S.C.A. § 801.

Judge de facto. One who holds and exercises the office of a judge under color of lawful authority and by a title valid on its face, though he has not full right to the office, as where he was appointed under an unconstitutional statute, or by an usurper of the appointing power, or has not taken the oath of office.

Judge-made law. A phrase used to indicate judicial decisions which construe away the meaning of statutes, or find meanings in them the legislature never intended. It is perhaps more commonly used as meaning, simply, the law established by judicial precedent and decisions. Laws having their source in judicial decisions as opposed to laws having their source in statutes or administrative regulations.

Judge pro tempore. One appointed for the term or some part thereof, during which time he exercises all the functions of the regular judge. State ex rel. Hodshire v. Bingham, 218 Ind. 490, 33 N.E.2d 771. As opposed to a special judge who is appointed to act in a particular case, such judge is appointed to act during the absence of the regular judge and exercises all of the powers of the regular judge during that period.

Judge's minutes, or notes. Memoranda usually taken by a judge, while a trial is proceeding, of the testimony of witnesses, or documents offered or admitted in evidence, of offers of evidence, and whether it has been received or rejected, and the like matters.

Judge trial. Trial conducted before a judge without a jury. Jury waived trial; bench trial; non-jury trial.

In American usage, the term "judge advocate" no longer refers to any of the parties involved in a court-martial. Instead, it refers to the principal legal adviser on the staff of a military commander (usually with a more definitive title, such as Staff Judge Advocate, Post Judge Advocate, or Command Judge Advocate) or, more broadly, to any officer in the Judge Advocate General's Corps or Department (i.e., branch) of one of the U.S. armed forces. British usage is different.

See also Magistrate.

Judge advocate. An officer of the Judge Advocate General's Corps of the Army or the Navy or an officer of the Air Force or the Marine Corps who is designated as a judge advocate. 10 U.S.C.A. § 801.
the dispute and determining the rights and obligations of the parties. The law's last word in a judicial controversy, it being the final determination by a court of the rights of the parties upon matters submitted to it in an action or proceeding. Towley v. King Arthur Rings, Inc., 40 N.Y.2d 129, 386 N.Y.S.2d 80, 351 N.E.2d 728, 730. Conclusion of law upon facts found or admitted by the parties or upon their default in the course of the suit. Decision or sentence of the law, given by a court of justice or other competent tribunal, as the result of proceedings instituted therein, Allegheny County v. Maryland Casualty Co., C.C.A.Pa., 132 F.2d 894, 897. Decision or sentence of the law pronounced by the court and entered upon its docket, minutes or record. Determination of a court of competent jurisdiction upon matters submitted to it. State ex rel. Curran v. Brookes, 142 Ohio St. 107, 50 N.E.2d 995, 998. Determination or sentence of the law, pronounced by a competent judge or court, as the result of an action or proceeding instituted in such court, affirming that, upon the matters submitted for its decision, a legal duty or liability does or does not exist.

Term "judgment" under rules practice includes "deedree". Fed.R.Civ.P. 54(a). Terms "decision" and "judgment" are commonly used interchangeably. "Sentence" and "judgment" are synonymous in criminal action and appeal from sentence is same as appeal from judgment. People v. Spencer, 71 C.2d 933, 80 Cal.Rptr. 99, 101, 458 P.2d 43.

The term "judgment" is also used to denote the reason which the court gives for its decision; but this is more properly denominated an "opinion."

An award may be in the nature of, or equivalent of, a judgment. Holliday v. Salling, 54 Ariz. 496, 97 P.2d 221, 223. Also, an order may be a judgment. Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Baker, Tex.Civ.App., 111 S.W.2d 837, 839, 840.

Specific Types of Judgments

Agreed judgment. A judgment entered on agreement of the parties, which receives the sanction of the court, and it constitutes a contract between the parties to the agreement, operates as an adjudication between them and when court gives the agreement its sanction, becomes a judgment of the court. Traveler's Ins. Co. v. U. S., D.C.Tex., 283 F.Supp. 14, 28. See also Consent Judgment, below.

Alternative judgment. One that by its terms might be satisfied by doing either of several acts at the election of the party or parties against whom the judgment is rendered and from whom performance is by the judgment required. A judgment for one thing or another which does not specifically and in a definite manner determine the rights of the parties.

Appealable judgment. One which disposes of all parties and issues in case. Chuning v. Calvert, Mo.App., 452 S.W.2d 580, 582. See also Final judgment, below.

Arrest of judgment. See Arrest of judgment.

Assets in futuro, judgment of. One against an executor or heir, who holds at the time no property on which it can operate.

Cognovit actionem. See Cognovit actionem.

Cognovit judgment. See Cognovit judgment; also, Confession of judgment, below.

Conditional judgment. One whose force depends upon the performance of certain acts to be done in the future by one of the parties; as, one which may become of no effect if the defendant appears and pleads according to its terms, or one which orders the sale of mortgaged property in a foreclosure proceeding unless the mortgagor shall pay the amount decreed within the time limited.

Confession of judgment. At common law, judgment entered where defendant, instead of entering plea, confessed action, or withdrew plea and confessed action. Judgment where a defendant gives the plaintiff a cognovit or written confession of the action by virtue of which the plaintiff enters judgment. The act of a debtor in permitting judgment to be entered against him by his creditor, for a stipulated sum, by a written statement to that effect or by warrant of attorney, without the institution of legal proceedings of any kind; voluntary submission to court's jurisdiction. O'Hara v. Manley, 140 Pa.Super. 39, 12 A.2d 820, 822. Such agreements for confession of judgment are void in many states; e.g. Mass.G.L. c. 231, § 13A.

The negotiability of an instrument is not affected by a term authorizing a confession of judgment if the instrument is not paid when due. U.C.C. § 3–112.

See also Cognovit judgment.

Consent judgment. A judgment, the provisions and terms of which are settled and agreed to by the parties to the action. Matthews v. Looney, 132 Tex. 313, 123 S.W.2d 871, 872. See also Decree (Consent decree); and Agreed judgment, above.

Contradictory judgment. A judgment which has been given after the parties have been heard, either in support of their claims or in defense. Used in Louisiana to distinguish such judgments from those rendered by default.

Declaratory judgment. See Declaratory judgment.

Default and inquiry, judgment by. It establishes right of action of kind properly pleaded in complaint, determines right of plaintiff to recover at least nominal damages and costs, and precludes defendant from offering any evidence on execution of inquiry to show that plaintiff has no right of action. Such type judgment is obsolete.

or plead at the appointed time. The term is also applied to judgments entered under statutes or rules of court, for want of affidavit of defense, plea, answer, and the like, or for failure to take some required step in the cause.

Judgments rendered on defendant’s default are: Judgment by default; Judgment by non sum informatus; judgment nil dict. Judgments rendered on plaintiff’s default are: Judgment of non pros. (from non prossequitur) and judgment of nonsuit (from non sequitur, or ne suit pas).

Deficiency judgment. A judgment in favor of a creditor for the difference between the amount of the indebtedness and the amount derived from the judicial sale held in order to satisfy the indebtedness. Cameron Brown South, Inc v. East Glen Oaks, Inc., La.App., 341 So.2d 450, 456. See also Deficiency judgment.

De melioribus damnis. See De melioribus damnis.

Demurrer, judgment on. Such concludes party demurring, because by demurring, a party admits the facts alleged in the pleadings of his adversary and relies on their insufficiency in law. See Demurrer.

Dismissal, judgment of. See Dismissal.

Domestic judgment. A judgment is domestic in the courts of the same state or country where it was originally rendered; in other states or countries it is called foreign. See Foreign judgment, below.

Dormant judgment. One which has not been satisfied or extinguished by lapse of time, but which has remained so long unexecuted that execution cannot now be issued upon it without first reviving the judgment. Or one which has lost its lien on land from the failure to issue execution on it or take other steps to enforce it within the time limited by statute.

Execution of judgment. See Execution of judgment or decree.

Face of judgment. See Face of judgment.

Final judgment. One which puts an end to an action at law by declaring that the plaintiff either has or has not entitled himself to recover the remedy he sues for. So distinguished from interlocutory judgments. A judgment which disposes of the subject-matter of the controversy or determines the litigation as to all parties on its merits. A judgment which terminates all litigation on the same right. Appeals in federal courts will only lie from “final” judgments. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1291. See Final decision or judgment; Final decision rule.

Foreign judgment. One rendered by the courts of a state or country politically and judicially distinct from that where the judgment or its effect is brought in question. One pronounced by a tribunal of a foreign country, or of a sister state. Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Radcliffe, 137 U.S. 287, 11 S.Ct. 92, 34 L.Ed. 670. Several states have adopted the Uniform Foreign Money Judgments Recognition Act, and also the Uniform Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act.

General verdict subject to a special case, judgment on. Where at the trial the parties agree on the facts and the only question is one of law and a verdict pro forma is taken and the jury find for the plaintiff generally but subject to the opinion of the court on a special case. In personam or inter partes judgment. See Personal judgment, below; Judgment in personam or inter partes.

In rem judgment. See Judgment in rem.

Interlocutory judgment. One given in the progress of a cause upon some plea, proceeding, or default which is only intermediate and does not finally determine or complete the suit. One which determines some preliminary or subordinate point or plea, or settles some step, question, or default arising in the progress of the cause, but does not adjudicate the ultimate rights of the parties, or finally put the case out of court. Thus, a judgment or order passed upon any provisional or accessory claim or contention is, in general, merely interlocutory, although it may finally dispose of that particular matter. An “interlocutory judgment” is one which reserves or leaves some further question or direction for future determination. State ex reI. Great Am. Ins. Co. v. Jones, Mo., 396 S.W.2d 601, 603. See Interlocutory appeal.

Judgment notwithstanding verdict. See Non obstante veredicto.

Judgment of conviction. A judgment of conviction shall set forth the plea, the verdict or findings, and the adjudication and sentence. If the defendant is found not guilty or for any other reason is entitled to be discharged, judgment shall be entered accordingly. The judgment shall be signed by the judge and entered by the clerk. Fed.R.Crim.P. 32(b).

Judgment on pleadings. After the pleadings are closed but within such time as not to delay the trial, any party may move for judgment on the pleadings. If, on a motion for judgment on the pleadings, matters outside the pleadings are presented to and not excluded by the court, the motion shall be treated as one for summary judgment and disposed of as provided in Rule 56, and all parties shall be given reasonable opportunity to present all material made pertinent to such a motion by Rule 56. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(c). This device resembles closely a demurrer to the extent that it attacks the pleadings on the same basis as a demurrer.

Junior judgment. One which was rendered or entered after the rendition or entry of another judgment, on a different claim, against the same defendant.

Merits, judgment on. One rendered after argument and investigation, and when it is determined which party is in the right, as distinguished from a judgment rendered upon some preliminary or formal or merely technical or procedural point, or by default and without trial. A decision that was rendered on the basis of the evidence and facts introduced. Normally, a judgment based solely on some procedural error is not a judgment on the merits. The latter kind of judgment is often referred to as a “dismissal without prejudice.” A party who has received a judgment on the merits cannot bring the same suit again. A party whose case has been dismissed without prejudice can bring the same suit again so long as the procedural errors are corrected (i.e., cured) in the later action.

For res judicata purposes is one which determines the rights and liabilities of the parties based on the ultimate fact as disclosed by the pleadings or issues presented for trial. Thompson-Hayward Chemical Co. v. Cyprus Mines Corp., 8 Kan.App.2d 487, 660 P.2d 973, 975.

Money judgment. One which adjudges the payment of a sum of money, as distinguished from one directing an act to be done or property to be restored or transferred. A judgment, or any part thereof, for a sum of money or directing the payment of a sum of money. For enforcement or satisfaction of money judgment, see Execution. Several states have adopted the Uniform Foreign Money Judgments Recognition Act.

Nihil dicit judgment. See Nihil dicit.

Nil capiat per breve or per billa (that he take nothing by his writ, or by his bill). A judgment in favor of the defendant upon an issue raised upon a declaration or peremptory plea.

Nihil dicit, judgment by. Judgment for plaintiff rendered when defendant has appeared but has failed to answer or when answer has been withdrawn or abandoned and no further defense is made. Bredeson v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., Tex.Civ.App., 513 S.W.2d 110, 112. At common law, it may be taken against defendant who omits to plead or answer whole or any separable substantial portion of declaration. It amounts to judgment by confession with reference to cause of action states. Grand Lodge Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen v. Ware, Tex.Civ.App., 73 S.W.2d 1076, 1077. Under current rules practice, such judgment is substantially identical with default judgment. See also Nihil dicit.

Nisi. At common law, judgment nisi was a judgment entered on the return of the nisi prius record, which, according to the terms of the postea indorsed thereon was to become absolute unless otherwise ordered by the court within the first four days of the next succeeding term. See also Nisi; Show cause order.

Nolle prosequi, judgment of. One entered against plaintiff when, after appearance and before judgment, he declares that he will not further prosecute his suit. Merchants Mut. Casualty Co. v. Kiley, 92 N.H. 323, 30 A.2d 681, 683. See also Nolle prosequi.

Non obstante veredicto. See Non obstante veredicto.

Non pro. (Non prosequitur [he does not follow up, or pursue]). See Non prosequitur.

Nonsuit. See Nonsuit.

Non sum informatus. See Non sum informatus.

Notwithstanding verdict. See Non obstante veredicto.

Nul tiel record. See Nul tiel record.

Nunc pro tunc. Judgment given effect as of a date in the past. One entered on a day subsequent to the time at which it should have been entered, as of the latter date. See Nunc pro tunc.

Offer of judgment. Before trial, a party defending against a claim may serve upon the adverse party an offer to allow judgment to be taken against him for the money or property or to the effect specified in his offer, with costs then accrued. If after service of the offer the adverse party serves written notice that the offer is accepted, either party may then file the offer and notice of acceptance together with proof of service thereof and thereupon the clerk shall enter judgment. Fed.R.Civ. P. 68.

Personal judgment. One imposing on the defendant a personal liability to pay it, and which may therefore be satisfied out of any of his property which is within the reach of process, as distinguished from one which may be satisfied only out of a particular fund or the proceeds of particular property. Judgments in which court has personal jurisdiction over parties. State v. Dreyer, 188 Kan. 270, 362 P.2d 55, 57.

Pro retumbo habendo. A judgment that the party have a return of the goods.

Quod computet. See Quod computet.

Quod partes replacitent. See Quod partes replacitent.

Quod partitio fiat. Interlocutory judgment in a writ of partition, that partition be made.

Quod recuperet. See Quod recuperet.

Relicta verificatione. See Relicta verificatione.

Repleader, judgment of. See Repleader.

Respondent ouster. When the issue in law arises on a dilatory plea, and is determined for the plaintiff, the judgment is only that the defendant "do answer over," called a judgment of respondent ouster; it is interlocutory only.

Retraxit. See Retraxit.

Revival of judgment. See Revival.

Stet processus. See Stet processus.

Summary judgment. See Summary judgment.

Verdict, judgment on. The most usual of the judgments upon facts found, and is for the party obtaining the verdict. See also Verdict.

Warrant of attorney. See Warrant.

Judgment book. A book required to be kept by the clerk, among the records of the court, for the entry of judgments. Such is called a "civil docket" or "criminal docket" in the federal and many state courts. Fed.R.Civ. P. 79; Fed.R.Crim.P. 55. See also Judgment docket.

Judgment creditor. A person in whose favor a money judgment has been entered by a court of law and who has not yet been paid. One who has obtained a judgment against his debtor, under which he can enforce execution. A person in whose favor a money judgment is entered or a person who becomes entitled to enforce it. Owner of an unsatisfied judgment. For purpose of Internal Revenue Code, term is used in conventional sense of judgment of court of record. U.S. v. Gilbert Associates, 345 U.S. 361, 364, 73 S.Ct. 701, 703-704, 97 L.Ed. 1071. Cf. U.C.C. 9-301(3) (lien creditor). Compare Judgment debtor. See also Attachment; Execution (Writ of execution); Judgment lien.

Judgment debtor. A person against whom judgment has been recovered, and which remains unsatisfied. The term has been construed to include a judgment debtor's successors in interest. Compare Judgment creditor. See also Attachment; Execution (Writ of execution); Judgment lien.

Judgment docket. A list or docket of the judgments entered in a given court, methodically kept by the clerk or other proper officer, open to public inspection, and intended to afford official notice to interested parties of the existence or lien of judgments. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 79; Fed.R.Crim.P. 55. See also Docket; Judgment book.

Judgment, estoppel by. The estoppel raised by the rendition of a valid judgment by a court having jurisdiction. The essence of estoppel by judgment is that there has been a judicial determination of a fact. Price v. Clement, 187 Okl. 304, 102 P.2d 595, 597. It rests upon principles forbidding one to relitigate matter in dispute between parties which has been determined by competent court, on ground that record of judgment imports absolute verity. Where subsequent proceeding is on same cause of action between same parties a former adjudication is conclusive. Kimpton v. Spellman, 351 Mo. 674, 173 S.W.2d 886. Ordinarily, "estoppel" of judgment does not extend to matters not expressly adjudicated. Sonken-Galamba Corporation v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 124 F.2d 952, 956; and a judgment or decree without prejudice does not work an "estoppel". In re McDermott, C.C.A.II., 115 F.2d 582, 584. See also Collateral estoppel doctrine; Issue preclusion; Judicial estoppel; Res (Res judicata).

Judgment execution. The formal or written evidence of the judgment which commands the officer to seize the goods and property of the judgment debtor to satisfy the judgment. Procedure on execution is governed by Fed. R.Civ P. 69. See Execution.

Judgment file. The docket in which the entry of a judgment is recorded and preserved as a permanent court record. Fed.R.Civ.P. 79; Fed.R.Crim.P. 55. See also Docket; Judgment docket.

Judgment in personam or inter partes /jajmânt in persónâm/”intr pártîz/. A judgment against a particular person, as distinguished from a judgment against a thing or a right or status. See also Judgment (Personal judgment).

Judgment in rem. An adjudication pronounced upon the status of some particular thing or subject matter, by a tribunial having competent authority. Booth v. Copley, 283 Ky. 23, 140 S.W.2d 662, 666. It is founded on proceeding instituted against or on some thing or subject matter whose status or condition is to be determined, Eureka Building & Loan Ass'n v. Shultz, 139 Kan. 435, 32 P.2d 477, 480; or one brought to enforce a right in the thing itself, Federal Land Bank of Omaha v. Jefferson, 229 Iowa 1054, 295 N.W. 855, 857. It operates directly upon the property. Guild v. Wallis, 150 Or. 69, 40 P.2d 737, 742. It is a solemn declaration of the status of some person or thing. Jones v. Teat, Tex.Civ.App., 57 S.W.2d 617, 620. It is binding upon all persons in so far as their interests in the property are concerned. See also Judgment quasi in rem.

Judgment in retransit /jajmânt in ratrâksât/. A judgment which is usually based upon and follows a settlement out of court, and like a judgment on the merits is a bar and estops plaintiff from again proceeding in another suit on same cause of action. Steele v. Beaty, 215 N.C. 680, 2 S.E.2d 854, 856, 857. See Retransit.

Judgment lien. An encumbrance that arises by law when a judgment for the recovery of money is docketed and that attaches to the debtor's real estate located in the county where the judgment is docketed. A lien binding the real estate of a judgment debtor, in favor of the holder of the judgment, and giving the latter a right to levy on the property for the satisfaction of his judgment to the exclusion of other adverse interests subsequent to the judgment. Right to subject property of judgment debtor to satisfaction of judgment. A charge on or attachment of property of one who owes a debt and is subject to a judgment thereon. See also Execution.

Judgment note. A promissory note (also called cognovit note) embodying an authorization to an attorney, or to a designated attorney, or to the holder, or the clerk of the court, to enter an appearance for the maker and confess a judgment against him for a sum therein named, upon default of payment of the note. Such are invalid in many states. See Judgment (Confession of judgment).

Judgment paper. In English practice, a sheet of paper containing an incipitur of the pleadings in an action at law, upon which final judgment is signed by the master.

Judgment proof. Descriptive of all persons against whom judgments for money recoveries are of no effect; e.g., persons who are insolvent, who do not have sufficient property within the jurisdiction of the court to satisfy the judgment, or who are protected by statutes which exempt wages and property from execution.

Judgment quasi in rem. A judgment based on the court's jurisdiction over the defendant's interest in prop-

Judices ordinarii /júdwdsíy órdán'ériy/. Lat. Plural of judex ordinarius (q.v.).

Judices pedanei /júdwdsíy pad'éniy/. Lat. Plural of judex pedaneus (q.v.).

Judices selecti /júdwdsíy só'léktay/. Lat. Plural of judex selectus (q.v.).

Judicia in curia regis non adnihilentur, séd stent in robore suo quoque per errorem aut attingutum adnnullentur /jádis(h)(i)yà in kýyúri yíryà són ñdná(y)h'slén'tar, séd stent in rabóri sý(y)úwów kwówskwíwí páír sórárm ot stíg(k)tàm ădmlén'tar/. Judgments in the king's court are not to be annihilated, but to remain in force until annulled by error or attain.

Judicia in deliberationibus crebro maturent, in accelerato processu nunquam /jádis(h)(i)yà in dalbârëshiyónwàbà sàriyówóó mëýtàrëskànt, in âksëlàrëtow prásé(y)u yánk'kwàm/. Judgments frequently become matured by deliberations, never by hurried process or precipitation.

Judicial. Belonging to the office of a judge; as judicial authority. Relating to or connected with the administration of justice; as a judicial officer. Having the character of judgment or formal legal procedure; as a judicial act. Proceeding from a court of justice; as a judicial writ, a judicial determination. Involving the exercise of judgment or discretion; as distinguished from ministerial.

Of or pertaining or appropriate to the administration of justice, or courts of justice, or a judge thereof, or the proceedings therein; as, judicial power, judicial proceedings. State v. Freitag, 53 Idaho 726, 27 P.2d 68.

As to judicial Action; Confession; Day; Discretion; Document; Estoppel; Evidence; Factor; Mortgage; Notice; Process; Record; Sale; Sequestration; Writ, see those titles. As to Quasi judicial, see that title.

Judicial act. An act which involves exercise of discretion or judgment. It is also defined as an act by court or magistrate touching rights of parties or property brought before it or him by voluntary appearance, or by prior action of ministerial officers. An act by member of judicial department in construing law or applying it to a particular state of facts. State ex rel. Tharel v. Board of Com'r's of Creek County, 188 Okl. 184, 107 P.2d 542, 549. An act of an administrative board if it goes to determination of some right, protection of which is peculiar office of courts. Belk's Dept. Store v. Guilford County, 222 N.C. 441, 23 S.E.2d 897, 902. An act which imposes burdens or confers privileges according to finding of some person or body whether a general rule is applicable or according to discretionary judgment as to propriety. An act which undertake to determine a question of right or obligation or of property as foundation on which it proceeds. The action of judge in trying a cause and rendering a decision. Application of Gleit, 178 Misc. 198, 33 N.Y.S.2d 629, 630, 631.

Rendition or pronouncement of a judgment is a judicial act and entry thereof a ministerial act. Peoples Electric Co-op. v. Broughton, 191 Okl. 229, 127 P.2d 850, 853. But if there are matters requiring exercise of court's discretion, entry of decree is judicial act. Stewart v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, 3 Cal.App.2d 702, 40 P.2d 529.

For purposes of judicial immunity, an act is "judicial" if it is a function normally performed by a judge, and parties dealt with judge in his judicial capacity. Martinez v. Winner, C.A.Colo., 771 F.2d 424, 434. See also Decision; Decree; Judgment; Order.

Judicial action. An adjudication upon rights of parties who in general appear or are brought before tribunal by notice or process, and upon whose claims some decision or judgment is rendered. Action of a court upon a cause, by hearing it, and determining what shall be adjudged or decreed between the parties, and with which is the right of the case.

Judicial activism. Judicial philosophy which motivates judges to depart from strict adherence to judicial precedent in favor or progressive and new social policies which are not always consistent with the restraint expected of appellate judges. It is commonly marked by decisions calling for social engineering and occasionally these decisions represent intrusions into legislative and executive matters.

Judicial acts. See Judiciary Acts.

Judicial admission. See Admission.

Judicial Article. Article III of the U.S.Const. which creates the U.S. Supreme Court; vests in Congress the right to create inferior courts; provides for life tenure for Federal Court judges; and specifies the powers and jurisdiction of the Federal Courts. See Federal Judicial Code; Judicial branch; Judicial power; Judicial system; Judiciary Acts.

Judicial authority. The power and authority appertaining to the office of a judge. Jurisdiction; the official right to hear and determine questions in controversy.

Judicial bonds. Generic term for bonds required by court for appeals, costs, attachment, injunction, etc.

Judicial branch. Branch of state and federal government whose function it is to interpret, construe, apply, and generally administer and enforce the laws. This branch, together with the executive and legislative branches forms our tripartite form of federal and state government. See U.S. Constitution, Article III. See Judicial Article; Judicial power; Judicial system; Judiciary Acts.

Judicial business. Such as involves the exercise of judicial power, or the application of the mind and authority of a court to some contested matter, or the conduct of judicial proceedings, as distinguished from such ministerial and other acts, incident to the progress of a cause, as may be performed by the parties, counsel, or officers of the court without application to the court or judge. See Judicial act; Judicial action.

Judicial cognizance. Judicial notice, or knowledge upon which a judge is bound to act without having it proved in evidence. See Judicial notice.

Judicial comity. Principle in accordance with which courts of one state or jurisdiction give effect to laws and judicial decisions of another state out of deference and respect, not obligation. See also Full faith and credit clause.

Judicial council. Provision is made in 28 U.S.C.A. § 332 for the Chief Judge of each Circuit Court of Appeal to call a council of all the judges of the circuit twice each year. The primary function of the councils is to assure expeditious and effective administration of the business of the courts.

Judicial cy pres /judishal sly prey/. Doctrine of "judicial cy pres" is a principle of construction based on a judicial finding of donor's intention as applied to new conditions. Rohlff v. German Old People's Home, 143 Neb. 636, 10 N.W.2d 686, 691. When only minor features of a trust for charity become impossible or impracticable of performance and it cannot properly be said that general scheme of testator has failed, doctrine of "judicial cy pres" operates to avoid failure of charity. Noel v. Olds, 78 U.S.App.D.C. 155, 138 F.2d 581, 586, 587. See also Cy-pres.

Judicial decision. Application by a court or tribunal exercising judicial authority of competent jurisdiction of the law to a state of facts proved, or admitted to be true, and a declaration of the consequences which follow. In re Knoller's Estate, 73 Ohio App. 383, 52 N.E.2d 667, 668. See also Decision; Decree; Judgment; Opinion; Order.

Judicial department. See also Judicial branch.

Judicial dictum /juwdishal diktam/. A dictum made by a court or judge in the course of a judicial decision or opinion. Com. v. Paine, 207 Pa. 45, 56 A. 317. Expression of opinion by court on question directly involved, argued by counsel and deliberately passed on by court, which is not necessary to decision in the case. Atlantic City Casino Ass'n v. Kimmelman, 204 N.J.Super. 652, 499 A.2d 1049, 1064. See Dictum.

Judicial discretion. Term is a broad and elastic one which is equated with sound judgment of court to be exercised according to rules of law. People v. Russel, 70 Cal.Rptr. 210, 215, 448 P.2d 794. The option the trial judge has in doing or not doing a thing that cannot be Judicial errors. Errors into which the court itself falls are "judicial errors." An error of this character occurs when the judgment rendered is erroneous in some particular, requiring it to be changed. See Error.

Judicial estoppel. Under doctrine of "judicial estoppel," a party is bound by his judicial declarations and may not contradict them in a subsequent proceeding involving same issues and parties. Sailes v. Jones, 17 Ariz.App. 593, 499 P.2d 721, 726. Under this doctrine, a party who by his pleadings, statements or contentions, under oath, has assumed a particular position in a judicial proceeding is estopped to assume an inconsistent position in a subsequent action. Yarber v. Pennell, Tex.Civ.App., 443 S.W.2d 382, 384. It is the doctrine of the conclusiveness of the judgments. State v. Ohio Oil Co., Tex.Civ.App., 173 S.W.2d 470, 478, 479. See also Collateral estoppel doctrine; Issue preclusion; Judgment, estoppel by; Res (Res judicata).

Judicial evidence. The means, sanctioned by law, of ascertaining in a judicial proceeding the truth respecting a question. See Evidence.

Judicial foreclosure. See Foreclosure sale.

Judicial function. The exercise of the judicial faculty or office. The capacity to act in the specific way which appertains to the judicial power, as one of the powers of government. The term is used to describe generally those modes of action which appertain to the judiciary as a department of organized government, and through and by means of which it accomplishes its purposes and exercises its peculiar powers. See also Judicial act; Judicial action; Judicial business.

Judicial immunity. The absolute protection from civil liability arising out of the discharge of judicial functions which every judge enjoys. Under doctrine of "judicial immunity," a judge is not subject to liability for any act committed within the exercise of his judicial function; the immunity is absolute in that it is applicable even if the actions of the judicial official are taken in bad faith. C. M. Clark Ins. Agency, Inc. v. Reed, D.C.Tex., 390 F.Supp. 1056, 1060. However, a person may be given injunctive relief and an award of attorneys' fees under the Civil Rights Act (42 U.S.C.A. §§ 1983, 1988). Pulliam v. Allen, 466 U.S. 522, 104 S.Ct. 1970, 80 L.Ed.2d 565.

Judicial inquiry. Such inquiry investigates, declares, and enforces liabilities as they stand on present or past facts and under laws supposed already to exist. Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co. v. Wilson & Co. of Oklahoma, C.C.A.OkI., 54 F.2d 596, 598.

Judicial knowledge. Knowledge of that which is so notorious that everybody, including judges, knows it, and hence need not be proved. Ex parte Ferguson, 112 Tex.Cr.R. 152, 15 S.W.2d 650, 652. See Judicial notice.

Judicial legislation. See Judge-made law.

Judicial lien. One obtained by judgment, levy, sequestration, or other legal or equitable process or proceeding. Within meaning of Bankruptcy Code lien avoidance section, is charge against or interest in property to secure payment of debt, obtained by judgment or other legal proceedings. In re Ashe, C.A.Pa., 669 F.2d 105, 108. Bankruptcy Code § 101.

Judicial notice. The act by which a court, in conducting a trial, or framing its decision, will, of its own motion or on request of a party, and without the production of evidence, recognize the existence and truth of certain facts, having a bearing on the controversy at bar, which, from their nature, are not properly the subject of testimony, or which are universally regarded as established by common notoriety, e.g., the laws of the state, international law, historical events, the constitution and course of nature, main geographical features, etc. The cognizance of certain facts which judges and jurors may properly take and act upon without proof, because they already know them. Such notice excuses party having burden of establishing fact from necessity of producing formal proof. Hutchinson v. State, Ind., 477 N.E.2d 850, 854. Fed.Evid.Rule 201.

Judicial oath. See Oath.

Judicial office. Offices which relate to the administration of justice; and which should be exercised by persons of sufficient skill and experience in the duties which appertain to them. A general term including courts of record and courts not of record.

Judicial officer. A judge or magistrate. The term, in the popular sense, applies generally to any officer of a court, but in the strictly legal sense applies only to an officer who determines causes between parties or ren-Judicial order. One which involves exercise of judicial discretion and affects final result of litigation. Happy Coal Co. v. Brashear, 263 Ky. 257, 92 S.W.2d 23, 27. See also Decision; Decree; Judgment; Opinion; Order.

Judicial power. The authority exercised by that department of government which is charged with declaration of what law is and its construction. The authority vested in courts and judges, as distinguished from the executive and legislative power. Courts have general powers to decide and pronounce a judgment and carry it into effect between two persons and parties who bring a case before it for decision; and also such specific powers as contempt powers, power to control admission and disbarment of attorneys, power to adopt rules of court, etc.

A power involving exercise of judgment and discretion in determination of questions of right in specific cases affecting interests of person or property, as distinguished from ministerial power involving no discretion. Inherent authority not only to hear and determine controversies between adverse parties, but to make binding orders or judgments. Fewel v. Fewel, 23 Cal.2d 431, 144 P.2d 592, 594. Power to decide and pronounce a judgment and carry it into effect between persons and parties who bring a case before court for decision. Power that adjudicates upon and protects the rights and interests of persons or property, and to that end declares, construes and applies the law.

Judicial proceeding. Any proceeding wherein judicial action is invoked and taken. Mannix v. Portland Telegraph, 144 Or. 172, 23 P.2d 138. Any proceeding to obtain such remedy as the law allows. Any step taken in a court of justice in the prosecution or defense of an action. A general term for proceedings relating to, practiced in, or proceeding from, a court of justice; or the course prescribed to be taken in various cases for the determination of a controversy or for legal redress or relief. A proceeding in a legally constituted court. A proceeding wherein there are parties, who have opportunity to be heard, and wherein the tribunal proceeds either to a determination of facts upon evidence or of law upon proved or conceded facts. See also Trial.

Judicial question. One proper for the determination of a court of justice, as distinguished from moot questions or from such questions as belong to the decision of the legislative or executive departments of government and with which the courts will not interfere, called "political" or "legislative" questions. See also Case (Cases and controversies).

Judicial remedy. Such as is administered by the courts of justice, or by judicial officers empowered for that purpose by the constitution and laws of the state or nation. See also Remedy.

Judicial reprieve. See Reprieve.

Judicial review. Power of courts to review decisions of another department or level of government. Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 177, 2 L.Ed. 60. Form of appeal from an administrative body to the courts for review of either the findings of fact, or of law, or of both. May also refer to appellate court review of decisions of trial court or of an intermediate appellate court. See also Appeal.

Judicial sale. Sale conducted under a judgment, order, or supervision of a court as in a sale under a petition for partition of real estate or an execution or a foreclosure sale. One which must be based upon an order or a decree of a court directing the sale. Petition of Achionne, 425 Pa. 23, 227 A.2d 816, 821, 823. A sale in a bankruptcy proceeding is a "judicial sale". In re Dennis Mitchell Industries, Inc., D.C.Pa., 280 F.Supp. 433, 436. See also Execution sale; Foreclosure sale; Sale; Sheriff's sale; Tax sale.

Judicial self-restraint. Self-imposed discipline by judges in deciding cases without permitting themselves to indulge their own personal views or ideas which may be inconsistent with existing decisional or statutory law.

Judicial separation. A separation of man and wife by decree of court, less complete than an absolute divorce. A "limited divorce" or a "divorce a mensa et thoro."

Judicial system. Entire network of courts in a particular jurisdiction. The federal judicial system consists of the Supreme Court, Courts of Appeals, District Courts, and specialized courts such as the Court of Claims, Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, etc. See 28 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.; Art. III, U.S. Const. See also Judicial Article; Judiciary (n).

Judicia posterioria sunt in lege fortiora /jadish(xi)rya pastiriyóra sint in liyjiy förshiyóra/. The later decisions are the stronger in law.

Judiciary, adj. /jadish(iy)oriy/. Pertaining or relating to the courts of justice, to the judicial department of government, or to the administration of justice.

Judiciary, n. That branch of government invested with the judicial power; the system of courts in a country; the body of judges; the bench. That branch of government which is intended to interpret, construe and apply the law. Board of Com'r's of Wyandotte County v. General Securities Corporation, 157 Kan. 64, 138 P.2d 479, 487. See also Judicial system.
Judiciary Acts. The Judiciary Article (Art. III) of the U.S. Constitution created a Supreme Court and “such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain or establish”. The First Congress established such inferior federal courts under the Judiciary Act of 1789. Subsequent major judiciary acts include the following: Act of 1875 granting federal question jurisdiction; Act of 1891 (Evarts Act) establishing circuit courts of appeals and fixing the outline of the contemporary scheme of federal appellate review; Act of 1911 enacting the Federal Judicial Code (which was recodified in 1948 and 1958); Act of 1925 (Judges' Bill), and 1988, further narrowing the scope of discretionary review by certiorari of the Supreme Court. See also Federal Judicial Code.

Judicia sunt tanquam juris dicta, et pro veritate accipuntur. A judgment given by one who is not the proper judge is of no force.

Judicium a non suo judice datum nullius est momenti. A judgment given by one who is not the proper judge is of no force.

Judicium Dei. In old English and European law, the judgment of God; otherwise called "divinum judicium," the "divine judgment." A term particularly applied to the ordeals by fire or hot iron and water, and also to the trials by the cross, the Eucharist, and the censured, and the duellum or trial by battle (q.v.), it being supposed that the interposition of Heaven was directly manifest, in these cases, in behalf of the innocent.

Judicium est quasi juris dictum. A judgment, as it were, the sayings of the law, and are received as truth.

Judicium non debet esse illusorium; suum effectum habere debet. A judgment ought not to be illusory; it ought to have its proper effect.

Judicium redditur in invitum. A judgment given against one, whether he will or not.

Jude. In French law, a judge.

Jura summi imperii /jūra səməi ampi'rei/. Rights of supreme dominion; rights of sovereignty.

Jurat /jə'rət/. Certificate of officer or person before whom writing was sworn to. In common use term is employed to designate certificate of competent administering officer that writing was sworn to by person who signed it. The clause written at the foot of an affidavit, stating when, where, and before whom such affidavit was sworn. U. S. v. McDermott, 140 U.S. 151, 11 S.Ct. 746, 35 L.Ed. 391; U. S. v. Julian, 162 U.S. 324, 16 S.Ct. 801, 40 L.Ed. 984. See also Affidavit; Verification.

Jurata /jə'riətsə/. In old English law, a jury of twelve men sworn. Especially, a jury of the common law, as distinguished from the assisa.

The jury clause in a nisi prius record, so called from the emphatic words of the old forms: "Jurata ponitur in respectum," the jury is put in respite.

See also Jurat.

Juration /jə'rərəʃən/. The act of swearing; the administration of an oath.

Jurato creditur in judicio /jə'rərətədəw kəˈrɛdəstər in jədəˈdəkəu/. He who makes oath is to be believed in judgment.

Jurator /jə'rərətər/. A juror; a compurgator (q.v.).

Juratores debent esse vicini, sufficientes, et minus suspecti /jə'rətərəz dəˈbɛnt esˈviˌsni tiˌsənθəˈtəz ət miˈnəs spəˈsɛŋktə/. Jurors ought to be neighbors of sufficient estate, and free from suspicion.

Juratores sunt judices facti /jə'rətərəz sōnt jəˈdəˌkəz fəkˈti/. Juries are the judges of fact.

Jurats /jəˈræts/. In English law, officers in some corporations in Kent and Sussex in the nature of aldermen.

Jure divino /jʊərə dəˈvæniə/. By divine right.

Jure ecclesiæ /jʊərə əkˈleʃiəi/. In right of the church.

Jure emphyteutico /jʊərə əˈmfəθiˈtɵkəʊ/. By the right of representation; in the right of another. See also Emphyteusis. See Emphyteusis. See Emphyteusis.

Jure gentium /jʊərə ˈdʒɛntʃıəm/. By the civil law.

Jure emphyteutico /jʊərə əˈmfəθiˈtɵkəʊ/. By the right of representation; in the right of another.

Jure regia /jʊərə rɛjɪə/. In right of a wife.
Juridical /jəˈrɪdɪkəl/. Relating to administration of justice, or office of a judge.

Regular; done in conformity to the laws of the country and the practice which is there observed.

Juridical day. Day on which court is in session. Black v. National Bank of Kentucky, 226 Ky. 152, 10 S.W.2d 629, 630.

Juridicus /ˈjʊridɪkəs/. Lat. Relating to the courts or to the administration of justice; juridical; lawful.

Juri non est consonum quod aliquis accessorius in curia regis convincatur antequam aliquis de facto fuerit attinctus /ˈjʊrəj nɒn ɛst kɒnsənəm kwɔd əlɪkəs əksəˈrɪsjuːs ɪn kjuːriə rɛɡɪs kənvɪnˈsɪˌtər æntɛktɪm əlɪkəs də fæktə ˈfjuərɪt ətɪkəntəs/. It is not consonant to justice that any accessory should be convicted in the king's court before any one has been attainted of the fact.

Juris /ˈdʒʊrɪs/. Lat. Of right; of law.

Jurisconsultus /ˈdʒʊrɪskɔnsəˈlɪtəs/. Lat. In Roman law, an expert in juridical science; a person thoroughly versed in the laws, who was habitually resorted to, for information and advice, both by private persons as his clients, and also by the magistrates, advocates, and others employed in administering justice. Abbreviated i-c.tus.

Jurisdictio est potestas de publico introducta, cum necessitate juris dicendi /ˈdʒʊrɪsdɪkʃ(ə)ntiˌə ɪnˈtrədɔktə, kəm nɛsɨˈsidɛtɪti ˈdʒʊrɪs dɪˈsɛndi/. Jurisdiction is a power introduced for the public good, on account of the necessity of dispensing justice.

Jurisdiction. A term of comprehensive import embracing every kind of judicial action. Federal Land Bank of Louisville, Ky. v. Crombie, 258 Ky. 383, 80 S.W.2d 39, 40. It is the power of the court to decide a matter in controversy and presupposes the existence of a duly constituted court with control over the subject matter and the parties. Pinner v. Pinner, 33 N.C.App. 204, 234 S.E.2d 633. Jurisdiction defines the powers of courts to inquire into facts, apply the law, make decisions, and declare judgment. Police Com'r of Boston v. Municipal Court of Dorchester Dist., 374 Mass. 640, 374 N.E.2d 272, 285. The legal right by which judges exercise their authority. Max Ams, Inc. v. Barker, 293 Ky. 698, 170 S.W.2d 45, 48. It exists when court has cognizance of class of cases involved, proper parties are present, and point to be decided is within powers of court. United Cemeteries Co. v. Strother, 342 Mo. 1155, 119 S.W.2d 762, 765. Power and authority of a court to hear and determine a judicial proceeding; and power to render particular judgment in question. In re De Camillis' Estate, 66 Misc.2d 882, 322 N.Y.S.2d 551, 556. The right and power of a court to adjudicate concerning the subject matter in a given case. Biddinger v. Fletcher, 224 Ga. 501, 162 S.E.2d 414, 416. The term may have different meanings in different contexts. Martin v. Luther, C.A.III., 689 F.2d 109, 114.

Areas of authority; the geographic area in which a court has power or types of cases it has power to hear.

Scope and extent of jurisdiction of federal courts is governed by 28 U.S.C.A. § 1251 et seq.

For Ancillary; Appellate; Concurrent; Contentious; Continuing; Coordinate; Criminal; Equity; Exclusive; Foreign; General; Legislative; Limited or special jurisdiction; Military; Pendent jurisdiction; Plenary; Primary; Probate; Special; Subject-matter; Summary; Territorial; and Voluntary jurisdiction, see those titles. See also Excess of jurisdiction; Jurisdiction in personam; Jurisdiction in rem; Jurisdiction of the subject matter; Jurisdiction quasi in rem; Lack of jurisdiction. For original jurisdiction, see Original. For diversity jurisdiction, see Diversity of citizenship. For federal question jurisdiction, see Federal question jurisdiction. For jurisdiction over nonresidents or foreign corporations, see Long arm statutes; Minimum contacts.

Jurisdictional. Pertaining or relating to jurisdiction; conferring jurisdiction; showing or disclosing jurisdiction; defining or limiting jurisdiction; essential to jurisdiction.

Jurisdictional amount. Required amount involved in the particular case to give court jurisdiction, Shabotzky v. Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co., D.C.N.Y., 21 F.Supp. 166, 167; sum of all claims that are properly joined, Gray v. Blight, C.A.Colo., 112 F.2d 696, 700; value of the object sought to be attained in the litigation, Ronzio v. Denver & R.G.W.R. Co., C.C.A.U tah, 116 F.2d 604, 606. The jurisdiction of the trial court is commonly limited by the amount in controversy in the particular action; e.g. the requisite jurisdictional amount for diversity of citizenship jurisdiction in the federal district courts is set forth in 28 U.S.C.A. § 1332.

Jurisdictional dispute. The competing claims made to an employer by different unions that each of their members are entitled to perform certain specific work. There must be evidence of a threat of coercive action for the N.L.R.B. to conduct a hearing and make an assignment of the work.

Jurisdictional facts. Those matters of fact which must exist before the court can properly take jurisdiction of the particular case, as, that the defendant has been properly served with process, that the amount in controversy exceeds a certain sum, that the parties are citizens of different states, etc. Noble v. Union River Logging Railroad Co., 147 U.S. 165, 13 S.Ct. 271, 37 L.Ed. 123. See Jurisdictional statement; Jurisdiction clause.

Jurisdictional limits. The constitutional or statutory parameters within which judicial power may be exercised such as limits based on the monetary value of the action. See Jurisdictional amount.

Jurisdictional plea. Form of answer addressed to the issue of whether the court has the power over the defendant or over the subject matter of the litigation; e.g. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(1), (2).

Jurisdictional statement. In some states, a statement required to set forth the amount claimed to be in controversy so as to permit a court of general jurisdiction to hear the case without remanding it to an inferior court. See also Jurisdiction clause.

Jurisdiction clause. A pleading which sets forth a claim for relief, whether an original claim, counterclaim, crossclaim, or third party claim, shall contain "a short and plain statement of the grounds upon which the court's jurisdiction depends, unless the court already has jurisdiction and the claim needs no new grounds to support it." Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(a).

In equity practice, that part of a bill which is intended to give jurisdiction of the suit to the court, by a general averment that the acts complained of are contrary to equity, and tend to the injury of the complainant, and that he has no remedy, or not a complete remedy, without the assistance of a court of equity, is called the "jurisdiction clause."

See also Jurisdictional statement.

Jurisdiction in personam. Power which a court has over the defendant's person and which is required before a court can enter a personal or in personam judgment. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714, 24 L.Ed. 565. It may be acquired by an act of the defendant within a jurisdiction under a law by which the defendant impliedly consents to the personal jurisdiction of the court, e.g. operation of a motor vehicle on the highways of state confers jurisdiction of operator and owner on courts of state. Hess v. Pawloski, 274 U.S. 352, 47 S.Ct. 632, 71 L.Ed. 1091. A judgment in personam brings about a merger of the original cause of action into the judgment and there­after the action is upon the judgment and not on the original cause of action. See also in personam; Jurisdiction over person.

Jurisdiction in rem. Power which a court over a thing so that its judgment is valid as against the rights of every person in the thing, e.g. a judgment or decree of registra­tion of title to land. See also in rem; Jurisdiction quasi in rem.

Jurisdiction of the person. See Jurisdiction in person­am.

Jurisdiction of the subject matter. Power of a particular court to hear the type of case that is then before it. Alfaro v. Meagher, 27 Ill.App.3d 292, 326 N.E.2d 545, 548. Term refers to jurisdiction of court over class of cases to which particular case belongs, Ferree v. Ferree, 285 Ky. 825, 149 S.W.2d 719, 721; jurisdiction over the nature of the cause of action and relief sought, Mid-City Bank & Trust Co. v. Myers, 343 Pa. 465, 23 A.2d 420, 423; or the amount for which a court of limited jurisdiction is authorized to enter judgment.

A court is without authority to adjudicate a matter over which it has no jurisdiction even though the court possesses jurisdiction over the parties to the litigation; e.g. a court of limited criminal jurisdiction has no power to try a murder indictment and its judgment therein would be void and of no effect because it lacks subject matter jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction over person. The legal power of the court to render a personal judgment against a party to an action or a proceeding. Imperial v. Hardy, La., 302 So.2d 5, 7. See Jurisdiction in personam.

Jurisdiction quasi in rem. The power of a court over the defendant's interest in property, real or personal, within the geographical limits of the court. The court's judgment or decree binds only the defendant's interest and not the whole world as in the case of jurisdiction in rem. The original cause of action is not merged in the judgment as in the case of a judgment predicated on personal jurisdiction.

Juris et de jure /jûrîs e t dîy jûriy/>. Of law and of right.

A presumption juris et de jure, or an irrebuttable presumption, is one which the law will not suffer to be rebutted by any counter-evidence, but establishes as conclusive; while a presumption juris tantum is one which holds good in the absence of evidence to the contrary, but may be rebutted.

Juris et seisin conjunctio /jûrîs èt sîyzîniy kônjïnkJyow/ The union of seisin or possession and the right of possession, forming a complete title. 2 Bl. Comm. 199, 311.

Juris ignorantia est cum nostrum ignoramus /jûrîs ignaŋrantsh(y)i(y)a èst këm jâs nôstrâm ignarémysâs/. It is ignorance of the law when we do not know our own rights.

Jurisicepsor /jûrîsantséptar/. Lat. A student of the civil law.

Jurisperitus /jûrîsepârâytas/. Lat. Skilled or learned in the law.

Juris positivi /jûrîs pôstâtywây/. Of positive law; a regulation or requirement of positive law, as distin­guished from natural or divine law.

Juris præcepta sunt hæc: honeste vivere; alterum non ledere; suum cuique tribuere /jûrîs præsêpta sînt hîyk: (h)onêstîy vívîryîy; oltipâm nôn líydârîyî; st(y)ûwam k(yw)âykwîy trîbyûwâryî/y/. These are the precepts of the law: To live honorably; to hurt nobody; to render to every one his due.

Juris privati /jûrîs prôvîtyây/. Of private right; sub­jects of private property.

Jurisprudence. The philosophy of law, or the science which treats of the principles of positive law and legal relations.

In the proper sense of the word, "jurisprudence" is the science of law, namely, that science which has for its function to ascertain the principles on which legal rules are based, so as not only to classify those rules in their proper order, and show the relation in which they stand to one another, but also to settle the manner in which new or doubtful cases should be brought under the appropriate rules. Jurisprudence is more a formal than a material science. It has no direct concern with questions of moral or political policy, for they fall under the province of ethics and legislation; but, when a new or doubtful case arises to which two different rules seem, when taken literally, to be equally applicable, it may be, and often is, the function of jurisprudence to consider the ultimate effect which would be produced if each rule were applied to an indefinite number of similar cases, and to choose that rule which, when so applied, will produce the greatest advantage to the community.

For Comparative jurisprudence and Medical jurisprudence, see those titles. For equity jurisprudence, see Equity.

Jurisprudentia /jʊərɪspaʊrdɛnθiə/. Lat. In the civil and common law, jurisprudence, or legal science.

Jurisprudentia est divinarum atque humanarum rerum notitia, justi atque injusti scientia /jʊərɪpspruwdɛnθiə ɛst dɪvɪnərəm ətkwɪwɪw ʰɪwʊwmənɛrəm rɪrəm nəʊtwɪʃɪə, jəstæɪ təktwɪwɪn ɪnʃæstæɪ səwɛnθiə/. Jurisprudence is the knowledge of things divine and human, the science of what is right and what is wrong.

Jurisprudentia legis communis anglic est scientia socialis et copiosa /jʊərɪsppruwdɛnθiə lɛgɪs kəmʊnɪs æŋɡlɪk ɛst səwɛnθiə səɫəsɪəti ɛt kəpʊsɪəs/. The jurisprudence of the common law of England is a science social and comprehensive.

Juris publici /jʊərɪspbʌˈlɑːzɪ/. Of common right; of common or public use; such things as, at least in their own use, are common to all the king's subjects; as common highways, common bridges, common rivers, and common ports.

Jurist. One who is versed or skilled in law; answering to the Latin "jurisperitus" (q.v.). A judge; a legal scholar.

The term is commonly applied to those who have distinguished themselves by their writings on legal subjects or to judges.

Juristic /jəristɪk/. Pertaining or belonging to, or characteristic of, jurisprudence, or a jurist, or the legal profession.

Juristic act. One designed to have a legal effect, and capable thereof. An act of a private individual directed to the origin, termination, or alteration of a right.

Juris doctor. See J.D.

Juris utrum /jʊərɪs ˈjuːtrəm/. In English law, an abolished writ which lay for the parson of a church whose predecessor had alienated the lands and tenements thereof.

Juror. Member of jury. In addition to regular jurors, term includes special and alternate jurors.

See also Inquest; Special grand jury.

Hung jury. A jury which is unable to agree on a verdict after a suitable period of deliberation; a deadlocked jury. The result is a mistrial of the case. See Dynamite instruction.

Impanelling of jury. See Impanel; Jury challenge.

Impartial jury. See Impartial jury.

Inquest jury. A jury of inquest is a body of persons summoned from the citizens of a particular district before the sheriff, coroner, or other ministerial officers, to inquire of particular facts. See Inquest.

Jury instructions. See Jury instructions.

Jury size. While at common law, and traditionally, a jury consisted of 12 members, there is no constitutional infirmity or deficiency in a jury of less than twelve; and it is common for state and Federal district court juries to consist of six persons for civil cases, instead of twelve (e.g. Dist. of Mass.). Colgrove v. Battin, 413 U.S. 149, 93 S.Ct. 2448, 37 L.Ed.2d 522. Also, in federal district courts, and many state courts, the parties may stipulate that the jury shall consist of any number less than twelve. Fed.R.Civil P. 48; Fed.R.Crim.P. 23. For size of federal grand jury, see Federal grand jury, above.

Petit jury. The ordinary jury for the trial of a civil or criminal action; so called to distinguish it from the grand jury.

Polling of jury. See Polling the jury.

Sequestration of jury. In some cases of great notoriety, the trial judge will order the jury to be isolated from the public (e.g. confined to area of hotel while trial not in session) for the duration of the trial to prevent tampering and exposure to trial publicity. In these cases the jurors are always in the custody of the court.

Special jury. A jury ordered by the court, on the motion of either party, in cases of unusual importance or intricacy. Called, from the manner in which it is constituted, a "struck jury." See Striking a jury.

At common law, a jury composed of persons above the rank of ordinary freeholders; usually summoned to try questions of greater importance than those usually submitted to common juries.

Traverse jury. See Traverse.

Trial jury. The jury participating in the trial of a given case; or a jury summoned and impaneled for the trial of a case, and in this sense a petit jury as distinguished from a grand jury. A body of persons returned from the citizens of a particular district before a court or officer of competent jurisdiction, and sworn to try and determine, by verdict, a question of fact.

Jury-box. The place in court (strictly an inclosed place) where the jury sits during the trial of a cause.

Jury challenge. Challenge for cause. In most jurisdictions, each party to the litigation has right to a certain number of peremptory challenges to jurors at the time of impanelling. In addition, a party has the right to challenge a juror by furnishing a satisfactory reason why such juror should not be seated such as bias or knowledge of the case. Unlike the peremptory challenge for which no reason need be given, the party challenging a juror for cause must satisfy the trial judge that his reasons are compelling. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 24. See also Challenge.

Challenge to array. A challenge to the entire jury venire based on such grounds as systematic exclusion of women, blacks, young persons, etc. in the selection process.

Peremptory challenge. A challenge to a juror at the time of impanelling for which no reason need be advanced; in most jurisdictions each party is entitled to a certain number of such challenges in addition to challenges for cause. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 24.

Jury commissioner. An officer charged with the duty of selecting the names to be put into the jury wheel, or of drawing the panel of jurors for a particular term of court. Local official responsible for collecting lists of qualified prospective jurors for submission to court.

Jury instructions. A direction given by the judge to the jury concerning the law of the case; a statement made by the judge to the jury informing them of the law applicable to the case in general or some aspect of it; an exposition or the rules or principles of law applicable to the case or some branch or phase of it, which the jury are bound to accept and apply. Attorneys for both sides normally furnish judge with suggested instructions. Fed.R.Civil P. 51; Fed.R.Crim.P. 30. Many states and federal courts have model or pattern jury instructions which are required to be used, or substantially followed, by the trial judge.

See also Allen charge; Argumentative instruction; Cautionary instruction; Charge (Charge to jury); Converse instruction; Dynamite instruction; Formula instruction; Golden Rule argument. For request for instructions, see Request.

Additional instructions. If during the course of deliberations the jury is unclear about a particular point of law or aspect of the evidence it may request the court for additional or supplementary instructions.

Mandatory instruction. A mandatory instruction unequivocally charges the jury that if jurors find from preponderance of evidence that certain set of facts exists, jurors must find for one party and against the other. Skaggs v. Davis, 424 N.E.2d 137, 141. Mandatory instructions are those which attempt to set up a factual situation and direct jury to a certain result and they are to be distinguished from instructions which merely state propositions of law without incorporating a factual situation. LaNoux v. Hagar, Ind.App., 308 N.E.2d 873, 878.

Peremptory instruction. An instruction given by a court to a jury which the latter must obey implicitly; as an instruction to return a verdict for the defendant, or for the plaintiff, as the case may be. See also Mandatory instruction, above.

Jury-list. A paper containing the names of jurors impaneled to try a cause, or the names of all the jurors summoned to attend court. See also Jury panel.

Jury of matrons. See Matrons, jury of.

Jury panel. The group of prospective jurors who are summoned to appear on a stated day and from which a grand jury or petit jury is chosen. See Impanel; Jury-list.

Jury polling. See Polling the jury.

Jury process. The process by which a jury is summoned in a cause, and by which their attendance is enforced. See also Impanel.

Jury questions. In general, term refers to questions of fact which are peculiarly within the province of the jury as contrasted with questions of law which must be decided by the judge. Term may also refer to special questions or interrogatories which the court may direct to the jury for a special verdict. Fed.R.Civ.P. 49. See also Voir dire.

Jury summation. See Closing argument.

Jury trial. Trial of matter or cause before jury as opposed to trial before judge. Such right is guaranteed with respect to criminal cases by Art. III, Sec. 2, cl. 3 of U.S.Const., and with respect to "suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars" by the Seventh Amendment. Such right is also preserved by rule of court (e.g. Fed.R.Civ.P. 38) and by the Fifth Amendment which provides inter alia for indictment by grand jury, and the Sixth Amendment which contains further specifications respecting jury trial in criminal cases. In addition, state constitutions provide for right to jury trial and the Supreme Court has held that the Fourteenth Amendment guarantees a right of jury trial in all state criminal cases which—were they to be tried in federal court—would come within the Sixth Amendment's guarantee. Duncan v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 145, 88 S.Ct. 1444, 20 L.Ed.2d 491.

The right to "jury trial" of controverted issues implies a trial by an impartial and qualified jury. Alexander v. R. D. Crier & Sons Co., 181 Md. 415, 30 A.2d 757, 759.

See also Trial.

Jury wheel. Physical device or electronic system for the storage and random selection of the names or identifying numbers of prospective jurors. A machine containing the names of persons qualified to serve as grand and petit jurors, from which, in an order determined by the hazard of its revolutions, are drawn a sufficient number of such names to make up the panels for a given term of court.

Jurywoman. Member of a jury of matrons.

Jus /ˈʃəs/. Lat. In Roman law, right; justice; law; the whole body of law; also a right. The term is used in two meanings:

1. "Jus" means "law," considered in the abstract; that is, as distinguished from any specific enactment, the science or department of learning, or quasi personified factor in human history or conduct or social development, which we call, in a general sense, "the law." Or it means the law taken as a system, an aggregate, a whole; "the sum total of a number of individual laws taken together." Or it may designate some one particular system or body of particular laws; as in the phrases "jus civile," "jus gentium," "jus praetorium."

2. In a second sense, "jus" signifies "a right;" that is, a power, privilege, faculty, or demand inherent in one person and incident upon another; or a capacity residing in one person of controlling, with the assent and assistance of the state, the actions of another. This is its meaning in the expressions "jus in rem," "jus accrescendi," "jus possessionis."

It is thus seen to possess the same ambiguity as the words "droit," "recht," and "right" (q.v.).

Within the meaning of the maxim that "ignorantia juris non excusat" (ignorance of the law is no excuse), the word "jus" is used to denote the general law or ordinary law of the land, and not a private right.

Some further meanings of the word are:

- An action, or, rather, those proceedings in the Roman action which were conducted before the praetor.
- Power or authority. Sui juris, in one's own power; independent. Alieni juris, under another's power.
- The profession (ars) or practice of the law. Jus ponitur pro ipsa arte.

A court or judicial tribunal (locus in quo redditur jus).

Jus abstinendi /jʊs əˈbstɪndəndi/. The right of renunciation; the right of an heir, under the Roman law, to renounce or decline the inheritance, as, for example, where his acceptance, in consequence of the necessity of paying the debts, would make it a burden to him.

Jus abutendi /jʊs əˈbystorendi/. The right to abuse. By this phrase is understood the right to do exactly as one likes with property, or having full dominion over property.

Jus accrescendi /jʊs əˈkɾɛsəndi/. The right of survivorship. In re Brogan's Estate, 165 Misc. 111, 300 N.Y.S. 447, 455. The right of the survivor or survivors of two or more joint tenants to the tenancy or estate, upon the death of one or more of the joint tenants. In re Capria's Estate, 89 Misc. 101, 151 N.Y.S. 385, 386.

Jus accrescendi inter mercatores, pro beneficio commercii, locum non habet /jʊs əˈkɾɛsəndi ɪntər mɜrˈkaʊtəri, prɔb ənˈfɪʃi oʊˈkɛmpərəsɨ. The right of a merchant to engage in commerce, not having any place.

Jus accrescendi
Jus actus /jös åktas/. In Roman law, a rural servitude giving to a person a passage for carriages, or for cattle.

Jus ad rem /jös åd rem/. A term of the civil law, meaning "a right to a thing"; that is, a right exercisable by one person over a particular article of property in virtue of a contract or obligation incurred by another person in respect to it, and which is enforceable only against or through such other person. It is thus distinguished from jus in re, which is a complete and absolute dominion over a thing available against all persons. Compare also jus dominii.

In canon law, a right to a thing. An inchoate and imperfect right, such as is gained by nomination and institution; as distinguished from jus in re or complete and full right, such as is acquired by corporal possession.

2 Bl.Comm. 312.

Jus Elianum /jös iyiyléynam/. A body of laws drawn up by Sextus Ælius, and consisting of three parts, wherein were explained, respectively: (1) The laws of the Twelve Tables; (2) the interpretation of and decisions upon such laws; and (3) the forms of procedure. In date, it was subsequent to the jus Flavianum (q.v.).

Jus aquum /jös iykwam/. A term used by the Romans to express the adaptation of the law to the circumstances of the individual case as opposed to jus strictum (q.v.).

Jus asncie /jös asniyas(h)iyy/. The right of primogeniture (q.v.).

Jus albinatus /jös ålbanéytas/. The droit d'au baine (q.v.). See Albinatus jus.

Jus angarie /jös angériyiy/. See Angaria; Angary, right of.
surface water, through the house or over the ground of one's neighbor.

Jus commune /jás kamyúnniy/. In the Civil law, common right; the common and natural rule of right, as opposed to jus singulare (q.v.).

In English law, the common law, answering to the Saxon "folcright."

Jus constitui oportet in his quae ut plurimum accidunt non quae ex inopinato /jás kansatütyuway apɔrtɔt in his kwiy at plûrmam ɛksadɔnt nɔn kwiy èks inôpànyɛtɔw/. Laws ought to be made with a view to those cases which happen most frequently, and not to those which are of rare or accidental occurrence.

Jus corone /jás korüñni/. In English law, the right of the crown, or to the crown; the right of succession to the throne.

Jus cudende monetre /jás kadêndiy maniyyi/. In old English law, the right of coinage money.

Jus curialitatis /jás kyüriyalyatêytɔs/. In English law, the right of curtesy.

Jus dare /jás dæri/. To give or to make the law; the function and prerogative of the legislative department.

Jus deliberandi /jás dalibarəndiy/. In the civil law the right of deliberating. A term granted by the proper officer at the request of him who is called to the inheritance (the heir), within which he has the right to investigate its condition and to consider whether he will accept or reject it.

Jus descendit, et non terra /jás desỳndat, ɛt nɔn tèhra/. A right descends, not the land.

Jus devolutum /jás dəval(ɔ)yùwtɔm/. The right of the church of presenting a minister to a vacant parish, in case the patron shall neglect to exercise his right within the time limited by law.

Jus dicere /jás dáyšari/. To declare the law; to say what the law is. The province of a court or judge.

Jus dicere, et non jus dare /jás dáyšari, ɛt nɔn jás dæri/. To declare the law, not to make it.

Jus disponendi /jás dispənəndiy/. The right of disposing. An expression used either generally to signify the right of alienation, as when we speak of depriving a married woman of the jus disponendi over her separate estate, or specially in the law relating to sales of goods, where it is often a question whether the vendor of goods has the intention of reserving to himself the jus disponendi; i.e., of preventing the ownership from passing to the purchaser, notwithstanding that he (the vendor) has parted with the possession of the goods.

Jus distrahenendi /jás distrahəndiy/. The right of sale of goods pledged in case of non-payment. See Distress; Pledge.

Jus dividendi /jás dividəndiy/. The right of disposing of realty by will.
JUS GENTIUM

apply; that is, in cases between foreigners or between a Roman citizen and a foreigner. The principle upon which they proceeded was that any rule of law which was common to all the nations they knew of must be intrinsically consonant to right reason, and therefore fundamentally valid and just. From this it was an easy transition to the converse principle, viz., that any rule which instinctively commended itself to their sense of justice and reason must be a part of the jus gentium. And so the latter term came eventually to be about synonymous with "equity" (as the Romans understood it), or the system of prætorian law.

Jurists frequently employed the term "jus gentium privatum" to denote private international law, or that subject which is otherwise styled the "conflict of laws"; and "jus gentium publicum" for public international law, or the system of rules governing the intercourse of nations with each other as persons.

Jus gladii /jás gládiyay/. The right of the sword; the executory power of the law; the right, power, or prerogative of punishing for crime. 4 Bl.Comm. 177.

Jus habendi /jás habénday/. The right to have a thing. The right to be put in actual possession of property.

Jus habendi et retinendi /jás habénday ét rétnénday/. A right to have and to retain the profits, tithes, and offerings, etc., of a rectory or parsonage.

Jus hæreditatis /jás hárèstéytás/. The right of inheritance.

Jus hauringi /jás hohriyénday/. In the civil and old English law, the right of drawing water.

Jus honorarium /jás (h)ónaréiyam/. In the body of Roman law, which was made up of edicts of the supreme magistrates, particularly the prætors.

Jus honorum /jás (h)ónrórm/. In Roman law, the right of holding offices. See Jus suffragi.

Jus imaginis /jás amájénas/. In Roman law, the right to use or display pictures or statues of ancestors; somewhat analogous to the right, in English law, to bear a coat of arms.

Jus immunitatis /jás amyúwnstéytás/. In the civil law, the law of immunity or exemption from the burden of public office.

Jus incognitum /jás inkógnastam/. An unknown law. This term is applied by the civilians to obsolete laws.

Jus individuum /jás indavídiyuyam/. An individual or indivisible right; a right incapable of division.

Jus in personam /jás in párswónam/. A right against a person; a right which gives its possessor a power to oblige another person to give or procure, to do or not to do, something.

Jus in re /jás in ríy/. A right in a thing. Denver Joint Stock Land Bank of Denver v. Dixon, 57 Wyo. 523, 122 P.2d 842, 847. A right existing in a person with respect to an article or subject of property, inherent in his relation to it, implying complete ownership with possession, and available against all the world.

See Jus ad rem.

Jus in re aliena /jás in ríy élyiýíyyna/. An easement on servitude, or right in, or arising out of, the property of another.

Jus in re inherit ossibus ususfructuarii /jás in ríy inhírot ősbašs yúwzhuwfrékteríyyay/. A right in the thing cleaves to the person of the ususfructuary.

Jus in re propria /jás in ríy prówpriya/. The right of enjoyment which is incident to full ownership or property, and is often used to denote the full ownership or property itself. It is distinguished from jus in re aliena, which is a mere easement or right in or over the property of another.

Jus italicum /jás stálakam/. A term of the Roman law descriptive of the aggregate of rights, privileges, and franchises possessed by the cities and inhabitants of Italy, outside of the city of Rome, and afterwards extended to some of the colonies and provinces of the empire, consisting principally in the right to have a free constitution, to be exempt from the land tax, and to have the title to the land regarded as Quirittarian property.

Jus itineris /jás aytniýas/. In Roman law, a rural servitude giving to a person the right to pass over an adjoining field, on foot or horseback.

Jus jurandi forma verbis differt, re convenit; hunc enim sensum habere debet: ut deus invocetur /jás jairánday fórmay várbas difart, ríy kannviýnat; háyk iyam sénsm habiríy débáy: át diyás invasíytoyáy/. The form of taking an oath differs in language, agrees in meaning; for it ought to have this sense; that the deity is invoked.

*Jus jurandi inter alios factum nec necore neo prodesse debet: jás jairándam intár élyiýows fáktaam nék máriýir nék prodesíy débáy/. An oath made between others ought neither to hurt nor profit.

Jus Latii /jás lèýshiyay/. In Roman law, the right of Latium or of the Latins.

The principal privilege of the Latins seems to have been the use of their own laws, and their not being subject to the edicts of the prætor, and that they had occasional access to the freedom of Rome, and a participation in her sacred rites.

Jus Latium /jás lèýsh(i)ýam/. In Roman law, a rule of law applicable to magistrates in Latium. It was either majus Latium or minus Latium—the majus Latium raising to the dignity of Roman citizen not only the magistrate himself, but also his wife and children; the minus Latium raising to that dignity only the magistrate himself.

Jus legitimum /jás lájítíyam/. A legal right. In the civil law, a right which was enforceable in the ordinary course of law.
Jus non habenti tute non paretur. In Roman law, the privilege conferred upon a woman who had three or four children.

Jus mariti. The right of a husband; especially the right which a husband acquires to his wife's movable estate by virtue of the marriage.

Jus merum. In old English law, mere or bare right; the mere right of property in lands, without either possession or even the right of possession.

Jus moribus constitutum. See Jus ex non scripto.

Jus naturae. The law of nature. See Jus naturale.

Jus naturale. The natural law, or law of nature; law, or legal principles, supposed to be discoverable by the light of nature or abstract reasoning, or to be taught by nature to all nations and men alike; or law supposed to govern men and peoples in a state of nature, i.e., in advance of organized governments or enacted laws. See Natural law.

This concept originated with the philosophical jurists of Rome, and was gradually extended until the phrase came to denote a supposed basis or substratum common to all systems of positive law, and hence to be found, in greater or less purity, in the laws of all nations. And, conversely, they held that if any rule or principle of law was observed in common by all peoples with whose systems they were acquainted, it must be a part of the jus naturale, or derived from it. Thus the phrases "jus naturale" and "jus gentium" came to be used interchangeably.

Jus naturale est quod apud homines eandem habet potentiam. Natural right is that which has the same force among all mankind.

Jus navigandi. The right of navigating or navigation; the right of commerce by ships or by sea.

Jus necis. In Roman law, the right of death, or of putting to death. A right which a father anciently had over his children. See Jus vitae necisque.

Jus non habenti tute non paretur. One who has no right cannot be safely obeyed.

Jus non patitur ut idem bis solvatur. Law does not suffer that the same thing be twice paid.

Jus non sacrum. In Roman law, that portion of the jus publicum which regulated the duties of magistrates.

Non-sacred law; that which dealt with the duties of civil magistrates, the preservation of public order, and the rights and duties of persons in their relation to the state. It was analogous to that which would now be called the police power.
remedy by legal action, but only by entreaty or request.

Jus privatum /jás próvèytam/ - Private law; the law regulating the rights, conduct, and affairs of individuals, as distinguished from "public" law, which relates to the constitution and functions of government and the administration of criminal justice. The right of a person acquiring title to lands under navigable waters to fill in such lands, making upland out of foreshore, and thus extinguishing jus publicum, subject to right of sovereign to make public improvements on tide water for benefit of commerce. Arnold's Inn, Inc. v. Morgan, 63 Misc. 2d 279, 310 N.Y.S. 2d 541, 547.

Also private ownership, or the right, title, or dominion of a private owner, as distinguished from "jus publicum," which denotes public ownership, or the ownership of property by the government, either as a matter of territorial sovereignty or in trust for the benefit and advantage of the general public. In this sense, a state may have a double right in given property, e.g., lands covered by navigable waters within its boundaries, including both "jus publicum," a sovereign or political title, and "jus privatum," a proprietary ownership.

Jus proiectendi /jás prójìsh(h)yèndiy/ - In the civil law, the name of a servitude which consists in the right to build a projection, such as a balcony or gallery, from one's house in the open space belonging to one's neighbor, but without resting on his house.

Jus proprietas /jás pròpripáyshëtësës/ - The right of property, as distinguished from the jus possessionis or right of possession.

Jus protegendi /jás prówtajèndiy/ - In the civil law, the name of a servitude. It is a right by which a part of the roof or tiling of one house is made to extend over the adjoining house.

Jus protimeseos /jás prówtaimésiyos/ - The right of pre-emption of a landlord in case the tenant wishes to dispose of his rights as a perpetual lessee. Pactum protimeseos was the right of pre-emption to the seller, i.e. in case the buyer should sell, he must sell to the former seller.

Jus publicum /jás páblakam/ - Public law, or the law relating to the constitution and functions of government and its officers and the administration of criminal justice. Also public ownership, or the paramount or sovereign territorial right or title of the state or government. The right shared by all to navigate on waters covering foreshore at high tide and, at low tide, to have access across foreshore to waters for fishing, bathing or any other lawful purpose. Arnold's Inn, Inc. v. Morgan, 63 Misc. 2d 279, 310 N.Y.S. 2d 541. See Jus privatum.

It implies a right in a sovereign or public capacity to be exercised for the interest or benefit of the state or the public, as distinguished from the exercise in a proprietary capacity of a right of the sovereign or a right possessed by an individual in common with the public.

Sovereign's right of jurisdiction and dominion for governmental purposes over all lands and waters within its territorial limits, including tidal waters and their bottoms, is sometimes termed "jus publicum."

Jus publicum et privatum quod ex naturalibus praecipit aut gentium aut civilibus est collectum; et quod in jure scripto jus appellatur, id in lege Anglia rectum esse dicitur /jás páblakam pràývatöräm péktës myùtwéray nón pówta/ - A public law or right cannot be altered by the agreements of private persons.

Jus quasitum /jás kwàzàytam/ - A right to ask or recover; for example, in an obligation there is a binding of the obligor, and a jus quasitum in the obligee.

Jus quiritium /jás kwàríáystiy/ - The old law of Rome, that was applicable originally to patricians only, and, under the Twelve Tables, to the entire Roman people, was so called, in contradistinction to the jus praeitorium (q.v.), or equity.

Jus recuperandi /jás ràk(y)ùwpárándiy/ - The right of recovering [lands].

Jus representationis /jás rèprespàntéshiyóñwánas/ - The right of representing or standing in the place of another, or of being represented by another.

Jus rerum /jás rèùrm/ - The law of things. The law regulating the rights and powers of persons over things; how property is acquired, enjoyed, and transferred.

Jus respicit aquitatem /jás réspisèt ekwàtëytëm/ - Law regards equity.

Jus sacrum /jás sèkróm/ - In Roman law, that portion of the public law which was concerned with matters relating to public worship and including the regulation of sacrifices and the appointment of priests. There was a general division of the jus publicum into jus sacrum and jus non sacrum (q.v.).

Jus sanguinis /jás sànggwànos/ - The right of blood. The principle that a person's citizenship is determined by the citizenship of the parents. See Jus sòli.

Jus scriptum /jás skriptom/ - In English law, written law, or statute law, otherwise called "lex scripta," as distinguished from the common law, "lex non scripta." 1 Bl.Comm. 62.

In Roman law, all law that was actually committed to writing, whether it had originated by enactment or by custom, in contradistinction to such parts of the law of custom as were not committed to writing.

Jus singulare /jás singgùshériy/ - In the civil law, a peculiar or individual rule, differing from the *jus commune, or common rule of right, and established for some special reason.

Jus soli /jás sóslay/. The law of the place of one’s birth as contrasted with jus sanguinis, the law of the place of one’s descent or parentage. The principle that a person’s citizenship is determined by place of birth rather than by the citizenship of one’s parents. It is of feudal origin.

Jus spatiandi /jás spēshiyánday/. A right of way over land by the public by uses merely for the purposes of recreation and instruction.

Jus stapulare /jás stéyppaliy/. In old European law, the law of staple; the right of staple. A right or privilege of certain towns of stopping imported merchandise, and compelling it to be offered for sale in their own markets.

Jus stillicidii vel fluminis recipiendi /jás stilislidiyay vël fl(y)üwmans rasiypenday/. In Roman law, the right growing to a possessor accrues to the successor.

Jus strictum /jás striktam/. Strict law; law interpreted without any modification, and in its utmost rigor.

Jus suffragii /jás sûrfrayiy/. In Roman law, the right of voting. This and the jus honorum (q.v.) were the public rights of the Roman citizen.

Jus superveniens auctori accrescit successori /jás-s(y)uwpurviyin(i)yénz októray skrésst siksésoray/. A right growing to a possessor accrues to the successor.

Justa causa /jás'ta kózə/. In the civil law, a just cause; a lawful ground; a legal transaction of some kind.

Just cause. A cause outside legal cause, which must be based on reasonable grounds, and there must be a fair and honest cause or reason, regulated by good faith. Dubois v. Gentry, 182 Tenn. 103, 184 S.W.2d 369, 371. Fair, adequate, reasonable cause. In re Municipal Garage in and for City of Utica, 141 Misc. 15, 252 N.Y.S. 18, 32. Legitimate cause; legal or lawful ground for action; such reasons as will suffice in law to justify the action taken. Boston Elevated Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, 310 Mass. 528, 39 N.E.2d 87, 112, 124. As used in statutory sense is that which to an ordinary intelligent person is justifiable reason for doing or not doing a particular act. Daugherty v. Admin'r, Bureau of Employment Services, 21 Ohio App.3d 1, 486 N.E.2d 242, 243, 21 O.B.R. 1. See Cause of action.

Under provision that no license shall be revoked without "just cause," the words imply that charges should be made and notice of hearing given and an opportunity to be heard afforded. Carroll v. California Horse Racing Board, 16 Cal.2d 164, 105 P.2d 110, 111.

Just cause of provocation. That which will constitute the homicide murder in the second degree, as distinguished from a lawful provocation, which will reduce it to manslaughter. State v. McCracken, 341 Mo. 697, 108 S.W.2d 372, 376.

Just compensation. Compensation which is fair to both the owner and the public when property is taken for public use through condemnation (eminent domain). Consideration is taken of such criteria as the cost of reproducing the property, its market value, and the resulting damage to the remaining property of the owner. The Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution provides that no private property shall be taken for public use, without "just compensation." Within Fifth Amendment provision that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, "just compensation" means the full monetary equivalent of the property taken. U. S. v. Reynolds, Ky., 397 U.S. 14, 90 S.Ct. 803, 805, 25 L.Ed.2d 12.

As regards property taken for public use, the term is comprehensive and includes all elements, Jacobs v. U. S., Ala., 290 U.S. 13, 54 S.Ct. 26, 78 L.Ed. 142; Metropolitan Water Dist. of Southern California v. Adams, 16 Cal.2d 676, 107 P.2d 618, 621, but does not exceed market value. U. S. v. Waterhouse, C.C.A. Hawaii, 132 F.2d 699, 703. It means a settlement which leaves one no poorer or richer than he was before the property was taken. U. S. ex rel. Tennessee Valley Authority v. Indian Creek Marble Co., D.C.Tenn., 40 F.Supp. 811, 818, 819. Adequate compensation. State v. Hale, Tex.Civ. App., 96 S.W.2d 135, 141. Fair market value. Cameron Development Co. v. United States, C.C.A.Fla., 145 F.2d 209, 210. Full and perfect equivalent of the property taken. U. S. v. 24 Acres of Land, More or Less, in Lake County, Ill., C.C.A.Ill., 138 F.2d 295, 297. It is the fair market value of property taken at time of taking; Danforth v. U. S., Mo., 308 U.S. 271, 60 S.Ct. 231, 236, 84 L.Ed. 240; plus compensation for delay in payment, Kieselbach v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 317 U.S. 399, 63 S.Ct. 303, 305, 87 L.Ed. 358; or consequential damages to the owner, In re Board of Water Supply of City of New York, 277 N.Y. 452, 14 N.E.2d 775; or value of use of property from date of taking possession to date of judgment if possession is taken by condemning prior to judgment. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist. v. Hansen, 48 Cal.App.2d 314, 119 P.2d 734, 735. It requires that the owner be put in as good position pecuniarily as he would otherwise have been if the property had not been taken. Almota Farmers Elevator & Warehouse Co. v. U.S., Wash., 93 S.Ct. 791, 794, 409 U.S. 470. Interest is recoverable in eminent domain proceedings as part of "just compensation" when payment is not contemporaneous with the taking. New Hampshire Water Resources Bd v. Pera, 108 N.H. 18, 224 A.2d 774, 777, 778. Market value at time of taking; i.e. highest price for which property considered at its best and most profitable use can be sold in open market by willing seller to willing buyer, neither acting under compulsion and both exercising reasonable judgment. State Highway Commission v. American Memorial Parks, Inc., 82 S.D. 231, 144 N.W.2d 25, 27. See also Adequate compensation; Similar sales.

Just debts. As used in a will or a statute, this term means legal, valid, and incontestable obligations, not including such as are barred by the statute of limitations or voidable at the election of the party. Jones' Ex'r v. Jones, 275 Ky. 753, 122 S.W.2d 779, 780.

Jus tertii /jôs tôrshiyay/. The right of a third party.

A tenant, bailee, etc., who pleads that the title is in some person other than his landlord, bailor, etc., is said to set up a jus tertii. Dempsey Oil & Gas Co. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 110 Okl. 39, 235 P. 1104, 1107.

Jus testamentorum pertinert ordinario /jôs têstëmantôôrm pôrtôrânîôwîyô/. The right of testaments belongs to the ordinary.

Justice, v. To do justice, to see justice done; to summon one to do justice.

Justice, n. Title given to judges, particularly to judges of U.S. and state supreme courts, and as well to judges of appellate courts. The U.S. Supreme Court, and most state supreme courts are composed of a chief justice and several associate justices.

Proper administration of laws. In jurisprudence, the constant and perpetual disposition of legal matters or disputes to render every man his due.

Commutative justice concerns obligations as between persons (e.g., in exchange of goods) and requires proportionate equality in dealings of person to person; Distributive justice concerns obligations of the community to the individual, and requires fair disbursement of common advantages and sharing of common burdens; Social justice concerns obligations of individual to community and its end is the common good.

In Feudal law, jurisdiction; judicial cognizance of causes or offenses. High justice was the jurisdiction or right of trying crimes of every kind, even the highest. This was a privilege claimed and exercised by the great lords or barons of the middle ages. Low justice was jurisdiction of petty offenses.

See also Miscarriage of justice; Obstructing justice.

Justice Department. One of the executive departments of the federal government, headed by the Attorney General. The chief purposes of the Department of Justice are to enforce the federal laws, to furnish legal counsel in federal cases, and to construe the laws under which other departments act. It conducts all suits in the Supreme Court in which the United States is concerned, supervises the federal penal institutions, and investigates and detects violations against federal laws. It represents the government in legal matters generally, rendering legal advice and opinions, upon request, to the President and to the heads of the executive departments. The Attorney General supervises and directs the activities of the U.S. attorneys and marshals in the various judicial districts. See Attorney General.

Justice in eyre /jôstis in érr/. From the old French word "éire," i.e., a journey. Those justices who in ancient times were sent by commission into various counties, to hear more especially such causes as were termed "pleas of the crown," were called "justices in eyre." They differed from justices in over and terminer, inasmuch as the latter were sent to one place, and for the purpose of trying only a limited number of special causes; whereas the justices in eyre were sent through the various counties, with a more indefinite and general commission. In some respects they resembled our present justices of assize, although their authority and manner of proceeding differed much from them. In England, such justices made a circuit every seven years throughout the Kingdom to try causes.

Justicements /jôstisômônts/. An old general term for all things appertaining to justice.

Justice of the peace. A judicial magistrate (of English origin) of inferior rank having (usually) jurisdiction limited to that prescribed by statute in civil matters (e.g. performance of marriages) and jurisdiction over minor criminal offenses, committing more serious crimes to higher courts. Trend in most states has been to abolish office and courts of justice of the peace, transferring their powers and functions to other courts; e.g. municipal or district courts. See Justice's courts.

Justicer /jôstisôsar/. The old form of justice.

Justice's clerk. An amanuensis of the justice. A justice of the peace is regarded as his own clerk, and, in making entries on his docket, he acts in a ministerial capacity. State ex rel. Morris Bldg. & Inv. Co. v. Brown, 228 Mo.App. 760, 72 S.W.2d 859, 862.

Justice's courts. Inferior tribunals, not of record, with limited jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, held by justices of the peace. The trend has been to abolish such courts, transferring their powers and functions to other courts; e.g. municipal or district courts.

Justice seat. In old English law, the principal court of the forest, held before the chief justice in eyre, or chief itinerant judge or his deputy; to hear and determine all trespasses within the forest, and all claims of franchises, liberties, and privileges, and all pleas and causes whatsoever therein arising. 3 Bl.Comm. 72.

Justiceship. Rank or office of a justice.

Justices of assize /jôstisôaz av âsâyz/. These justices, or, as they were sometimes called, "justices of nisi prius," were judges of the superior English courts, who went on circuit into the various counties of England and Wales for the purpose of disposing of such causes as were ready for trial at the assizes. See Assize.
Justices of oyer and terminer. In old English law, those justices who were sent with a commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to persons, who, for any offense, had been cast into gaol. Part of their authority was to punish those who let to mainprise those prisoners who were not bailable by law, and they seem formerly to have been sent into the country upon this exclusive occasion, but afterwards had the same authority given them as the justices of assize.

Justices of laborers. In old English law, justices appointed to redress the frowardness of laboring men, who would either be idle or have unreasonable wages.

Justices of nisi prius /jœstəsəz əv nɪsɪ prɪəs/. In old English law, this title was usually coupled with that of justices of assize; the judges of the superior courts acting on their circuits in both these capacities. See Assise.

Justices of oyer and terminer /jœstəsəz əv ˈɔɪər ənd tərˈmɪnər/. In England, certain persons appointed by the king's commission, among whom were usually two judges of the courts at Westminster, and who went twice in every year to every county of the kingdom (except London and Middlesex), and, at what was usually called the "assizes," heard and determined all treasons, felonies, and misdemeanors. See Oyer and terminer.

Justices of the bench. In England, the justices of the court of common bench or common pleas.

Justices of the forest. In old English law, officers who had jurisdiction over all offenses committed within the forest against vert or venison. The court wherein these justices sat and determined such causes was called the "justice seat of the forest." They were also sometimes called the "justices in eyre of the forest." See Forest courts.

Justices of the hundred. Hundredors; lords of the hundreds. In old English law, they who had the jurisdiction of hundreds and held the hundred courts. See Hundred Court.

Justices of the quorum. See Quorum.

Justices of trail-baston. See Trail-baston.

Justiciability. See Justiciable controversy.

Justicable /jœstɪʃəlbal/. Matter appropriate for court review. See Justiciable controversy.

Justiciable controversy. A controversy in which a present and fixed claim of right is asserted against one who has an interest in contesting it; rights must be declared upon existing state of facts and not upon state of facts that may or may not arise in future. A question as may properly come before a tribunal for decision. Duart Mfg. Co. v. Philad. Co., D.C.Del., 30 F.Supp. 777, 779, 780. Courts will only consider a "justiciable" controversy, as distinguished from a hypothetical difference or dispute or one that is academic or moot. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227, 239, 57 S.Ct. 461, 463, 81 L.Ed. 617. Term refers to real and substantial controversy which is appropriate for judicial determination, as distinguished from dispute or difference of contenafter his death one elder born who all his life has been accounted legitimate.

Just value. In taxation, the fair, honest, and reasonable value of property, without exaggeration or depreciation; its actual market value. See also Fair market value.

Jus utendi /jʊs ʊːtɛndi/. The right to use property without destroying its substance. It is employed in contradistinction to the jus abutendi.

Jus vendi quod usus approvavit /jʊs vɛndɪ kwod juwzɛz āpərəvɪvət/. The law dispenses what use has approved.

Jus vitae necisque /jʊs vəɪti nɛsɪkwi/. In Roman law, the right of life and death. Originally a father, or his pater familias if he was himself in domestic subjection, could decide—not arbitrarily, but judicially—whether or not to rear his child; and while this right became subject to certain restrictions, yet when the child had grown up, the father, in the exercise of his domestic jurisdiction, might visit his son's misconduct, both in private and public life, with such punishment as he thought fit, even banishment, slavery, or death. In the early Empire these rights became relaxed, and they disappeared in the Justinian law.

Juvenile. A young person who has not yet attained the age at which he or she should be treated as an adult for purposes of criminal law. In some states, this age is seventeen. Under the federal Juvenile Delinquency Act, a "juvenile" is a person who has not attained his eighteenth birthday. 18 U.S.C.A. § 5031. A term which may be, though not commonly is, applied to a person who has not reached his or her legal majority for purposes of contracting, marrying, etc. In law, the terms "juvenile" and "minor" are usually used in different contexts; the former used when referring to young criminal offenders, the latter to legal capacity or majority. See also Minor; Youthful offender.

Juvenile courts. A court having special jurisdiction, of a paternal nature, over delinquent, dependent, and neglected children. In juvenile court proceedings, due process requires that juveniles have right to notice of charges, to counsel, to confrontation and cross-examination of witnesses, and to privilege against self-incrimination. In re Gault, 387 U.S. 1, 87 S.Ct. 1428, 18 L.Ed.2d 527.

Juvenile delinquency. Participation in illegal behavior by a minor who falls under a statutory age limit. See also Delinquent child.

Juvenile delinquent. See Delinquent child.

Juvenile offenders. See Delinquent child.

Kay. A quay, or key.

Kayage. See Cayagium.

K.B. Abbreviation for "King's Bench".

K.C. Abbreviation for "King's Counsel".

Keelage /kiyələj/. The right to demand money for the privilege of anchoring a vessel in a harbor; also the money so paid.

Keep, v. To continue. People v. Roseberry, 23 Cal. App.2d 13, 71 P.2d 944; Briggs v. U. S., C.C.A.Mich., 45 F.2d 479, 480. To have or retain in one's power or possession; not to lose or part with; to preserve or retain. To maintain, carry on, conduct, or manage; as, to "keep" a bawdy house, gaming table, nuisance, or the like. To maintain, tend, harbor, feed, and shelter; as, to "keep" a dangerous animal.

To maintain continuously and methodically for the purposes of a record; as, to "keep" books. Thus to "keep" records of court means, not only to preserve the manual possession of the records, books, and papers, but to correctly transcribe therein the proceedings of the court.

To maintain continuously and without stoppage or variation; as, when a vessel is said to "keep her course," that is, continue in motion in the same general direction in which she was previously sailing. The Britannia, 153 U.S. 130, 14 S.Ct. 795, 38 L.Ed. 660. To maintain, to cause to continue without essential change of condition. To take care of and to preserve from danger, harm, or loss.

Keeper. A custodian, manager, or superintendent; one who has the care, custody, or management of any thing or place; one who has or holds possession of anything. See Bailment; Custodian; Depository.

Keeper of a bawdy house or house of ill fame. A person who has control, proprietorship, or management of the house in question. State v. Weston, 235 Iowa 148, 15 N.W.2d 922, 923.

Keeper of dog. A harborer of a dog. Elender v. White, La.App., 14 So.2d 280, 282. Any person, other than owner, harboring or having in his possession any dog. Hancock v. Finch, 126 Conn. 121, 9 A.2d 811. One who, either with or without owner's permission, undertakes to manage, control, or care for it as dog owners in general are accustomed to do.

Keeper of the forest. In old English law, an officer (called also chief warden of the forest) who had the principal government of all things relating to the forest, and the control of all officers belonging to the same.

Keeper of the great seal. In English law, a high officer of state, through whose hands pass all charters, grants, and commissions of the king under the great seal.

Keeper of the king's conscience. A name sometimes applied to the chancellor of England, as being formerly an ecclesiastic and presiding over the royal chapel.

Keeper of the privy seal. In English law, an officer through whose hands pass all charters signed by the king before they come to the great seal. He is a privy councillor, and was anciently called "clerk of the privy seal," but is now generally called the "lord privy seal."

Keeper of the touch. The master of the assay in the English mint.

Keeping a gambling house or place. A proprietor is guilty if with his knowledge, acquiescence, and consent, express or implied, gambling is carried on upon premises in his possession as owner or lessee, or under his management or control, by his associates or subordinates who are likewise guilty if they are present aiding and assisting in carrying on such gambling operations for him. Commonwealth v. Pinkenson, 138 Pa.Super. 485, 11 A.2d 176, 179. A proprietor of a place not kept for the purpose of gambling is guilty if he allows gambling to be carried on and participates in it or receives a benefit from it in some way. People v. Dubinsky, Sp.Sess., 31 N.Y.S.2d 234, 238. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1955. See also Gambling.

Keeping a gambling table or bank. If one has possession or custody of a gaming table, and authority over its use, and supervises the gaming, he is guilty of such crime.

Keeping a lookout. Being watchful of movements of driver's own vehicle, as well as other vehicles and pedestrians. See Lookout.

Keeping books. Preserving an intelligent record of a merchant's or tradesman's affairs with such reasonable accuracy and care as may properly be expected from a person in that business. See Accounting.

Keeping the peace. Avoiding a breach of the peace; dissuading or preventing others from breaking the peace. See also Articles of the peace.

Keep in repair. When a lessee is bound to keep the premises in repair, he must have them in repair at all times during the term; and, if they are at any time out of repair, he is guilty of a breach of the covenant. See Habitability.

Keiki /kéikyiy/. Hawaiian. Popular meaning is child, but the meaning of that word in any particular instance depends on context in which it is used, and it can mean "descendant of any generation." In re Kanoa's Trust Estate, 47 Hawaii 160, 393 P.2d 753, 760; Kalakaua v. Parke, 8 Hawaii 620, 621.

Kelp-shore. The land between high and low water mark.

Kentucky Resolutions. A series of resolutions drawn up by Jefferson, and adopted by the legislature of Kentucky in 1799, protesting against the "alien and sedition laws," declaring their illegality, announcing the strict constructionist theory of the federal government, and declaring "nullification" to be "the rightful remedy."

Kentucky Rule. In the allocation of dividends by trustees as between income and principal, all dividends whether paid in cash or stock are regarded as income though in most jurisdictions accepting this rule a dividend paid in the stock of the issuing corporation is considered principal and brings about an adjustment in the basis of such stock in the portfolio.

Keogh Plan. A designation for retirement plans available to self-employed taxpayers (also referred to as H.R.10 plans). Such plans extend to the self-employed tax benefits similar to those available to employees under qualified pension and profit sharing plans. Yearly contributions to the plan (up to a certain amount) are tax deductible. See also Individual retirement account.

Kerhere. A customary cart-way; also a commutation for a customary carriage-duty.

Kermellatus /kārməlēytəs/. Fortified or embattled.

Keyage. A toll paid for loading and unloading merchandise at a key or wharf.

Key man insurance. Type of insurance coverage purchased by companies to protect them on the death or disability of a valued employee or by partnership to provide for funds with which to buy out the interest of such partner on his death or disability.

Key number system. A standard legal research tool in which each point of law derived from reported cases is topically arranged in a digest and assigned a "key" number. Once the key number for a relevant point of law is determined, generally through a digest index, a researcher may look under that topic, in either a digest or on WESTLAW, for topically related cases. See also Digest (American Digest System).

Keyus /kiyas/. A guardian, warden, or keeper.

Kibei /kiybey/. A Japanese-American (person born in the United States of Japanese parents) who has been educated in Japan, but has returned to the United States. See Hohri v. U.S., C.A.D.C., 782 F.2d 227, 234; McGrath v. Abo, C.A., 186 F.2d 766, 772. [Japanese—ki to return to the United States; ki meaning "to return" and bei meaning "the United States"].

Kickback. Payment back by seller of a portion of the purchase price to buyer or public official to induce purchase or to improperly influence future purchases or leases. Such payments are not tax deductible as ordinary and necessary expenses. I.R.C. § 162.

Under federal statute kickbacks are a criminal offense in connection with a contract for construction or repair of a public building or a building financed by loans from the government. 18 U.S.C.A. § 874. Such acts are also generally prohibited by state commercial bribery statutes. See also Bribery.

Kiddie tax. A tax imposed on unearned income (in excess of a minimal amount) of a child under the age of 14. Such income is taxed at the parents' highest rate. The Tax Reform Act of 1986 instituted the "kiddie tax" in an effort to stop the shifting of income producing assets within families (i.e., from parents to minor chil-
KIDDIE TAX

Kidnapping. At common law, the forcible abduction or stealing and carrying away of a person from own country to another. 4 Bl.Comm. 219. Collier v. Vaccaro, C.C.A.Md., 51 F.2d 17, 19; State v. Berry, 200 Wash. 495, 93 P.2d 782, 787, 792. The unlawful seizure and removal of a person from own country or state against his will. In American law, the intent to send the victim out of the country does not constitute a necessary part of the offense; the unlawful taking and carrying away of a human being by force or fraud or threats or intimidation and against his will being the essential elements. State v. Roberts, 210 S.E.2d 396, 404, 286 N.C. 265. At common law kidnapping was a misdemeanor, but under modern statutes such crime is a felony. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1201.

A person is guilty of kidnapping if he unlawfully removes another from his place of residence or business, or a substantial distance from the vicinity where he is found, or if he unlawfully confines another for a substantial period in a place of isolation, with any of the following purposes: (a) to hold for ransom or reward, or as a shield or hostage; or (b) to facilitate commission of any felony or flight thereafter; or (c) to inflict bodily injury on or to terrorize the victim or another; or (d) to interfere with the performance of any governmental or political function. Model Penal Code, § 212.1.

With respect to federal kidnapping act, see Lindbergh Act. See also Abduction; Hostage; Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act; Ransom.

Child-stealing. Child-stealing statutes commonly provide a penalty for any one who shall lead, take, entice or detain a child under a specified age with intent to keep or conceal it from its parent, guardian, or other person having lawful care or control thereof.

Kidnapping for ransom. One who detains another for the purpose of extorting money from him or from another person as the price of his release is guilty of the felony of kidnapping for ransom. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1201. Simple kidnapping. Kidnapping which is not in some aggravated form, such as holding for ransom, is commonly referred to as "simple kidnapping."

Kilketh. An ancient servile payment made by tenants in husbandry.

Kill, v. To deprive of life; to destroy the life of an animal or person. The word "homicide" expresses the killing of a human being. See also Homicide; Manslaughter; Murder.

Killing by misadventure. Accidental killing of a person where the slayer is doing a lawful act, unaccompa-
Its civil jurisdiction was gradually enlarged until it embraced all species of personal actions. By the Judicature Act of 1873 the jurisdiction of this court was assigned to the Queens Bench Division of the High Court of Justice. See Court of King’s (Queen’s) Bench.

King’s (Queen’s) coroner and attorney. In England, an officer of the court of king’s (or queen’s) bench, usually called “the master of the crown office,” whose duty it was to file informations at the suit of a private subject by direction of the court. 4 Bl.Comm. 308, 309. The office is now merged in that of Master of the Crown Office.

King’s (Queen’s) counsel. Barristers or serjeants who have been called within the bar and selected to be the king’s (or queen’s) counsel. They answer in some measure to the advocate ficti, or advocates of the revenue, among the Romans. They could not formerly be employed in any cause against the Crown (e.g. in defending a prisoner) without special license. Now, however, by a general dispensation granted in 1920, they can appear against the Crown without such license. Called “Queen’s” counsel when a queen holds the crown.

King’s (Queen’s) evidence. When several persons are charged with a crime, and one of them gives evidence against his accomplices, on the promise of being granted a pardon, he is said to be admitted king’s or (in America) state’s evidence. Called “Queen’s” evidence when a queen holds the crown. See also State’s evidence.

King’s (Queen’s) proctor. A proctor or solicitor representing the crown in the Family Division. In petitions for dissolution of marriage, or for declarations of nullity of marriage, the king’s (or queen’s) proctor may, under the direction of the attorney general, and by leave of the court, intervene in the suit for the purpose of proving collusion between the parties. Called “Queen’s” proctor when a queen holds the crown.

King’s (Queen’s) remembrancer. An officer of the central office of the English supreme court. Formerly he was an officer of the exchequer, and had important duties to perform in protecting the rights of the crown; e.g., by instituting proceedings for the recovery of land by writs of intrusion (q.v.), and for the recovery of legacy and succession duties; but of late years administrative changes have lessened the duties of the office. He was at the head of the department which had charge of all revenue suits, and of matters pertaining to the office of sheriff. He attended as the officer of the king’s (queen’s) bench when the lord mayor made his appearance on November 9th, and was representing the old court of exchequer when the city of London did suit and service in discharge of quit-rents for certain lands anciently held under the crown. Called a “Queen’s” remembrancer when a queen holds the crown.

King’s silver. In old English practice, a fine due the king pro licentia concordandi (for leave to agree), in the process of levying a fine.

King’s widow. In feudal law, a widow of the king’s tenant in chief, who was obliged to take oath in chancery that she would not marry without the king’s leave.

Kin or kindred. Relation or relationship by blood or consanguinity. Relatives by blood; by birth. May be either lineal (ascending or descending) or collateral. Poff v. Pennsylvania R. Co., D.C.N.Y., 57 F.Supp. 625, 626. See also Blood relations; Heirs; Next of kin.

Kinsfolk. Relations; those who are of the same family.

Kinship. Relationship by blood. See Kin or Kindred.

Kinsman /kinzman/. A man of the same race or family.

Kinswoman. A female relation.

Kintal, or kintle /ki:ntel/. A hundred pounds in weight. See Quintal or Kintal.

Kissing the book. The ceremony of touching the lips to a copy of the Bible, used in administering oaths. It is the external symbol of the witness’ acknowledgment of the obligation of the oath.

Kist. In Hindu law, a stated payment; installment of rent.

Kiting. The wrongful practice of taking advantage of the float, the time that elapses between the deposit of a check in one bank and its collection at another. Method of drawing checks by which the drawer uses funds which are not his by drawing checks against deposits which have not yet cleared through the banks. “Kiting” consists of writing checks against a bank account where funds are insufficient to cover them, hoping that before they are presented the necessary funds will be deposited. Sutro Bros. & Co. v. Indemnity Ins. Co. of North America, D.C.N.Y., 264 F.Supp. 273, 283. See also Float.

Kleptomania /kleptam,ni:ja/. In medical jurisprudence, a species (or symptom) of mania, consisting of an irresistible propensity to steal.

Knave /næv/. A rascal; a false, tricky, or deceitful person. The word originally meant a boy, attendant, or servant, but long-continued usage has given it its present signification.

Knight. In English law, the next personal dignity after the nobility. Of knights there are several orders and degrees. The first in rank are knights of the Garter, instituted by Richard I and improved by Edward III in 1344; next follows a knight banneret; then come knights of the Bath, instituted by Henry IV, and revived by George I; and they were so called from a ceremony of bathing the night before their creation. The last order are knights bachelors, who, though the lowest, are yet the most ancient, order of knighthood; for we find that King Alfred conferred this order upon his son Athelstan. Other degrees of knights include Knight of the Order of St. Michael and St. George (instituted in 1345), Knight of the Thistle (reestablished in 1703), and Knight of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire (instituted in 1917). 1 Bl.Comm. 403.

Knighthood. The rank, order, character, or dignity of a knight.
Knight-marshal. In English law, an officer in the royal household who has jurisdiction and cognizance of offenses committed within the household and verge, and of all contracts made therein, a member of the household being one of the parties.

Knights bachelors. In English law, the most ancient, though lowest, order of knighthood. See Knight.

Knights banneret. In English law, those created by the sovereign in person on the field of battle. They rank, generally, after knights of the Garter. See Knight.

Knights fee. The determinate quantity of land (held by an estate of inheritance), or of annual income therefrom, which was sufficient to maintain a knight.

Knights of the Garter. See Garter; Knight.

Knights of the post. A term for hireling witnesses.

Knights of the shire. In English law, members of parliament representing counties or shires, in contradistinction to citizens or burgesses, who represent boroughs or corporations.

Knight's service. Upon the Norman conquest, all the lands in England were divided into knight's fees, in number above sixty thousand. For every knight's fee, a generally finished. If a man only held half a knight's days in a year, in which space of time a campaign was at last, with the military part of the feudal system, it was abolished by the Tenures Abolition Act of 1660. 1 Bl.Comm. 410.

Knock and announce rule. This rule for execution of arrest and search warrants requires that police knock and announce their authority and purpose before entering into home. Davenport v. State, Ind., 464 N.E.2d 1302, 1305. A peace officer, whether he arrests by virtue of warrant or by virtue of his authority to arrest without warrant on probable cause, can break door of house to effect arrest only after first stating his authority and purpose for demanding admission. Miller v. U. S., 357 U.S. 301, 78 S.Ct. 1190, 2 L.Ed.2d 1332. The officer may break open any outer or inner door or window of a house, or any part of a house, or anything therein, to execute a search warrant, if, after notice of his authority and purpose, he is refused admittance or when necessary to liberate himself or a person aiding him in the execution of the warrant. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3109.

Knock down. To assign to a bidder at an auction by a knock or blow of the hammer. Property is said to be "knocked down" when the auctioneer, by the fall of his hammer, or by any other audible or visible announcement, signifies to the bidder that he is entitled to the property on paying the amount of his bid, according to the terms of the sale. "Knocked down" and "struck off" are synonymous terms.

Knot. In seamen's language, a "knot" is a division of the log-line serving to measure the rate of the vessel's motion. The number of knots which run off from the reel in half a minute shows the number of miles the vessel sails in an hour. Hence when a ship goes 8 nautical miles an hour she is said to go "8 knots."

Know. To have knowledge; to possess information, instruction, or wisdom. To perceive or apprehend; to understand. International-Great Northern R. Co. v. Pence, Tex.Civ.App., 113 S.W.2d 206, 210. The word "familiar" is equivalent. See Knowingly; Knowledge; Notice; Scieten.

Know all men. A form of public address, of great antiquity, and with which many written instruments, such as bonds, letters of attorney, etc., still commence.

Knowingly. With knowledge; consciously; intelligently; willfully; intentionally. An individual acts "knowingly" when he acts with awareness of the nature of his conduct. State v. Kroll, Mo.App., 682 S.W.2d 78, 81. Act is done "knowingly" or "purposely" if it is willed, is product of conscious design, intent or plan that it be done, and is done with knowledge of probable consequences. Horne v. State, Ind., 445 N.E.2d 976, 978.

A person acts knowingly with respect to a material element of an offense when: (i) if the element involves the nature of his conduct or the attendant circumstances, he is aware that his conduct is of that nature or that such circumstances exist; and (ii) if the element involves a result of his conduct, he is aware that it is practically certain that his conduct will cause such a result. Model Penal Code, § 2.202.

The use of the word in an indictment is equivalent to an averment that the defendant knew what he was about to do, and, with such knowledge, proceeded to do the act charged. See also Intent; Knowledge; Scieten.

Knowingly and willfully. This phrase, in reference to violation of a statute, means consciously and intentionally.

It has also been defined as act or state of knowing or understanding. Witters v. U. S., 70 App.D.C. 316, 106 F.2d 837, 840; actual knowledge, notice or information, New York Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Central Union Bank of South Carolina, C.C.A.S.C., 65 F.2d 738, 739; assurance of fact or proposition founded on perception by senses, or intuition; clear perception of that which exists, or of truth, fact or duty; firm belief, Witters v. U. S., 70 App.D.C. 316, 106 F.2d 837, 840; guilty knowledge, Goldsworthy v. Anderson, 92 Colo. 446, 21 P.2d 718; information of fact, Green v. Stewart, 106 Cal.App. 518, 289 P. 940, 944; means of mental impression, Howard v. Whitaker, 250 Ky. 836, 64 S.W.2d 173; miscellaneous information and circumstances which engender belief to moral certainty or induce state of mind that one considers that he knows, Wise v. Curdes, 219 Ind. 606, 40 N.E.2d 122, 126; notice or knowledge sufficient to excite attention and put person on guard and call for inquiry, Iberville Land Co. v. Amerada Petroleum Corporation, C.C.A.La., 141 F.2d 384, 389; personal cognizance or knowledge or means of knowledge, The Chickie, D.C.Pa., 54 F.Supp. 19, 20; state of being or having become aware of fact or truth, Howard v. Whittaker, 250 Ky. 836, 64 S.W.2d 173.

In commercial law, the level of a person’s awareness of information at which the person actually knows the information. See U.C.C. § 1–201(25).

When knowledge of the existence of a particular fact is an element of an offense, such knowledge is established if a person is aware of a high probability of its existence, unless he actually believes that it does not exist. Model Penal Code, § 2.202.

Knowledge consists in the perception of the truth of affirmative or negative propositions, while “belief” admits of all degrees, from the slightest suspicion to the fullest assurance. The difference between them is ordinarily merely in the degree, to be judged of by the court, when addressed to the court; by the jury, when addressed to the jury.

See also Constructive knowledge; Imputed knowledge; Knowingly; Notice; Scienter.

Actual knowledge. Positive, in contrast to imputed or inferred, knowledge of a fact. Roberts Const. Co. v. Brown, 272 Ala. 440, 131 So.2d 710, 712. For notice purposes, “actual knowledge” embraces those things of which the one sought to be charged has express information and those things which a reasonably diligent inquiry and exercise of the means of information at hand would have disclosed. Morris v. Reaves, Tex.Civ.App., 580 S.W.2d 891, 893.

Agency relationship. Unless the parties have otherwise agreed, a principal or agent, with respect to the other, should know what a person of ordinary experience and intelligence would know, and in addition, what he would know if, having the knowledge and intelligence which he has or which he purports to have, he were to use due care in the performance of his duties to the other. Restatement, Second, Agency, § 10.

Carnal knowledge. See Carnal knowledge.

Knowledge of another’s peril. One has “knowledge of peril of another,” within doctrine of discovered peril, whenever it reasonably appears from the known facts and circumstances that the latter is pursuing a course which will probably terminate in serious bodily injury to him, and that he probably will pursue it to the end.

Personal knowledge. Knowledge of the truth in regard to a particular fact or allegation, which is original, and does not depend on information or hearsay. Personal knowledge of an allegation in an answer is personal knowledge of its truth or falsity; and if the allegation is a negative one, this necessarily includes a knowledge of the truth or falsity of the allegation denied. In the law of evidence means something which the witness actually saw or heard, as distinguished from something he learned from some other person or sources. Hidalgo v. General Fire & Cas. Co., La.App., 254 So.2d 493, 496.

Reason to know. The words “reason to know” are used throughout the Restatement of Torts to denote the fact that the actor has information from which a person of reasonable intelligence or of the superior intelligence of the actor would infer that the fact in question exists, or that such person would govern his conduct upon the assumption that such fact exists. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 12.

Should know. The words “should know” are used throughout the Restatement of Torts to denote the fact that a person of reasonable prudence and intelligence or of the superior intelligence of the actor would ascertain the fact in question in the performance of his duty to another, or would govern his conduct upon the assumption that such fact exists. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 12.

Known. Familiar; perceived; recognized; understood; especially, when used absolutely, familiar to all; generally understood or perceived. Term may, according to context, refer to both actual and constructive knowledge.

Known heirs. In a statute relating to the sale of property of unknown heirs, it has been held to mean those persons who are known, and whose right to inherit, or the extent of whose right, to inherit, is dependent on the non-existence of other persons nearer or as near as the ancestor in the line of descent.

Land patent. An instrument conveying a grant of public land; also, the land so conveyed. See also Patent.

Land-poor. Term used to describe person that owns a substantial amount of land, but is nonetheless short of cash to pay bills because, for example, land is unproductive, market for crops depressed, etc.

Land-reeve. In old English law, a person whose business it was to overlook certain parts of a farm or estate; to attend not only to the woods and hedge-timber, but also to the state of the fences, gates, buildings, private roads, driftways, and water-courses; and likewise to the stocking of commons, and encroachments of every kind, as well as to prevent or detect waste and spoil in general, whether by the tenants or others; and to report the same to the manager or land steward.

Land revenues. This term denotes income derived from crown lands in Great Britain. These lands have been so largely granted away to subjects that they are now contracted within very narrow limits.

Landrum-Griffin Act. Federal statute enacted in 1959, known as the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act, designed to curb corruption in union leadership and undemocratic conduct of internal union affairs as well as to outlaw certain types of secondary boycotts and "hot cargo" provisions in collective bargaining agreements. 29 U.S.C.A. § 401 et seq.

Lands. This term, the plural of "land," is said, at common law, to be a word of less extensive signification than either "tenements" or "hereditaments." But in some of the states it has been provided by statute that it shall include both those terms. See also Land.

Land sale contract. Contract for the purchase and sale of land upon execution of which title is transferred. Term commonly refers to an installment contract for the sale of land whereby purchaser (vendee) receives the deed from the owner (vendor) upon payment of final installment. The vendor retains legal title to the property (deed) as security for payment of contract price. May also be called "contract for deed", or "installment land contract".

Lands, public. See Public lands.

Lands, tenements, and hereditaments. The technical and most comprehensive description of real property, as "goods and chattels" is of personality. The term refers to property in land. Denver Joint Stock Land Bank of Denver v. Dixon, 57 Wyo. 523, 122 P.2d 842, 846. Under ancient law, the words comprehended only freehold estate and did not apply to easements or other incorporeal hereditaments. Hester v. Sawyers, 41 N.M. 497, 71 P.2d 646, 649.

Land tenant. The person actually in possession of land.
Land Titles and Transfer Act. An English statute (38 & 39 Vict., c. 87) providing for the establishment of a registry for titles to real property, and making sundry provisions for the transfer of lands and the recording of the evidences thereof. It presents some analogies to the recording laws of the American states; e.g. Registry of Deeds office in many states. This Act was superseded by a system of title registration in 1925.

Land trust. Property ownership arrangement whereby, pursuant to statute, trustee holds legal and equitable title to trust, and beneficiary, who has personal property interest, retains power of direction over trustee and power to manage and receive income from trust property. Pepper Pot II, Inc. v. Imperial Realty Co., 1 Dist., 133 Ill.App.3d 951, 88 Ill.Dec. 929, 931, 479 N.E.2d 949, 951. A land trust (also called Illinois Land Trust) is a trust in which corpus consists of real estate and in which deed to trustee appears to confer upon him full powers to deal with real estate and complete legal and equitable title to trust property. So far as public records are concerned, trustee's powers are complete. Such powers, however, are in fact restricted by a trust agreement mentioned in the deed in trust. Such trust agreements typically vest in beneficiary full powers of management and control. However, beneficiary cannot deal with property as if no trust existed. Such trusts generally continue for a definite term. Unlike trustees under classical testamentary or inter vivos trust, trustees under land trust may be personally liable. Taylor v. Richmond's New Approach Assoc., Inc., Fla.App., 351 So.2d 1094.

Land trust certificate. Instrument granting participation in benefits of ownership of property, while trustee retains title. See Land Trust.

Land use planning. Generic term used to describe activities such as zoning, control of real estate developments and use, environmental impact studies and the like. Many states have land use planning laws which are implemented by local zoning and land use laws and ordinances. See also Master plan; Planned unit development (PUD); Zoning.

Land waiter. In English law, an officer of the custom-house, whose duty is, upon landing any merchandise, to examine, taste, weigh, or measure it, and to take an account thereof.

Land warrant. A warrant issued at the local land offices of the United States to purchasers of public lands, on the surrender of which at the general land office at Washington, they receive a conveyance from the general government. See Land certificate.

The evidence which the state, on good consideration, gives that the person therein named is entitled to the quantity of land therein specified, the bounds and description of which the owner of the warrant may fix by entry and survey, in the section of country set apart for its location and satisfaction.

Langeman. A lord of a manor.

Langemann. The lords of manors.

Language. Any means of conveying or communicating ideas; specifically, human speech, or the expression of ideas by written characters or by means of sign language. The letter, or grammatical import, of a document or instrument, as distinguished from its spirit; as "the language of the statute." As to offensive language, see Offensive language.

Languidus /laŋwɔðəs/. (Lat., sick.) In common law practice, the name of a return made by the sheriff when a defendant, whom he had taken by virtue of process, was so dangerously sick that to remove him would endanger his life or health.

Lanham Trademark Act. Federal statute enacted in 1946 which revised federal trademark law and registration process. Purposes of Act (15 U.S.C.A. § 1501 et seq.), are to protect the public so it may buy a product bearing a particular trademark with confidence that it will get the product it wants. It also protects the holder of the mark's investment in time and money from its misappropriation by pirates and cheats. Getty Petroleum Corp. v. Bartco Petroleum Corp., C.A.N.Y., 858 F.2d 103. See also Likelihood of confusion.

Lanns manus. (Old Fr.) A lord of the manor.

Lapidation /laʊpəˈdʒiːʃən/. The act of stoning a person to death.

Lappage /ˈlæpɪdʒ/. A term synonymous with "interference," "conflict," "interlock," "lap" and "overlap" as regards adverse possession. It applies to a situation existing when a deed under which one party claims and grant under which another claims cover in large part the same land. Turk v. Wilson's Heirs, 265 Ky. 78, 98 S.W.2d 4, 8.

Lapse, v. To glide; to pass slowly, silently, or by degrees. To slip; to deviate from the proper path. To fall or fail. Life & Casualty Ins. Co. of Tennessee v. Wheeler, 265 Ky. 269, 96 S.W.2d 753, 755. See also Expiration; Termination.

Lapse, n. The termination or failure of a right or privilege through neglect to exercise it within some limit of time, or through failure of some contingency.

Failure to vest a bequest or devise by reason of death of devisee of legatee prior to death of testator. Farmers and Merchants State Bank v. Felts, 150 Ind.App. 284, 276 N.E.2d 204, 206. The death of a legatee before the testator causes the legacy to lapse and to fall into the residue unless there is a statute which provides for its disposition as, for example, if the legatee is a child or relation of the testator, the legacy passes to the issue of the legatee.

The expiration of a right either by the death of the holder or upon the expiration of a period of time. Thus, a power of appointment lapses upon the death of the holder if such holder has not exercised the power during life or at death (i.e., through a will).

Termination of insurance policy because of failure to pay the premium.
In the law of wills, the failure of a testamentary gift.
See also Anti-lapse statute.

Lapsed devise. See Devise.

Lapsed legacy. See Legacy.

Lapsed policy. Insurance policy on which there has been default in payment of premiums. Policy remaining in force according to statutory provisions after such default (normally a 30 or 31 day grace period on non-payment of premiums is provided).

Lapse patent. A patent for land issued in substitution for an earlier patent to the same land, which was issued to another party, but has lapsed in consequence of his neglect to avail himself of it.

Lapse statutes. Those state statutory enactments which prevent the lapse or passing into the residue or by intestacy of legacies and devises when the legatee or devisee predeceases the testator, and which commonly provide that, if the legatee or devisee is a child or other relation of the testator, the legacy or devise passes to the issue of such legatee or devisee.

Larcenous (lár'sə-nəs). Having the character of larceny; as a "larcenous taking." Contemplating or intending larceny; as a "larcenous purpose."

Larcenous intent. A larcenous intent exists where a man knowingly takes and carries away the goods of another without any claim or pretense of right, with intent wholly to deprive the owner of them or convert them to his own use.

Larceny (lár'sə-nə). Felonious stealing, taking and carrying, leading, riding, or driving away another's personal property, with intent to convert it or to deprive owner thereof. The unlawful taking and carrying away of property of another with intent to appropriate it to use inconsistent with latter's rights. U. S. v. Johnson, 140 U.S.App.D.C. 54, 433 F.2d 1160, 1163. The essential elements of a "larceny" are an actual or constructive taking away of the goods or property of another without the consent and against the will of the owner or possessor and with a felonious intent to convert the property to the use of someone other than the owner. U. S. v. Waronek, 582 F.2d 1158.

Obtaining possession of property by fraud, trick or device with preconceived design or intent to appropriate, convert or steal is "larceny." John v. United States, 65 U.S.App.D.C. 11, 79 F.2d 136; People v. Cook, 10 Cal. App.2d 54, 51 F.2d 169, 170.

Common-law distinctions between obtaining money under false pretenses, embezzlement, and larceny no longer exist in many states; all such crimes being embraced within general definition of "larceny." Some states classify larceny as either grand or petit, depending on the property's value.

See also Burglary; Robbery; Shoplifting; Stolen; Theft.

Compound larceny. Larceny or theft accomplished by taking the thing stolen either from one's person or from his house; otherwise called "mixed" larceny, and distinguished from "simple" or "plain" larceny, in which the theft is not aggravated by such an intrusion either upon the person or the dwelling. Sometimes referred to as larceny from the person.

Constructive larceny. One where the felonious intent to appropriate the goods to his own use, at the time of the asporation, is made out by construction from the defendant's conduct, although, originally, the taking was not apparently felonious.

False pretenses and larceny distinguished. See False pretenses.

Grand larceny. Taking and carrying away the personal property of another to a value in excess of $100.00 (or whatever the cut-off amount may be in a given jurisdiction) with the intent to feloniously deprive the owner or possessor of it permanently. Distinguished from petit larceny (q.v.) only by the value of the property stolen.

In England, simple larceny, was originally divided into two sorts,—grand larceny, where the value of the goods stolen was above twelve pence, and petit larceny, where their value was equal to or below that sum. 4 Bl.Comm. 229. The distinction was abolished in England by St. 7 & 8 Geo. IV, c. 29, and is not generally recognized in the United States, although in a few states there is a statutory offense of grand larceny, one essential element of which is the value of the goods stolen, which value varies.

Larceny by bailee. The crime of larceny committed where any person, being a bailee of any property, shall fraudulently take or convert the same to his own use, or to the use of any other person except the owner thereof, although he shall not break bulk or otherwise determine the bailment.

Larceny by extortion. A person is guilty of theft if he purposely obtains property of another by threatening to: (1) inflict bodily injury on anyone or commit any other criminal offense; or (2) accuse anyone of a criminal offense; or (3) expose any secret tending to subject any person to hatred, contempt or ridicule, or to impair his credit or business repute; or (4) take or withhold action as an official, or cause an official to take or withhold action; or (5) bring about or continue a strike, boycott or other collective unofficial action, if the property is not demanded or received for the benefit of the group in whose interest the actor purports to act; or (6) testify or provide information or withhold testimony or information with respect to another's legal claim or defense; or (7) inflict any other harm which would not benefit the actor. Model Penal Code, § 223.4. See also Extortion.

Larceny by fraud or deception. A person is guilty of theft if he purposely obtains property of another by deception. A person deceives if he purposely: (1) creates or reinforces a false impression, including false impressions as to law, value, intention or other state of mind; but deception as to a person's intention from the act alone that he did not subsequently perform the promise; or (2) prevents another from acquiring information which would affect his judgment of a transaction; or (3) fails to correct a false impression which the deceiver previously created or reinforced, or which the deceiver knows to be influencing another to whom he stands in a fiduciary or confidential relationship; or (4) fails to disclose a known lien, adverse claim or other legal impediment to the enjoyment of property which he transfers or encumbers in consideration for the property obtained, whether such impediment is or is not valid, or is or is not a matter of official record. Model Penal Code, § 223.3.

Larceny by trick. See Larceny by fraud or deception, above.

Larceny from the person. Act of taking property from the person by merely lifting it from the person or pocket. State v. Stanton, Mo., 68 S.W.2d 811, 812. Larceny committed where the property stolen is on the person or in the immediate charge or custody of the person from whom the theft is made, but without such circumstances of force or violence as would constitute robbery, including pocket-picking and such like crimes.

Larceny of auto. See Auto theft.

Larceny of property lost, mislaid, or delivered by mistake. A person who comes into control of property of another he knows to have been lost, mislaid, or delivered under a mistake as to the nature or amount of the property or the identity of the recipient is guilty of theft if, with purpose to deprive the owner thereof, he fails to take reasonable measures to restore the property to a person entitled to have it. Model Penal Code, § 223.5.

Mixed larceny. Otherwise called "compound" or "complicated larceny;" that which is attended with circumstances of aggravation or violence to the person, or taking from a house.

Petit (Petty) larceny. Larceny of things or goods whose value is below a statutorily set amount (e.g. $100). The value at common law was twelve pence. Compare Grand larceny, above.

Simple larceny. Felonious or wrongful taking and carrying away of personal goods of another with intent to steal, unattended by acts of violence. Larceny which is not complicated or aggravated by acts of violence. Larceny from the person, or with force and violence, is called "compound" larceny.

Larger parcel. A term used in eminent domain proceedings, signifying that the parcel taken is not a complete parcel but part of a "larger parcel;" the owner, therefore is entitled to damages from the severance as well as the value of the parcel taken. Unity of ownership, use, and contiguity must be present, although federal courts and some states do not require contiguity where there is a strong unity of use.

Larons /léranz/. In old English law, thieves.

Lascivious /ləsəvɪəs/. Tending to excite lust; lewd; indecent; obscene; sexual impurity; tending to deprave the morals in respect to sexual relations; licentious. See Swearingen v. U. S., 161 U.S. 446, 16 S.Ct. 562, 40 L.Ed. 765; People on Complaint of Sumner v. Dial Press, 182 Misc. 416, 48 N.Y.S.2d 480, 481; Dunlop v. U. S., 165 U.S. 486, 17 S.Ct. 375, 41 L.Ed. 799. Conduct which is wanton, lewd, and lustful, and tending to produce voluptuous or lewd emotions. See Lewd; Obscene.

Lascivious cohabitation. The offense committed by two persons (not married to each other) who live together in one habitation as man and wife and practice sexual intercourse. Such offense, where it still exists, is seldom enforced.

Last, n. In old English law, signifies a burden; also a measure of weight used for certain commodities of the bulkier sort.

Last, adj. Latest; ultimate; final; most recent.

Last antecedent rule. A canon of statutory construction that relative or qualifying words or phrases are to be applied to the words or phrases immediately preceding, and as not extending to or including other words, phrases, or clauses more remote, unless such extension or inclusion is clearly required by the intent and meaning of the context, or disclosed by an examination of the entire act.

Last clear chance doctrine. This doctrine permits a plaintiff in a negligence action to recover, notwithstanding his own negligence, on a showing that the defendant had the last clear chance to avoid the accident. Jarrett v. Madifari, 67 A.D.2d 396, 415 N.Y.S.2d 644, 649. Under the doctrine of last clear chance (or "discovered peril" doctrine), as applied in automobile law, a plaintiff may recover from a defendant motorist for injuries or damages suffered, notwithstanding his own contributory negligence, where, as stated in terms of the essential elements of the doctrine, plaintiff was in a place of peril of which he was unaware or from which he was unable to extricate himself, the motorist discovered or had the opportunity to discover plaintiff's peril, and the motorist had the opportunity to avoid the accident through the exercise of reasonable care. The last clear chance doctrine is not recognized in every jurisdiction and is subject to limitations in others. There are many variant forms and applications of this doctrine in the jurisdictions which apply it.

Doctrine imposes upon person duty to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury to another who has negligently put himself in position of peril, and who he can reasonably apprehend is unconscious of or inattentive to peril or unable to avoid imminent harm. Vernon v. Crist, 28 N.C.App. 631, 222 S.E.2d 445, 447. Necessary elements of doctrine are: (1) plaintiff was contributorily negligent by placing herself in a position of immediate peril, (2) plaintiff was unable to remove herself from such peril by the exercise of reasonable care, (3) defendant discovered or should have discovered plaintiff's dangerous situation in time so that by exercising reasonable care defendant could have prevented the accident, (4) defendant failed to exercise any reasonable care, and (5) defendant had the last clear chance to prevent the accident. Shanahan v. Patterson, Colo.App., 539 P.2d 1289, 1290.

See also Discovered peril doctrine.
Last heir. In English law, he to whom lands come by escheat for want of lawful heirs; that is, in some cases, the lord of whom the lands were held; in others, the sovereign.

Last illness. The illness terminating in person's death. Proto v. Chenoweth, 40 Ariz. 312, 11 P.2d 950, 951.

Last-in, first-out (LIFO). A method of accounting which assumes that the most recent purchases are sold first. In times of inflation, the LIFO method results in a lower net income figure and lower inventory valuation than the FIFO method. This is due to the current costs being matched against current revenues and older costs and dollars which remain in inventory.

A method of identifying and valuing inventories which assumes that last goods purchased are the first ones sold and therefore the goods left in inventory at the end of the year are assumed to be those first purchased. L. S. Ayres & Co. v. U. S., C.A.Ind., 285 F.2d 113, 114. Compare FIFO.

Last resort, court of. A court from which there is no further appeal is called the "court of last resort." For example, the United States Supreme Court.

Last sickness. See Last illness.

Last will. Term used alone or with "and testament" to designate the instrument which ultimately fixes the disposition of real and personal property at death. Usually used in reference to most recent will of deceased. See Will.

Lata culpa /lǟyta ˌkō̄lpo/. Lat. In the law of bailment, gross fault or neglect; extreme negligence or carelessness (nimia negligentia).

Lata culpa dolo equiparatur /lǟyta ˌkō̄lpo doˈwlo iˈykwpərəˈjetar/. Gross negligence is equivalent to fraud.

Latching. An under-ground survey.

Late. Defunct; existing recently, but now dead. Formerly; recently; lately.

Latens /ˈlɛtərs/. In old English practice, a writ which passed the neces­sary observation or inspection; one not apparent on face of goods, product, document, etc.

Latent defect. A hidden or concealed defect. One which could not be discovered by observation or inspection made with ordinary care. Bichl v. Poinier, 71 Wash.2d 492, 429 P.2d 228, 231. One which cannot be discovered by observation or inspection made with ordinary care. U.S. v. Lembke Const. Co., Inc., C.A.Ariz., 786 F.2d 1386, 1387. A latent defect in the title of a vendor of land is one not discoverable by inspection made with ordinary care, even though a matter of public record.

Latent equity. See Equity.

Lateral railroad. A lateral road is one which proceeds from some point on the main trunk between its terminal. It is but another name for a branch road, both being a part of the main road. An offshoot from main line of railroad. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Anderson, 167 Or. 687, 120 P.2d 578, 588.

Lateral support. The right of lateral and subjacent support is the right to have land supported by the adjoining land or the soil beneath. The right of a landowner to the natural support of his land by adjoining land. The adjoining owner has the duty not to change his land (such as lowering it) so as to cause this support to be weakened or removed.

Laterare /ˈlɛtərɛriˌ/. To lie sideways, in opposition to lying endways; used in descriptions of lands.

Latifundium /ˈlætəfʌndiˌəm/. Lat. In the civil law, great or large possessions; a great or large field; a common. A great estate made up of smaller ones (fun­dia), which began to be common in the latter times of the empire.

Latifundus /ˈlætəfəndəs/. A possessor of a large estate made up of smaller ones.

Latin. The language of the ancient Romans. There are three sorts of law Latin: (1) Good Latin, allowed by the grammarians and lawyers; (2) false or incongruous Latin, which in times past would abate original writs, though it would not make void any judicial writ, declaration, or plea, etc.; (3) words of art, known only to the sages of the law, and not to grammarians, called "Lawyers' Latin."

Latinarius /ˈlætənəriˌəs/. An interpreter of Latin.

Latini juniani /ˈlætəni ˈjuːnɪnɻiˌən/. Lat. In Roman law, a class of freedmen (libertini) intermediate between the two other classes of freedmen called, respectively, "Cives Romani" and "Dediticii."

Latitāt /ˈlætətət/. In old English practice, a writ which issued in personal actions, on the return of non est inventus to a bill of Middlesex; so called from the emphatic word in its recital, in which it was “testified that the defendant lurks [latitat] and wanders about” in the county. 3 Bl.Comm. 286. Abolished by St. 2, Wm. IV, c. 39.

Latitatio /lətɪˈteɪʃən/ Lat. In the civil law and old English practice, a lying hid; lurking, or concealment of the person.

Lator /lətər/ Lat. In the civil law, a bearer; a messenger. Also a maker or giver of laws.

Laundering. Term used to describe investment or other transfer of money flowing from racketeering, drug transactions, and other illegal sources into legitimate channels so that its original source cannot be traced. Money laundering is a federal crime. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1956.

Laureate /lɔːrɪət/ In old English law, an officer of the household of the sovereign, whose business formerly consisted only in composing an ode annually, on the sovereign’s birthday, and on the new year; sometimes also, though rarely, on occasion of any remarkable victory.

Laurels /ˈlɔːrəls/ Pieces of gold, coined in 1619, with the king’s head laureated; hence the name. See Jacobus.

Laus Deo /lɔs diˈəʊ/ Lat. Praise be to God. An old heading to bills of exchange.

Law. That which is laid down, ordained, or established. A rule or method according to which phenomena or actions co-exist or follow each other. Law, in its generic sense, is a body of rules of action or conduct prescribed by controlling authority, and having binding legal force. United States Fidelity and Guaranty Co. v. Guenther, 281 U.S. 34, 50 S.Ct. 165, 74 L.Ed. 683. That which must be obeyed and followed by citizens subject to sanctions or legal consequences is a law. Law is a solemn expression of the will of the supreme power of the State. Calif.Civil Code, § 22.

The “law” of a state is to be found in its statutory and constitutional enactments, as interpreted by its courts, and, in absence of statute law, in rulings of its courts. Dauer’s Estate v. Zabel, 9 Mich.App. 176, 156 N.W.2d 34, 37.

Word “law” generally contemplates both statutory and case law. Matter of Estate of Perlberg, Tenn.App., 694 S.W.2d 304, 308.

In old English jurisprudence, "law" is used to signify an oath, or the privilege of being sworn; as in the phrases “to wage one’s law,” “to lose one’s law.”

The term is also used in opposition to “fact.” Thus questions of law are to be decided by the court, while it is the province of the jury to resolve questions of fact.

The word may mean or embrace: body of principles, standards and rules promulgated by government, State ex rel. Conway v. Superior Court within and for Greenlee County, 60 Ariz. 69, 131 P.2d 983, 986; command which obliges a person or persons and obliges generally to acts or forbearances of a class; constitution or constitutional provision. Wickham v. Grand River Dam Authority, 189 Okl. 540, 118 P.2d 640, 643; county ordinance, People v. Ziday, 8 Cal.2d 149, 64 P.2d 425, 430; distinct and complete act of positive law; doctrine or procedure of the common law, from which equity is a departure; enrolled bill attested by presiding officers of two branches of General Assembly, Shannon v. Dean, 279 Ky. 279, 130 S.W.2d 812, 815; general rule of human action, taking cognizance only of external acts, enforced by a determinate authority, which authority is human, and among human authorities is that which is paramount in a political society; grant by Legislature, City of Los Angeles v. Pacific Land Corporation, 41 Cal.App.2d 223, 106 P.2d 242, 244; administrative agency rules and regulations, Columbia Broadcasting System v. United States, 316 U.S. 407, 62 S.Ct. 1194, 1200, 86 L.Ed. 1563; judicial decisions, judgments or decrees, West v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 311 U.S. 223, 61 S.Ct. 179, 183, 85 L.Ed. 139; law of the state; legislation by initiative method, Opinion of the Justices, 309 Mass. 676, 35 N.E.2d 676, 680; local rules of deci-

A concurrent or joint resolution of legislature is not a "law", Koenig v. Flynn, 258 N.Y. 292, 179 N.E. 705, 707; Ward v. State, 176 Okl. 368, 56 P.2d 136, 137; a resolution of the house of representatives is not a "law", State ex rel. Todd v. Yelle, 7 Wash.2d 443, 110 P.2d 162, 165; an unconstitutional statute is not a "law", Fournoy v. First Nat. Bank of Shreveport, 197 La. 1067, 3 So.2d 244, 248.

With reference to its origin, "law" is derived either from judicial precedents, from legislation, or from custom.

As to the different kinds of law, or law regarded in its different aspects, see Absolute law; Adjective law; Administrative law; Arms, law of; Bankruptcy Code; Canon (Canon law); Case law; Citations, law of; Civil law; Commercial law; Common law; Conclusion of law; Conflicts of laws; Constitutional law; Criminal law; Custom and usage; Ecclesiastical law; Edict; Enabling statutes; Equity; Evidence, law of; Flag, law of; Foreign laws; Forest law; General law; International law; Local law; Maritime; Maritime law; Marque, law of; Martial law; Mercantile law; Military law; Moral law; Municipal law; Natural law; Oleron, laws of; Ordinance; Organic law; Parliamentary law; Penal laws; Positive law; Private law; Probate; Procedural law; Prospective law; Public law; Remedial laws and statutes; Retrospective law; Revenue law or measure; Road (Law of the road); Roman law; Special law; Staple (Law of the staple); Statute; Substantive law; Unwritten law; War; Wisby, laws of; Written law.

For "facts" and "law" as distinguishable, see Fact. For practice of law, see Practice.

Law arbitrary. Opposed to immutable, a law not found in the nature of things, but imposed by the mere will of the legislature.

Law court of appeals. An appellate tribunal, formerly existing in the state of South Carolina, for hearing appeals from the courts of law.

Law day. See Day.

Law enforcement officer. Those whose duty it is to preserve the peace. Frazier v. Elmore, 180 Tenn. 232, 173 S.W.2d 563, 565. See also Police officer; Sheriff.

Law French. The Norman French language, introduced into England by William the Conqueror. For several centuries, it was, in an emphatic sense, the language of the English law. It is called by Blackstone a "barbarous dialect," and the later specimens of it fully warrant the appellation, but at the time of its introduction it was as has been observed, the best form of the language spoken in Normandy.

Lawful. Legal; warranted or authorized by the law; having the qualifications prescribed by law; not contrary to nor forbidden by the law; not illegal.

The principal distinction between the terms "lawful" and "legal" is that the former contemplates the substance of law, the latter the form of law. To say of an act that it is "lawful" implies that it is authorized, sanctioned, or at any rate not forbidden, by law. To say that it is "legal" implies that it is done or performed in accordance with the forms and usages of law, or in a technical manner. In this sense "illegal" approaches the meaning of "invalid." For example, a contract or will, executed without the required formalities, might be said to be invalid or illegal, but could not be described as unlawful. Further, the word "lawful" more clearly implies an ethical content than does "legal." The latter goes no further than to denote compliance, with positive, technical, or formal rules; while the former usually imports a moral substance or ethical permissibility. A further distinction is that the word "legal" is used as the synonym of "constructive," which "lawful" is not. Thus "legal fraud" is fraud implied or inferred by law, or made out by construction. "Lawful fraud" would be a contradiction of terms. Again, "legal" is used as the antithesis of "equitable." Thus, we speak of "legal assets," "legal estate," etc., but not of "lawful assets," or "lawful estate." But there are some connections in which the two words are used as exact equivalents. Thus, a "lawful" writ, warrant, or process is the same as a "legal" writ, warrant, or process. See also Legal; Legitimate; Valid.

Lawful age. Full age, legal age, majority; generally 18 years of age, though the "lawful age" for certain acts (e.g. drinking, driving motor vehicle, etc.) may vary from state to state. See also Capacity; Legal age.

Lawful arrest. The taking of a person into legal custody either under a valid warrant or on probable cause for believing that he has committed a crime or under civil process which permits his arrest; e.g. capias for arrest of debtor. Term is used in connection with right to search a person and his immediate surroundings without a warrant as an incident of the arrest. Chimel v. California, 395 U.S. 752, 89 S.Ct. 2034, 23 L.Ed.2d 685. See Arrest; Probable cause; Search; Search-warrant.

Lawful authorities. Those persons who have right to exercise public power, to require obedience to their lawful commands, to command or act in the public name; e.g. police.

Lawful cause. Legitimate reason for acting, based on the law or on the evidence in a particular case as contrasted with acting on a whim or out of prejudice, or for a reason not recognized by the law. See also Cause of action.

Lawful dependents. Term generally associated with allowances or benefits from public (e.g. Social Security benefits) or private funds to those who qualify as dependents and whose dependency is within the terms of the law which govern the distribution. Term is also used with respect to tax exemptions for dependents. See also Dependent; Legal dependent.

Lawful discharge. Such a discharge in insolvency as exonerates the debtor from his debts; e.g. discharge pursuant to bankruptcy proceeding.

Lawful entry. An entry on real estate, by one out of possession, under claim or color of right and without force or fraud. An entry of premises pursuant to a search warrant. See Ejection; Eviction; Process (Summary process); Search Warrant.

Lawful goods. Property which may be legally held, sold, or exported; non-contraband property.

Lawful heirs. See Heirs.

Lawful issue. As used in will the words primarily and generally mean descendants. In re Marsh's Will, 143 Misc. 609, 257 N.Y.S. 514, 521; including descendants more remote than children. In re Woodcock's Will, Sur., 55 N.Y.S.2d 656, 658. At common law, the term includes only those who were children of legally recognized subsisting marriage. Lawful descendants; lineal descendants by blood; heirs. In re Sheffer's Will, 139 Misc. 519, 249 N.Y.S. 102, 104. See Descendent; Heirs; Issue.

Lawful man. A freeman, unattainted, and capable of bearing oath; a legalis homo.

Lawful money. Money which is a legal tender in payment of debts. See Legal tender.

Lawful representatives. Where real property is involved as subject-matter, term "lawful representatives" includes or means legal heirs. Where personal property is involved the term, when not qualified by context, is limited to executors and administrators.

Law latin. The corrupt form of the Latin language employed in the old English lawbooks and legal proceedings.

Lawless. Not subject to law; not controlled by law; not authorized by law; not observing the rules and forms of law.

Law list. A publication compiling the names and addresses of those engaged in the practice of law and information of interest to the legal profession often including the courts, court calendars, lawyers engaged in specialized fields (as admiralty or patent law), public officers, stenographers, handwriting experts, private investigators, or abstracts of law. A legal directory; e.g. the "Law Directory", as published by Martindale-Hubbell. There are law listings or directories for most states and also for many of the larger cities.

Law lords. Peers in the British parliament who have held high judicial office, or have been distinguished in the legal profession; i.e. a puisne judge of the High Court or higher office.

Law of the case. Term "law of the case," as generally used, designates the principle that if an appellate court has passed on a legal question and remanded the cause to the court below for further proceedings, the legal question thus determined by the appellate court will not be differently determined on a subsequent appeal in the same case where the facts remain the same. Allen v. Michigan Bell Tel. Co., 61 Mich.App. 62, 232 N.W.2d 302, 303. Doctrine which provides that an appellate court's determination on a legal issue is binding on both the trial court on remand and an appellate court on a subsequent appeal given the same case and substantially the same facts. Hinds v. McNair, Ind.App., 413 N.E.2d 586, 607.

Doctrine is that principle under which determination of questions of law will generally be held to govern case throughout all its subsequent stages where such determination has already been made on a prior appeal to a court of last resort. Transport Ins. Co. v. Employers Cas. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 470 S.W.2d 757, 762. The doctrine expresses practice of courts generally to refuse to reopen what has been decided. White v. Higgins, C.C.A. Mass., 116 F.2d 312, 317, 318; Fleming v. Campbell, 148 Kan. 516, 83 P.2d 708, 709. It expresses the rule that final judgment of highest court is final determination of parties' rights.

Doctrine of "law of the case" is one of policy only and will be disregarded when compelling circumstances call for a redetermination of the determination of point of law on prior appeal, and this is particularly true where intervening or contemporaneous change in law has occurred by overruling former decisions or establishment of new precedent by controlling authority. Ryan v. Mike-Ron Corp., Cal.App., 63 Cal.Rptr. 601, 605. Doctrine is merely a rule of procedure and does not go to the power of the court, and will not be adhered to where its application will result in an unjust decision. People v. Medina, Cal., 99 Cal.Rptr. 630, 635, 492 P.2d 686.

Jury instructions. It has been held that jury instructions are the "law of the case" where appealing defendant accepted instructions as correct, Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. McDadoo, C.C.A.Ark., 115 F.2d 369, 370; where such were approved on former appeal and given at second trial, Whitehead v. Stith, 279 Ky. 556, 131 S.W.2d 455, 460; where instructions were not challenged in any manner or in any particular, New York Life Ins. Co. v. Stone, C.C.A.Mass., 80 F.2d 614, 616; Codd v. New York Underwriters Ins. Co., 19 Wash.2d 671, 144 P.2d 234, 237; where no objections or exceptions taken, Miller v. Mohr, 198 Wash. 619, 89 P.2d 807, 814.

See also Collateral estoppel; Res judicata.

Law of the flag. See Flag, law of.

Law of the land. Due process of law (q.v.). Body of law consisting of court decisions, statutes, and treaties. See U.S. Const., Art. VI, § 2. By the law of the land is most clearly intended the general law which bears before it condemns, which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial. Dupuy v. Tedora, 204 La. 560, 15 So.2d 886, 891. The meaning is that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and immunities under the protection of general rules which govern society. See also Due process of law; Law.

Law of the road. See Road (Law of the road).

Law questions. Issues or questions in a case which do not require findings of fact but are addressed to the judge for application of the law. In those instances wherein the law depends on the facts, the factual questions are first decided and then the law is applied to the facts as found by the judge or jury. Compare Fact question.

Law reporters or reports. Published volumes containing the decisions and opinions of state and federal courts; e.g. National Reporter System. Commonly such decisions are first published in advance sheets and thereafter in bound reports or reporter volumes. Law reports or reporters may be either official (published by the state or federal government) or unofficial (published by private publisher). See e.g. Federal Reporter.

Law review. A periodic publication of most law schools containing lead articles on topical subjects by law professors, judges or attorneys, and case summaries by law review member-students. Normally only honor or top law students are members of the law review staff.

Laws. Rules promulgated by government as a means to an ordered society. Strictly speaking, session laws or statutes and not decisions of court; though in common usage refers to both legislative and court made law, as well as to administrative rules, regulations and ordinances. See also Law.

Lay fee. A fee held by ordinary feudal tenure, as distinguished from the ecclesiastical tenure of frankalmoign, by which an ecclesiastical corporation held of the donor. The tenure of frankalmoign is reserved by St. 12, Car. II, which abolished military tenures. 2 Bl.Comm. 101.

Lay impropriator. In English ecclesiastical law, a lay person holding a spiritual appropriation.

Laying foundation. In law of evidence, the practice or requirement of introducing evidence of things necessary to make further evidence relevant, material or competent; e.g. the hypothetical question propounded before an expert is permitted to render his opinion. See Fed. Evid.R. 104.

Laying the venue. Stating in the complaint or declaration the district or county in which the plaintiff proposes that the trial of the action shall take place.

Lay investiture. In Ecclesiastical law, the ceremony of putting a bishop in possession of the temporalities of his diocese.

Lay judge. A judge who is not learned in the law, i.e., not a lawyer; employed in some of the states as assessors or assistants to the presiding judges in the nisi prius courts or courts of first instance. Many justices of the peace are, or were, not lawyers.

Layman. One of the people, and not one of the clergy; one who is not of a particular profession (i.e. non-lawyer).

Layoff. A termination of employment at the will of employer. Such may be temporary (e.g. caused by seasonal or adverse economic conditions) or permanent.

Lay people. Jurymen.

Lay system. As applied to fishing vessels, exists where the fish caught are sold at auction and from the proceeds is deducted charges for supplies furnished and balance distributed to the master and the crew.

Lay witness. Person called to give testimony who does not possess any expertise in the matters about which he testifies. Used in contrast to expert witness who may render an opinion based on his expert knowledge if proper foundation is laid. Generally, such non-expert testimony in the form of opinions or inferences is limited to those opinions or inferences which are (a) rationally based on the perception of the witness (i.e. first-hand knowledge or observation) and (b) helpful to a clear understanding of his testimony or the determination of a fact at issue. Fed.Evid.R. 701. See Opinion evidence or testimony. Compare Expert witness.

Lazzi. A Saxon term for persons of a servile condition.

L.C. An abbreviation which may stand either for "Lord Chancellor," "Lower Canada," or "Leading Cases."

LEAA. Law Enforcement Assistance Act.

Lead counsel. The counsel on either side of a litigated action who is charged with the principal management and direction of the party's case, as distinguished from his juniors or subordinates, is said to "lead in the cause," and is termed the "leading counsel" on that side. May also refer to chief or primary attorney in class action or multi-district litigation.

Leading a use. In common law, where a deed was executed before the levy of a fine of land, for the purpose of specifying to whose use the fine should inure, it was said to "lead" the use. If executed after the fine, it was said to "declare" the use. 2 Bl.Comm. 363.

Leading case. Among the various cases that are argued and determined in the courts, some, from their important character, have demanded more than usual attention from the judges, and from this circumstance are frequently looked upon as having settled or determined the law upon all points involved in such cases, and as guides for subsequent decisions, and from the importance they thus acquire are familiarly termed "leading cases." See e.g. Marbury v. Madison.

Leading object rule. If the leading object or main purpose of a person's promise to answer for the debt of another is the promisor's own benefit, such promise need not be in writing as required by the statute of frauds; sometimes known as the "main purpose" doctrine.

Leading question. One which instructs witness how to answer or puts into his mouth words to be echoed back, People v. Hamilton, Gen.Sess., 30 N.Y.S.2d 155, 158; one which suggests to witness answer desired, or a question admitting of being answered by a simple "yes" or "no". Boone v. State, 223 A.2d 476, 492.

Leading questions are usually deemed improper on the direct examination of a witness except as may be necessary to develop the witnesses' testimony. Ordinarily leading questions are permitted on cross-examination. When a party calls a hostile witness, an adverse party, or a witness identified with an adverse party, interrogation may be by leading questions. Fed.Evid.R. 611(c).

Even on direct examination, leading questions may be permitted if the witness is very young, mentally disabled, or unfamiliar with the language spoken. And may, in certain circumstances, also be permitted to facilitate a witness's introduction of subject of inquiry; e.g., police officer may be led as to activities leading up to events in dispute in order to save time.

Leap-year. See Bissextile.

Learn. To gain knowledge or information of; to ascertain by inquiry, study, or investigation.

Learned. Possessing learning; erudite; versed in the law; informed. In statutes prescribing the qualifications of judges, "learned in the law" designates one who has received a regular legal education, the almost invariable evidence of which is the fact of his admission to the bar.

Learning. Legal doctrine.

Lease. Any agreement which gives rise to relationship of landlord and tenant (real property) or lessor and lessee (real or personal property). Smith v. Royal Ins. Co., C.C.A.Cal., 111 F.2d 667, 671. A contract for exclusive possession of lands, tenements or hereditaments for life, for term of years, at will, or for any interest less than that of lessor, usually for a specified rent or compensation. Feeley v. Michigan Ave. Nat. Bank, 1 Dist., 141 Ill.App.3d 187, 95 Ill.Dec. 542, 545, 490 N.E.2d 15, 18. Contract wherein one lets to the other a certain space, property or building for specified unit of time, generally a week, month or year. Spiers v. Lake Shore Enterprises, Inc., La.App., 210 So.2d 901, 903. Agreement under which owner gives up possession and use of his property for valuable consideration and for definite term and at end of term owner has absolute right to retake, control and use property. Transamerica Leasing Corp. v. Bureau of Revenue, App., 80 N.M. 48, 450 P.2d 934, 937.

When used with reference to tangible personal property, word "lease" means a contract by which one owning such property grants to another the right to possess, use and enjoy it for specified period of time in exchange for periodic payment of a stipulated price, referred to as rent. Undercoffer v. Whitemay Neon Ad, Inc., 114 Ga. App. 644, 152 S.E.2d 616, 618.

The Federal Consumer Leasing Act provides for certain disclosure requirements in consumer leases. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1667 et seq. In addition, certain states require that consumer (e.g. residential) leases be written in "plain language." See McKinney's (N.Y.) Consol.Laws, Gen Obl, § 5–702. See also U.C.C. Article 2A with respect to consumer leases.

The person who conveys is termed the "lessor," and the person to whom conveyed, the "lessee;" and when the lessor conveys lands or tenements to a lessee, he is said to lease, demise, or let them. The word when used as verb, means to transfer for term specified therein from lessor to lessee property therein demised, also to let, to farm out, to rent.

See also Assignable lease; Community lease; Consumer lease; Demise; Finance lease; Graduated lease; Ground lease; Mining lease; Net lease; Operating lease; Percentage lease; Sale and leaseback; Sandwich lease; Underlease. For Extension of lease, see Extension. Compare License.

Concurrent lease. One granted for a term which is to commence before the expiration or other determination of a previous lease of the same premises made to another person; or, in other words, an assignment of a part of the reversion, entitling the lessee to all the rents accruing on the previous lease after the date of his lease and to appropriate remedies against the holding tenant.

Graduated lease. Lease that takes into consideration future increases in operating expenses. In a graduated lease there must be a base year on which an increase is judged. With inflation and continuing increases in taxes, energy costs, and other expenses, this type lease has become more popular than the fixed-straight lease.

Gross lease. Lease in which lessee pays a flat sum for rent out of which the lessor is required to pay all expenses such as taxes, water, utilities, insurance, etc.

Index lease. A lease arrangement that provides for increases in rent according to increases in the consumer price index. See also Graduated lease.
Lease and release. A species of conveyance much used in England, said to have been invented by Serjeant Moore, soon after the enactment of the Statute of Uses. It is thus contrived: A lease, or rather bargain and sale upon some pecuniary consideration for one year, is made by the tenant of the freehold to the lessee or bargainee. This, without any enrolment, makes the bargainer stand seised to the use of the bargainee, and vests in the bargainee the use of the term for one year, and then the statute immediately annexes the possession. Being thus in possession, he is capable of receiving a release of the freehold and reversion, which must be made to the tenant in possession, and accordingly the next day a release is granted to him. The lease and release, when used as a conveyance of the fee, have the joint operation of a single conveyance. 2 Bl.Comm. 339. By the Law of Property Act of 1925 all lands and all interests therein now lie in grant only.

Long term lease. See Ground rent.

Master lease. A main lease controlling subsequent leases or subleases.

Mineral lease. Lease in which the lessee acquires the right to work a mine of oil or gas, etc. The rent is commonly based on the amount or value of the mineral withdrawn.

Mining lease. See Mining.

Month to month lease. Tenancy where no lease is involved, rent being paid monthly. Statutes often require one month's notice to landlord of intent to terminate such tenancy.

Net lease. Lease which requires the tenant to pay, in addition to rent, the expenses of the leased property, e.g., taxes, insurance, maintenance, etc.

Net-net-net lease. Lease in which the lessee pays all the expenses including mortgage interest and amortization leaving the lessor with an amount free of all claims.

Parol lease. A lease of real estate not evidenced by writing, but resting in an oral agreement.

Percentage lease. A percentage lease is one in which the amount of rent is based upon a percentage of the gross or net profits of the lessee's business, or of his gross sales, with a stipulated minimum rent. Such leases are mainly used where location of the property is an important part of its value (e.g., in shopping center).

Perpetual lease. A lease of lands which may last without limitation as to time; a grant of lands in fee with the reservation of a rent in fee; a fee-farm.

Proprietary lease. Lease used in cooperative form of ownership in which lessee acquires right to possession.

Sublease, or underlease. One executed by the lessee to a third person, conveying the same estate for a shorter term than that for which the lessee holds it. See also Sublease.

Top lease. A lease granted on property already subject to an oil and gas lease. Generally, a top lease grants rights if and when the existing lease expires. Shown v. Getty Oil Co., Tex.App., 645 S.W.2d 555.

Leaseback. Transaction whereby transferor sells property and later leases it back. In a sale-leaseback situation, for example, R would sell property to S and subsequently lease such property from S. Thus, R becomes the lessee and S the lessor.

Leasehold. An estate in real property held by lessee/tenant under a lease. The four principal types of leasehold estates are the estate for years, periodic tenancy, tenancy at will, and tenancy at sufferance. The asset representing the right of the lessee to use leased property.

Leasehold improvements. Improvements made by lessee to leased property such as parking lot or driveway. The term is used in condemnation proceedings to determine the portion of the award to which the lessee is entitled.

Leasehold interest. The interest of the lessee or the lessee under a lease contract. U.C.C. § 2A-103. The interest which the lessee has in the value of the lease itself in condemnation award determination. The difference between the total remaining rent under the lease, and the rent lessee would currently pay for similar space for the same time period. See also Leasehold value; No bonus clause.

Leasehold mortgage. See Mortgage.

Leasehold mortgage bond. See Bond.

Leasehold value. The value of a leasehold interest. Usually applies to a long term lease when market rental for similar space is higher than rent paid under the lease. Some states allow the lessee to claim the leasehold value against the landlord in eminent domain proceedings, unless specifically prohibited by the lease itself. Other states, by statute, do not allow for such a claim. See also Leasehold interest; No bonus clause.

Lease with option to purchase. A lease under which the lessee has the right to purchase the property. The price and terms of the purchase must be set forth for the option to be valid. The option may run for the length of the lease period.

Leant [-9:ewo'ytéy/. L. Fr. Legality; sufficiency in law.

Leave, v. To give. To allow or cause to remain; to let remain, unmoved or undone; to refrain from or neglect taking, doing, or changing; to let stay or continue; to let be without interference; to suffer to remain subject to another's action, control, or the like; to suffer to be undisturbed in action. To give or dispose of by will; to bequeath or devise. To put, place, deposit, deliver, or the like.

Leave, n. Permission or authorization to do something. Willful departure with intent to remain away, and not temporary absence with intention of returning. See also Desertion.
Leave and license. A defense to an action in trespass setting up the consent of the plaintiff to the trespass complained of.

Leave no issue. Not survived by a child or children or their descendants. A spouse of a deceased child is not "issue" (q.v.). In re Vigil's Estate, 38 N.M. 383, 34 P.2d 667, 668.

Leave of absence. Temporary absence from employment or duty with intention to return during which time remuneration and seniority are not normally affected. State ex rel. McGaughey v. Grayston, 349 Mo. 700, 163 S.W.2d 335, 341. See also Furlough; Sick leave.

Leave of court. Permission obtained from a court to take some action which, without such permission, would not be allowable; as, to receive an extension of time to answer complaint. Fed.R.Civil P. 6.

Leccator /lsèktarat/ A debauched person.

Lecherwite, lairwite, or legerwite /lécharwáyt/ /lèrywart/ /léjerwart/. At common law, a fine for adultery or fornication, anciently paid to the lords of certain manors.

Le contrat fait la loi /lə kontrát fey la lwa/. The contract makes the law.

Ledger /lèjər/. A book of accounts, often referred to as a general ledger, in which a business records transactions; there being two parallel columns in each account, one for the debit entries, the other for the credits. Into this book are posted the items from the books of original entry or journals. The principal book of accounts of a business establishment in which all the transactions of each day are entered under appropriate heads so as to show at a glance the debits and credits of each account. Foothill Ditch Co. v. Wallace Ranch Water Co., 25 Cal. App.2d 555, 78 P.2d 215, 220. See also Journal.

Leido /lìyòdə/. The rising water or increase of the sea.

Leet. In English law, the name of a court of criminal jurisdiction, formerly of much importance, but latterly fallen into disuse. See Court-Leet.

Left. To let remain or have remaining at death; to transmit, bequeath or give by will. Grimes v. Crouch, 175 Va. 126, 7 S.E.2d 115, 117. See also Bequest; Devise; Leave; Legacy.

Legabilis /lægəbələs/. In old English law, that which may be bequeathed.

Legacy. A disposition of personality by will. A bequest.

In a technical sense and strictly construed, "legacy" is a gift or bequest by will of personal property, whereas a "devise" is a testamentary disposition of real estate, but such distinction will not be permitted to defeat the intent of a testator, and such terms may be construed interchangeably or applied indifferently to either personality or real estate if the context of the will shows that such was the intention of the testator. Festorazzi v. First Nat. Bank of Mobile, 288 Ala. 645, 264 So.2d 496, 505.

See also Ademption; Bequest; Cumulative legacies; Devise; Legatee; Vested legacy.

Absolute legacy. One given without condition and intended to vest immediately.

Accumulative legacy. A second, double, or additional legacy; a legacy given in addition to another given by the same instrument, or by another instrument.

Additional legacy. One given to the same legatee in addition to (and not in lieu of) another legacy given before by the same will, or in a codicil thereto.

Alternate legacy. One by which the testator gives one of two or more things without designating which.

Conditional legacy. One which is liable to take effect or to be defeated according to the occurrence or non-occurrence of some uncertain event.

Contingent legacy. A legacy given to a person at a future uncertain time, that may or may not arrive; as "at his age of twenty-one," or "if" or "when he attains twenty-one." A legacy made dependent upon some uncertain event. A legacy which has not vested.

Cumulative legacies. These are legacies so called to distinguish them from legacies which are merely repeated. In the construction of testamentary instruments, the question often arises whether, where a testator has twice bequeathed a legacy to the same person, the legatee is entitled to both, or only to one of them; in other words, whether the second legacy must be considered as a mere repetition of the first, or as cumulative, i.e., additional. In determining this question, the intention of the testator, if it appears on the face of the instrument, prevails.

Demonstrative legacy. A bequest of a certain sum of money, with a direction that it shall be paid out of a particular fund. It differs from a specific legacy in this respect: that, if the fund out of which it is payable fails for any cause, it is nevertheless entitled to come on the estate as a general legacy. And it differs from a general legacy in this: that it does not abate in that class, but in the class of specific legacies. Kenaday v. Sinnott, 179 U.S. 606, 21 S.Ct. 233, 45 L.Ed. 339. A bequest of a certain sum of money, stock, or other property, payable out of a particular fund of property or security, but it can neither amount to a gift of the corpus nor serve the purpose of releasing the estate from liability in event particular fund or property should fail. In re Jeffcott's Estate, Fla.App., 186 So.2d 80, 83. A legacy of quantity is ordinarily a general legacy; but there are legacies of quantity in the nature of specific legacies, as of so much money, with reference to a particular fund for payment. This kind of legacy is called by the civilians a "demonstrative legacy," and it is so far general and differs so much in effect from one properly specific that, if the fund be called in or fail, the legatee will not be deprived of his legacy, but be permitted to receive it out of the general assets; yet the legacy is so far specific that it will not be liable to abate with general legacies upon a deficiency of assets.

General legacy. A pecuniary legacy which is payable out of general assets of estate of testator, being bequest of money or other thing in quantity and not separated or distinguished from others of the same kind. Shamberger v. Dessel, 240 Md. 650, 215 A.2d 177, 179, 15 A.L.R.3d 1029. One so given as not to amount to a testator, distinguished from others of the same kind; one of quantity merely, not specific. Compare Specific legacy, below.

Indefinite legacy. One which passes property by a general or collective term, without enumeration of number or quantity; as, a bequest of "all" the testator's "goods," or his "bank stock."

Lapsed legacy. Where the legatee dies before the testator, or before the legacy is payable, the bequest is said to lapse. Such legacy then falls into residue unless there is an anti-lapse statute in which case the legacy passes to the issue of the legatee. See Lapse statutes.

Modal legacy. A bequest accompanied by directions as to the mode or manner in which it shall be applied for the legatee's benefit, e.g., a legacy to A. to buy him a house.

Pecuniary legacy. A bequest of a sum of money, or of an annuity. It may or may not specify the fund from which it is to be drawn. It is none the less a pecuniary legacy if it comprises the specific pieces of money in a designated receptacle, as a purse or chest.

Residuary legacy. A bequest of all the testator's personal estate not otherwise effectively disposed of by his will. A bequest of "all the rest, residue, and remainder" of the personal property after payment of debts and satisfaction of the particular legacies. Legacy containing assets after other legacies and estate debts and costs of administration have been paid. Alston v. U. S., C.A.Ga., 349 F.2d 87, 89.

Special legacy. A "specific legacy" (q.v.) is sometimes so called.

Specific legacy. One which operates on property particularly designated. A legacy or gift by will of a particular specified thing, as of a horse, a piece of furniture, a term of years, and the like. In a strict sense, a legacy of a particular chattel, which is specified and distinguished from all other chattels of the testator of the same kind; as of a horse of a certain color. A legacy of a quantity of chattels described collectively; as a gift of all the testator's pictures. A legacy is specific, when it is limited to a particular thing, subject, or chose in action, so identified as to render the bequest inapplicable to any other; as the bequest of a horse, a picture, or jewel, or a debt due from a person named, and, in special cases, even of a sum of money. Compare General legacy, above.

Trust legacy. A bequest of personal property to trustees to be held upon trust; as, to pay the annual income to a beneficiary for life.

Universal legacy. In the civil law, a testamentary disposition by which the testator gives to one or several persons the whole of the property which he leaves at his decease.

Void legacy. Term formerly used to describe legacy given to one who died before execution of will. Now, such legacy is considered a lapsed legacy and is treated as such. See Legacy (Lapsed legacy).

Legacy duty. A duty formerly imposed in England upon personal property (other than leaseholds) devolving under any will or intestacy.

Legacy or succession tax. An excise on privilege of taking property by will or inheritance or by succession on death of owner. In re Rosing's Estate, 337 Mo. 544, 85 S.W.2d 495, 496; State Tax Commission v. Backman, 88 Utah 424, 55 P.2d 171, 174. See also Inheritance tax.

Legal. 1. Conforming to the law; according to law; required or permitted by law; not forbidden or disallowed by law; good and effectual in law; of or pertaining to the law; lawful. Freeman v. Fowler Packing Co., 135 Kan. 378, 11 P.2d 276, 277. See Lawful; Valid.

2. Proper or sufficient to be recognized by the law; cognizable in the courts; competent or adequate to fulfill the requirements of the law.

3. Cognizable in courts of law, as distinguished from courts of equity; construed or governed by the rules and principles of law, in contradistinction to rules of equity. With the merger in most states of law and equity courts, this distinction generally no longer exists. Fed.R.Civ. Proc. 2.

4. Posited by the courts as the inference or imputation of the law, as a matter of construction, rather than established by actual proof; e.g., legal malice.

5. Created by law.

As to Legal Consideration; Damages; Day; Debt; Defense; Demand; Disability; Discretion; Estate; Incapacity; Irregularity; Memory; Mortgage; Process; Relevancy; Remedy; Reversion, and Tender, see those titles.

Legal acumen /liygal akyůwman/. The doctrine of legal acumen is that if a defect in, or invalidity of, a claim to land is such as to require legal acumen to discover it, whether it appears upon the face of the record or proceedings, or is to be proved aliunde, then the powers or jurisdiction of a court of equity may be invoked to remove the cloud created by such defect or invalidity.

Legal age. The age at which the person acquires full capacity to make his own contracts and deeds and transact business generally (age of majority) or to enter into some particular contract or relation, as the "legal age of consent" to marriage. The age at which a person may enter into binding contracts or commit other legal acts. In most states a minor reaches legal age or majority (i.e., becomes of age) at age 18, though for certain acts (e.g. drinking) it may be higher, and for others (e.g. driving) it may be lower. See also Capacity; Majority.
Legal aid. Country-wide system administered locally by which legal services are rendered to those in financial need and who cannot afford private counsel. See Counsel, right to; Indigent; Legal Services Corporation; Public defender.

Legal assets. That portion of the assets of a deceased party which by law is directly liable, in the hands of his executor or administrator, to the payment of debts and legacies. Such assets as can be reached in the hands of an executor or administrator, by a suit at law against him.

Legal brief. Document containing brief statement of facts of case, issues and arguments; used most commonly on appeal, but also used at trial level (trial brief) when requested by trial judge. Content of appellate briefs is usually governed by court rules; e.g. Fed.R.App.P. 28-32. See also Brief.

Legal capacity to sue. Right to come into court. American Home Benefit Ass'n v. United American Benefit Ass'n, 63 Idaho 754, 125 P.2d 1010, 1016. It is not necessary in pleadings to aver the capacity of a party to sue or be sued, except to the extent required to show the jurisdiction of the court. A party desiring to raise the issue of lack of capacity shall do so by specific negative averment. Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(a). See also Capacity; Standing to sue doctrine.

Legal cause. Proximate cause (q.v.). Substantial factor in bringing about harm. Krauss v. Greenburg, C.C.A. Pa., 137 P.2d 569, 572; Giles v. Moundridge Milling Co., 351 Mo. 568, 173 S.W.2d 745, 750. In conflicts, denotes fact that the manner in which the actor's tortious conduct has resulted in another's injury is such that the law holds the actor responsible unless there is some defense to liability. Restatement, Second, Conflicts, § 160, Comment a.

The words "legal cause" are used throughout the Restatement of Torts to denote the fact that the causal sequence by which the actor's tortious conduct has resulted in an invasion of some legally protected interest of another is such that the law holds the actor responsible for such harm unless there is some defense to liability. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 9. See also Cause; Cause of action.

Legal conclusion. A statement of legal duty without stating fact from which duty arises. Burton-Lingo Co. v. Morton, Tex.Civ.App., 126 S.W.2d 727, 733. A particular statement which would be considered a statement of fact in everyday conversation might, nevertheless, be considered a "legal conclusion" when used in connection with a legal proceeding if the truth of the fact stated is one of the ultimate issues to be determined in such proceeding. Cortner v. National Cash Register Co., 25 Ohio Misc. 156, 262 N.E.2d 586, 588. See also Decision; Judgment.

Legal cruelty. Such as will warrant the granting of a divorce to the injured party, as distinguished from such kinds or degrees of cruelty as do not. Such conduct on the part of a spouse as will endanger the life, person, or health (bodily or mental) of his or her spouse, or create a reasonable apprehension of bodily or mental hurt; such acts as render cohabitation unsafe, or are likely to be attended with injury to the person or to the health of the spouse. See also Cruelty; Mental cruelty.

Legal custody. Restraint of or responsibility for a person according to law, such as a guardian's authority over the person or property, or both, of his ward. See also Commitment; Custody; Guardian; Ward.

Legal death. See Brain death; Civil death.

Legal dependent. Dependent according to law. The term imports right to invoke aid of law to require support. See Dependent; Lawful dependents; Support; Ward.

Legal description. A description of real property by government survey, metes and bounds, or lot numbers of a recorded plat including a description of any portion thereof subject to an easement or reservation, if any. Such must be complete enough that a particular parcel of land can be located and identified. See Land boundaries; Metes and bounds.

Legal detriment. Legal detriment to promisee means that promisee changed his legal position, or assumed duties or liabilities not theretofore imposed on him on reliance of actions of promisor. State ex rel. Kansas City v. State Highway Commission, 349 Mo. 865, 163 S.W.2d 948, 953. Term refers to giving up something which immediately prior thereto the promisee was privileged to retain, or doing or refraining from doing something which he was then privileged not to do, or not to refrain from doing. See also Consideration; Detriment.

Legal discretion. See Discretion.

Legal distributees. As used in will, term is construed to mean persons who would be entitled to take under the law.

Legal duty. An obligation arising from contract of the parties or the operation of the law; e.g. legal duty of parents to support children. Ferrell v. Hass, 136 Ga. App. 274, 220 S.E.2d 771, 773. That which the law requires to be done or forborne to a determinate person or the public at large, correlative to a vested and coextensive right in such person or the public, and the breach of which constitutes negligence. An obligation recognized by law which requires an actor to conform to a certain standard of conduct for the protection of others against unreasonable risk. Swartz v. Huffmaster Alarms Systems, Inc., 145 Mich.App. 431, 377 N.W.2d 393, 395. See also Legal obligation; Support.

Legal entity. Legal existence. An entity, other than a natural person, who has sufficient existence in legal contemplation that it can function legally, be sued or sue and make decisions through agents as in the case of corporations.

Legal estoppel. Estoppel by deed or record, as distinguished from estoppel by matter in pais. It excludes evidence of the truth and the equity of the particular case to support a strict rule of law on grounds of public policy. See also Estoppel.

Legal ethics. Usages and customs among members of the legal profession, involving their moral and professional duties toward one another, toward clients, and toward the courts. That branch of moral science which treats of the duties which a member of the legal profession owes to the public, to the court, to his professional brethren, and to his client. Most states have adopted the Model Rules of Professional Conduct of the American Bar Association. See also Canon.

Legal evidence. A broad general term meaning all admissible evidence, including both oral and documentary, but with a further implication that it must be of such a character as tends reasonably and substantially to prove the point, not to raise a mere suspicion or conjecture. See also Admissible; Evidence; Relevant evidence.

Legal excuse. Doctrine by which one seeks to avoid the consequences of his own conduct by showing justification for acts which would otherwise be considered negligent or criminal; e.g. killing of another in self defense. Gibbs v. Wilmeth, 261 Iowa 1015, 157 N.W.2d 93, 96. See also Excusable; Justification; Legal impossibility; Self-defense.

Legal fiction. Assumption of fact made by court as basis for deciding a legal question. A situation contrived by the law to permit a court to dispose of a matter, though it need not be created improperly; e.g. fiction of lost grant as basis for title by adverse possession.

Legal fraud. Contracts or acts as, though not originating in actual evil design to perpetrate fraud, yet by their tendency to mislead others or to violate confidence, are prohibited by law. Ruedy v. Toledo Factories Co., 61 Ohio App. 21, 22 N.E.2d 293, 297, 15 O.O. 56. Breach of some legal or equitable duty which, irrespective of moral guilt, the law declares fraudulent because of its tendency to deceive others, to violate confidence, or to injure public interests. Capitol Rod & Gun Club v. Lower Colorado River Authority, Tex.App., 622 S.W.2d 887, 892. Misrepresentation of a material fact made willfully to deceive, or recklessly without knowledge, and acted on by the opposite party to his damages constitutes "legal fraud." Coffey v. Winingen, 156 Ind.App. 233, 296 N.E.2d 154, 160.

Synonymous with "constructive fraud." Purcell v. Robertson, 122 W.Va. 287, 8 S.E.2d 881, 883; Tom Reed Gold Mines Co. v. United Eastern Mining Co., 39 Ariz. 533, 8 P.2d 449, 451. For definition of Constructive fraud, see Fraud.

Legal holiday. A day designated by law as exempt from judicial proceedings, service of process, demand and protest of commercial paper, etc. A day designated by legislative enactment for purpose within meaning of term "holiday." Vidal v. Backs, 218 Cal. 99, 21 P.2d 952. Fed.R.Civ. P. 6(a), 77(c).

The legal or practical effect of a day being a "legal holiday" varies from state to state. A "holiday" may in some states be a day on which service of process is invalid, on which all or only some businesses are closed, on which state offices may or may not be closed. The statutes should be consulted in individual cases, as well as local custom, to determine if a "holiday" affects some particular contemplated action. See also Holiday.

Legal impossibility. As defense to criminal charge, occurs when the actions which the defendant performs or sets in motion, even if fully carried out as he desires, would not constitute a crime, whereas "factual impossibility" occurs when the objective of the defendant is proscribed by the criminal law but a circumstance unknown to the actor prevents him from bringing about that objective. U.S. v. Oviedo, C.A.Tex., 525 F.2d 881, 883. Defense of "legal impossibility" may be established only where a defendant's actions, if fully performed, would not constitute a crime, while "factual impossibility" can serve as a defense only where circumstances unknown to the actor prevent his commission of an offense. U. S. v. Johnston, C.A.Ark., 543 F.2d 55, 58. See also Impossibility.

Legal insanity. See Insanity.

Legal interest. A rate of interest fixed by statute as either the maximum rate of interest permitted to be charged by law, or a rate of interest to be applied when the parties to a contract intend an interest rate to be paid but do not fix the rate in the contract. Even in the latter case, frequently this rate is the same as the statutory maximum rate permitted. Term may also be used to distinguish interest in property or in claim cognizable at law in contrast to equitable interest. See also Legal owner; Usury.

Legal investments. Those investments sometimes called "legal lists" in which banks and other financial institutions may invest. State statutes often provide that trust funds be invested only in high grade, "legal lists," securities. See also Legal list; Prudent Man Rule.

Legalis homo. Lat. A lawful man; a person who stands rectus in curia; a person not outlawed, excommunicated, or infamous. It occurs in the phrase, "probi et legales homines" (good and lawful men, competent jurors), and "legality" designates the condition of such a man.

Legalis moneta angliæ /lagéylas maniýta ǽngliyiy/.

Lawful money of England.

Legal issue. When used in will and unexplained by context, means descendants. In proper context, may refer to legal question which is at the foundation of a case and which requires decision by court. See issue; Legal heirs.

Legality, or legalness. Lawfulness.

Legalization. The act of legalizing or making legal or lawful.

Legalize. To make legal or lawful. Wight v. New Jersey Racing Commission, 128 N.J.L. 517, 26 A.2d 709, 712. To confirm or validate what was before void or unlawful. To add the sanction and authority of law to that which before was without or against law. See also Legalize.

Legalized nuisance. A structure, erection, or other thing which would constitute a nuisance at common law, but which cannot be objected to by private persons because constructed or maintained under direct and sufficient legislative authority. Such, for example, are hospitals or recreational areas maintained by cities.

Legal jeopardy. A person is in "legal jeopardy" when he is put upon trial before a court of competent jurisdiction upon an indictment or information which is sufficient in form and substance to sustain a conviction, and a jury has been "charged with his deliverance," and a jury is thus charged when they have been impaneled and sworn. State v. Whitman, 93 Utah 557, 74 P.2d 696, 697. See also Jeopardy.

Legal liability. A liability which courts recognize and enforce as between parties litigant. See also Legally liable; Liability; Strict liability.

Legal life estate. Interest in real or personal property for the life of the holder and enforceable at law in contrast to equitable life estate.

Legal list. A list of investments selected by various states in which certain institutions and fiduciaries, such as insurance companies and banks, may invest. Legal lists are often restricted to high quality securities meeting certain specifications. See also Legal investments; Prudent Man Rule.

Legally. Lawfully; according to law.

Legally adopted. Adopted in accordance with laws of state.

Legally committed. Refers to accused who has been committed by magistrate who has jurisdiction to hold examination and who has actually heard evidence and determined probable cause exists for holding defendant. People v. Dal Porto, 17 Cal.App.2d 755, 63 P.2d 1199, 1200. See also Commitment.

Legally competent. Words "legally competent" in statute prescribing qualifications of executor mean fit or qualified to act according to judicial standards essential to proper course of justice. In re Haefele’s Estate, 145 Neb. 809, 18 N.W.2d 228, 231. See also Capacity.

Legally constituted court. One known to and recognized by law. See Constitutional court.

Legally determined. Determined by process of law. Black Diamond S. S. Corporation v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, D.C.Md., 33 F.2d 787, 789.

Legally reside. Domicile. Mitchell v. Kinney, 242 Ala. 196, 5 So.2d 788, 793. See Domicile; Legal residence; Residence.

Legally sufficient consideration. Consideration which the law recognizes as legally adequate to support a valid contract. See Consideration.

Legally sufficient evidence. Competent, pertinent evidence coming from a legal source. Evidence is "legally sufficient to sustain finding", if supported by substantial evidence, and record as whole does not clearly, convincingly, or even, possibly, indisputably require contrary conclusion. Tracey v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.6, 53 F.2d 575, 579. See Evidence; Relevant evidence.

Legally sufficient tender. A tender made under circumstances that fulfill obligations assumed by vendors. Kolling v. Martin, 109 Ind.App. 184, 33 N.E.2d 808, 815. See Legal tender.

Legally using automobile. See Legally operating automobile, supra.

Legal malice. Such consists of either an express intent to kill or inflict great bodily harm, or of a wickedness of disposition, hardness of heart, cruelty, recklessness of consequences and a mind regardless of social duty which indicates an unjustified disregard for the likelihood of death or great bodily harm and an extreme indifference to the value of human life. Cmwlth. v. Coleman, 455 Pa. 508, 318 A.2d 716, 717.

An expression used as the equivalent of "constructive malice," or "malice in law." Inference of malice which can be reasonably drawn from wrongful act. Chrisman v. Terminal R. Ass’n of St. Louis, 237 Mo.App. 181, 157 S.W.2d 230, 235. Intentional doing of a wrongful act without just cause. For purposes of determining punitive damages, standard for "legal malice" is that there be wrongful act intentionally committed and without just cause or excuse. Labrier v. Anheuser Ford, Inc., Mo., 621 S.W.2d 51, 58. See also Malice.

Legal malpractice. See Malpractice.

Legal monopoly. See Monopoly.

Legal name. Under common law consists of one Christian name and one surname, and the insertion, omission, or mistake in middle name or initial is immaterial. The "legal name" of an individual consists of a given or baptismal name, usually assumed at birth, and a surname deriving from the common name of the parents. Application of Green, 54 Misc.2d 606, 283 N.Y.S.2d 242, 245.

Legal negligence. Negligence per se; the omission of such care as ordinarily prudent persons exercise and deem adequate to the circumstances of the case. In cases where the common experience of mankind and the common judgment of prudent persons have recognized that to do or omit certain acts is productive of danger, the doing or omission of them is "legal negligence." Failure to perform duty law imposes on one person for benefit of another. See also Strict liability.

Legal newspaper. Newspapers published nationally and in major cities containing summaries of important court decisions, recently enacted or pending legislation or regulatory changes, and, locally, notices of bankruptcies, probate, foreclosure, divorce, etc. proceedings, and also news of general interest to the legal profession.

Legal notice. Such notice as is adequate in point of law; notice as the law requires to be given for the specific purpose or in the particular case. Such legal notice is typically required to be published a specified number of times in a legal and/or general circulation newspaper; may also be required to be posted in designated area in court house. See also Notice.

Legal obligation. A legal obligation against state is an obligation which would form basis of judgment against state in court of competent jurisdiction should Legislature permit state to be sued. Fort Worth Cavalry Club, Inc. v. Sheppard, 125 Tex. 339, 83 S.W.2d 660, 663. In its broadest sense, any duty imposed by law; e.g. duty of parent to support children. See also Legal duty; Support.

Legal owner. The term has come to be used in technical contrast to the equitable owner, and not as opposed to an illegal owner. The legal owner has title to the property, although the title may actually carry no rights to the property other than a lien.

Legal opinion. A document in which an official such as a state attorney general, a city solicitor or a private attorney, renders his or her understanding of the law as applied to the assumed facts. It may or may not serve as protection to one acting on it, depending on the nature of it and the law governing such opinions. It may concern the state of a real estate title on which a buyer or lender may act.

Legal personal representative. Generally, when applied by testator to personality, signifies "executors and administrators" and when applied to realty those upon whom law casts real estate immediately upon death of ancestor. Hogate v. Hogate, 132 N.J.Eq. 480, 28 A.2d 769, 771. As respects delivery of deposit on behalf of deceased seaman, means the public administrator, or executor or administrator appointed in state where seaman resided. See Legal representative.

Legal possessor. One who, but for the reservation of strict legal title in conditional vendor, or the giving of a strict legal title in a conditional vendor, or the giving of a strict legal title to a chattel mortgagee, would have the status of a full and unqualified owner. One who has the legal right to possession of property as contrasted with the owner of such property who has legal title. See Legal owner.

Legal prejudice. Legal prejudice which will defeat plaintiff's motion to dismiss is such as deprives defendant of substantive rights of property, or concerns his defense, which will not be available or may be endangered in a second suit. General Motors Acceptance Corporation v. Baker, 161 Misc. 238, 291 N.Y.S. 1015.

Legal presumption. For presumption of law, see Presumption.

Legal privy. "Legal privy", within rule that defense of usury is personal to debtor and those in legal privy with him, means those upon whom title or interest is cast by law. An agent and his principal are in legal privy to each other. See also Privy.

Legal proceedings. Term includes all proceedings authorized or sanctioned by law, and brought or instituted in a court or legal tribunal, for the acquiring of a right or the enforcement of a remedy.

Legal rate of interest. See Legal interest; Usury.

Legal representative. The term in its broadest sense, means one who stands in place of, and represents the interests of, another. A person who oversees the legal affairs of another. Examples include the executor or administrator of an estate and a court appointed guardian of a minor or incompetent person.

Term "legal representative," which is almost always held to be synonymous with term "personal representative," means, in accident cases, member of family entitled to benefits under wrongful death statute. Unsatisfied Claim and Judgment Fund v. Hamilton, 256 Md. 56, 259 A.2d 303, 306.

Legal recission. Rescission by act of parties. Aron v. Mid-Continent Co., 141 Neb. 806, 4 N.W.2d 884, 886. See also Rescind; Recission of contract; Void, Voidable.

Legal reserve. Liquid assets which life insurance companies are required by statute to set aside and maintain to assure payment of claims and benefits. Lubin v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S., 326 Ill.App. 358, 61 N.E.2d 753, 754; Old Surety Life Ins. Co. of Alva, Okl., v. Morrow, 195 Okl. 442, 158 P.2d 715, 717. In banking, that amount of percentage of bank deposits which must by law be maintained in cash or equally liquid assets to meet the demands of depositors.

Legal residence. The place of domicile or permanent abode, as distinguished from temporary residence. Permanent fixed place of abode which person intends to be his residence and to which he intends to return despite temporary residences elsewhere or despite temporary absences. U. S. v. Calhoun, C.A.Fla., 566 F.2d 969, 973. Place recognized by law as residence of person. See also Domicile; Residence.

Legal right. Natural rights, rights existing as result of contract, and rights created or recognized by law. Fine v. Pratt, Tex.Civ.App., 150 S.W.2d 308, 311.

Legal secretary. An employee of an attorney or law office whose responsibilities include the typing of legal documents, memoranda and correspondence, the keeping of records and files, giving and receiving notices, and such other duties as required by her or his employer in the practice of law.

Legal separation. A court order arranging the terms (custody, support, etc.) under which a married couple will live separately. See also Divorce (divorce a mensa et thoro); Separate maintenance; Separation of spouses.

Legal Services Corporation. The Legal Services Corporation was established by the Legal Services Corporation Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C.A. § 2996) to provide financial support for legal assistance in noncriminal proceedings to persons financially unable to afford legal services. The Corporation provides financial assistance to eligible clients and makes grants to and contracts with individuals, firms, corporations, organizations, and State and local governments for the purpose of providing legal assistance to these clients.

Legal subdivisions. Divisions of land which result from application of ordinary methods used in making of a government survey.

Legal subrogation. A right arising by operation of law. Seller of goods may demand payment by legal tender but he is required to give an extension of time reasonably necessary to procure it. U.C.C. § 2–511(2).

Legal title. One cognizable or enforceable in a court of law, or one which is complete and perfect so far as regards the apparent right of ownership and possession, but which carries no beneficial interest in the property, another person being equitably entitled thereto; in either case, the antithesis of "equitable title." It may also mean appearance of title as distinguished from complete title, Southern Carbon Co. v. State, 171 Misc. 566, 13 N.Y.S.2d 7, 9; full and absolute title or apparent right of ownership with beneficial or equitable title in another; not necessarily record title. Barnes v. Boyd, D.C.W.Va., 8 F.Supp. 584, 597. A tax title, which is prima facie valid, is a "legal title". Murray v. Holland, 108 Ind. App. 236, 27 N.E.2d 126, 128. See Title.

Legal usufrecht /liygal yuwafrak/. Usufructs established by operation of law are legal usufrights, Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co. v. Abdalla, 203 La. 999, 14 So.2d 815; e.g., the usufruct collated for surviving spouse in necessitous circumstances. See also Usufrecht.

Legal willfulness. Intentional disregard of known duty necessary to safety of person or property of another and entire absence of care for life, person or property of others. Bartolucci v. Falleti, 314 Ill.App. 551, 41 N.E.2d 777, 780.

Legantine constitutions /légant nit konst(y)uwshanz/. The name of a code of ecclesiastical laws, enacted in national synods, held under legates from Pope Gregory IX, and Clement IV, in the reign of Henry III, about the years 1220 and 1268.

Legare /lagéry/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, to bequeath; to leave or give by will; to give in anticipation of death.

Legatarius /légatéryas/. Lat. In the civil law, one to whom a thing is bequeathed; a legatee or legatory. In old European law, a legate, messenger, or envoy.

Legatary /légatáry/. One to whom anything is bequeathed; a legatee. This word is sometimes, though seldom, used to designate a legate or nuncio.

Legatee /légatéy/. The person to whom a legacy in a will is given. The term may be used to denominate those who take under will without any distinction between reality and personality, Broker v. Broker, Tex. Civ.App., 76 S.W.2d 180, 183; though commonly it refers to one who takes personal property under a will. See Legacy.

Residuary legatee. The person to whom a testator bequeaths the residue of his personal estate, after the payment of such other legacies as are specifically mentioned in the will.

Legates /légətəs/. Nuncios, deputies, or extraordinary ambassadors sent by the pope to be his representatives and to exercise his jurisdiction in countries where the Roman Catholic Church is established by law.

Legation. An embassy; a diplomatic minister and his suite. The persons commissioned by one government to exercise diplomatic functions at the court of another, including the minister, secretaries, attaches, interpreters, etc., are collectively styled the "legation" of their government. The word also denotes the official residence of a foreign minister.

Legator /lägēytər/. One who makes a will, and leaves legacies.

Legatory /lägətəri/. In old English law, the third part of a freeman’s personal estate, which by the custom of London, in case he had a wife and children, the freeman might always have disposed of by will.

Legatos violare contra jus gentium est /lägëytəsw väyålèriy kôntrə jás jēnsh(i)yəm əst/. It is contrary to the law of nations to injure ambassadors.

Legatum /lägëytəm/. Lat. In old English law, a legacy given to the church, or an accustomed mortuary. In the civil law, a legacy; a gift left by a deceased person, to be executed by the heir.

Legatum morte testatoris tantum confirmatur, sicut donationi inter vivos traditione sola /lägëytəm mörtiə těstətɔrəs təntu mònʃərməytər əsik ətənəyıh(i)yəkw intr vəywəvəs ədəshiyōw niwəsə/. A legacy is confirmed by the death of a testator, in the same manner as a gift from a living person is by delivery alone.

Legatum optionis /lägëytəm əphəhiyōwəns/. In Roman law, a legacy to A. B. of any article or articles that A. B. could not, prior to Justinian, make the selection for him, but the legacy failed altogether. Justinian, however, made the legacy good, and enabled the representative to choose.

Legatus regis vice fungitur a quo destinatur et honorandus est sicut ille cujus vicem gerit /lägëytəs ríjəs väyåyi fənjəstər əy kwəw dəstənəyət ət ənərəndəs əst əsik liy kywəji väyåyi jəhrət/. An ambassador fills the place of the king by whom he is sent, and is to be honored as he is whose place he fills.

Legem /läyjam/. Lat. Accusative of lex, law. Occurring in various legal phrases, as follows:

Legem amittere /läyjam əmìtəri/. To lose one’s law; that is, to lose one’s privilege of being admitted to take an oath.

Legem facere /läyjam fəyəsəri/. In old English law, to make law or oath.

Legem ferre /läyjam fəhrə/. In Roman law, to propose a law to the people for their adoption.

Legem habere /läyjam həbəri/. To be capable of giving evidence upon oath. Witnesses who had been convicted of crime were incapable of giving evidence, until 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85.

Legem jubere /läyjam jəbəri/. In Roman law, to give consent and authority to a proposed law; to make or pass it.

Legem pone /läyjam pəwni/. To propound or lay down the law. By an extremely obscure derivation or analogy, this term was formerly used as a slang equivalent for payment in cash or in ready money.

Legem sciscere /läyjam səsəri/. To give consent and authority to a proposed law; applied to the consent of the people.

Legem terræ amittentes, perpetuum infamous notam inde merito incurrunt /läyjam tərə əmɨtətəs əpətəpəum infyəmiyəm niwətəm indi míərətstəw inkəhərənt/. Those who lose the law of the land, then justly incur the ineffaceable brand of infamy.

Legem vadiare /läyjam vədəiyəri/. In Old English law, to wage law; to offer or to give pledge to make defense, by oath, with compurgators.

Legenita. A fine for criminal conversation with a woman. See Leguita.

Leges /läyjiyəz/. Lat. Laws. At Rome, the leges (the decrees of the people in a strict sense) were laws which were proposed by a magistrate presiding in the senate, and adopted by the Roman people in the comitia centuriata.

Leges Angliae /läyjiyəz əŋgliyi/. The laws of England, as distinguished from the civil law and other foreign systems.

Leges Angliae sunt tripartitae,—jus commune, consuetudines, ac decreta comitiorum /läyjiyəz əŋgliyi sənt əpətəpəum ətə jəs kəməmıyi nəwədəniyi, ək dəkriyətə əkəmiyiyoɾəm/. The laws of England are threefold,—common law, customs, and decrees of parliament.

Leges barbarorum /läyjiyəz bərbaraɾəm/. A class name for the codes of medieval European law.

Leges Edwardi confessoris /läyjiyəz əʊdərdəi kənfaʃərɔs/. A name used for a legal treatise written from 1130 to 1135, which presents the law in force toward the end of Henry I. Its authority is said to be undeserved.

Leges et consuetudini regni /läyjiyəz ət kənswətəti rəgnəy/. The accepted name for the common law from an early time; since the latter half of the 12th century at least.

Leges figendi et refigendi consuetudo est periculosissima /läyjiyəz fəjkəndəi ət rəfəjkəndəi kənswətəti rəwdəw əst pərık(ɪ)yələwšəsi/. The practice of fixing and refixing [making and remaking] the laws is a most dangerous one.

Leges Henrici /lïjyjy ënëyrâysy/. A book written between 1114 and 1118 containing Anglo-Saxon and Norman law. It is said to be an invaluable source of knowledge of the period preceding the full development of the Norman law.

Leges humane nascentur, vivunt, et morientur /lïjyjy hyämëyniy naskântar, vayvânt, êt mïrïyântar/. Human laws are born, live, and die.

Leges Julii /lïjyjy jûwlïjiy/. Laws enacted during the reign of Augustus or of Julius Caesar which, with the lex abutia, effectively abolished the legis actiones.

Leges naturæ perfectissimæ sunt et immutabiles; humani vero juris conditio semper in infinitum decurrit, et nihil est in eo quod perpetuo stare posse. The laws of nature are most perfect and immutable; but the condition of human law is an unending succession, and there is nothing in it which can continue perpetually. Human laws are born, live, and die.

Leges non verbis, sed rebus, sunt impositae /lïjyjy nõn vërbis, sëd rëbës sënt âmpòzïtiy/. Laws are imposed, not on words, but things.

Leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant /lïjyjy pasêriyjyjy prëjrïyjy jântërijës âbragant/. Later laws abrogate prior laws that are contrary to them.

Leges sacratae /lïjyjy skrëydïy/. All solemn compacts between the plebeians and patricians were so called.

Leges scriptae /lïjyjy skrïpiyi/. In English law, written laws; statute laws, or acts of parliament which were made before time of memory. Action which relate to subjects of permanent or general character are "legislative". Keigley v. Bench, 97 Utah 69, 89 P.2d 480, 484, 485. Making or having the power to make a law or laws.

Legibus sumptis desinentibus, lege natureae, utendum est /lïjyjay sâm(p)tas dësnëntëbas lïjyjy naty(y)ûriy yuwtëndam ëst/. When laws imposed by the state fail, we must act by the law of nature.

Legiosus /lïjyjyôwssas/. In old records, litigious, and so subjected to a course of law.

Legis constructio non facit injuriam /lïjyjy kânstrûkshiyow fôns fôysat anjûriyamiy/. The construction of law does no injury.

Legis interpretatio legis vim obtinet /lïjyjy ântâprätë-yshiyow lïjyjy vëm òbûtant/. The interpretation of law obtains the force of law.

Legislation. The act of giving or enacting laws; the power to make laws; the act of legislating; preparation and enactment of laws; the making of laws via legislation, in contrast to court-made laws. Formulation of rule for the future. Laws enacted by lawmaking body (e.g. by Congress or state legislature). Oklahoma City, Okl. v. Dolesse, C.C.A.Okl., 48 F.2d 734, 738. See also Act (Legislative act); Bill; Class legislation; Statute.

Legislative. Making or giving laws; pertaining to the function of law-making or to the process of enactment of laws. One which prescribes what the law shall be in future cases arising under its provisions. Forstner v. City and County of San Francisco, 52 Cal.Rptr. 621, 626, 243 C.A.2d 625, 67 C.2d 666. See Statute.

Legislative act. Enactment of laws. Law (i.e. statute) passed by legislature in contrast to court-made law.哪 one which prescribes what the law shall be in future cases arising under its provisions. Constitutions, etc.

Legislative apportionment. Amend. XIV, § 2, of U.S. Const. provides that representatives to congress "shall be apportioned among the several states according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each state." Equal protection under the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution requires the allocation of representatives on a population basis and a justiciable issue is presented when a claim is made that states are denying right of representation to its citizens. Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 82 S.Ct. 691, 7 L.Ed.2d 663. See also Apportionment; Reapportionment.

Legislative council. A legislative agency used in some states which is composed of legislators and other selected officials who study legislative problems and plan legislative strategy between regular legislative sessions.

Legislative counsel. A person or agency specially charged with assisting legislators in fulfilling their legislative tasks. Legislative counsel handles problems of research, drafting bills, legislative hearings, and other technical legislative details.

Legislative courts. Courts created by legislature in contrast to those created by constitution (e.g. Art. III of...
LEGISLATIVE COURTS

U.S. Const.). In many states almost all courts are created by Legislature, though court of last resort is commonly creature of its constitution. Compare Constitutional court.

Legislative department. That department of government (i.e., Congress, consisting of Senate and House of Representatives; Art. I of U.S. Const.) whose appropriate function is the making or enactment of laws, as distinguished from the judicial department (Article III), which interprets and applies the laws, and the executive department (Article II), which carries them into execution and effect. See also Legislature.

Legislative districting. The apportionment or division of a legislative body into territorial districts. See Apportionment; Legislative apportionment; Reapportionment.

Legislative divorce. A divorce decreed by an act of the legislature as to one particular couple and not by judicial decree. While legislative divorces once existed in New England states, and parliamentary divorces once were granted in England, such have long been superseded by judicial divorces.

Legislative history. The background and events, including committee reports, hearings, and floor debates, leading up to enactment of a law. Such history is important to courts when they are required to determine the legislative intent of a particular statute. Legislative histories of major statutes are published in U.S. Code, Congressional and Administrative News.

Legislative immunity. The Constitution grants two immunities to Congressmen, first, that except for treason, felony, and a breach of the peace, they are "privileged from Arrest during their Attendance" at sessions of their body, and, second, that "for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place." (Art. I, § 6, cl. 1). The first immunity is of little practical value, for its exceptions withdraw all criminal offenses and arrests therefrom by the privilege, and it does not apply to the service of any process in a civil or criminal matter. The second immunity is liberally construed and includes not only opinion, speeches, debates, or other oral matter, but also voting, making a written report or presenting a resolution, and in general to whatever a congressman feels necessary to transact the legislative functions and business. Even a claim of a bad motive does not destroy the immunity, for it is the public good which is thereby served. E.g., United States v. Ballin, 144 U.S. 1, 12 S.Ct. 507, 36 L.Ed. 321; United States v. Smith, 286 U.S. 6, 52 S.Ct. 475, 76 L.Ed. 954.

Legislative intent. Such is looked to when court attempts to construe or interpret a statute which is ambiguous or inconsistent. See also Legislative history.

Legislative investigations. Legislatures are empowered to make investigations as an incident of their legislative authority; included are powers of subpoena, cross examination, etc. Quinn v. United States, 349 U.S. 155, 161, 75 S.Ct. 668, 99 L.Ed. 964.

Legislative jurisdiction. The sphere of authority of a legislative body to enact laws and to conduct all business incidental to its law-making function. Art. I of U.S. Constitution.

Legislative officer. A member of the legislative body or department of a state or municipal corporation. One of those whose duties relate mainly to the enactment of laws, such as members of congress and of the several state legislatures. These officers are confined in their duties by the constitution generally to make laws, though sometimes, in cases of impeachment, one of the houses of the legislature exercises judicial functions somewhat similar to those of a grand jury, by presenting to the other articles of impeachment, and the other house acts as a court in trying such impeachment.

Legislative power. The lawmaking powers of a legislative body, whose functions include the power to make, alter, amend and repeal laws. In essence, the legislature has the power to make laws and such power is reposed exclusively in such body though it may delegate rule making and regulatory powers to departments in the executive branch. It may not, however, delegate its law making powers nor is the judicial branch permitted to obtrude into its legislative powers. The enumerated powers of Congress are provided for in Article I of the U.S. Constitution.

Legislative rule. A rule issued by an administrative agency pursuant to statutory authority implementing statute that has force and effect of law. American Medical Ass'n v. Heckler, D.C. Ind., 606 F. Supp. 1422, 1439. Those rules that are promulgated pursuant to congressional delegation of power to issue rules and regulations that have force of law and are binding on courts because they are source of law that court and agency must enforce. American Trucking Ass'n, Inc. v. U.S., C.A. 11, 688 F.2d 1337, 1341.

Legislator. One who makes laws; a member of a federal, state or municipal lawmaking body; senator, representative, assemblyman.

Legislatorum est viva vox, rebus et non verbis legem imponere /léjís látorum ést vayvá vóks, ríbys èt nón várbs líyjam impównariy/. The voice of legislators is a living voice, to impose laws on things, and not on words.

Legislature. The department, assembly, or body of persons that makes statutory laws for a state or nation. At the federal level, and in most states, the legislature is bicameral in structure, usually consisting of two branches; i.e. upper house (Senate) and lower house (House of Representatives or Assembly). Legislative bodies at the local levels are variously called city councils, boards of Legitimi hreredes /liliyas manisar n°n taniiyar in ëkyskyùwshiyyówny iyìsi(h)iyay st(y)ùway ëyüwjàriy òt rëtrasi(y)ài. / The minister of the law is bound, in the execution of his office, not to fly nor to retreat.

Legisperitus /liliysparâytäs/. Lat. A person skilled or learned in the law; a lawyer or advocate.

Legitimacy. Lawful birth; the condition of being born in wedlock; the opposite of illegitimacy or bastardy.

Legitimate, v. To make lawful; to confer legitimacy; e.g., to place a child born before marriage on the legal footing of those born in lawful wedlock.

Legitimate, adj. That which is lawful, legal, recognized by law, or according to law; as, legitimate children, legitimate authority, lawful power, legitimate sport or amusement. People v. Commons, 64 Cal.App.2d Supp. 925, 146 F.2d 724, 731. Real, valid, or genuine. United States v. Schenck, C.C.A.N.Y., 126 F.2d 702, 705, 707. See Presumption of legitimacy.

Legitimation. The making legitimate or lawful that which was not originally so; especially the statutory procedure of legalizing (legitimating) the status of an illegitimate child. Such is usually necessary to assure inheritance rights to child.

Legitimation per subsequens matrimonium /lajitaméyshon pàr sëbëykwonz mëtramównyiyam/. The legitimation of a bastard by the subsequent marriage of his parents.

Legitime /lajitamiy/. Lat. In the civil law, that portion of a parent's estate of which he cannot disinherit his children without a legal cause. That interest in a succession of which forced heirs may not be deprived. It may also apply to father or mother.

Legitime imperanti parere necessè est /lajitamény imparântay pariríy naséisy èst/. One lawfully commanding must be obeyed.

Legitimi hæredes /lajitamay harydïyiz/. Lat. In Roman law, legitimate heirs; the agnate relations of the estate-leaver; so called because the inheritance was given to them by a law of the Twelve Tables.

Legitimus /lajitamæs/. Lawful; legitimate. Legitus hæres et filius est quem nuptiæ demonstrat, a lawful son and heir is he whom the marriage points out to be lawful.

Legit vel non? /liliyát wél nón/. In old English practice, this was the formal question propounded to the ordinary when a prisoner claimed the benefit of clergy,—does he read or not? If the ordinary found that the prisoner was entitled to clergy, his formal answer was, "Legit ut clericus," he reads like a clerk.

Legruitâ. In old records, a fine for criminal conversation with a woman. See Legerita.

Le guidon de la mer /là gydòwn do la mér/. The title of a French work on marine insurance, by an unknown author, dating back, probably, to the sixteenth century, and said to have been prepared for the merchants of Rouen. It is noteworthy as being the earliest treatise on that subject now extant.

Leguleius /lëgyaliyâs/. A person skilled in law (in legis bus versat/us); one versed in the forms of law.

Lehurecht. The German feudal law.

Leidgrave /lëyogrëyw/. An officer under the Saxon government, who had jurisdiction over a lath.

Leîpa /llîypo/. In old English law, a fugitive or runaway.

Le ley de dieu et ley de terre sont tout un; et l'un et l'autre preferre et favour le common et publique bien del terre. The law of God and the law of the land are all one; and both preserve and favor the common and public good of the land.

Le ley est le plus haut enheritance que le roy ad, car per le ley il mesme et toutes ses sujets sont rules; et, si le ley ne fuit, null roy ne nul enheritance serra. The law is the highest inheritance that the king possesses, for by the law both he and all his subjects are ruled; and, if there were no law, there would be neither king nor inheritance.

Lemon laws. Laws enacted in many states governing rights of purchasers of new and used motor vehicles which do not function properly and which have to repeatedly be returned to the dealer for repairs. Such laws give redress to purchasers and permit refund of purchase price after certain steps are taken and opportunity has been given dealer to correct defects.

Le mort saisit le vif. Doctrine of "le mort saisit le vif" requires that there can be no gap in seisin, and on death of de cujus, legal title immediately vests in heirs of deceased, and that is not to say that doctrine is so narrow as to exclude unknown heirs or absent heirs at date of death. Kuchenig v. California Co., C.A.La., 410 F.2d 222, 230.

Lend. To give or put out for hire or compensation. To part with a thing of value to another for a time fixed or indefinite, yet to have some time in ending, to be used or enjoyed by that other; the thing itself or the equivalent of it to be given back at the time fixed, or when lawfully asked for, with or without compensation for the use as may be agreed upon. Term "lend" when used in a will means to "give" or "devise." To provide money to another for a period of time, usually with interest charge to be incurred by borrower. See also Loan.

Lender. He from whom a thing or money is borrowed. The bailor of an article loaned. A bank or other lending institution.

Lending or loaning money or credit. Transactions creating customary relation of borrower and lender, in which money is borrowed for fixed time on borrower's promise to repay amount borrowed at stated time in future with interest at fixed rate. Bannock County v. Citizens' Bank & Trust Co., 53 Idaho 159, 22 P.2d 674.
LENITY RULE

Lenity Rule. This rule provides that where there is ambiguity in the language of a statute concerning multiple punishment, ambiguity should be resolved in favor of lenity in sentencing. U.S. v. Barrington, C.A.Va., 662 F.2d 1046, 1054.

Lent. In Ecclesiastical law, the quadragesimal fast; a time of abstinence; the time from Ash Wednesday to Easter.

Leod. People; a people; a nation.

Leodes /liēwowydz/. In old European law, a vassal, or leige; man; service; a were or weeregild.

Leonina societas /liyanayn saasaytəs/. Lat. An attempted partnership, in which one party was to bear all the losses, and have no share in the profits. This was a void partnership in Roman law; and, apparently, it would also be void as a partnership in English law, as being inherently inconsistent with the notion of partnership.

Leprosos owendo /leproswow ëymswëndow/. An ancient writ that lay to remove a leper or lazar, who thrust himself into the company of his neighbors in any parish, either in the church or at other public meetings, to their annoyance.

Le roi, or roy /la rœy/la (w)jej/. The old law-French words for "the king".

Le roi veut en delibérer. The king will deliberate on it. This is the formula which the king of the French used when he intended to veto an act of the legislative assembly.

Le roy (or la reine) le veut. The king (or the queen) wills it. The form of the royal assent to public bills in parliament.

Le roy (or la reine) remercie ses loyal sujets, acceple leur benevolence, et ainsi le veut. The king (or the queen) thanks his (or her) loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and therefore wills it to be so. The form of the royal assent to a bill of supply.

Le roy (or la reine) s'avisera. The king (or queen) will advise upon it. The form of words used to express the refusal of the royal assent to public bills in parliament. 1 Bl.Comm. 184. This is supposed to correspond to the judicial phrase "curia advisari vult" (q.v.).

Le salut du peuple est la supreme loi. The safety of the people is the highest law.

Leschewes. Trees fallen by chance or windfalls.

Lese majesty /liyz májesti/. The old English and Scotch translation of "læsa majestas," or high treason.

Les fictions naissent de la loi, et non la loi des fictions /ley fiksyōwn nēs da la lwā, ey nōwn la lwā dey fiksyōwn/. Fictions arise from the law, and not law from fictions.

Lesing or leasing. Gleaning.

Lesion /liyzhan/. Damage; injury; detriment; sore; wound. Gasperino v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, Mo.App., 107 S.W.2d 819, 827. Hurt, loss, or injury.

Lesor. He who grants a lease. One who rents property to another. In the case of real estate, the lesor is also known as the landlord. One who has leased land for a definite or indefinite period, by a written or parol lease, irrespective of whether a statute of fraud requires the lease to be in writing. City of Tyler v. Ingram, 139 Tex. 600, 164 S.W.2d 516, 520. See also Landlord.

A person who transfers the right to possession and use of goods under a lease. Unless the context clearly indicates otherwise, the term includes a sublessor.

U.C.C. § 2A-103.

Lessor of the plaintiff. In the common law action of ejectionment, this was the party who really and in effect prosecuted the action and was interested in its result. The reason of his having been so called arose from the circumstance of the action having been carried on in the name of a nominal plaintiff (John Doe), to whom the real plaintiff had granted a fictitious lease, and thus had become his lessor.

Lessor’s interest. The present value of the future income under the lease, plus the present value of the property after the lease expires (reversion).

Let, v. Contracts. To award to one of several persons, who have submitted proposals (bids) therefor, the contract for erecting public works or doing some part of the work connected therewith, or rendering some other service to government for a stipulated compensation. Letting the contract is the choosing one from among the number of bidders, and the formal making of the contract with him. The letting, or putting out, is a different thing from the invitation to make proposals; the letting is subsequent to the invitation. It is the act of awarding the contract to the proposer, after the proposals have been received and considered.

Conveyancing. To demise or lease a certain property. See Lease.

Judicial orders and decrees. The word “let” (in the imperative) imports a positive direction or command. Thus the phrase “let the writ issue as prayed” is equivalent to “it is hereby ordered that the writ issue,” etc.

Practice. To deliver. “To let to bail” is to deliver to bail on arrest.

Let, n. In old conveyancing, hindrance; obstruction; interruption.

Lethal weapon. A deadly weapon (q.v.).

Letter. One of the arbitrary marks or characters constituting the alphabet, and used in written language as the representatives of sounds or articulations of the human organs of speech.

A dispatch or epistle; a written or printed message; a communication in writing from one person to another at a distance. In the imperial law of Rome, “letter” or “epistle” was the name of the answer returned by the emperor to a question of law submitted to him by the magistrates.

A commision, patent, or written instrument containing or attesting the grant of some power, authority, or right.

The word appears in this generic sense in many compound phrases known to commercial law and jurisprudence; e.g., letter of attorney, letter missive, letter of credit, letters patent. The plural is frequently used.

Metaphorically, the verbal expression; the strict literal meaning. The letter of a statute, as distinguished from its spirit, means the strict and exact force of the language employed, as distinguished from the general purpose and policy of the law.

As to letters of Administration; Advice; Attorney; Credit; Recommendation, see those titles. As to Letters patent, see Patent.

Letter-book. A book in which a merchant or trader keeps copies of letters sent by him to his correspondents.

Letter missive. In old English law, a letter from the king or queen to a dean and chapter, containing the name of the person whom he would have them elect as bishop. A request addressed to a peer, peeress, or lord of parliament against whom a bill has been filed desiring the defendant to appear and answer to the bill. In civil-law practice, the phrase “letters missive,” or “letters dimissory,” is sometimes used to denote the papers sent up on an appeal by the judge or court below to the superior tribunal, otherwise called the “apostles” (q.v.).

Letter of administration. See Letters of administration.

Letter of advice. Drawer’s communication to the drawee that a described draft has been drawn. U.C.C. § 3-701(1).

Letter of attornment. A letter from a grantor to a tenant, stating that the property has been sold, and directing rent to be paid to the grantee (new owner).

Letter of comment. Letters of comment are sent out by the S.E.C. in most cases as a means of informing registrants of securities offerings of the respects in which a registration statement is deemed not to meet the disclosure and other requirements of the Securities Exchange Act and the forms and regulations thereunder. A letter of comment may not be sent out, however, where the circumstances are such that an investigatory or stop order proceeding is deemed more appropriate.

Letter of credence. In international law, the document which accredits an ambassador, minister, or envoy to the courts or government to which he is sent; i.e., certifies to his appointment and qualification, and be-speaks credit for his official actions and representations.

Letter of credit. An engagement by a bank or other person made at the request of a customer that the issuer will honor drafts or other demands for payment upon
LETTER OF CREDIT

Transferable credit. A letter of credit that authorizes the beneficiary to assign the right to draw thereunder.

Traveler’s letter. Type of letter of credit used by one traveling abroad in which the issuing bank authorizes payment of funds to holder in the local currency by a local bank. The holder signs a check on the issuing bank and the local bank forwards it to the issuing bank for its credit.

Letter of exchange. A bill of exchange (q.v.).

Letter of intent. A letter of intent is customarily employed to reduce to writing a preliminary understanding of parties who intend to enter into contract, Garner v. Boyd, D.C.Tex., 330 F.Supp. 22, 25, or who intend to take some other action such as merger of companies.

Letter of license. In English law, a written instrument in the nature of an agreement, signed by all the creditors of a failing or embarrassed debtor in trade, granting him an extension of time for the payment of the debts, allowing him in the meantime to carry on the business in the hope of recuperation, and protecting him from arrest, suit, or other interference pending the agreement. A similar arrangement with creditors is provided for in United States under the federal Bankruptcy Act. See Arrangement with creditors.

Letter of marque and reprisal. An authorization formerly granted in time of war by a government to the owner of a private vessel to capture enemy vessels and goods on the high seas. Art. I, Sec. 8 of U.S. Const. The signatory powers to the Declaration of Paris in 1856 agreed to stop issuing such authorizations.

Letter of recall. A document addressed by the executive of one nation to that of another, informing the latter that a minister sent by the former has been recalled. May also refer to letter sent by manufacturer of product to purchasers requesting that they bring product, automobile, etc. into dealer to repair or replace item.

Letter of recredentials /lê̄dər sv riykrôdê̆nshâl/. A document embodying the formal action of a government upon a letter of recall of a foreign minister. It, in effect, accredits him back to his own government. It is addressed to the latter government, and is delivered to the minister by the diplomatic secretary of the state from which he is recalled.

Letter of the law. Expression used to denote the exact, strict interpretation of a statute, ordinance, regulation, or law.

Letter patent. See Letters patent.

Letter ruling. A written statement which is issued to a taxpayer by Office of Assistant Commissioner of I.R.S. in which interpretations of tax laws are made and applied to a specific set of facts. Tax Analysts and Advocates v. Internal Revenue Service, D.C.D.C., 362 F.Supp. 1298, 1301. Such is issued in response to request for ruling by a private party of tax implications of a particular transaction.

Letters. In probate practice, includes letters testamentary, letters of guardianship, letters of administration, and compliance with the conditions specified in the credit. A credit may be either revocable or irrevocable. The engagement may be either an agreement to honor or a statement that the bank or other person is authorized to honor. U.C.C. § 5–103. Letters of credit are intended generally to facilitate purchase and sale of goods by providing assurance to the seller of prompt payment upon compliance with specified conditions or presentation of stipulated documents without the sellers having to rely upon the solvency and good faith of the buyer. Lustrelon, Inc. v. Prutscher, 178 N.J.Sup. 128, 428 A.2d 518, 523.

See also Advice of credit.

Commercial letter. Type of letter of credit used by buyer of merchandise who sends it to bank in district in which he is to buy and seller then presents his bill of sale, etc. to obtain payment. See also Commercial credit.

Confirmed letter. Type of letter of credit in which local bank gives its guarantee that seller’s draft will be honored if the bank which issued letter fails to honor it.

Export letter. Type of letter of credit forwarded to seller or exporter advising him that a credit has been established in his favor by a foreign bank and further consenting to honor the seller’s or exporter’s draft for the goods.

General and special. A general letter of credit is one addressed to any and all persons, without naming any one in particular, while a special letter of credit is addressed to any and all persons, without naming any one in particular, while a special letter of credit is addressed to a particular individual, firm, or corporation by name.

Import letter. Type of letter of credit issued by a foreign bank to a local seller permitting him to draw draft on the foreign bank against shipment of the merchandise.

Irrevocable letter. Type of letter of credit in which issuing bank guarantees that it will not withdraw the credit or cancel the letter before the expiration date. A letter of credit which cannot be modified or revoked as regards the customer or the beneficiary without his or her consent.

Open credit. See Open letter of credit.

Revocable letter. Letter of credit in which the issuing bank reserves the right to cancel and withdraw from the transaction upon appropriate notice.

Revolving credit. See Revolving credit.

Standby letter. A letter of credit which commits the issuer to honor the credit not upon evidence of performance by the beneficiary, as by presenting evidence of the shipment of goods to the customer, but upon evidence or a mere declaration of the customer’s default in the underlying transaction with the beneficiary.

Straight credit. A letter of credit that does not run in favor of purchasers of drafts drawn thereunder.

Time credit. A letter of credit that is duly honored by the issuer accepting drafts drawn thereunder. Essentially synonymous with “usance credit” and “acceptance credit.”

Letters ad colligendum bona defuncti /létarz ád kóla-jéndam bówno dafaŋ(k)tálay/. In default of the representatives and creditors to administer to the estate of an intestate, the officer entitled to grant letters of administration may grant to such person as he approves, letters to collect the goods of the deceased, which neither make him executor nor administrator; his only business being to collect the goods and keep them in his safe custody. 2 Bl.Comm. 505.

Letters close. In English law, close letters are grants of the King, or instructions by the King, and, being of private concern, they are thus distinguished from letters of administration. Also refers to certain Chancery Letters from the Close Rolls which have in part been indexed and dated.

Letters of absolution. Absolvatory letters, used in former times, when an abbot released any of his brethren ab omnia subjectione et obedientia, etc., and made them capable of entering into some other order of religion.

Letters of administration. Formal document issued by probate court appointing one administrator of an estate.

Letters of administration C.T.A. Document issued by probate court appointing one administrator cum testamento annexo (with the will annexed) by reason of the failure of the named executor to qualify.

Letters of administration D.B.N. Document issued by probate court appointing one administrator de bonis non (concerning goods—not already administered) because of failure of named executor to complete the probate of the estate.

Letters of administration D.B.N. C.T.A. Document issued by probate court to one who is thereby authorized to administer estate in place of named executor in accordance with will of testator. See Letters of Administration C.T.A.; Letters of Administration D.B.N.

Letters of safe conduct. No subject of a nation at war with England can, by the law of nations, come into the realm, nor can travel himself upon the high seas, or send his goods and merchandise from one place to another, without danger of being seized, unless he has letters of safe conduct. By divers old statutes these must be granted under the great seal, and enrolled in chancery, or else are of no effect; the sovereign being the best judge of such emergencies as may deserve exemption from the general law of arms. But passports or licenses from the ambassadors abroad are now more usually obtained, and are allowed to be of equal validity.

Letters of slains, or slanes. In England, letters subscribed by the relatives of a person who had been slain, declaring that they had received an assythment, and concurring in an application to the crown for a pardon to the offender. These or other evidences of their concurrence were necessary to found the application.

Letters patent /létarz péytont/ /páht/. An instrument issued by a government to the patentee, granting or confirming a right to the exclusive possession and enjoyment of land, or of a new invention or discovery. See also Land patent; Patent.

Letters rogatory /létarz rogt(ə)riy/. A request by one court of another court in an independent jurisdiction, that a witness be examined upon interrogatories sent with the request. The medium whereby one country, speaking through one of its courts, requests another country, acting through its own courts and by methods of court procedure peculiar thereto and entirely within the latter's control, to assist the administration of justice in the former country. The Signe, D.C.La., 37 F.Supp. 819, 820.

A formal communication in writing, sent by a court in which an action is pending to a court or judge of a foreign country, requesting that the testimony of a witness resident within the jurisdiction of the latter court may be there formally taken under its direction and transmitted to the first court for use in the pending action. Fed.R.Civ. P. 28; 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1781, 1782.

This process was also in use, at an early period, between the several states of the Union. The request rests entirely upon the comity of courts towards each other.

Letters testamentary. The formal instrument of authority and appointment given to an executor by the proper court, empowering him to enter upon the discharge of his office as executor. It corresponds to letters of administration granted to an administrator.

Letter stock. Stock not registered under the Securities Act of 1933, where the buyer gives the seller a letter stating the buyer intends to hold for investment purposes and does not contemplate reoffering the stock to others. Securities and Exchange Commission v. Continental Tobacco Co. of S.C., C.A.Fla., 463 F.2d 137, 150.

Letting. Leasing or awarding. City and County of San Francisco v. United States, C.C.A.Cal., 106 F.2d 569, 576. See also Lease; Let.

Letting out. The act of leasing property or awarding a contract. See Let.

Lettre /lētra/. Fr. In French law, a letter. It is used, like our English "letter," for a formal instrument giving authority.

Lettres de cachet /lētra do kâshéy/. Letters issued and signed by the kings of France, and countersigned by a secretary of state, authorizing the imprisonment of a person. Under them, persons were imprisoned for life or for a long period on the most frivolous pretexts, for the gratification of private pique or revenge, and without any reason being assigned for such punishment. They were also granted by the king for the purpose of shielding his favorites or their friends from the consequences of their crimes; and thus were as pernicious in their operation as the protection afforded by the church to criminals in a former age. Abolished during the Revolution of 1789.

Leuca /ˈluːka/. In old French law. A league, consisting of fifteen hundred paces.

In old English law, a league or mile of a thousand paces. A privileged space around a monastery of a league or mile in circuit.

Levanda navis causa /ˌlevənˈdiːj ðeːˈviːz kоːzə/. Lat. For the sake of lightening the ship; denotes a purpose of throwing overboard goods, which renders them subjects of general average.

Levant et couchant /lɛvɑ̃t ɛt kɔʃɑ̃t/. L. Fr. Rising up and lying down. A term applied to trespassing cattle which have remained long enough upon land to have lain down to rest and risen up to feed; generally the space of a night and a day, or, at least, one night.

Levari facias /ˌlɛvəri feɪʃəs/ıəjəs/. Lat. A writ of execution directing the sheriff to cause to be made of the lands and chattels of the judgment debtor the sum recovered by the judgment. Also a writ to the bishop of the diocese, commanding him to enter into the benefice of a judgment debtor, and take and sequester the same into his possession, and hold the same until he shall have levied the amount of the judgment out of the rents, tithes, and profits thereof.

Levari facias damna de disseitoribus /ˌlɛvəri feɪʃəs ıəjəs dəmna dìə dəsiˈziːtərəbəs/. A writ formerly directed to the sheriff for the levying of damages, which a disseisor had been condemned to pay to the disseisee.

Levari facias quando vicecomes returnavit quod non habuit emptores /ˌlɛvəri feɪʃəs ıəjəs kwəndəw vəˈsiːkəʊmɪˈʃeɪt rəˈtɜːnaɪvət kwəd nən ˈhæbjuwət ˈɛm(p)əˈtiːriəz/ıəjəs/. An old writ commanding the sheriff to sell the goods of a debtor which he had already taken, and had returned that he could not sell them; and as much more of the debtor's goods as would satisfy the whole debt.

Levari facias residuum debiti /ˌlɛvəri feɪʃəs ıəjəs rəˈsiːdiʊwʌm əˌdiːbiˌtʌ/. An old writ directed to the sheriff for levying the remnant of a partly-satisfied debt upon the lands and tenements or chattels of the debtor.

Levato velo /ˌlɛvəˈtəʊ vɪˈlɒ/. Lat. An expression used in the Roman law, and applied to the trial of wreck and salvage. Commentators disagree about the origin of the expression; but all agree that its general meaning is that these causes were to be heard summarily. The most probable solution is that it refers to the place where causes were heard. A sail was spread before the door and officers employed to keep strangers from the tribunal. When these causes were heard, this sail was raised, and suitors came directly to the court, and their causes were heard immediately. As applied to maritime courts, its meaning is that causes should be heard without delay. These causes require dispatch, and a delay amounts practically to a denial of justice.

Levee /ˈlɛvi/. An embankment or artificial mound of earth constructed along the margin of a river, to confine the stream to its natural channel or prevent inundation or overflow. Also, a landing place on a river or lake; a place on a river or other navigable water for lading and unlading goods and for the reception and discharge of passengers to and from vessels lying in the contiguous waters, which may be either a wharf or pier or the natural bank.

Levee district. A municipal subdivision of a state (which may or may not be a public corporation) organized for the purpose, and charged with the duty, of constructing and maintaining such levees within its territorial limits as are to be built and kept up at public expense and for the general public benefit.

Level rate, legal reserve policy. Insurance which seeks to build up a reserve which will equal face value of policy at the end of insured's life.

Leverage. The ability to finance an investment with a small amount of one's own funds, such as a down payment, with the balance consisting of borrowed funds. The use of a smaller investment to generate a larger rate of return through borrowing.

The amount of money borrowed by party in business in excess of money or assets invested personally in the business. Community Bank v. Jones, 278 Or. 647, 566 P.2d 470, 475. Term refers to the advantages that may accrue to a business through the use of debt obtained from third persons (e.g. banks or outside investors) in lieu of contributed capital. Such debt improves the earnings allocable to contributed capital if the business earns more on each dollar invested than the interest cost of borrowing funds.

The effect on common stockholders of the requirements to pay bond interest and preferred stock dividends before payment of common stock dividends.

Leveraged buyout. Method of purchasing outstanding stock of publicly held corporation by management or outside investors, with financing consisting primarily of funds borrowed from investment bankers or brokers. The initial and subsequent long term capital used for the buyout is usually secured by the target company's assets with repayment generated from the company's retained or future earnings, sales of certain of its assets, and the like. For a type of employee buyout method, see Employee Stock Ownership Plan. See also Going private.

Leveraged lease. A type of financial lease in which the lessor borrows a high percentage of the cost of the leased asset on a nonrecourse basis from lenders. This is also sometimes called a third-party equity lease or a tax lease.

Leviable /ˌlɛviəˈrəl/. That which may be levied. That which is a proper or permissible subject for a levy; as, a "leviable interest" in land.

Levir /ˈliːvər/. In Roman law, a husband's brother-in-law.

Levis /ˈliːvəs/. Lat. Light; slight; trifling.

Leviable /ˌlɛviəˈrəl/. That which may be levied.

Levis nota, /ˈliːviːs noʊtə/. A slight mark or brand.
Levitical degrees /lavitikəl dəˈɡrɪz/. Degrees of kindred within which persons are prohibited to marry.
They are set forth in the eighteenth chapter of Leviticus.

Levy, v. To assess; raise; execute; exact; tax; collect; gather; take up; seize. Thus, to levy (assess, exact, raise, or collect) a tax; to levy (raise or set up) a nuisance; to levy (acknowledge) a fine; to levy (inaugurate) war; to levy an execution, i.e., to levy or collect a sum of money on an execution.

Levy court. A court formerly existing in the District of Columbia. It was a body charged with the administration of the ministerial and financial duties of Washington county. It had capacity to make contracts in reference to any of these matters, and to raise money to meet such contracts. It had perpetual succession, and its functions were those which, in the several states, are performed by "county commissioners," "overseers of the poor," "county supervisors," and similar bodies with other designations. Levy Court v.

Leving war. In criminal law, the assembling of a body of men for the purpose of effecting by force a treasona­ ble object; and all who perform any part, however minute, or however remote from the scene of action, and who are leagued in the general conspiracy, are considered as engaged in levying war, within the meaning of the constitution. Art. III, § 3, U.S. Constitution. See also Insurrection

The words include forcible opposition, as the result of a combination of individuals, to the execution of any public law of the United States; and to constitute treason within the Federal Constitution, there must be a combination of individuals united for the common pur­ purpose of forcibly preventing the execution of some public and the actual or threatened use of force by the combination to prevent its execution. Keggerreis v. Van

Lewd /ˈljuːd/. Obscene, lustful, indecent, lascivious, lecherous. The term imports a lascivious intent. It signifies that form of immorality which has relation to moral impurity, United States v. Barlow, D.C.Utah, 56
F.Supp. 795–797; or that which is carried on in a wan­ 47, 49. Given to unlawful indulgence of lust, eager for sexual indulgence. State v. Jones, 2 Conn.Cir. 698, 205
A.2d 507, 509. See also Indecent (Indecent exposure); Lascivious; Lewdness; Obscene; Obscenity.

Lewd and lascivious cohabitation. Within criminal statutes, the living together of a man and woman not mARRIED to each other as husband and wife. Also called "illicit cohabitation". Where existing, such statutes are seldom enforced. See also Lewdness.

Lewd house. See Bawdy-house

Lewdness. Gross and wanton indecency in sexual relations so notorious as to tend to corrupt community's morals. Hensley v. City of Norfolk, 218 N.E.2d 735, 740, 216 Va. 369. Licentiousness; that form of immorality which has relation to sexual impurity. Moral turpitude.
Lane ex rel. Cronin v. Tillinghast, C.C.A.Mass., 38 F.2d 132 N.J.L. 607, 41 A.2d 532, 534, 535. Sensuality; debauchery.

Any act which the actor knows is likely to be observed by others who would be affronted or alarmed and hence it is a criminal offense. Model Penal Code, § 251.1.
Lewdness is specifically made an offense under some state statutes, and is included under more general clauses in others.

See also Indecent (Indecent exposure); Lascivious; Obscene; Obscenity.

Lewd person. One who is lawless, bad, vicious, unchaste, indecent, obscene, lascivious. State v. Harlowe, 174 Wash. 227, 24 P.2d 601.

Lex /ˈlɛks/. Lat. In medieval jurisprudence, a body or collection of various laws peculiar to a given nation or people; not a code in the modern sense, but an aggregation or collection of laws not codified or systematized. Also, a similar collection of laws relating to a general subject, and not peculiar to any one people.

In modern American and English jurisprudence, a system or body of laws, written or unwritten, or so much thereof as may be applicable to a particular case or question, considered as being local or peculiar to a given state, country, or jurisdiction, or as being different from the laws or rules relating to the same subject-matter which prevail in some other place.

In old English law, a body or collection of laws, and particularly the Roman or civil law. Also a form or mode of trial or process of law, as the ordeal or battel, or the oath of a party with compurgators, as in the phrases legem facere, legem vadiare, etc. Also used in the sense of legal rights or civil rights or the protection of the law, as in the phrase legem amittere.

In Roman law, a law; the law.

This term was often used as the synonym of jus, in the sense of a rule of civil conduct authoritatively prescribed for the government of the actions of the members of an organized juridical society.

Lex is used in a purely juridical sense, law, and not also right; while jus has an ethical as well as a juridical meaning, not only law, but right. Lex is usually concrete, while jus is abstract. In English we have no term which combines the legal and ethical meanings, as do jus and its French equivalent, droit.

In a more limited and particular sense, it was a resolution adopted by the whole Roman "populus" (patricians and plebeians) in the comitia, on the motion of a magistrate of senatorial rank, as a consul, a praetor, or a dictator. Such a statute frequently took the name of the proposer; as the lex Falcidia, lex Cornelia, etc.

A rule of law which magistrates and people had agreed upon by means of a solemn declaration of consen sus.

In a somewhat wider and more generic sense, a law (whatever its origin) or the aggregate of laws, relating to a particular subject-matter, thus corresponding to the meaning of the word "law" in some modern phrases, such as the "law of evidence," "law of wills," etc.

Other specific meanings of the word in Roman jurisprudence were as follows: Positive law, as opposed to natural. That system of law which descended from the Twelve Tables, and formed the basis of all the Roman law. The terms of a private covenant; the condition of an obligation. A form of words prescribed to be used upon particular occasions.

Lex fori /léks fóráy/. The law of the forum, or court; that is, the positive law of the state, country, or jurisdiction of whose judicial system the court where the suit is brought or remedy sought is an integral part. Substantive rights are determined by the law of the place where the action arose. "lex loci," while the procedural rights are governed by the law of the place of the form, "lex fori." Mitchell v. Mitchell, La.App. 5 Cir., 483 So.2d 1152, 1154. See Lex loci contractus.

Lex Francorum /léks franzkörom/. The law of the Franks, promulgated by Theodoric I, son of Clovis I, at the same time with the law of the Alemanni and Bavarians. This was a different collection from the Salic law.

Lex Frisonum /léks friz(h)iýównam/. The law of the Frisians, promulgated about the middle of the eighth century.

Lex Furia Caninia /léks fyúriya kániniya/. The Furian Caninian law. A law passed in the consulship of P. Furius Camillus and C. Caninius Gallus, A.U.C. 752, prohibiting masters from manumitting by will more than a certain number or proportion of their slaves. This law was abrogated by Justinian.

Lex Furia testamentaria /léks fyúriya téstáméntériya/. A law enacting that a testator might not bequeath as a legacy more than one thousand asses.

Lex Gabinia /léks gobiániya/. A law introducing the ballot in elections.

Lex Genucia /léks jà(n)yúw(h)iýa/. A law which entirely forbade the charging or taking of interest for the use of money among Roman citizens, but which was usually and easily evaded, as it did not declare an agreement for interest to be a nullity.

Lex Gothica /léks góþaka/,. The Gothic law, or law of the Goths. First promulgated in writing A.D. 466.

Lex Horatia Valeria /léks hâréshiyiya vâlliríya/,. A law which assured to the tribal assembly its privilege of independent existence. See Lex Horatii.

Lex Horatii /léks hâréshiyiya/. An important constitutional statute, taking its name from the consul who secured its enactment, to the effect that all decrees passed in the meetings of the plebeians should be laws for the whole people; formerly they were binding only on the plebeians.

Lex Hortensia /léks hórténs(h)iýa/,. The law giving the plebeians a full share in the jus publicum and the jus sacrum.

Lex hostilia de furcis /léks hóstíliyá diý fártsas/,. A Roman law, which provided that a prosecution for theft might be carried on without the owner's intervention.

Lex imperatoria /léks impóráriya/. The Imperial or Roman law.

Lex intendit vicinum vicini facta scire /léks inténád vasáýnám vásáýnay fákta sáýriy/. The law intends [or presumes] that one neighbor knows what another neighbor does.

Lexis. A computer-assisted legal research service provided by Mead Data Central. LEXIS provides on-line access to a database of legal information including federal and state caselaw, statutes, and administrative, regulatory, and secondary materials.

Lex judicat de rebus necessario faciendis quasi re ipsa factis /léks júwdakat diý rýbys nésseýriyow Lex Julia /léks júli/ysay /. Several statutes bore this name, being distinguished by the addition of words descriptive of their subject matter.

The "lex Julia de adulteriis" related to marriage, dower, and kindred subjects. The lex Julia de ambitu was a law to repress illegal methods of seeking office. The lex Julia de annona was designed to repress combinations for heightening the price of provisions. The "lex Julia de cessione bonorum" related to bankruptcies. The lex Julia de majestate inflicted the punishment of death on all who attempted anything against the emperor or state. The lex Julia de maritandisordinibus forbade senators and their children to intermarry with freedmen or infames, and freedmen to intermarry infames. The lex Julia de residuis was a law punishing those who gave an incomplete account of public money committed to their charge. The lex Julia de peculatu punished those who had stolen public money or property or anything sacred or religious. Magistrates and those who had aided them in stealing public money during their administration were punished capitally; other persons were deported. As to lex Julia et Papia Poppea, see Lex Papia Poppea.

Lex Julia majestatis /léks júli/ysay májstetaytay /s/. The Julian law of majesty. A law promulgated by Julius Caesar, and again published with additions by Augustus, comprehending all the laws before enacted to punish transgressors against the state.

Lex Junia Norbana /léks júni/norbanay /. The law conferring legal freedom on all such freedmen as were tuittone prætoris. See Latini juriani.

Lex Junia velleja conferred the same right on posthumous children born in the lifetime of the testator, but after the execution of the will, as were enjoyed by those born after the death of the testator.

Lex Junia Velleja /léks júni/vellayjaysay vali/. A law providing that descendants who became sui heredes of the testator otherwise than by birth, as by the death of their father, must be disinherited or instituted heirs in the same way as posthumous children.

Lex Kantire /léks kánshiyi/. The body of customs prevailing in Kent during the time of Edward I. A written statement of these customs was sanctioned by the king's justices in eyre. They were mainly concerned with the maintenance of a form of land tenure known as gavelkind (q.v.).

Lex loci /léks löwsay /. The law of the place. This may be of several descriptions but, in general, lex loci is only used for lex loci contractus (q.v.).

The "lex loci" furnishes the standard of conduct, Russ v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 220 N.C. 715, 18 S.E.2d 130, 131; it governs as to all matters going to the basis of the right of action itself, State of Maryland, for Use of Joynes, v. Coard, 175 Va. 571, 9 S.E.2d 454, 458. The substantive rights of parties to action are governed by "lex loci" or law of place where rights were acquired or liabilities incurred. Gray v. Blight, C.C.A.Colo., 112 F.2d 696, 699. Compare Lex fori.

Lex loci actus /léks löwsay aktays /s/. The law of the place where the act was done.

Lex loci celebrationis /léks löwsay selabréyshiowmays /s/. The law of the place where a contract is made.

Lex loci contractus /léks löwsay kantraktaytays /s/. Used sometimes to denote the law of the place where the contract was made, and at other times to denote the law by which the contract is to be governed (i.e. place of its performance), which may or may not be the same as that of the place where it was made. The earlier cases do not regard this distinction. Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U.S. 124, 1 S.Ct. 102, 27 L.Ed. 104; Hayward v. LeBaron, 4 Fla. 404; Scudder v. Bank, 91 U.S. 406, 23 L.Ed. 245.

Lex loci delicti /léks löwsay deliktay/. The law of the place where the crime or wrong took place. The "lex loci delicti", or "place of the wrong", is the state where the last event necessary to make an actor liable for an alleged tort takes place. Sestito v. Knop, C.A.Wis., 297 F.2d 33, 34. More fully expressed by the words lex loci delicti commissae (law of the place where a tort is committed), usually written more briefly as lex loci delicti, or, sometimes, simply lex delicti.

Lex loci domicilii /léks löwsay dömasiliyay /s/. The law of the place of domicile.

Lex loci rei sitae /léks löwsay riysay sáity/. The law of the place where a thing or subject-matter is situated. The title to realty or question of real estate law can be affected only by the law of the place where the realty is situated. Colden v. Alexander, 141 Tex. 134, 171 S.W.2d 328, 335; United States v. Becktold Co., C.C.A.Mo., 129 F.2d 473, 477.

Lex loci solutionis /léks löwsay sáli/ysay wshiyowmays /s/. The law of the place of solution; the law of the place where payment or performance of a contract is to be made.

Lex longobardorum /léks lënpbardórom /. The law of the Lombards. The name of an ancient code of laws among that people, framed, probably, between the fifth and eighth centuries. It continued in force after the incorporation of Lombardy into the empire of Charlemagne, and traces of its laws and institutions are said to be still discoverable in some parts of Italy.

Lex manifesta /léks mánféstas /s. Manifest or open law; the trial by duel or ordeal.

Lex mercatoria /léks märktóriyay /. The law-merchant; commercial law. That system of laws which is adopted by all commercial nations, and constitutes a part of the law of the land. It is part of the common law.

Lex naturale /léks nätýarélyi/. Natural law. See Jus naturale.

(iyam/). The law punishes falsehood.

Lex regia /léks riýyiya/. The royal or imperial law. A law enacted (or supposed or claimed to have been enacted) by the Roman people, constituting the emperor a source of law, conferring the legislative power upon him, and according the force and obligation of the expression of his mere will or pleasure.

Lex rei sitae /léks riyay sáyiyi/. The law of the place of situation of the thing. It is said to be an inexact mode of expression; lex situs, or lex loci rei sitae are better.

Lex relict superflua, pugnantia, incongrua /léks riýjast sapérfluwa, págnaýsh(i)yá, ígkógruwa/. The law rejects superfluous, contradictory, and incongruous things.

Lex reprobat moram /léks raprówbat móram/.
The law dislikes delay.

Lex respicit æquitatem /léks réspásad iykwaýtamat/.
The law pays regard to equity.

Lex Rhodia /léks rówd(i)yá/. See Rhodian laws.

Lex romana /léks rámyýna/. See Civil law; Roman law.

Lex sacramentalis /léks sákromántéylas/. Purgation by oath.

Lex Scribonia /léks skróbówniyá/. The law abolishing the usucapio servitutis.

Lex scripta /léks skripta/. Written law; law deriving its force, not from usage, but from express legislative enactment; statute law.

Lex scripta si cesset, id custodiri oportet quod moribus et consuetudine inductum est; et, si qua in re hoc defecerit, tunc id quod proximum et consequens ei est; et, si id non apparet, tunc jus quo urbs róméyná yuwtstar sávryár apórtat/. If the written law be silent, that which is drawn from manners and custom ought to be observed; and, if that is in any manner defective, then that which is next and analogous to it; and, if that does not appear, then the law which Rome uses should be followed.

Lex semper dabit remedium /léks sémpar déybat ramiyd(i)yam/.
The law will always give a remedy.

Lex semper intendit quod convenit rationi /léks sémpar anténdat kwód kanvñyat ráschiyównay/.
The law always intends what is agreeable to reason.

Lex Sempronia /léks sempróniyiya/. The law preventing senators from being judges and allowing the office to the knights.

Lex Silia /léks siliya/. A law concerning personal actions.

Lex situs /léks sáytas/.
Modern law Latin for "the law of the place where property is situated." The general rule is that lands and other immovables are governed by the lex situs; i.e., by the law of the country in which they are situated.

Lex solutionis. /léks siýyshiyównas/. The law of the place in which a contract is to be performed or payment is to be made.

Lex spectat naturae ordinem /léks spékát nátuyríy óríyám/.
The law regards the order of nature.

Lex succurrit ignorantii /léks sakáèhrt ignaràntay/.
The law assists the ignorant.

Lex succurrat minoribus /léks sakáèhrt manórásas/.
The law aids minors.

Lex talionis /léks taliyónas/.
The law of retaliation;
which requires the infliction upon a wrongdoer of the same injury which he has caused to another. Expressed in the Mosaic law by the formula, "an eye for an eye; a tooth for a tooth," etc. In modern international law, the term describes the rule by which one state may inflict upon the citizens of another state death, imprisonment, or other hardship, in retaliation for similar injuries imposed upon its own citizens.

Lex terrae /léks tèhrîy/.
The law of the land. The common law, or the due course of the common law; the general law of the land. Equivalent to "due process of law". In the strictest sense, trial by oath; the privilege of making oath.

Lex uno ore omnes alloquitur /léks yúwnow óriy óm-nyiyz slówkwstár/. The law addresses all with one [the same] mouth or voice.

Lex validitas /léks vádiyetas/.
In conflicts, refers to presumptions of validity in marriages, contracts, etc.

Lex vigilantibus, non dormantibus, subvenit /léks viýlántébas nóñ dórmintébas sòbývamát/.
Law assists the wakeful, not the sleeping.

Lex Voconia /léks vakówniyá/.
A plebiscitum forbid-ing a legatee to receive more than each heir had.

Lex Wallensica /léks wólénzká/.
The Welsh law;
the law of Wales.

Lex Wisigothorum /léks viýságothòram/.
The law of the Visigoths, or Western Goths who settled in Spain; first reduced to writing A.D. 466. A revision of these laws was made by Egigas.

Ley /léy/. L. Fr. (A corruption of loi.) Law; the law.
For example, Termes de la Ley, Terms of the Law.
In another, and an old technical, sense, ley signifies an oath, or the oath with compurgators; as, il tend sa ley aiu pleynittfe. See also Lex.

In Spanish law, a law; the law in the abstract.

Ley civil /léy ssvíyl/. In old English law, the civil or Roman law. Otherwise termed "ley escripte," the written law. See also Civil law.

Ley gager /léy géyjar/. Law wager; wager of law; the giving of gage or security by a defendant that he would make or perfect his law at a certain day.
An offer to make an oath denying the cause of action of the plaintiff, confirmed by compurgators, which oath was allowed in certain cases. When it was accomplished, it was called the "doing of the law," "fesans de ley."

Leze majesty, or lese majesty /ˈlɛz məˈdʒɛstɪ/ An offense against sovereign power; treason; rebellion.

Liability. The word is a broad legal term. Mayfield v. First Nat. Bank of Chattanooga, Tenn., C.C.A.Tenn., 137 F.2d 1013, 1019. It has been referred to as of the most comprehensive significance, including almost every character of hazard or responsibility, absolute, contingent, or likely. It has been defined to mean: all character of debts and obligations, Public Market Co. of Portland v. City of Portland, 171 Or. 522, 130 P.2d 624, 643, 646; amenability or responsibility, Eberhard v. Aetna Ins. Co., 134 Misc. 386, 235 N.Y.S. 445, 447; an obligation one is bound in law or justice to do, State ex rel. Diederichs v. Board of Trustees of Missoula County High School, 91 Mont. 300, 7 P.2d 543, 545; an obligation which may or may not ripen into a debt; any kind of debt or liability, either absolute or contingent, express or implied, Public Market Co. of Portland v. City of Portland, 171 Or. 522, 130 P.2d 624, 643, 646; condition of being actually or potentially subject to an obligation; condition of being responsible for a possible or actual loss, penalty, evil, expense, or burden; condition which creates a duty to perform an act immediately or in the future, Union Oil Co. of California v. Basalt Rock Co., 30 Cal.App.2d 317, 86 P.2d 139, 141; duty to pay money or perform some other service, Dehne v. Hillman Inv. Co., C.C.A.Pa., 110 F.2d 456, 458; duty which must at least eventually be performed, Vandegrift v. Riley, Cal.Sup., 16 P.2d 734, 736; estate tax, Lyeth v. Hoey, C.C.A.N.Y., 112 F.2d 4, 6; every kind of legal obligation, responsibility, or duty, Mayfield v. First Nat. Bank of Chattanooga, Tenn., C.C.A.Tenn., 137 F.2d 1013, 1019; fixed liability, Ivester v. State ex rel. Gillum, 183 Okl. 519, 83 P.2d 193, 196; legal responsibility, Clark v. Lowden, D.C.Minn., 43 F.Supp. 261, 263; penalty for failure to pay tax when due, State v. Fischl, 94 Mont. 92, 20 P.2d 1057, 1059; present, current, future, fixed or contingent debts, Erickson v. Grande Ronde Lumber Co., 162 Or. 556, 92 P.2d 170, 174; punishment, Holliman v. Cole, 168 Okl. 473, 34 P.2d 597, 599; responsibility for torts, Italiani v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation, 45 Cal.App.2d 464, 114 P.2d 370, 372; tax, Thompson v. Smith, 189 Okl. 217, 114 P.2d 922, 924; that which one is under obligation to pay, or for which one is liable, Reconstruction Finance Corporation v. Gossett, Tex., 111 S.W.2d 1066; the state of being bound or obliged in law or justice to do, pay, or make good something; the state of one who is bound in law and justice to do something which may be enforced by action, Fidelity Coal Co. v. Diamond, 310 Ill.App. 387, 34 N.E.2d 123; Clark v. Lowden, D.C.Minn., 48 F.Supp. 261, 263; unliquidated claim.

All the claims against a corporation. Liabilities include accounts and wages and salaries payable, dividends declared payable, accrued taxes payable, fixed or long-term liabilities such as mortgage bonds, debentures and bank loans.

See also Current liabilities; Derivative liability; Employer's liability acts; Enterprise liability; Legal liability; Liable; Limitation of liability acts; Malpractice; No fault; Parental liability; Personal liability; Product liability; Several liability; Strict liability; Vicarious liability.

Absolute liability. See Strict liability.

Accrued liability. Obligation which has been incurred but not yet paid; e.g. taxes, rent.

Children. See Parental liability.

Contingent liability. A liability not yet fixed but dependent on events to occur in the future (e.g. a pending law suit).

Fixed liability. One fixed as to time, amount, etc.; e.g. mortgage.

Joint and several liability. Responsible together and individually. The person who has been harmed can sue and recover from both wrongdoers or from either one of the wrongdoers (if he goes after both of them, he does not, however, receive double compensation). See also Joint and several liability; Joint tort-feasors.

Joint liability. Liability for which more than one person is responsible. See also Contribution; Joint liability; Joint tort-feasors.

Liability bond. See Bond.

Primary liability. A liability for which a person is directly responsible as contrasted with one which is contingent or secondary.

Secondary liability. A liability in the nature of a contingent claim such as the liability of a guarantor as contrasted with that of a strict surety or co-maker. A guarantor's liability does not arise until the principal debtor has failed to pay the creditor.

Liability created by statute. One depending for its existence on the enactment of a statute, and not on the contract of the parties. One which would not exist but for the statute. Cannon v. Miller, 22 Wash.2d 227, 155 P.2d 500, 507, 508.

Liability for damages. Liability for an amount to be ascertained by trial of the facts in particular cases.

Liability in solido. Liability in solido, whether emanating from tort or contract, means that either of the debtors may be required to discharge obligation in full at creditor's election. Cunningham v. Hardware Mut. Cas. Co., La.App., 228 So.2d 700, 705.
Liability insurance. Contract by which one party promises on consideration to compensate or reimburse other if he shall suffer loss from specified cause or to guaranty or indemnify or secure him against loss from that cause. Fidelity General Ins. Co. v. Nelsen Steel & Wire Co., 132 Ill.App.2d 635, 270 N.E.2d 616, 620. That type of insurance protection which indemnifies one from liability to third persons as contrasted with insurance coverage for losses sustained by the insured. See also Insurance.

Liability limits. The sum beyond which a liability insurance company does not protect the insured on a particular policy. Most policies covering liability for bodily injury have two limits, a limit of liability to any one person, and, subject to the personal limit, another and usually higher limit for any single accident, where more than one person is involved.

Liable. Bound or obliged in law or equity; responsible; chargeable; answerable; compellable to make satisfaction, compensation, or restitution. Homan v. Employers Reinsurance Corporation, 345 Mo. 650, 136 S.W.2d 289, 298. Obligated; accountable for or chargeable with. Condition of being bound to respond because a wrong has occurred. Condition out of which a legal liability might arise. Pacific Fire Ins. Co. v. Murdoch Cotton Co., 193 Ark. 327, 99 S.W.2d 233, 235. Justly or legally responsible or answerable.

Exposed or subject to a given contingency, risk, or casualty, which is more or less probable. Exposed, as to damage, penalty, expense, burden, or anything unpleasant or dangerous. See also Liability.

Future possible or probable happening which may not actually occur, and relates to an occurrence within the range of possibility. Pacific Fire Ins. Co. v. Murdoch Cotton Co., 193 Ark. 327, 99 S.W.2d 233, 235. In all probability. Neely v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., Mo.App., 14 S.W.2d 972, 978. See also Contingency; Contingent.

Libel /læbəl/. A method of defamation expressed by print, writing, pictures, or signs. In its most general sense, any publication that is injurious to the reputation of another. A false and unprivileged publication in writing of defamatory material. Bright v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist., 51 Cal.App.3d 852, 124 Cal.Rptr. 598, 604. A maliciously written or printed publication which tends to blacken a person's reputation or to expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, or to injure him in his business or profession. Corabi v. Curtis Pub. Co., 441 Pa. 432, 273 A.2d 899, 904.

Accusation in writing or printing against the character of a person which affects his reputation, in that it tends to hold him up to ridicule, contempt, shame, disgrace, or obloquy, to degrade him in the estimation of the community, to induce an evil opinion of him in the minds of righthinking persons, to make him an object of reproach, to diminish his respectability or abridge his comforts, to change his position in society for the worse, to dishonor or discredit him in the estimation of the public, or his friends and acquaintances, or to deprive him of friendly intercourse in society, or cause him to be shunned or avoided, or where it is charged that one has violated his public duty as a public officer. Almost any language which upon its face has a natural tendency to injure a man's reputation, either generally or with respect to his occupation. Washer v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, 21 Cal.2d 822, 136 P.2d 297, 300.

States are free to fashion their own law of defamation of a private person so long as they do not impose liability without fault. Gertz v. Robert Welch, Inc., 418 U.S. 323, 347, 94 S.Ct. 2997, 3010, 41 L.Ed.2d 789.

There can be no presumption of malice or bad faith consistent with freedom of the press under First Amend., U.S.Const. if plaintiff is a public figure. Malice must be proved on a showing that defendant published material either knowing it to be false or recklessly without regard as to whether it is true or false. N. Y. Times v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686.

See also Actionable per quod; Actionable per se; Criminal (Criminal libel); Defamation; False implication libel; False light privacy; Innocent construction rule; Innuendo; Libelous per quod; Libelous per se; Malice; Obscene libel; Privilege; Publication; Sedition libel; Single publication rule; Trade libel. Compare Slander.

Constitutional privilege. Prior to New York Times v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686 (1964), media comment on the conduct of public officials or public figures was free from liability for libel only in certain limited circumstances, usually difficult to prove at trial. If a statement of fact was involved, it had to be substantially true; if a comment or opinion was involved, it had to be based on true facts which fully and fairly justified the comment or opinion. The United States Supreme Court, however, in a series of decisions beginning with New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, imposed constitutional limitations on State libel laws, based upon the First Amendment guarantees of freedom of speech and press. In New York Times, the Supreme Court eroded the prior common law libel standard of strict liability, holding that misstatements of fact or unjustified comments or opinions published by the media about the conduct of public officials were constitutionally privileged, unless the false or unjustified material was published with "actual malice," i.e., with actual knowledge of falsity or with reckless disregard of probable falsity. By requiring a public official plaintiff to prove actual malice on the part of defendant, the burden of proving that the material was false was shifted to plaintiff, contrary to the common law rule which presumed falsity.

Group libel. The holding up of a group to ridicule, scorn or contempt to a respectable and considerable part of the community. The plaintiff must prove that he is a member of the group.

Pleadings. Formerly, the initiatory pleading in an admiralty action, corresponding to the declaration, bill or complaint. Since 1966 the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and Supp. Admiralty Rules have governed admiralty actions and as such, admiralty actions are now commenced by complaint.

Libellant /laybələnt/. Formerly, the complainant or party who files a libel in an ecclesiastical or admiralty case, corresponding to the plaintiff in actions at law. See Libel (Pleadings).

Libellee /laybəli/. Formerly, a party against whom a libel of review. New proceeding instituted to attack therefrom that the plaintiff has been degraded in the estimation of his friends or of the public or has suffered some other loss either in his property, character, reputation, or business or in his domestic or social relations. When a publication is "libelous per se", that is, defamatory on its face, it is actionable per se; i.e., one need not prove that he received any injury as a result of the publication in order to recover damages, and in such a case general damages for loss of personal or business reputation are recoverable and no averments or proof of special damages are necessary. Rosenbloom v. Metromedia, Inc., D.C.Pa., 289 F.Supp. 737, 743. Compare Actionable per se.

Libel, adj. /laybəl/. Lat. Free; open and accessible, as applied to courts, places, etc.; of the state or condition of a freeman, as applied to persons. Exempt from the service or jurisdiction of another.

Libel, n. /laybəl/. A book, of whatever material composed; a main division or unit of a literary or professional work.

Libera /libərə/. (Feminine of liber, adj.) Free; at liberty; exempt; not subject to toll or charge.

Libera batella /libərə batələ/. In old records, a free boat; the right of having a boat to fish in a certain water; a species of free fishery.

Libera chasea habenda /libərə chéys(h)(ɪ)yə habɛnda/. In old English law, a judicial writ granted to a person for a free chase belonging to his manor after proof made by inquiry of a jury that the same of right belongs to him.

Libera eleemosyna /libərə ɪələmɔsənə/. In Old English law, free alms, frankalmoigne.

Libera falsa /libərə fɔldə/. In Old English law, frank fold; free fold; free foldage.

Liberal /libərərəl/. Free in giving; generous; not restrained or narrow-minded; not literal or strict.

Liberal construction or interpretation /libərərəl kanstrəkʃən/antɔrpətrəˈtʃɛʃən/. See Construction.

Libera lex /libərə lɛks/. In Old English law, free law; frank law; the law of the land. The law enjoyed by free and lawful men, as distinguished from such men as have lost the benefit and protection of the law in consequence of crime. Hence this term denoted the status of a man who stood guiltless before the law, and was free, in the sense of being entitled to its full protection and benefit. Amittore liberam legem (to lose one's free law) was to fall from that status by crime or infamy.

Libera liberam amittere /libərə lɪjəm əmɪdərɪ/. To lose one's free law (called the villainous judgment), to become discredited or disabled as juror and witness, to forfeit goods and chattels and lands for life, to have those lands wasted, houses razed, trees rooted up, and one's body committed to prison. It was anciently pronounced against conspirators but is now disused, the punishment substituted being fine and imprisonment.

Libera piscaria /ˈlɪbərə ˈpɪskəriə/. In old English law, a free fishery.

Liberare /ˈlɪbərəriə/. Lat. In old English law, to deliver, transfer, or hand over. Applied to writs, panels of jurors, etc.

In the civil law, to free or set free; to liberate; to give one his liberty.

Liber assisarum /ˈlɪbər əˈsɪsərəm/. The Book of Assessors or pleas of the crown. A collection of cases that arose on assizes and other trials in the country. It was the fourth volume of the reports of the reign of Edward III.

Liberata pecunia non liberat offerentem /ˈlɪbərətə ˈpɛkjuˈniə nɔn ˈlɪbərət əˈfɛrəntəm/. Money being restored does not set free the party offering.

Liberate /ˈlɪbərətɪ/. In old English practice, an original writ issuing out of chancery to the treasurer, chamberlains, and barons of the exchequer, for the payment of any annual pension, or other sum.

A writ issued to a sheriff, for the delivery of any lands or goods taken upon forfeits of recognizance. A writ issued to a gaoler for the delivery of a prisoner that had put in bail for his appearance. A writ which issues on lands, tenements, and chattels, being returned under an extent or pleas of the crown. A collection of cases that arose on assizes and other trials in the country. It was the fourth volume of the reports of the reign of Edward III.

Liber niger /ˈlɪbər ˈnɪɡər/. Black book or register in the exchequer. Chartularies of abbeys, cathedrals, etc. A name given to several ancient records.

Liber niger domus regis /ˈlɪbər ˈnɪɡər ˈdəməs ˈreɡɪs/. The black book of the king's household.

Liber scaccarum /ˈlɪbər ˈskækərəm/. The red book of the exchequer.

Liberas /ˈlɪbərəs/. Lat. Liberty; freedom; a privilege; a franchise.

Liberas ecclesiastica /ˈlɪbərəs əˈkliʒiəˈstɪkə/. Church liberty, or ecclesiastical immunity.

Liberas est naturalis facultas ejus quod cuique facere libet, nisi quod de jure aut vi prohibitur /ˈlɪbərəs əst ˈnætərəriəls ˈfæktəs ɪˈjuːs ˈkwod ˈkjuːkiˌkwet ˈnɪsi ˈkwod də ˈdʒuːr əʊ vi ˈprəʊhɪtətər/. Liberty is that natural faculty which permits every one to do [or the natural power of doing] anything he pleases except that which is restrained by law or force.

Liberas inestimabilis res est /ˈlɪbərəs ɪnɛstəˌmæbɪˈlɪs rɛz əst/. Liberty is an inestimable thing; a thing above price.

Liberas non recipit estimationem /ˈlɪbərəs nɔn ˌrɛsɨpɪt əstəˌmætʃəˈmɛm/. Freedom does not admit of valuation.

Liberas omnibus rebus favorabilior est /ˈlɪbərəs əˈmnbəs ˈreɪbəs ˈfəʊvərəˈbɪlɪər əst/. Liberty is more favored than all things [anything].

Liberatibus regales ad coronam spectantes ex concessione regum à coronā exierunt /ˈlɪbərətɪˌbjuːs ˈrɪɡələs əd ˈkɔrənəm ˈspɛktəntiəs ek kəˈsɛʃənə ˈreɡəm ət ˈkɔrənə ˈɛksɪərənt/. Royal franchises relating to the crown have emanated from the crown by grant of kings.

Liberatibus allocandis /ˈlɪbərətɪˌbjuːs əˈləʊkəndəs/. A writ lying for a citizen or burgess, impleaded contrary to his liberty, to have his privilege allowed.

Liberatibus exigendis in itinere /ˈlɪbərətɪˌbjuːs ˌɛɡzəˈdʒəndəs ɪn əˈtɪnərə/. An ancient writ whereby the king commanded the justices in eyre to admit an attorney for the defense of another's liberty.

Liberti /ˈlɪbərtɪ/. In Saxon law, freemen; the possessors of alodial lands.

In the civil law, children. The term included "grandchildren."

Liber niger domus regis /ˈlɪbər ˈnɪɡər ˈdəməs ˈreɡɪs/. The black book of the king's household.

Liber ruber scaccarum /ˈlɪbər ˈrʊbər ˈskækərəm/. The red book of the exchequer.

Libertas /ˈlɪbərətəs/. Lat. Liberty; freedom; a privilege; a franchise.

Libertas ecclesiastica /ˈlɪbərətəs əˈkliʒiəˈstɪkə/. Church liberty, or ecclesiastical immunity.

Libertas est naturalis facultas ejus quod cuique facere libet, nisi quod de jure aut vi prohibitur /ˈlɪbərətəs əst ˈnætərəriəls ˈfæktəs ɪˈjuːs ˈkwod ˈkjuːkiˌkwet ˈnɪsi ˈkwod də ˈdʒuːr əʊ vi ˈprəʊhɪtətər/. Liberty is that natural faculty which permits every one to do [or the natural power of doing] anything he pleases except that which is restrained by law or force.

Libertas inestimabilis res est /ˈlɪbərətəs ɪnɛstəˌmæbɪˈlɪs rɛz əst/. Liberty is an inestimable thing; a thing above price.

Libertas non recipit estimationem /ˈlɪbərətəs nɔn ˌrɛsɨpɪt əstəˌmætʃəˈmɛm/. Freedom does not admit of valuation.

Libertas omnibus rebus favorabilior est /ˈlɪbərətəs əˈmnbəs ˈreɪbəs ˈfəʊvərəˈbɪlɪər əst/. Liberty is more favored than all things [anything].

Liberatibus regales ad coronam spectantes ex concessione regum à coronā exierunt /ˈlɪbərətɪˌbjuːs ˈrɪɡələs əd ˈkɔrənəm ˈspɛktəntiəs ek kəˈsɛʃənə ˈreɡəm ət ˈkɔrənə ˈɛksɪərənt/. Royal franchises relating to the crown have emanated from the crown by grant of kings.

Liberatibus allocandis /ˈlɪbərətɪˌbjuːs əˈləʊkəndəs/. A writ lying for a citizen or burgess, impleaded contrary to his liberty, to have his privilege allowed.

Liberatibus exigendis in itinere /ˈlɪbərətɪˌbjuːs ˌɛɡzəˈdʒəndəs ɪn əˈtɪnərə/. An ancient writ whereby the king commanded the justices in eyre to admit an attorney for the defense of another's liberty.

Liberti /ˈlɪbərtɪ/. In Roman law, freedmen. The condition of those who, having been slaves, had been made free. There seems to have been some difference in the use of these two words; the former denoting the manumitted slaves considered in their relations with their former master, who was now called their "patron;" the latter term applying to them in their status in the general social economy of Rome subsequent to manumission.

Liberticide /labərˈtɪsˌdɛd/ˈlɪbər/ - A destroyer of liberty.

Liberties /ˈlɪbərtɪz/ - Privileged districts exempt from the sheriff's jurisdiction; as, "goal liberties." See Gaol.

In colonial times, laws, or legal rights resting upon them. The early colonial ordinances in Massachusetts were termed laws and liberties, and the code of 1641 the "Body of Liberties."

Formerly, political subdivisions of Philadelphia; as, Northern Liberties.

Libertinum ingratum leges civiles in pristinam servitutem redigunt; sed leges Anglire semel manumissum semper liberum judicant /lɪbɜːrˈtɪnom inɡrɛtəm lɛɡəz sɪvɪlɛs ɪn prɪstɪnəm ｓɜːrˈvɪt(ʊ)̃m rɛdɪɡənt; sɛd ˈlɪbərliːr iː ˈsɛml mənʊmɪsʊm sɛmpər ˈlɪbərm juːdɪkənt/ - The civil laws reduce an ungrateful freedman to original slavery; but the laws of England regard a man once manumitted as ever after free.

Liberty. Freedom from all restraints except such as are justly imposed by law. Freedom from restraint, under conditions essential to the equal enjoyment of this same right by others; freedom regulated by law. The absence of arbitrary restraint, not immunity from reasonable regulations and prohibitions imposed in the interests of the community. Brazo v. Connecticut Real Estate Commission, 177 Conn. 515, 418 A.2d 883, 890.

The "liberty" guaranteed and protected by constitutional provisions denotes not only freedom from unauthorized physical restraint, but embraces also the freedom of an individual to use and enjoy his faculties in all lawful ways, acquire useful knowledge, marry, establish a home, and bring up children, worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, live and work where he chooses, engage in any of the common and lawful occupations of life, enter into all contracts which may be proper and essential to carrying out successfully the foregoing purposes, and generally to enjoy those privileges long recognized at common law as essential to the orderly pursuit of happiness by free people. See also Liberty interest, below.

The "personal liberty" guaranteed by Thirteenth Amend., U.S.Const., consists in the power of locomotion without imprisonment or restraint unless by due course of law, except those restraints imposed to prevent commission of threatened crime or in punishment of crime committed, those in punishment of contempt of courts or legislative bodies or to render their jurisdiction effective, and those necessary to enforce the duty citizens owe in defense of the state to protect community against acts of those who by reason of mental infirmity are incapable of self-control. Ex parte Hudgins, 86 W.Va. 526, 103 S.E. 327, 329.

Also, a franchise or personal privilege, being some part of the sovereign power, vested in an individual, either by grant or prescription.

The term is used in the expression, rights, liberties, and franchises, as a word of the same general class and meaning with those words and privileges. This use of the term is said to have been strictly conformable to its sense as used in Magna Charta and in English declarations of rights, statutes, grants, etc.

In a derivative sense, the place, district, or boundaries within which a special franchise is enjoyed, an immunity claimed, or a jurisdiction exercised. In this sense, the term is commonly used in the plural; as the "liberties of the city."

Civil liberty. The liberty of a member of society, being a man's natural liberty, so far restrained by human laws (and no further) as is necessary and expedient for the general advantage of the public. 1 Bl.Comm. 125. The power of doing whatever the laws permit. 1 Bl.Comm. 6. The greatest amount of absolute liberty which can, in the nature of things, be equally possessed by every citizen in a state. Guaranteed protection against interference with the interests and rights held dear and important by large classes of civilized men, or by all the members of a state, together with an effectual share in the making and administration of the laws, as the best apparatus to secure that protection. See Civil rights.

Liberty interest. An interest recognized as protected by the due process clauses of state and federal constitutions. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5, 14. Generally included are liberties guaranteed by the first eight amendments of the United States Constitution, as well as interests created when states either legislatively or administratively impose limitations on their discretion and require that a specific standard prevail in decision making. Adams v. Wainwright, D.C.Fla., 512 F.Supp. 948, 953.

Liberty of a port. In marine insurance, a license or permission incorporated in a marine policy allowing the vessel to touch and trade at a designated port other than the principal port of destination.

Liberty of conscience. Liberty for each individual to decide for himself what is to him religious. Gobitis v. Minersville School Dist., D.C.Pa., 21 F.Supp. 581, 584. See, also, Religious liberty, as defined below.

Liberty of contract. The ability at will, to make or abstain from making, a binding obligation enforced by the sanctions at the law. The right to contract about one's affairs, including the right to make contracts of employment, and to obtain the best terms one can as the result of private bargaining. Adkins v. Children's Hospital of District of Columbia, 261 U.S. 525, 43 S.Ct. 394, 396, 67 L.Ed. 785. It includes the corresponding right to accept a contract proposed. There is, however, no absolute freedom of contract. The government may regulate or forbid any contract reasonably calculated to affect injuriously public interest. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Riverside Mills, 219 U.S. 186, 31 S.Ct. 164, 55 L.Ed. 167. It means freedom from arbitrary or unreasonable restraint, not immunity from reasonable regulation to safeguard public interest; or the right to make contracts with competent persons on a plane of relative parity or freedom of choice and within the limits allowed or not

Liberty of speech. Freedom accorded by the Constitution (First Amendment of U.S. Const.) or laws to express opinions and facts by word of mouth, uncontrolled by any censorship or restrictions of government. As used in Constitution, "freedom of speech" means freedom of speech as it was understood by the common law when the Constitution was adopted. State v. Boloff, 138 Or. 568, 7 P.2d 775, 781. See however Clear and present danger doctrine. See also Symbolic speech.

Liberty of the globe. In marine insurance, a license or permission incorporated in a marine policy authorizing the vessel to go to any part of the world, instead of being confined to a particular port of destination.

Liberty of the press. The right to print and publish the truth, from good motives and for justifiable ends, as guaranteed by First Amendment of U.S. Constitution. Kline v. Robert M. McBride & Co., 170 Misc. 974, 11 N.Y.S.2d 674, 679. The right to print without any previous license, subject to the consequences of the law. The right to publish whatever one may please, Knapp v. Post Printing & Publishing Co., 111 Colo. 492, 144 P.2d 981, 985; and to be protected against any responsibility for so doing except so far as such publications, from their blasphemy, obscenity, or scandalous character, may be a public offense, or as by their falsehood and malice they may injuriously affect the standing, reputation, or pecuniary interests of individuals. Immunity from previous restraints or from censorship. Grosjean v. American Press Co., 297 U.S. 233, 56 S.Ct. 444, 449, 80 L.Ed. 660; Near v. Minnesota, 283 U.S. 697, 51 S.Ct. 625, 75 L.Ed. 1357. See also Censorship; Prior restraint.

Liberty to hold pleas. The liberty of having a court of one's own. Thus certain lords had the privilege of holding pleas within their own manors.

Natural liberty. The power of acting as one thinks fit, without any restraint or control, unless by the law of nature. The right which nature gives to all mankind of disposing of their persons and property after the manner they judge most consistent with their happiness, on condition of their acting within the limits of the law of nature, and so as not to interfere with an equal exercise of the same rights by other men. 1 Bl.Comm. 125.

Personal liberty. The right or power of locomotion; of changing situation, or moving one's person to whatsoever place one's own inclination may direct, without imprisonment or restraint, unless by due course of law. Civil Rights Cases, 109 U.S. 3, 3 S.Ct. 42, 27 L.Ed. 835.

Political liberty. Liberty of the citizen to participate in the operations of government, and particularly in the making and administration of the laws.

Religious liberty. Freedom, as guaranteed by First Amendment of U.S. Constitution, from constraint, or control in matters affecting the conscience, religious beliefs, and the practice of religion. Freedom to entertain and express any or no system of religious opinions, and to engage in or refrain from any form of religious observance or public or private religious worship, not inconsistent with the peace and good order of society and the general welfare. See also Freedom of religion; Religion.

Liberum corpus nullam recipit aestionem /libaram körp;ams n;}bm res;}meyshiy6wn;/. The body of a freeman does not admit of valuation.

Liberum est cuique apud se explorare an expediat sibi consilium /libaram êst k(yuw)álykwi; yâp sîy êksplæréry akéspfydiyât sïbây konsîll(i)y;ym;/. Every one is free to ascertain for himself whether a recommendation is advantageous to his interest.

Liberum maritagium /libaram mërstéy;(iy);y;am;/. In old English law, frank-marriage.

Liberum servitium /libaram sørvi(y);y);am;/. Free service. Service of a warlike sort by a feudatory tenant; sometimes called "servitium liberum armorum." See also Servitium librum. Service not unbecoming the character of a freeman and a soldier to perform; as to serve under the lord in his wars, to pay a sum of money, and the like. 2 Bl.Comm. 60.

Liberum socagium /libaram sákey;y);y;am;/. In old English law, free socage.

Liberum tenementum /libaram ténymént;am;/. In common law pleading, a plea of freehold. A plea by the defendant in an action of trespass to real property that the locus in quo is his freehold, or that of a third person, under whom he acted.

In realty law, freehold. Frank-tenement.

Liblac /liblák;/. In Saxon law, witchcraft, particularly that kind which consisted in the compounding and administering of drugs and philters. Sometimes occurring in the Latinized form liblacum /l abléy;km;/. See also Liblac.

Libra /läybra;/. In old English law, a pound; also a sum of money equal to a pound sterling.

Libra arsa /läybra árs;a;/. A pound burned; that is, melted, or assayed by melting, to test its purity. Libræ arsa et pensæa, pounds burned and weighed. A frequent expression in Domesday, to denote the purer coin in which rents were paid.

Libra numerata /läybra n(y);üwmáréyta;/. A pound of money counted instead of being weighed.

Libra pensa /läybra péns;a;/. A pound of money by weight.

Libripens /libripenz;/. In Roman law, a weigher or balance-holder. The person who held a brazen balance in the ceremony of emancipation, per æs et libram. A neutral person or balance holder, who was present at a conveyance of real property. He held in his hand the symbolic balance, which was struck by the purchaser with a piece of bronze as a sign of the completion of the conveyance. The bronze was then transferred to the seller as a sign of the purchase money.

License. A personal privilege to do some particular act or series of acts on land without possessing any estate or interest therein, and is ordinarily revocable at the will of the licensor and is not assignable. Lehman v. Williamson, 35 Colo.App. 372, 533 P.2d 63, 65. The permission by competent authority to do an act which, without such permission, would be illegal, a trespass, a tort, or otherwise not allowable. People v. Henderson, 391 Mich. 612, 218 N.W.2d 2, 4. Certificate or the document itself which gives permission. Leave to do thing which licensor could prevent. Western Electric Co. v. Pacent Reproducer Corporation, C.C.A.N.Y., 42 F.2d 116, 118. Permission to do a particular thing, to exercise a certain privilege or to carry on a particular business or to pursue a certain occupation. Blatz Brewing Co. v. Collins, 88 Cal.App.2d 639, 160 P.2d 37, 39, 40.

A permit, granted by an appropriate governmental body, generally for a consideration, to a person, firm, or corporation to pursue some occupation or to carry on some business subject to regulation under the police power. A license is not a contract between the state and the licensee, but is a mere personal permit. Rosenblatt v. California State Board of Pharmacy, 69 Cal.App.2d 69, 158 P.2d 199, 203. Neither is it property or a property right. American States Water Service Co. of California v. Johnson, 31 Cal.App.2d 606, 88 P.2d 770, 774.

See also Bare or mere license; Certificate; Compulsory license; Exclusive license; Franchise; Letter of license; Licensee; Marriage license; Permit.

Executed license. That which exists when the licensed act has been done.

Executory license. That which exists where the licensed act has not been performed.

Express license. One which is granted in direct terms.

Implied license. One which is presumed to have been given from the acts of the party authorized to give it.

License bond. See Bond.

Patents. A written authority granted by the owner of a patent to another person empowering the latter to make or use the patented article for a limited period or in a limited territory. A permission to make, use or sell articles embodying invention. De Forest Radio Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Radio Corporation of America, D.C.Del., 9 F.2d 150, 151. A transfer which does not affect the monopoly, except by estopping licensor from exercising his prohibitory powers in derogation of privileges conferred upon licensee. L. L. Brown Paper Co. v. Hydroiloid, Inc., D.C.N.Y., 32 F.Supp. 857, 867, 868. An assignment by the patentee to another of rights less in degree than the patent itself. Any right to make, use, or sell the patented invention, which is less than an undivided part interest in the patent itself. Any transfer of patent rights short of assignment. Language used by owner of patent, or any conduct on his part exhibited to another, from which that other may properly infer that owner consents to his use of patent, on which the other acts, constitutes a license. General Motors Corporation v. Dailey, C.C.A.Mich., 93 F.2d 938, 941; Finley v. Asphalt Paving Co. of St. Louis, C.C.A.Mo., 69 F.2d 498, 504. Transfer of exclusive right to do merely two of the three rights under patent to make, use, and vend invention. Overman Cushion Tire Co. v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 59 F.2d 998, 1000. See also Patent.

Pleading. The defense of justification to an action of trespass that the defendant was authorized by the owner of the land to commit the trespass complained of. License is an affirmative defense which must be pleaded by defendant. Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(c).

Real property. A license is ordinarily considered to be a mere personal or revocable privilege to perform an act or series of acts on the land of another. Hennebont Co. v. Kroger Co., 221 Pa.Super. 65, 289 A.2d 229, 231. A privilege to go on premises for a certain purpose, but does not operate to confer on, or vest in, licensee any title, interest, or estate in such property. Timmons v. Cropper, 40 Del.Ch. 29, 172 A.2d 757, 759. Such privilege is unassignable.

A license is distinguished from an "easement," which implies an interest in the land, and a "lease," or right to take the profits of land. It may be, however, and often, is, coupled with a grant of some interest in the land itself, or right to take the profits. National Memorial Park v. C. I. R., C.C.A.4, 145 F.2d 1008, 1015.

Simple license. One revocable at the will of the grantor; i.e., one not coupled with a grant.

Streets and highways. A permit to use street is a mere license revocable at pleasure. Lanham v. Forney, 196 Wash. 62, 81 P.2d 777, 779. The privilege of using the streets and highways by the operation thereon of motor carriers for hire can be acquired only by permission or license from the state or its political subdivisions.

Trade, business or calling. Authority or permission to do or carry on some trade or business which would otherwise be unlawful. Standard Oil Co. (Indiana) v. State Board of Equalization, 110 Mont. 5, 99 P.2d 229, 234. Permission conferred by proper authority to pursue certain trade, profession, or calling. Lloyds of Texas v. Bobbitt, Tex.Civ.App., 40 S.W.2d 897, 901. A license confers upon licensee neither contractual nor vested rights. Rosenblatt v. California State Board of Pharmacy, 69 Cal.App.2d 69, 158 P.2d 199, 203. Nor does it create a property right. See also Franchise.

Trademark. Permission to use a trademark in an area where the purported owner's goods have not become known and identified by his use of mark is a naked "license". E. F. Prichard Co. v. Consumers Brewing Co., C.C.A.Ky., 136 F.2d 512, 521. See Trademark.

License cases. The name given to the group of cases including Peirce v. New Hampshire, 46 U.S. (5 How.) 504, 12 L.Ed. 256, decided by the United States Supreme Court in 1847, to the effect that state laws requiring a license or the payment of a tax for the privilege of selling intoxicating liquors were not in conflict with the constitutional provision giving to Congress the power to regulate interstate commerce, even as applied to liquors imported from another state and remaining in the original and unbroken packages. This decision was overruled in Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U.S. 100, 10 S.Ct. 681, 34 L.Ed. 128, which in turn was overturned by the act of Congress of August 8, 1890, commonly called the "Wilson law."

Licensee. A person who has a privilege to enter upon land arising from the permission or consent, express or implied, of the possessor of land but who goes on the land for his own purpose rather than for any purpose or interest of the possessor. Reddington v. Beefeaters Tables, Inc., 72 Wis.2d 119, 240 N.W.2d 363, 366. For duty of care purposes, one who is privileged to enter or remain upon land by virtue of possessor's consent, whether given by invitation or permission. Backman v. Vickers Petroleum Co., 187 Kan. 448, 357 P.2d 748, 751.

Person to whom a license has been granted.

Formerly, the duty owed to a licensee was that of refraining from wilful, wanton and reckless conduct. This rule has been changed and now, in most jurisdictions, the occupier of land owes the licensee the duty of reasonable or due care. Mounsey v. Ellard, 363 Mass. 693, 297 N.E.2d 43.

See also Exclusive licensee; Invitee.

Licensee by invitation. A person who goes upon the lands of another with express or implied invitation to transact business with the owner or occupant or do some act to his advantage or to the mutual advantage of both the licensee and the owner or occupant. Samuel E. Pentecost Const. Co. v. O'Donnell, 112 Ind.App. 47, 39 N.E.2d 812. An invitee.

Licensee by permission. One who, for his own convenience, curiosity, or entertainment, goes upon the premises of another by the owner's or occupant's permission or sufferance. Samuel E. Pentecost Const. Co. v. O'Donnell, 112 Ind.App. 47, 39 N.E.2d 812, 817.

License fee or tax. Charge imposed by governmental body for the granting of a privilege. Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board v. Publicker Commercial Alcohol Co., 347 Pa. 555, 32 A.2d 914, 917. Charge or fee imposed primarily for the discouragement of dangerous employments, the protection of the safety of the public, or the regulation of relative rights, privileges, or duties as between individuals. Conard v. State, Del.Super., 2 Terry 107, 16 A.2d 121, 125. Price paid to governmental or municipal authority for a license to engage in and pursue a particular calling or occupation. Tax on privilege of exercising corporate franchise. City Investments v. Johnson, 6 Cal.2d 150, 56 P.2d 939, 940. The term "license tax" includes both charge imposed under police power for privilege of obtaining license to conduct particular business, and tax imposed upon business for sole purpose of raising revenue. "license tax" being defined as sum exacted for privilege of carrying on particular occupation. Where a fee is exacted and something is required or permitted in addition to the payment of the sum, either to be done by the licensee, or by some regulation or restriction imposed on him, then the fee is a "license fee". Conard v. State, Del.Super., 2 Terry 107, 16 A.2d 121, 125. A license fee is charge made primarily for regulation, with the fee to cover cost and expenses of supervision or regulation. State v. Jackman, 60 Wis.2d 700, 211 N.W.2d 490, 487. See also Franchise tax.

License in amortization. A license authorizing a conveyance of property which, without it, would be invalid under the statutes of mortmain.

License tax. See License fee or tax.

Licensing. The sale of a license permitting the use of patents, trademarks, or other technology to another firm. See also Cross-licensing.

Licensing involves the many procedures administrative agencies perform in conjunction with issuance of various types of licenses. Westland Convalescent Center v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Michigan, 414 Mich. 247, 324 N.W.2d 851, 859.

Licensing power. The authority in a governmental body to grant a license to pursue a particular activity; e.g. license to sell liquor.

Licensor /lásénsor/. The person who gives or grants a license.

Licentia /láséns(i)y)a/. Lat. License; leave; permission.

Licentia concordandi /láséns(i)y)a koŋkardánday/. In old practice and conveyancing, license or leave to agree; one of the proceedings on levying a fine of lands. 2 Bl.Comm. 350.

Licentia loquendi /láséns(i)y)a lákworday/. In old practice, leave to speak (i.e., with the plaintiff); an imparlance; or rather leave to imparl. 3 Bl.Comm. 299.

Licentia surgendi /láséns(i)y)a sarjénday/. In old English practice, license to arise; permission given by the court to a tenant in a real action, who had cast an essoin de malo lecti, to arise out of his bed. Also, the writ thereupon. If the demandant can show that the tenant was seen abroad before leave of court, and before being viewed by the knights appointed by the court for that purpose, such tenant shall be taken to be deceitfully essoined, and to have made default.

Licentiate /lásénsht/lásénsëhíyët/. One who has license to practice any art or faculty.

Licentiousness /lásénsëhænses/. The indulgence of the arbitrary will of the individual, without regard to ethics or law, or respect for the rights of others. Also, lewdness or lasciviousness.

Licere /lásíri/. Lat. To be lawful; to be allowed or permitted by law.

Licere, liceri /lásíri/lásíray/. Lat. In Roman law, to offer a price for a thing; to bid for it.

Licet /lásyst/lísst/. Lat. From the verb "licere" (q.v.). It is allowed; it is permissible; it is lawful; not forbidden by law.

Licet dispositio de interesse futuro sit inutilis, tamen potest fieri declaratio precedens quae sortiatur effectum, interveniente novo actu /lásyst dispzisz(i)y)ow diy intarésiy fyuwt(y)írow sit inyuwtalas,

Lien

Lie detector.

Lie in grant. Incorporeal hereditaments are said to "lie in grant;" that is, they pass by force of the grant (deed or charter) without livery.

Lie in livery. A common law term applied to corporeal hereditaments, freeholds, etc., signifying that they pass by livery, not by the mere force of the grant.

Lie in wait. See Lying in wait.

Lien /liy(an)/. A claim, encumbrance, or charge on property for payment of some debt, obligation or duty. Sullins v. Sullins, 65 Wash.2d 283, 396 P.2d 886, 888. Qualified right of property which a creditor has in or over specific property of his debtor, as security for the debt or charge or for performance of some act. Right or claim against some interest in property created by law as an incident of contract. Right to enforce charge upon property of another for payment or satisfaction of debt or claim. Vaughan v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 61 S.W.2d 189, 190. Right to retain property to a debt or claim for its satisfaction. United States v. 1364.76875 Wine Gallons, More or Less, of Spirituous Liquors, D.C.Mo., 60 F.Supp. 389, 392. Liens "property rights". In re Pennsylvania Central Brewing Co., C.C.A.Pa., 114 F.2d 1010, 1013. The word "lien" is a generic term and, standing alone, includes liens acquired by contract or by operation of law. Egyptian Supply Co. v. Boyd, C.C.A.Ky., 117 F.2d 608, 612.

A change against or interest in property to secure payment of a debt or performance of an obligation. Bankruptcy Code § 101.

Lien by operation of law. Where the law itself, without the stipulation of the parties, raises a lien, as an implication or legal consequence from the relation of the parties or the circumstances of their dealings. Liens of this species may arise either under the rules of common law or of equity or under a statute. In the first case they are called "common-law liens;" in the second, "equitable liens" in the third, "statutory liens."

Roman or Civil law. The peculiar securities which, in the common and maritime law and equity, are termed "liens," are embraced under the head of "mortgage and privilege."

See also Agent's lien; Architect's lien; Artisan's lien; Attorney's lien; Banker's lien; Charging Lien; Chattel lien;
Lien creditor. One whose debt or claim is secured by a lien on particular property, as distinguished from a "general" creditor, who has no such security. A creditor who has acquired a lien on the property involved, by attachment, levy or the like, and includes an assignee for benefit of creditors from the time of assignment, and a trustee in bankruptcy from the date of the filing of the petition, or a receiver in equity from the time of appointment. U.C.C. § 9-301(3). See also Creditor.

Lienor /liynər/. The person having or owning a lien; one who has a right of lien upon property of another.

Lien waiver. A waiver of mechanic's lien rights, signed by subcontractors so that the owner or general contractor can receive a draw on a construction loan.

Lien account. Such statement of claims as fairly apprises property owner and public of nature and amount of demand asserted as lien. Hanenkamp v. Hagedorn, Mo.App., 110 S.W.2d 826, 829.

Lien of a covenant. The commencement of a covenant stating the names of the covenantors and covenanteees, and the character of the covenant, whether joint or several.

Lien of attachment. An encumbrance on property seized through the pre-judgment remedy of attachment that is inchoate when it first arises, usually upon the sheriff's levy of the property, and that becomes final and perfected upon judgment for the attaching creditor in the action who caused attachment to issue. For purposes of priority against third parties' claims to the property, a lien of attachment perfected by judgment dates from the time the lien first arose. See Attachment.

Lien of execution. An encumbrance that attaches by operation of law to a judgment debtor's real and personal property when the property is subjected to execution process and that gives the execution creditor a priority over subsequent transferees of the property and also over prior unrecorded conveyances of interests in the property. See Attachment; Execution.

Lien of factor at common law. Lien not created through statutory enactment, but lien of ordinary factor as known to common law.

Lien of garnishment. Encumbrance on property of a debtor held by a garnishee that attaches in favor of the garnishing creditor when garnishment summons is served upon the garnishee and that also impounds credits owed by the garnishee to the debtor so that they must be paid to the garnishing creditor. See Garnishment.

Lienor /liynər/. The person having or owning a lien; one who has a right of lien upon property of another.

Life. That state of animals, humans, and plants or of an organized being, in which its natural functions and motions are performed, or in which its organs are capable of performing their functions. The interval between birth and death. The sum of the forces by which death is resisted.
Life expectancy. "Life," protected by the Federal Constitution, includes all personal rights and their enjoyment of the faculties, acquiring useful knowledge, the right to marry, establish a home, and bring up children, freedom of worship, conscience, contract, occupation, speech, assembly and press.

See also Natural life; Useful life; Viability; Viable child; Wrongful life.

Life annuity. An engagement to pay an income yearly during the life of some person; also the sum thus promised. An annuity, depending on the continuance of an assigned life or lives, is sometimes called a life annuity. Bodine v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.3, 103 F.2d 982, 985. See also Annuity.

Life beneficiary. One who receives payments or other rights from a trust for his or her lifetime.

Life care contract. An agreement in which one party is assured of care and maintenance for his natural life in consideration of a transfer of property to the other party. Such contracts exist, for example, between elderly persons and nursing homes.

Life estate. An estate whose duration is limited to the life of the party holding it, or some other person. See also Life interest.

A legal arrangement whereby the beneficiary (i.e., the life tenant) is entitled to the income from the property for his or her life. Upon the death of the life tenant, the property will go to the holder of the remainder interest or to the grantor by reversion.

Life expectancy. The period of time in which a person of a given age and sex is expected to live according to statistical (i.e., actuarial) tables. See also Actuarial table; Life tables.

Life in being. A phrase used in the common-law and statutory rules against perpetuities, meaning the remaining duration of the life of a person who is in existence at the time when the deed or will takes effect. McArthur v. Scott, 113 U.S. 340, 5 S.Ct. 652, 28 L.Ed. 1015.

Life insurance. See Insurance.

Life insurance proceeds. Generally, life insurance proceeds paid to a beneficiary upon the death of the insured are exempt from Federal income tax. An exception is provided where a life insurance contract has been transferred for valuable consideration to another individual who assumes ownership rights. In such case the proceeds are income to the assignee to the extent that the proceeds exceed the amount paid for the policy plus any subsequent premiums paid. Insurance proceeds may be subject to the Federal estate tax if the decedent retained any incidents of ownership in the policy prior to death or if the proceeds are payable to his estate. I.R.C. §§ 101 and 2042.

Life insurance trust. Type of trust, the res of which consists in whole or in part of life insurance policies owned by the trustees and payable to the trust on the death of the insured. A device commonly used in estate planning.

Life interest. A claim or interest in real or personal property, not amounting to ownership, and limited by a term of life, either that of the person in whom the right is vested or that of another. See also Life estate.

Life-land, or life-hold. Land held on a lease for lives.

Life of a writ. The period during which a writ (execution, etc.) remains effective and can lawfully be served or levied, terminating with the day on which, by law or by its own terms, it is to be returned into court.

Life or limb. The phrase "life or limb" within constitutional provision that no person shall be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb is not construed strictly but applies to any criminal penalty. Fifth Amend., U.S.Const. Clayaws v. Rives, 70 U.S.App.D.C. 107, 104 F.2d 240, 242.

Life peerage. Letters patent, conferring the dignity of baron for life only, do not enable the grantee to sit and vote in the house of lords, not even with the usual writ of summons to the house.

Life policy. See Insurance (Life insurance).

Life sentence. See Sentence.

Life sustaining procedures. Such procedures which may be suspended on a court order or pursuant to a living will in case of, for example, a comatose and terminally ill individual, are medical procedures which utilize mechanical or other artificial means to sustain, restore, or supplant a vital function, which serve only or primarily to prolong the moment of death, and where, in the judgment of the attending and consulting physicians, as reflected in the patient’s medical records, death is imminent if such procedures are not utilized. John F. Kennedy Memorial Hosp., Inc. v. Bludworth, Fla.App. 4 Dist., 432 So.2d 611, 619. See also Right to die laws; Will (Living will).

Life tables. Statistical (i.e., actuarial) tables exhibiting the probable proration of persons who will live to reach different ages. Such tables are used for many purposes, such as the computation of the present value of annuities, dower rights, etc.; and for the computation of damages resulting from injuries which destroy the earning capacity of a person, or those resulting from the death of a person to those who are dependent upon him. See also Actuarial tables.

Life tenancy. An estate in real property in which the tenant has a freehold interest for his life or for the life of another (pur autre vie).

Life tenant. One who holds an estate in lands for the life of the party holding it, or some other person. See also Life interest.

A legal arrangement whereby the beneficiary (i.e., the life tenant) is entitled to the income from the property for his or her life. Upon the death of the life tenant, the property will go to the holder of the remainder interest or to the grantor by reversion.

Life's table. A table of actuarial (i.e., mathematical-statistical) nature which is primarily used in the field of insurance to compute mortality and related statistics, and which shows the expected number of lives at different ages. Such tables are used for many purposes, such as the computation of the present value of annuities, dower rights, etc.; and for the computation of damages resulting from injuries which destroy the earning capacity of a person, or those resulting from the death of a person to those who are dependent upon him.

See also Actuarial tables.

of the statute of limitations, or of an estoppel, is to remove the obstruction which it interposes, by some sufficient act or acknowledgment.

Liga /liyga/. In old European law, a league or confederation.

Ligan, lagan /láygan/ léygan/. Goods cast into the sea tied to a buoy, so that they may be found again by the owners, are so denominated. When goods are cast into the sea in storms or shipwrecks, and remain there, without coming to land, they are distinguished by the barbarous names of "jetsam," "flotsam," and "ligan."

Ligare /lagéri/. To tie or bind. To enter into a league or treaty.

Ligea /liyiy(i)yas/. In old records, a liege.

Ligeantia est quasi legis essentia; est vinculum fidei /liyiyrensh(iy)yi est kwéyiyay liyiyas ñësniyiyas, ést vik(y)alam fádyiyay/. Allegiance is, as it were, the essence of law; it is the chain of faith.

Ligeantia naturalis nullis claustris coercetur, nullis metis refrænatur, nullis finibus premitur /liyiyrensh(iy)yi nátýysreýlas nálas klóstras kowarastar, nálas métas refrænýtatar, nálas finabas preýmatar/. Natural allegiance is restrained by no barriers, reined by no bounds, compressed by no limits.

Ligeas /liyiy(i)yas/. In old records, a liege.

Light /right to. Ligeas

Like /like/. Female subject.

Like benefits. Similar in salient features.

Like-kind exchange. An exchange of property held for productive use in a trade or business or for investment (except inventory and stocks and bonds) for other investment or trade or business property. Unless cash is received, the exchange is nontaxable. I.R.C. § 1031. Test for determining whether exchanged properties are of "like kind," such that gain from the exchange is not recognized for federal income tax purposes, is whether the property is of the same nature or character and a mere difference in grade or quality does not disqualify the exchange. California Federal Life Ins. Co. v. C.I.R., C.A. 9, 680 F.2d 85, 87. See also Boot.

Like-kind property. See Like-kind exchange.

Likelihood of confusion. Touchstone of trademark infringement under Lanham Trade-Mark Act is "likelihood of confusion," or whether substantial number of ordinarily prudent purchasers are likely to be misled or confused as to source of different product. Mushroom Makers, Inc., v. R.G. Barry Corp., D.C.N.Y., 441 F.Supp. 1220, 1225. Factors to be considered in determining "likelihood of confusion" are the degree of resemblance between the marks in appearance, pronunciation, translation and suggestiveness, the intent of the second user in adopting the allegedly infringing mark, similarity of circumstances and conditions surrounding the purchase of the goods involved and the degree of care likely to be exercised by purchasers. Schmid Laboratories v. Youngs Drug Products Corp., D.C.N.J., 482 F.Supp. 14, 17.

Likely. Probable. Horning v. Gerlach, 139 Cal.App. 470, 34 P.2d 504, 505. In all probability. Neely v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., Mo.App., 14 S.W.2d 972, 978. Likely is word of general usage and common understanding, broadly defined as of such nature or so circumstantial as to make something probable and having better chance of existing or occurring than not. People v. Randall, Colo., 711 P.2d 689, 692.

Limenarcha /limaýnarka/. In Roman law, an officer who had charge of a harbor or port.
Limit. See Motion in limine.

Limit, v. To abridge, confine, restrain, and restrict. To mark out; to define; to fix the extent of. Thus, to limit an estate means to mark out or to define the period of its duration, and the words employed in deeds for this purpose are thence termed "words of limitation," and the act itself is termed "limiting the estate."

Limit, n. A bound; a restriction; a restraint; a circumscription. Boundary, border, or outer line of thing. Extent of power, right or authority conferred.

Limitation. Restriction or circumscription; settling an estate or property. A certain time allowed by a statute for bringing litigation (see Statute of limitations, below). The provisions of state constitution are not a "grant" but a "limitation" of legislative power. Ellerbe v. David, 193 S.C. 332, 8 S.E.2d 518, 520; Mulholland v. Ayers, 109 Mont. 558, 99 P.2d 234, 239. See also Proviso.

Corporations. Under statute providing that all corporations expiring by their own "limitation" shall for certain purposes be continued as bodies corporate for a term of three years, the word "limitation" is an act of limiting, a restriction of power, a qualification. Porter v. Tempe Min. & Mill. Co., 59 Nev. 332, 93 P.2d 741, 743.

Estates. The restriction or circumscription of an estate, in the conveyance by which it is granted, in respect to the interest of the grantee or its duration. The specific curtailment or confinement of an estate, by the terms of the grant, so that it cannot endure beyond a certain period or a designated contingency. A "limitation" on a grant determines an estate upon the happening of the event itself without the necessity of doing any act to regain the estate, such as re-entry. Gulf Production Co. v. Continental Oil Co., Tex., 132 S.W.2d 553, 563. A limitation, whether made by the express words of the party or existing in intendment of law, circumscribes the continuance of time for which the property is to be enjoyed, and by positive and certain terms, or by reference to some event which possibly may happen, marks the period at which the time of enjoyment shall end.

Collateral limitation. One which gives an interest in an estate for a specified period, but makes the right of enjoyment to depend on some collateral event, as an estate to A. till B. shall go to Rome.

Conditional limitation. A condition followed by a limitation over to a third person in case the condition be not fulfilled or there be a breach of it. A conditional limitation is where an estate is so expressly defined and limited by the words of its creation that it cannot endure for any longer time than till the contingency happens upon which the estate is to fail. Between conditional limitations and estates depending on conditions subsequent there is this difference: that in the former the estate determines as soon as the contingency happens; but in the latter it endures until the grantor or his heirs take advantage of the breach.

A conveyance of an estate in fee, subject to this limitation, passes the grantor's whole interest at once and creates an estate to arise and vest in a third person on contingency at a future uncertain time. Roadcap v. County School Bd. of Rockingham County, 194 Va. 201, 72 S.E.2d 250, 254.

In landlord and tenant law, a provision in a lease which gives a landlord added protection by enabling the landlord to end the term before its natural expiration date. Varela v. Miller, 204 Misc. 88, 120 N.Y.S.2d 688, 690. Such exists, for example, when lease provides that it shall terminate upon the happening of an event without any further election, entry, or re-entry. Pisarek v. Sikora, 29 Misc.2d 457, 216 N.Y.S.2d 202, 203.

Contingent limitation. When a remainder in fee is limited upon any estate which would by the common law be adjudged a fee tail, such a remainder is valid as a contingent limitation upon a fee, and vests in possession on the death of the first taker without issue living at the time of his death.

Limitation in law. A limitation in law, or an estate limited, is an estate to be holden only during the continuance of the condition under which it was granted, upon the determination of which the estate vests immediately in him in expectancy.

Limitation over. This term includes any estate in the same property created or contemplated by the conveyance, to be enjoyed after the first estate granted expires or is exhausted. Lane v. Citizens & Southern Nat. Bank, 195 Ga. 828, 25 S.E.2d 800, 802, 803. Thus, in a gift to A. for life, with remainder to the heirs of his body, the remainder is a "limitation over" to such heirs.

Special limitation. A qualification serving to mark out the bounds of an estate, so as to determine it ipso facto in a given event, without action, entry, or claim, before it would, or might, otherwise expire by force of, or according to, the general limitation.

Title by limitation. A prescriptive title; one which is indefeasible because of the expiration of the time prescribed by the statute of limitations for the bringing of actions to test or defeat it.

Words of limitation. In a conveyance or will, words which have the effect of marking the duration of an estate are termed "words of limitation." Thus, in a grant to A. and his heirs, the words "and his heirs" are words of limitation, because they show that A. is to take an estate in fee-simple and do not give his heirs anything. Summit v. Yount, 109 Ind. 506, 9 N.E. 582.

Limitation of actions. See Statute of limitations, below.

LIMITED OR SPECIAL JURISDICTION

Limitation of assize. In old practice, a certain time prescribed by statute, within which a man was required to allege himself or his ancestor to have been seized of lands sued for by a writ of assize.

Statute of limitations. Statutes of the federal government and various states setting maximum time periods during which certain actions can be brought or rights enforced. After the time period set out in the applicable statute of limitations has run, no legal action can be brought regardless of whether any cause of action ever existed.

A statute prescribing limitations to the right of action on certain described causes of action or criminal prosecutions; that is, declaring that no suit shall be maintained on such causes of action, nor any criminal charge be made, unless brought within a specified period of time after the right accrued. See e.g. 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 2401, 2501 (statutes of limitation for actions against U.S. government). In criminal cases, however, a statute of limitation is an act of grace, a surrendering by sovereign of its right to prosecute. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3281 et seq. (statutes of limitations for federal criminal prosecutions). See also Laches; Statute of limitations.

Statute of repose compared. While statutes of limitation are sometimes called "statutes of repose," the former bars right of action unless it is filed within a specified period of time after injury occurs, while "statute of repose" terminates any right of action after a specific time has elapsed, regardless of whether there has as yet been an injury. Hanson v. Williams County, N.D., 389 N.W.2d 319, 321. See also Statute (Statute of repose).

Words of limitation. Words that limit or define the interest in land that a grantee receives such as "and his heirs." Language in a deed indicating how long the estate granted is to endure.

Limitation of liability acts. State and federal statutes that limit liability for certain types of damages (e.g., pain and suffering) or limit liability of certain persons or groups (e.g., liability of corporate directors for acts of corporation), or limit time period in which action can be maintained (see Limitation (Statute of limitations)). See also Cap; Federal Tort Claims Act; Sovereign Immunity; No-fault.

Limitation of prosecutions. See Limitation (Statute of limitations).

Limitations, statute of. See Limitation (Statute of limitations).

Limited. Restricted; bounded; prescribed. Confined within positive bounds; restricted in duration, extent, or scope.

As to limited Company; Divorce; Fee; and Partnership, see those titles.

Ltd. A designation following a corporate business name and indicating its corporate and limited liability status. It is found most commonly after British and Canadian corporate names, though it is sometimes used in the United States.

Limited administration. An administration of a temporary character, granted for a particular period, or for a special or particular purpose.

Limited admissibility. In law of evidence, testimony or things may be admitted into evidence for a restricted purpose, and the trial judge should so instruct the jury at the time of its admission; e.g. prior contradictory statements are admissible to impeach but not admissible for the truth of the statements. However, if the evidence has multiple purposes, one being in violation of a constitutional protection for a criminal defendant, such evidence should not be admitted. Bruton v. United States, 391 U.S. 123, 88 S.Ct. 1620, 20 L.Ed.2d 476.

Similarly, evidence may frequently be competent as against one party, but not as against another, in which event the practice is to admit the evidence, with an instruction, if requested, that the jury are to consider it only as to the party against whom it is competent. Fed.Evid.R. 105.

Limited appeal. An appeal from only adverse portions of a decree; such is limited to the particular portions of the decree appealed from. Fox v. River Heights, 22 Tenn.App. 166, 118 S.W.2d 1104, 1114. See also Interlocutory appeal; Interlocutory Appeals Act.

Limited court. Where special authority, in derogation of common law, is conferred by statute on a court of general jurisdiction, it becomes an "inferior or limited court". For example, a probate court is a court of limited jurisdiction. Partlow v. Partlow, 246 Ala. 259, 20 So.2d 517, 518. See Limited or special jurisdiction.

Limited divorce. A divorce decree or judgment may be restricted to a dissolution of the marriage with no provision for support. In another sense, term refers to a divorce a mensa et thoro (from bed and board) with no right to remarry.

Limited executor. An executor whose appointment is qualified by limitations as to the time or place wherein, or the subject-matter whereon, the office is to be exercised; as distinguished from one whose appointment is absolute, i.e., certain and immediate, without any restriction in regard to the testator's effects or limitation in point of time.

Limited guaranty. A limited guaranty is ordinarily one restricted in its application to a single transaction. Cooling v. Springer, 3 Terry 228, 30 A.2d 466, 469.

Limited liability. See Limitation of liability acts.

Limited or special jurisdiction. Jurisdiction of court which is confined to particular types of cases or actions, or which can be exercised only under the limitations and circumstances prescribed by the statute. A court's power over an action is governed generally by statute and some courts have limited authority or power and the limitation is in terms of the nature of the case (e.g., probate courts), or the amount in controversy (e.g. small claims court), or the type of crime with which the limited or special jurisdiction

limited publication. Requests by customers to purchase or sell securities at the market price existing when the order reaches the exchange floor. A restriction on the sale or purchase of a security placed by a customer with a broker, limiting the price at which the customer is willing to buy or sell.

Lincoln's Inn. A inn of court. See Inns of Court.

Lindbergh act. Federal law which punishes kidnapping for ransom or reward when the victim is transported from one state to another or to a foreign country. The failure to release the victim within 24 hours creates a rebuttable presumption that such person has been transported in interstate or foreign commerce. 18 U.S.C. § 1201.

Line. A demarcation, border, or limit. The boundary or line of division between two estates. Person's trade, occupation or business. Carrier's route.

Building line. See Building line.

Collateral line. See Descent.

Descent. See Descent.

Direct line. See Descent.

Line of an intersection. A straight line substantially at right angles to bounds of highway at a point where, to the reasonable perception of a driver, the highway starts to widen as the result of the outcurving of its bounds to form the junction. Beck v. Sosnowitz, 125 Conn. 553, 7 A.2d 389, 391.

Line of credit. A margin or fixed limit of credit granted by one to another, typically from bank, retailer, or credit card issuer to customer, to the full extent of which the latter may avail himself in his dealings with the former, but which he must not exceed; usually intended to cover a series of transactions, in which case, when the customer's line of credit is nearly or quite exhausted, he is expected to reduce his indebtedness by payments before drawing upon it further. Modoc Meat & Cattle Co. v. First State Bank of Oregon, 271 Or. 276, 532 P.2d 21, 25. The maximum borrowing power (i.e. credit limit) of a person from a financial institution, credit card issuer, or the like. Agreement with bank or number of banks for short-term borrowings on demand.

Line of duty. In military law and usage, an act is said to be done, or an injury sustained, "in the line of duty," when done or suffered in the performance or discharge of a duty incumbent upon the individual in his character as a member of the military or naval forces. An injury suffered or disease contracted by a sailor is considered to have been in "line of duty" unless actually caused by something for which sailor is responsible which inter-

Line of ordinary high tide. Ordinary high tide may, for practical purposes, within a restricted area, be conceived as a level plane; the "line of ordinary high tide" is the intersection of said plane with the surface of the land. Swarzwald v. Cooley, 39 Cal.App.2d 306, 103 P.2d 580, 584. See Tide.

Maternal line. See Maternal line.

Paternal line. See Paternal line.

Public utilities. See Public utility.

Linea /liniːə/. Lat. A line; line of descent. See Descent.

Lineage /liniːdʒiː/ . Race; progeny; family, ascending or descending. Line of descent from an ancestor, hence, family, race, stock. See also Descent.

Lineal /liniːal/. That which comes in a line; especially a direct line, as from father to son. Collateral relationship is not called "lineal," though the expression "collateral line," is not unusual. Proceeding in direct or unbroken line, hereditary, unbroken in course; distinguished from collateral, as lineal descent, lineal succession, having an ancestral basis or right. See also Descent.

Lineal consanguinity /liniːal konsæŋgwɪnədiː/ . That kind of consanguinity which subsists between persons of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other; as between a particular person and his father, grandfather, great-grandfather, and so upward, in the direct ascending line; or between the same person and his son, grandson, great-grandson, and so downwards in the direct descending line. See Descent.

Lineal descendent. A person in the direct line of descent such as a child or grandchild as contrasted with a collateral descendent such as a niece.

Lineal descent. See Descent.

Lineal heir /liniːal hɪːr/ . One who inherits in a line either ascending or descending from a common source as distinguished from a collateral heir. Ferraro v. Augustine, 45 Ill.App.2d 295, 196 N.E.2d 16, 19. The words "lineal heirs" like "heirs of the body" mean all lineal descendants to the remotest posterity and are words of "inheritance" and not of "purchase", unless the instrument clearly shows that they were used in a restricted sense to denote "children". Sims v. Clayton, 193 S.C. 98, 7 S.E.2d 724, 727. See also Heirs.

Lineal warranty. A warranty by an ancestor from whom the title did or might have come to the heir.

Linea obliqua /liniːə abləɪkwaː/ ablɪkwaː/. In the civil law, the oblique line. More commonly termed "linea transversalis."

Linea recta /liniːə rɛktə/. The direct line; the vertical line. In computing degrees of kindred and the succession to estates, this term denotes the direct line of ascendants and descendants. Where a person springs from another immediately, or mediately through a third person, they are said to be in the direct line (linea recta), and are called "ascendants" and "descendants."

Linea recta est index sui et obliqui; lex est linea recti /liniːə rɛktə est indeks ʃjuːiway et ablɪkwaː; lɛks est liniə rɛktə/. A right line is a test of itself, and of an oblique; law is a line of right.

Linea recta semper prefertur transversali /liniːə rɛktə sempər prɛfɔrtər tɾænsvərsələi/. A right line is always preferred to the collateral.

Linea transversalis /liniːə tɾænsvərsələs/. A collateral, transverse, or oblique line. Where two persons are descended from a third, they are called "collaterals," and are said to be related in the collateral line (linea transversa or obliqua).

Line of credit. See Line (Line of credit).

Lines and corners. In deeds and surveys, boundary-lines and their angles with each other.

Lineup. A police identification procedure by which the suspect in a crime is exhibited, along with others with similar physical characteristics, before the victim or witness to determine if he can be identified as having committed the offense. To be accepted as valid, the lineup must meet certain standards and be free of undue suggestiveness. U. S. v. Wade, 388 U.S. 218, 87 S.Ct. 1926, 18 L.Ed.2d 1149. If the standards are met, the person who has identified the defendant may so testify at trial. "Lineup" involves and requires lining up of a number of individuals from which one of those lined up may or may not be identified as committer of a crime and there cannot be a one-man lineup. Dozie v. State, 49 Wis.2d 209, 181 N.W.2d 369, 371.

Post-indictment lineups are considered to be a "critical stage" of criminal proceedings at which the accused has the constitutional right to be represented by counsel. United States v. Wade, 388 U.S. 218, 87 S.Ct. 1926, 18 L.Ed.2d 1149; Gilbert v. California, 388 U.S. 263, 87 S.Ct. 1951, 18 L.Ed. 1178.

Though stationhouse lineup may be suggestive, it is admissible if under totality of circumstances victim's identification was reliable. Neil v. Biggers, 409 U.S. 188, 93 S.Ct. 375, 34 L.Ed.2d 401.

Compare Show-up.

Link. A unit in a connected series; anything which serves to connect or bind together the things which precede and follow it. Thus, we speak of a "link in the chain of title." Something which binds together, or connects, separate things; a part of a connected series;

As a unit of land measurement, see Land measure.

Link-in-chain. The 6th Amendment (U.S.Const.) privilege against self-incrimination protects a witness not only from the requirement of answering questions which might call for directly incriminating answers but also from answers which might tie or link the defendant to criminal activity in the chain of evidence. Estes v. Potter, C.A.Tex., 183 F.2d 865. Immunity also protects one from such result. State v. Buchanan, Fla.App., 207 So.2d 711, 717.

Liquere /likwiriy/.
Latin. In the civil law, to be clear, evident, or satisfactory. When a judex was in doubt how to decide a case, he represented to the prretor, under oath, sibi non liquere (that it was not clear to him), and was thereupon discharged.

Liquet /likwat/.
It is clear or apparent; it appears. Satis liquet, it sufficiently appears.

Liquid.
Said of a business with a substantial amount (the amount is unspecified) of working capital, especially quick assets. See also Liquidity.

Liquid assets.
Cash, or assets readily convertible to cash.

Liquidate.
To pay and settle. To convert assets to cash. Farmers State Bank & Trust Co. v. Brady, 137 Tex. 39, 152 S.W.2d 729, 732; Fleckner v. Bank of U. S., 21 U.S. (8 Wheat.) 338, 362, 5 L.Ed. 631. To adjust or settle a debt. Belden v. Modern Finance Co., Ohio App., 61 N.E.2d 801, 804, 44 O.L.A. 163. To ascertain the amount, or the several amounts, of the liabilities of the debtor and apportion the assets toward discharge of the indebtedness, Farmers State Bank & Trust Co. v. Brady, 137 Tex. 39, 152 S.W.2d 729, 732; to ascertain the balance due and to whom payable, State ex rel. Banister v. Cantley, 330 Mo. 943, 52 S.W.2d 397, 399; to assemble and mobilize the assets, settle with the creditors and the debtors and apportion the remaining assets, if any, among the stockholders or owners, United States v. Metcalf, C.C.A.Cal., 131 F.2d 677, 679; to clear up, State ex rel. Banister v. Cantley, 330 Mo. 943, 52 S.W.2d 397, 399; Fleckner v. Bank of U. S., La., 21 U.S. (8 Wheat.) 338, 362, 5 L.Ed. 631; to determine by agreement or litigation precise amount of indebtedness, Continental Ins. Co. v. Harris, 190 Ark. 1110, 82 S.W.2d 841, 843; to discharge, Continental Ins. Co. v. Harris, 190 Ark. 1110, 82 S.W.2d 841, 843; to extinguish an indebtedness, Belden v. Modern Finance Co., Ohio App., 61 N.E.2d 801, 804, 44 O.L.A. 163; to gather in the assets, convert them into cash and distribute them according to the legal rights of the parties interested; to lessen, Fleckner v. Bank of U. S., La., 21 U.S. (8 Wheat.) 338, 362, 5 L.Ed. 631; to make amount of indebtedness clear and certain, Continental Ins. Co. v. Harris, 190 Ark. 1110, 82 S.W.2d 841, 843; to reduce to precision in amount and to satisfy, State ex rel. Banister v. Cantley, 330 Mo. 943, 52 S.W.2d 397, 399; to sell, Esser v. Chime1, 27 Del.Ch. 69, 30 A.2d 685, 687; to "wind up" affairs of a business. See also Bankruptcy proceedings; Liquidation; Settle; Settlement.

Liquidated.
Ascertained; determined; fixed; settled; made clear or manifest. Cleared away; paid; discharged. Adjusted, certain, or settled. Murchison v. Levy Plumbing Co., Tex.Civ.App., 73 S.W.2d 967, 968. Declared by the parties as to amount, U. S. v. Skinner & Eddy Corporation, D.C.Wash., 28 F.2d 373, 386; made certain as to what and how much is due, Electrical Products Corporation of Oregon v. Ziegler Drug Stores, 157 Or. 267, 71 P.2d 583, 584. Made certain or fixed by agreement of parties or by operation of law, Miller v. Prince Street Elevator Co., 41 N.M. 330, 68 P.2d 666, 666. Settled, paid, discharged. Trenton Banking Co. v. Kennedy, 17 N.J.Misc. 222, 8 A.2d 232, 234. See also Liquidate; Liquidation; Settle; Settlement.

Liquidated account.
An account whereof the amount is certain and fixed, either by the act and agreement of the parties or by operation of law. Gasper v. Mayer, 171 Okl. 457, 43 P.2d 467, 471; Williamson v. City of Eastland, Tex.Civ.App., 65 S.W.2d 774, 775.

Liquidated claim.
Claim, amount of which has been agreed on by parties to action or is fixed by operation of law. Tapp v. Tapp's Trustee, 299 Ky. 345, 185 S.W.2d 534, 535; United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. American Bldg. Maintenance Co. of Los Angeles, 7 Cal.App.2d 683, 46 P.2d 984, 988. A claim which can be determined with exactness from parties' agreement or by arithmetical process or application of definite rules of law, without reliance on opinion or discretion. Lester N. Johnson Co., Inc. v. City of Spokane, 22 Wash.App., 265, 588 P.2d 1214, 1221. Claim for debt or damages is "liquidated" in character if amount thereof is fixed, has been agreed upon, or is capable of ascertainment by mathematical computation or operation of law. Robinson v. Loyola Foundation, Inc., Fla.App., 236 So.2d 154, 157.

Liquidated damages. See Damages.

Liquidated debt.
A debt is liquidated when it is certain what is due and how much is due. That which has been made certain as to amount due by agreement of parties or by operation of law. Gasper v. Mayer, 171 Okl. 457, 43 P.2d 467, 471. Compare Unliquidated debt.

Liquidated demand. A demand the amount of which has been ascertained or settled by agreement of the parties, or otherwise. Williamson v. City of Eastland, Tex.Civ.App., 65 S.W.2d 774, 775. Amount claimed is "liquidated" in character if amount thereof is fixed, has been agreed upon, or is capable of ascertainment by mathematical computation or operation of law. Williamson v. City of Eastland, Tex.Civ.App., 65 S.W.2d 774, 775. In liquidation, "liquidated demand" if it is susceptible of being made certain in amount by mathematical calculations from factors which are or ought to be in possession or knowledge of party to be charged. Rifkin v. Safenovitz, 131 Conn. 411, 40 A.2d 188, 189.

Liquidating distribution. A distribution by a partnership or corporation that is in complete liquidation of the entity's trade or business activities. Typically, such distributions generate capital gain or loss to the investors without regard, for instance, to the earnings and profits of the corporation or to the partnership's basis in the distributed property. They can, however, lead to recognized gain or loss at the corporate level. See also Liquidating dividend; Liquidation.

Liquidating dividend. A distribution of assets in the form of a dividend from a corporation that is reducing capital or going out of business. Such a payment may arise, for example, when management decides to sell off certain company assets and distribute the proceeds to the shareholders. Such a distribution may not be from current or retained earnings. See also Liquidating distribution.

Liquidating partner. The partner who upon the dissolution or insolvency of the firm, is appointed to settle its accounts, collect assets, adjust claims, and pay debts.

Liquidating trust. A trust, the object of which is liquidation as soon as possible. Helvering v. Washburn, C.C.A.Minn., 99 F.2d 478.

Liquidation. The act or process of settling or making clear, fixed, and determinate that which before was uncertain or unascertained. Payment, satisfaction, or collection; realization on assets and discharge of liabilities. To clear away (to lessen) a debt. Craddock-Terry Co. v. Powell, 180 Va. 242, 22 S.E.2d 30, 34. To pay or settle. In re Klink's Estate, 310 Ill.App. 609, 35 N.E.2d 684, 687. To take over for collection. Belden v. Modern Finance Co., Ohio App., 61 N.E.2d 801, 804, 44 O.L.A. 163. Winding up or settling with creditors and debtors. Wilson v. Superior Court in and for Santa Clara County, 2 Cal.2d 632, 45 P.2d 286, 288.

With respect to winding up of affairs of corporation, is process of reducing assets to cash, discharging liabilities and dividing surplus or loss. Occurs when a corporation distributes its net assets to its shareholders and ceases its legal existence.

The settling of financial affairs of a business or individual, usually by liquidating (turning to cash) all assets for distribution to creditors, heirs, etc. It is to be distinguished from dissolution which is the end of the legal existence of a corporation. Liquidation may precede or follow dissolution, depending upon statutes.

See also Bankruptcy proceedings; Distressed sale; Distribution in liquidation; Liquidate; Liquidated; Receivership.

One month liquidation. A special election available to certain shareholders of a corporation which determines how the distributions received in liquidation by the electing shareholders will be treated for Federal income tax purposes. In order to qualify for the election, the corporation must be completely liquidated within the time span of any one calendar month. I.R.C. § 333.

Partial liquidation. A partial liquidation occurs when some of the corporation's assets are distributed to its shareholders (usually on a pro rata basis) and the corporation continues doing business in a contracted form. Distributions of cash or property beyond the amount of earned surplus of a corporation is a partial liquidation.

Tax implications. In a complete or partial liquidation of a corporation, amounts received by the shareholders in exchange for their stock are usually treated as a sale or exchange of the stock resulting in capital gain or loss treatment. Special rules apply to one month liquidations, twelve month liquidations, and the liquidation of a subsidiary.

Twelve-month liquidation. A provision of the Internal Revenue Code that requires a corporation selling property within the 12-month period from the adoption of a plan of liquidation to its complete liquidation to recognize no gain or loss on such sales. Generally, inventory is not included within the definition unless a bulk sale occurs. See I.R.C. § 337.

Liquidation dividend. Act or operation in winding up affairs of firm or corporation, a settling with its debtors and creditors, and an appropriation and distribution to its stockholders ratably of the amount of profit and loss. Hellman v. Helvering, 63 App.D.C. 18, 68 F.2d 763, 765. See also Liquidating dividend.

Liquidation price. A price paid for property sold to liquidate a debt. Usually less than market value since there is pressure to sell or a forced sale, either of which does not usually bring the highest price. Compare Going concern value.

Liquidator. A person appointed to carry out the winding up of a company. In England and Canada, a receiver who liquidates a corporation on dissolution.

Liquid debt /likwad dët/. A debt immediately and unconditionally due. See Liquidated debt.

Liquidity. The status or condition of a person or a business in terms of his or its ability to convert assets into cash. The degree to which an asset can be acquired or disposed of without danger of intervening loss in nominal value. Money is the most liquid asset.

With respect to securities markets, refers to the market characteristic of a security or commodity with enough units outstanding and traded to allow large transactions to occur without a substantial variation in price. Most shares traded at the New York Stock Exchange have liquidity.

Liquor. Alcoholic beverage made by distillation; to be contrasted with wines which are made by fermentation. See also Alcoholic liquors; Intoxicating liquor.

Liquor offenses. Generic term describing crimes connected with the use, sale or abuse of intoxicating liquor or the absence of a license to sell liquor (e.g. federal liquor traffic offenses, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1261 et seq.). See Dram Shop Acts; Driving while intoxicated.

Lis /lis/. Lat. A controversy or dispute; a suit or action at law.

Lis alibi pendens /lis ələbəi pənˈdɛns/. A suit pending elsewhere. The fact that proceedings are pending between a plaintiff and defendant in one court in respect to a given matter is a ground for preventing the plaintiff from taking proceedings in another court against the same defendant for the same object arising out of the same cause of action.
Lis mota /lis mówta/. A controversy moved or begun. By this term is meant a dispute which has arisen upon a point or question which afterwards forms the issue upon which legal proceedings are instituted. After such controversy has arisen, made by members of the family since deceased, are not admissible.

Lis pendens /lis péndenə/. A pending suit. Jurisdiction, power, or control which courts acquire over property in litigation pending action and until final judgment.

A common-law doctrine, now codified in many states so as to condition its effect on the filing of a notice, that binds a purchaser or encumbrancer of property to the results of any pending lawsuit which may affect the title to any lien on, or possession of the property. Purpose of "lis pendens" is to notify prospective purchasers and encumbrancers that any interest acquired by them in property in litigation is subject to decision of court and while it is simply a notice of pending litigation the effect thereof on the owner of property is constraining. Beefy King Intern., Inc., v. Veigle, C.A.Fla., 464 F.2d 1102, 1104.

Notice of lis pendens. A notice filed on public records for the purpose of warning all persons that the title to certain property is in litigation, and that they are in danger of being bound by an adverse judgment. The notice is for the purpose of preserving rights pending litigation. Mitchell v. Federal Land Bank of St. Louis, 206 Ark. 253, 174 S.W.2d 671, 674. This is termed a "notice of pendency" in New York. CPLR § 6501.

List. A docket or calendar of cases ready for trial or argument, or of motions ready for hearing. Entering in an official list or schedule; as, to list property for taxation, to put into a list or catalogue, to register, to list a property with a real estate broker. Official registry of voters. See also Docket; Listing.

Listed. Included in a list; put on a list; e.g. on a list of taxable persons or property. See Listing.

Listed security. A security of a company that has met the registration requirements of the SEC and has been accepted for trading on a securities exchange, having complied with the rules of the stock exchange on which it is traded. Such requirements include submitting periodic financial reports and consenting to certain supervision. "Unlisted" securities are traded on the over-the-counter markets. See also Listing (Securities); Offering.

Dual listing. Listing of a security on more than one security exchange.

Listed security exchanges. Organized secondary security markets that operate at designated places of business. The New York Stock Exchange (NYSE) is an example of a listed security exchange.

Listers. This word is used in some of the states to designate the persons appointed to make lists of taxables.

Listing. Real estate. An agreement between an owner of real property and a real estate agent, whereby the agent agrees to attempt to secure a buyer or tenant for specific property at a certain price and terms in return for a fee or commission. The various types of real estate listings are as follows:

An open or general listing is the right to sell that may be given to more than one agent at a time. An exclusive agency listing is the right of one agent to be the only one other than the owner who may sell the property during a period of time. An exclusive authorization to sell listing is a written contract that gives one agent the sole right to sell the property during a time period. This means that even if the owner finds the buyer, the agent will get a commission. Multiple listing occurs when an agent with an exclusive listing shares information about the property sale with many members of a real estate association and shares the sale commission with an agent who finds the buyer. A net listing is an arrangement in which the seller sets a minimum price he or she will take for the property and the agent's commission is the amount the property sells for over that minimum selling price. Nonexclusive listing exists when the real estate broker has an exclusive listing as opposed to other agents, but the owner may sell the property without using an agent, and not be liable to pay a commission. Also called an agency agreement. An open listing obligates a seller to pay a commission when a specified broker makes a sale, but which reserves the right of the seller to sell his own property without paying a commission. Such listings may be given to any number of brokers on the same property.

See also Brokerage listing; Multiple listing; Open listing.

Securities. In securities, the contract between a firm and a stock exchange covering the trading of that firm's securities on the stock exchange. See also Listed security; Offering.

Taxation. "Listing property for taxation" is the making of a schedule or inventory of such property, whereby owner makes statement of property in response to assessor's inquiries. Templing v. Bennett, 156 Kan. 68, 131 P.2d 904, 907. The word listing ordinarily implies an official listing of the persons and property to be taxed, and a valuation of the property of each person as a basis of apportionment.

Listing agent. The broker's representative who obtains a listing agreement with the seller, as opposed to the selling agent who may represent another broker.

List of creditors. Documentation in the form of a list with names and addresses and amounts owed to creditors, required as a schedule in bankruptcy proceedings.

List price. The published or advertised price of goods which may change after negotiation and be reduced by a discount or rebate for prompt payment or volume purchase.

Litem denunciare /läy'tam dañinisyərī/. Lat. In the civil law, to cast the burden of a suit upon another; particularly used with reference to a purchaser of property who, being sued in respect to it by a third person, gives notice to his vendor and demands his aid in its defense.

Litem suam facere /lāytam s(y)ūwam fāssiyiy/. Lat. To make a suit his own. Where a jūdex, from partiality or enmity, evidently favored either of the parties, he was said litem suam facere.

Lite pendente /lāytiy pandéntiy/. Lat. Pending the suit.

Litera /lītara/. Lat. A letter. The letter of a law, as distinguished from its spirit. See Letter.

Literacy. Term as generally defined requires both ability to read and ability to write a language. Castro v. State, 2 C.3d 223, 85 Cal.Rptr. 20, 21, 466 P.2d 244. Literacy test. Test required in certain states as a precondition to right to vote. Such tests are unconstitutional if invidiously discriminatory. Lassiter v. Northampton Election Bd., 360 U.S. 45, 79 S.Ct. 985, 3 L.Ed.2d 1072. The Voting Rights Act of 1965 suspended such tests in states where less than half the adult population were registered or had voted in the previous election.

Litera /lītiy/. Letters. A term applied in old English law to various instruments in writing, public and private.

Litera dimissoria /lītiy dimas̀orìiyiy/. Dimissory letters (q.v.).

Litera mortua /lītiy mórtiyuwiy/. Dead letters; fulfilling words of a statute.

Litera patentes /lītiy patẽntiyz/. Letters patent; literally, open letters.

Litera patentes regis non erunt vacua /lītiy patẽntiyz rīyas nōn érant vākyuwiy/. The king's letters patent shall not be void.

Litera procuratoriae /lītiy prōkyarstòriiyiy/. In old English law, letters procuratory; letters of procuration; letters of attorney.

Litera recognitions /lītiy rēkagnišhiyownās/. In maritime law, a bill of lading.

Litera scripta manent /lītiy skriptiym mēnānt/. Written words last.

Litera sigillata /lītiy ɕijalêdyiyl/. In old English law, sealed letters. The return of a sheriff was so called.

Literal /līt̯er̯al/. According to language; following expression in words. A literal construction of a document adheres closely to its words, without making differences for extrinsic circumstances; a literal performance of a condition is one which complies exactly with its terms.

Literal construction. The interpretation of a document according to its words alone without any consideration of the intent of the parties who drafted or signed it beyond the fact that they used such language.

Literal contract. In Roman law, a species of written contract, in which the formal act by which an obligation was superinduced on the convention was an entry of the sum due, where it should be specifically ascertained, on the debit side of a ledger. A contract, the whole of the evidence of which is reduced to writing, and binds the party who subscribed it, although he has received no consideration.

Literal proof. In the civil law, written evidence.

Literary /līt̯er̯i̯y/. Pertaining to literature; connected with authors and the study or use of books and writings.

Literary composition. An original result of mental production, developed in a series of written or printed words, arranged for an intelligent purpose, in an orderly succession of expressive combinations. See also Literary work.

Literary property. The right which entitles an author and his assigns to all the use and profit of his composition, to which no independent right is, through any act or omission on his or their part, vested in another person. The exclusive right of owner to possess, use and dispose of intellectual productions. The term denotes the corporeal property in which an intellectual production is embodied; and it may consist of letters, lectures, sermons or addresses. Carpenter Foundation v. Oakes, 26 Cal.App.3d 784, 103 Cal.Rptr. 368, 375. See also Copyright; Literary work.

Literary work. Under Copyright Act, "literary works" are works, other than audiovisual works, expressed in words, numbers, or other verbal or numerical symbols or indicia, regardless of the nature of the material objects, such as books, periodicals, manuscripts, phonorecords, film, tapes, disks, or cards in which they are embodied. 17 U.S.C.A. § 101.

Literate. A person is literate if he can read and write a language. Knowledgable and educated.

Literatura /līt̯ar̯ɔt(y)ūra/. "Ad literaturam ponere" means to put children to school. This liberty was anciently denied to those parents who were servile tenants, without the lord's consent. The prohibition against the education of sons arose from the fear that the son, being bred to letters, might enter into holy orders, and so stop or divert the services which he might otherwise do as heir to his father.

Literis obligatio /līt̯ar̯is əblagéyshi(y)yow/. In Roman law, the contract of nomen, which was constituted by writing (scriptūra). It was of two kinds, viz.: (1) A re in personam, when a transaction was transferred from the daybook (adversaria) into the ledger (codex) in the form of a debt under the name or heading of the purchaser or debtor (nomen); and (2) a persona in personam, where a debt already standing under one nomen or heading was transferred in the usual course of novatio from that nomen to another and substituted nomen. By reason of this transferring, these obligations were called "nomina transcriptione." No money was, in fact, paid to constitute the contract. If ever money was paid, then the nomen was arcarium (i.e., a real contract, re contractus), and not a nomen proprium.
Litigious.

A party to a lawsuit (i.e. plaintiff or defendant); one engaged in litigation; usually spoken of active parties, not of nominal ones.

Litigare /litigéry/. Lat. To litigate; to carry on a suit (litem agere), either as plaintiff or defendant; to claim or dispute by action; to test or try the validity of a claim by action.

Litigate /litageyt/. To dispute or contend in form of law; to settle a dispute or seek relief in a court of law; to carry on a lawsuit. To bring into or engage in litigation; the act of carrying on a suit in a court law; a judicial contest; hence, any controversy that must be decided upon evidence in a court of law. To make the subject of a lawsuit; to contest in law; to prosecute or defend by pleadings, evidence, and debate in a court.

Litigation /litigéshen/. A lawsuit. Legal action, including all proceedings therein. Contest in a court of law for the purpose of enforcing a right or seeking a remedy. A judicial contest, a judicial controversy, a suit at law.

Litigious /latij̣ịs/. That which is the subject of a lawsuit or action; that which is contested in a court of law. In another sense, "litigious" signifies fond of litigation; prone to engage in suits.

Litigious right /latij̣is rāyt/. In the civil law, a right which cannot be exercised without undergoing a lawsuit. Civil Code La. art. 3556, par. 18.

A right, to be considered "litigious" under Louisiana law, must be in litigation at time of the sale thereof, and ceases to be litigious if at time of the sale judgment has become final. Saucier v. Crichton, C.C.A.La., 147 F.2d 430, 435.

Litis astinatio /lāytas ēstaméysh(y)yow/. Lat. The measure of damages.

Litis contestatio /lāytas kōнтastéysh(y)yow/. Lat. Civil and Canon Law. Contestation of suit; the process of contesting a suit by the opposing statements of the respective parties; the process of coming to an issue; the attainment of an issue; the issue itself.

Ecclesiastical Courts. The general answer made by the defendant, in which he denied the matter charged against him in the libel.

Litis denunciatio /lāytas dànnáisyéysh(y)yow/. Lat. In old civil law, the process by which a purchaser of property, who is sued for its possession or recovery by a third person, falls back upon his vendor's covenant of warranty, by giving the latter notice of the action and demanding his aid in defending it.

Litis dominium /lāytas dàmniyaym/. Lat. In old civil law, ownership, control, or direction of a suit. A fiction of law by which the employment of an attorney or proctor (procurator) in a suit was authorized or justified, he being supposed to become, by the appointment of his principal (dominus) or client, the dominus litis.

Litis nomen omnem actionem significat, sive in rem, sive in personam sit /lāytas nōwman ómmən ākshiyōwnom sənjifəkət, sāyviy in rēm, sāyviy in pərsōnəm sīt/. A lawsuit signifies every action, whether it be in rem or in personam.

Litispendence /lāytaspéndəns/. An obsolete term for the time during which a lawsuit is going on.

Litre /lītər/. Fr. A measure of capacity in the metric system, being a cubic decimetre, equal to 61.022 cubic inches, or 2.113 American pints, or 1.76 English pints.

Littering. Littering is dumping, throwing, placing, depositing or leaving, or causing to be dumped, thrown, deposited or left any refuse of any kind or any object or substance which tends to pollute, mar or deface, into, upon or about: (a) Any public street, highway, alley, road, right-of-way, park or other public place, or any lake, stream, watercourse, or other body of water, except by direction of some public officer or employee authorized by law to direct or permit such acts; or (b) Any private property without the consent of the owner or occupant of such property.

Littoral land. Land bordering ocean, sea, or lake.

Littoral rights. Rights concerning properties abutting an ocean, sea or lake rather than a river or stream (riparian). Littoral rights are usually concerned with the use and enjoyment of the shore. See Water rights (Water rights).

Litura /līt(y)ūrə/. Lat. In the civil law, an obliteration or blot in a will or other instrument.

Litus /lāytas/. In civil law, the bank of a stream or shore of the sea; the coast.

In old European law, a kind of servant; one who surrendered himself into another's power.

Litus est quosquaque maximus fluctus a mari pervenit /lāytas īst kowwaskiwi máksəməs flāktəs īy mərər pərvjənit/. The shore is where the highest wave from the sea has reached.

Litus maris /lāytas mərəs/. The sea-shore.

Live, adj. Having or possessing life. See also Alive; Life.

Live, v. To live in a place, is to reside there, to abide there, to occupy as one's home. Leroux v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, 140 Cal.App. 569, 35 P.2d 624, 626. See also Domicile; Living; Residence.

Live and cohabit together as husband and wife. As applied to common-law marriages, means a living together, claiming to be married, in the relationship of husband and wife. Drummond v. Benson, Tex.Civ.App., 133 S.W.2d 154, 159.

Livelhood. Means of support or subsistence.

Livelode. Maintenance; support.

Livery /liv(ə)ri/. In old English law, delivery of possession of their lands to the king's tenants in capite or tenants by knight's service. A writ which could be sued... out by a ward in chivalry, on reaching his majority, to obtain delivery of the possession of his lands out of the hands of the guardian.

Act of delivering legal possession of property. See Livery of seisin.

A particular dress or garb appropriate or peculiar to certain persons, as the members of a guild, or, more particularly, the servants of a nobleman or gentleman.

The privilege of a particular guild or company of persons, the members thereof being called "livery-men."

A contract of hiring out of work-beasts, particularly horses, to the use of the hirer. It is commonly used in the compound, "livery-stable." Feeding, stabling, and care of horses for pay. Rental of vehicles, boats, etc.

Word "livery" as used in automobile policy excluding coverage for automobile while being used as a livery conveyance means the hiring out of horses and carriages or a concern offering vehicles of various kinds for rent. Gagnard v. Thibodeaux, La.App., 336 So.2d 1069, 1070.

Livery conveyance. A vehicle used indiscriminately in conveying the public, without limitation to certain persons or particular occasions or without being governed by special terms. Elliott v. Behner, 150 Kan. 876, 96 P.2d 852, 857.

Livery in chivalry. In feudal law, the delivery of the lands of a ward in chivalry out of the guardian's hands, upon the heir's attaining the requisite age,—twenty-one for males, sixteen for females. 2 Bl.Comm. 68.

Livery office. An office appointed for the delivery of lands.

Livery of seisin /lɪvəri əv siyzən/. The appropriate ceremony, at common law, for transferring the corporal possession of lands or tenements by a grantor to his grantee. It was livery in deed where the parties went together upon the land, and there a twig, clod, key, or other symbol was delivered in the name of the whole. Livery in law was where the same ceremony was performed, not upon the land itself, but in sight of it. 2 Bl.Comm. 315, 316.

Lives in being. As used in rule against perpetuities, means any lives in being at any time future interest is created, regardless of personal interest therein.

Livestock insurance. See Insurance.

Live storage. As applied to storage of automobiles in garages, "dead storage" is where cars not in use are deposited or put away, sometimes for the season, and "live storage" is the storage of cars in active daily use. Hogan v. O'Brien, 123 Misc. 865, 206 N.Y.S. 831, 832, affirmed 212 App.Div. 193, 208 N.Y.S. 477. The extent of responsibility of a garage keeper for cars put in his garage sometimes depends on whether they are in "dead storage" or "live storage."

Living. Existing, surviving, or continuing in operation. Also means to abide, to dwell, to reside and literally signifies the pecuniary resources by means of which one exists. Leroux v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, 140 Cal.App. 569, 35 P.2d 624, 626. See also Alive; Domicile; Life; Residence; Viable.

Living apart. To live in a separate abode. McDaniel v. McDaniel, 292 Ky. 56, 165 S.W.2d 966, 967. See also Living separate and apart.

Living at time of another's death. Remaining in life after such other person's death (e.g. surviving spouse). Sabit v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. of Baltimore, 184 Md. 24, 40 A.2d 231, 238. See Survivor.

Living in open and notorious adultery. To constitute, parties must dwell together openly and notoriously as if conjugal relation existed between them. People v. Potter, 319 Ill.App. 409, 49 N.E.2d 307, 309. The parties must reside together in face of society as if conjugal relations existed between them, and fact of their so living and that they are not husband and wife must be known in community in which they reside. Mathis v. State, 60 Okl.Cr. 58, 61 P.2d 261, 267.

Living issue. Living children.

Living separate and apart. Exists where the spouses have come to a parting of the ways and have no present intention of resuming marital relations and taking up life together under the same roof, not where they are residing temporarily in different places for economic or social reasons. Woodall v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.9, 105 F.2d 474, 477. This is a no-fault ground for divorce in many states when the spouses have lived apart for the statutorily prescribed period.

Living together. As respects court's right to allow suit money to wife in divorce action, means dwelling together in same house, eating at same table, the two parties holding themselves out to world and conducting themselves toward each other as husband and wife. Lipp v. Lipp, Mo.App., 117 S.W.2d 364–366.

Living trust. Trust which is operative during life of settlor; an active or inter vivos trust.

Living will. See Will.

Living with husband. Means to dwell, to reside, to make one's abiding place or home with him, and may also mean to cohabit. Living together as husband and wife in ordinary acceptance of words in common understanding; maintaining a home and living together in same household or actually cohabiting under conditions which would be regarded as constituting a family relation. McPadden v. Morris, 126 Conn. 654, 13 A.2d 679, 680.

L.J. An abbreviation for "Law Judge;" also for "Law Journal."
LL. The reduplicated form of the abbreviation "L." for "law," used as a plural. It is generally used in citing old collections of statute law; as "L. Hen. I."

LL. (Also L.Lat.) and L.F. (also L.Fr.) are used as abbreviations of the terms "Law Latin" and "Law French."

L.L.B., L.L.M., and L.L.D. Abbreviations used to denote, respectively, the three academic degrees in law,—bachelor, master, and doctor of laws; the latter commonly being an honorary degree. See also J.D.

Lloyd's association. See Lloyd's underwriters.

Lloyd's bonds. The name of a class of evidences of debt, used in England; being acknowledgments, by a borrowing company made under its seal, of a debt incurred and actually due by the company to a contractor or other person for work done, goods supplied, or otherwise, as the case may be, with a covenant for payment of the principal and interest at a future time, as distinct from a security for a present advance; thus its issuance does not depend on the borrowing power of the company.

Lloyd's insurance. Under this type of insurance, insurers are such as individuals and not as a corporate insurance company and the liability for loss is several and not joint. Jones v. Hollywood Style Shop, Tex.Civ.App., 62 S.W.2d 167. The "Lloyds' Plan," contemplates individual liability of the several underwriters. Harris v. Prince, 132 Tex. 231, 121 S.W.2d 983, 986. See also Lloyd's of London; Lloyd's underwriters; London Lloyds.

Lloyd's of London. An association in the city of London, originally for the transaction of marine insurance, the members of which underwrite one another's policies. An insurance mart in London at which individual underwriters gather to quote rates and write insurance on the widest variety of risks. See also London Lloyds.

Lloyd's underwriters. Any aggregation of individuals, who under a common name engage in the business of insurance for profit through an attorney-in-fact having authority to obligate the underwriters severally, within such limits as may be lawfully specified in the power of attorney, on contracts of insurance made or issued by such attorney-in-fact, in the name of such aggregation of individuals, to and with any person or persons insured. N.Y.Consol.Laws, Laws, § 425.

Load. The portion of the offering price of shares of mutual fund open-end investment companies that covers sales commissions and all other costs of distribution.

Load fund. See Load; Mutual Fund.

Loading. The act of putting a load on or in; as to load a car or a vessel.

The difference between gross and net premiums on insurance policies. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Rouillard, 92 N.H. 16, 24 A.2d 264, 266; Magers v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 348 Mo. 96, 152 S.W.2d 148, 150. In insurance, that portion of the premium used for meeting selling and administrative expenses beyond that portion required to meet the liability reserve. In an open-end investment company, that portion of the price of the share added to cover selling expenses.

Load line. The depth to which a ship will sink in salt water when loaded. A design, painted on each side of the vessel, intended as a guide to determine safe loading depth under various conditions. The Indien, C.C.A.Cal., 71 P.2d 752, 759.

Loadmanage. The pay to loadsmen; that is, persons who sail before ships, in barks or small vessels, with instruments for towing the ship and directing her course, in order that she may escape the dangers in her way.

Loaf. To spend time in idleness, to lounge or loiter about or along. City of Olathe v. Lauck, 156 Kan. 637, 135 P.2d 549, 551. See also Malinger.

Loan. A lending. Delivery by one party to and receipt by another party of sum of money upon agreement, express or implied, to repay it with or without interest. Boerner v. Colwell Co., 21 Cal.3d 37, 145 Cal.Rptr. 380, 984, 577 P.2d 200. Anything furnished for temporary use to a person at his request, on condition that it shall be returned, or its equivalent in kind, with or without compensation for its use. Liberty Nat. Bank & Trust Co. v. Travelers Indem. Co., 58 Misc.2d 443, 295 N.Y.S.2d 983, 986.

Bailment without reward, consisting of the delivery of an article by the owner to another person, to be used by the latter gratuitously, and returned either in specie or in kind. A borrowing of money or other personal property by a person who promises to return it.

"Loan" includes: (1) the creation of debt by the lender's payment of or agreement to pay money to the debtor or to a third party for the account of the debtor; (2) the creation of debt by a credit to an account with the lender upon which the debtor is entitled to draw immediately; (3) the creation of debt pursuant to a lender credit card or similar arrangement; and (4) the forbearance of debt arising from a loan. Uniform Consumer Credit Code, § 3-106.

See also Conventional loan; Equity loan; Fixed rate loan; Mortgage loan; Participation loan. For term loan, see Term.

Amortized loan. One which calls for periodic payments which are applied first to interest and then to principal as provided by the terms of the note.

Bridge loan. Short term loan needed to cover down payment and costs associated with purchase or construction of new home pending sale of existing home. See Bridge loan; also Construction loan, below.

Call loan. One which is payable on demand or call by the lender.

Collateral loan. One which is secured by property or securities. See Secured loan.

Commercial loan. Generally a short term loan for 30 to 90 days given by financial institutions.
Commodity loan. One which is secured by a commodity such as cotton or wool in the form of a warehouse receipt or other negotiable instrument.

Consolidation loan. A borrowing in which the proceeds of the loan are used to pay off other individual loans and create a more manageable debt.

Construction loan. Short-term interim loan for financing cost of building construction. Payments are made periodically as work is completed with repayment usually made from permanent mortgage funds secured by completed structure. Also referred to as bridge loan, above.

Consumer loan. One which is made or extended to a natural person for family, household, personal or agricultural purposes and generally governed by truth-in-lending statutes and regulations.

Day loan. One made to a broker on a day to day basis to finance his daily transactions.

Demand loan. One on which the lender may make demand or call at any time for repayment. See also Call loan, above.

Equity loan. See that topic.

Installment loan. One which is repaid according to its terms over a period of time in installments.

Non-performing loan. An outstanding loan that is not being repaid, i.e. neither payments on interest or principal are being made.

Non-recourse loan. Loans made to farmers by a government organization in exchange for a particular commodity; e.g. wheat or corn. They are called nonrecourse because the government can never demand payment for the loan.

Personal loan. One which is generally for a short period of time for personal as contrasted with commercial purposes. It may be secured or unsecured. See also Consumer loan, above.

Secured loan. One which is secured by property or securities. See also Collateral loan, above.

Short-term loan. One which runs for a period of less than a year and which is commonly evidenced by a note or other negotiable instrument.

Time loan. One which is made for a fixed period of time and which generally may not be repaid before the expiration of such time (without penalty) as distinguished from a call or demand loan.

Loan association. See Building and loan association.

Loan certificates. Certificates issued by a clearinghouse to the associated banks to a specified per cent. of the value of the collaterals deposited by the borrowing banks with the loan committee of the clearing-house. Documents issued by a borrower to evidence participation in a loan for an extended term; formerly used by municipalities. These have been replaced, in the main, by coupon bonds. See also Certificate of indebtedness.

Loan commitment. Commitment to borrower by lending institution that it will loan a specific amount at a certain rate on a particular piece of real estate. Such commitment is usually limited to a specified time period (e.g. four months), which is commonly based on the estimated time that it will take the borrower to construct or purchase the home contemplated by the loan. See also Mortgage commitment.

Loaned employee or servant. Loaned servant is an employee who is loaned or hired out to another employer for some specific service or particular transaction and who is under exclusive control of that employer who may then be held vicariously liable for acts of employee under ordinary principles of respondeat superior. Kief- er Concrete, Inc. v. Hoffman, Colo., 562 P.2d 745, 746. Whether an employee should be regarded as a "loaned employee" in the service of a special employer, or whether he should be regarded as remaining in the service of his general employer, depends upon in whose work the employee was engaged at the time of injury. Owen v. St. Louis Spring Co., 175 Tenn. 543, 136 S.W.2d 498–500.

Loaned servant doctrine. Under the "loaned servant doctrine", when one lends his employee to another for a particular employment, employee, for anything done in that employment, must be dealt with as employee of one to whom he is lent. Blair v. Durham, C.C.A.Tenn., 134 F.2d 729, 732. This doctrine provides that if employer loans employee to another for performance of some special service, then that employee, with respect to that special service, may become employee of party to whom his services have been loaned. Danek v. Meldrum Mfg. and Engineering Co., Inc., Minn., 252 N.W.2d 255, 258. In order for employee to be a "loaned servant", it is not essential that general employer relinquish full control over his employee, or that special employee be completely subservient to borrower. U. S. v. N. A. Degerstrom, Inc., C.A.Wash., 408 F.2d 1130, 1138.

Loan for consumption. An agreement by which one person delivers to another a certain quantity of things which are consumed by the borrower, with the obligation to return as much of the same kind and quality. See also Loan for use.

Loan for exchange. A loan for exchange is a contract by which one delivers personal property to another; and the latter agrees to return to the lender a similar thing at a future time, without reward for its use. Cal.Civil Code § 1902.

Loan for use. The loan for use is an agreement by which a person delivers a thing to another, to use it according to its natural destination, or according to the agreement, under the obligation on the part of the borrower, to return it after he shall be done using it. Civ.Code La. art. 2893. A loan for use is a contract by which one gives to another the temporary possession and use of personal property, and the latter agrees to return the same thing to him at a future time, without reward for its use. Slack v. Bryan, 299 Ky. 132, 184 S.W.2d 873, 876. Cal.Civil Code, § 1884. A loan for use is the gratuitous grant of an article to another for use, to be returned in specie, and may be either for a certain time or indefinitely, and at the will of the grantor.

Loan for use (called "commodatum" in the civil law) differs from a loan for consumption (called "mutuum" in the civil law), in this: that the commodatum must be specifically returned; the mutuum is to be returned in kind. In the case of a commodatum, the property in the thing remains in the lender; in a mutuum, the property passes to the borrower.

Loan participation. Loan provided by a group of lenders to a single borrower, which spreads the default risk of the loan among all lenders in the group.

Loan ratio. The ratio, expressed as a percentage, of the amount of a loan to the value or selling price of real property. Usually, the higher the percentage, the greater the interest charged. Maximum percentages for banks, savings and loan, or government insured loans, is set by statute. See also Loan-to-value ratio.

Loansharking. Practice of lending money at excessive and usurious interest rates, with the threat or employment of extortionate means to enforce repayment of the loan. Such activities are termed "extortionate credit transactions" under Federal Criminal Code. 18 U.S.C.A. § 891 et seq.

Loan societies. In English law, a kind of club formed for the purpose of advancing money on loan to the industrial classes.

Loan-to-value ratio. The percentage of purchase price to be financed with a mortgage. Common ratios are 80 and 90 percent. A down payment covers the rest of the purchase price.

Loan value. The maximum amount which can be safely lent on property or life insurance consistent with the lender’s rights to protection in the event of the borrower's default.

Lobbying. All attempts including personal solicitation to induce legislators to vote in a certain way or to introduce legislation. It includes scrutiny of all pending bills which affect one’s interest or the interests of one’s clients, with a view towards influencing the passage or defeat of such legislation. Tilles v. County Board of Sarpy County, 189 Neb. 1, 200 N.W.2d 13, 18. Federal, and most state, statutes require that lobbyists be registered. See Lobbying acts.

Lobbying acts. Federal and state statutes governing conduct of lobbyists; e.g. Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act requires that lobbyists register with House and Senate and file quarterly reports of amount and source of payments received for lobbying activities. See 12 U.S.C.A. § 261 et seq.

Lobbyist. One who makes it a business to procure the passage or defeat of bills pending before a legislative body. See also Lobbying; Lobbying acts.

L’obligation sans cause, ou sur une fausse cause, ou sur cause illicite, ne peut avoir aucun effet /köwɔ̀ liisiyt na pyúwt ɔywɔ̀ r owkyuwn ñfɛ'/. An obligation without consideration, or upon a false consideration (which fails), or upon unlawful consideration, cannot have any effect.

Local. Relating to place, expressible of place; belonging or confined to a particular place. Distinguished from "general," "personal," "widespread" and "transitory."

As to local Allegiance; Customs; Government; Tax and Venue, see those titles.

Local act. See Local law.

Local actions. Term embraces all actions in which the subject or thing sought to be recovered is in its nature local. Action which must be brought in jurisdiction of act or subject matter, as opposed to transitory action. Actions are "local" when the transactions on which they are based could not occur except in some particular place. One wherein all principal facts on which it is founded are of a local nature; as where possession of land is to be recovered, or damages for an actual trespass, or for waste affecting land, because in such case the cause of action relates to some particular locality, which usually also constitutes the venue of the action. A "transitory action" may be brought in any court of general jurisdiction in any district wherein defendant can be found and served with process, whereas in a "local action" the plaintiff must bring suit in the court designated, if not statutorily required to do otherwise. Moreland v. Rucker Pharmacal Co., D.C.La., 59 F.R.D. 537, 540. Compare Transitory action.

Local affairs. The "local affairs" over which regulation, management and control are delegated to cities are affairs within the jurisdiction of the city by the law of its being. Robia Holding Corporation v. Walker, 136 Misc. 358, 239 N.Y.S. 659, 662.

Local agent. An agent at a given place or within a definite district. Sharp & Dohme v. Waybourne, Tex. Civ.App., 74 S.W.2d 413. An agent may be a general agent as to his powers, although he represents the company only in a particular locality or within a limited territory, and in the latter aspect is called a "local agent". Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Jenkins, 290 Ky. 802, 162 S.W.2d 791, 795. An agent placed in charge of corporation's local business for purpose of winding it up. One appointed to act as the representative of a corporation and transact its business generally (or business of a particular character) at a given place or within a defined district. One who represents corporation in promotion of business for which it was incorporated, in county in which suit is filed. National Hardware & Stove Co. v. Walters, Tex.Civ.App., 58 S.W.2d 146. One who stands in shoes of corporation in relation to particular matters committed to his care and represents corporation in its business in either a general or limited capacity. A "local agent" to receive and collect money means an agent residing either permanently or temporarily within the state for purpose of his agency. McDonald Service Co. v. Peoples Nat. Bank of Rock Hill, S.C., 218 N.C. 533, 11 S.E.2d 556, 558. By statute or court rule in most states, service of process on a foreign corporation may be made on a local agent of such corporation. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 4; New York C.P.L.R. §§ 308, 318.

Local and special legislation. Term applies to special or particular places or special and particular person, and is distinguished from general statute in operation and relation to classes of persons or subjects. Madison County Board of Education v. Smith, 250 Ky. 495, 63 S.W.2d 620.

Local assessment. A charge in the nature of tax, levied to pay the whole or part of the cost of local improvements (e.g. sewers, sidewalks) and assessed upon the various parcels of property specially benefited thereby. See also Local improvement assessment.

Local chattel. A thing is local that is fixed to the freehold.

Local concern. An activity is of "local concern" if it is exercised by the municipality in its proprietary capacity. Luhrs v. City of Phoenix, 52 Ariz. 438, 83 P.2d 283, 285.

Local courts. Courts whose jurisdiction is limited to a particular territory or district. The expression usually signifies the courts of the state, in opposition to the United States courts, or to municipal or county courts in contrast to courts with state-wide jurisdiction.

Local government. City, county, or other governing body at a level smaller than a state. Local government has the greatest control over real property, zoning, and other local matters.

Local improvement. A public improvement made in a particular locality, by which the real property adjoining or near such locality is specially benefited. Floyd v. Parker Water & Sewer Sub-District, 203 S.C. 276, 17 S.E.2d 223, 227.

Local improvement assessment. A charge placed upon lands within a given district to pay the benefits which the respective parcels of land derive from the improvement. Wells v. Union Oil Co. of California, 25 Cal. App.2d 165, 76 P.2d 696, 697. An assessment for construction of improvement; e.g. sewers. University Nat. Co. v. Grays Harbor County, 12 Wash.2d 549, 122 P.2d 501, 502.

Locality of a lawsuit. Place where judicial authority may be exercised. Neirbo Co. v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, 308 U.S. 165, 60 S.Ct. 153, 154, 84 L.Ed. 167. See also Venue.

Local law. A local law is one which relates or operates over a particular locality instead of over the whole territory of the state. Ulrich v. Beatty, 139 Ind.App. 174, 216 N.E.2d 737, 746. One-which relates to particular persons or things or to particular persons or things of a class or which operates on or over a portion of a class instead of all of the class. In re Annexation of Reno Quartermaster Depot Military Reservation to Independent School Dist. No. 34, Canadian County, Okl., 180 Okl. 274, 69 P.2d 659, 662.

The law of a particular jurisdiction as contrasted with the law of a foreign state. Term is used in conflicts to describe the power of the forum to determine questions of procedure while acknowledging the law of the situs to govern substantive questions. As used in the Restatement of this subject, the "local law" of a state is the body of standards, principles and rules, exclusive of its rules of conflict of laws, which the courts of that state apply in the decision of controversies brought before them. Restatement, Second, Conflicts, § 4(1).

Local option. An option of self-determination available to a municipality or other governmental unit to determine a particular course of action without specific approval from state officials. Local option is often used in local elections to determine whether the selling and consumption of alcoholic beverages will be permitted in local areas. Such is also used in many states to permit home rule elections for determining the structures of local governmental units. See also Home rule.

Local rules. Those promulgated in view of local physical conditions in the state, the character of the people, their peculiar customs, usages, and beliefs. Term may also refer to court rules adopted by individual U.S. district courts which supplement Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 83.

Local statute. See Local law.

Local usage. A practice or method of dealing regularly observed in a particular place and such that it may be considered by the court under certain circumstances in interpreting a document. See U.C.C. § 1-205(2), (3). See also Custom and usage.

Locare /lōkérē/. To let for hire; to deliver or bail a thing for a certain reward or compensation.

Locarium /lōkēriəm/. In old European law, the price of letting; money paid for the hire of a thing; rent.

Locataire /lōwkwster/. In French law, a lessee, tenant, or renter.

Locatarius /lōwkwstèriəs/. Lat. A depositi.ee.

Locate. To find. To discover by survey. Guardian Trust Co. of Houston, Tex. v. Jefferson Lake Oil Co., C.C.A.La., 85 F.2d 465, 467. Also means to ascertain place in which something belongs. To ascertain and fix the position of something, the place of which was before uncertain or not manifest, as to locate the calls in a deed. To decide upon the place or direction to be occupied by something not yet in being, as to locate a road. To define location or limits, Delaware, L. & W. R.
Located. Having a physical presence or existence in a place.

Locatio /lówkéysh(ý)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, letting for hire.

Locatio-conductio /lówkéysh(ý)yow-kándóksh(ý)yow/. In the civil law a compound word used to denote the contract of bailment for hire, expressing the action of both parties, viz., a letting by the one and a hiring by the other.

Locatio custodia /lówkéysh(ý)yow kástówdiyiy/. A letting to keep; a bailment or deposit of goods for hire. According to the classification of bailements at civil law, a "locatio custodia" is the hiring of care and services to be bestowed on the thing delivered.

Location. Site or place where something is or may be located. Act of locating. See also Situs.

Mining law. The act of appropriating a mining claim (parcel of land containing precious metal in its soil or rock) according to certain established rules. It usually consists in placing on the ground, in a conspicuous position, a notice setting forth the name of the locator, the fact that it is thus taken or located, with the requisite description of the extent and boundaries of the parcel. St. Louis Smelting, etc., Co. v. Kemp, 104 U.S. 649, 26 L.Ed. 875; Cole v. Ralph, 252 U.S. 286, 40 S.Ct. 321, 326, 64 L.Ed. 567. In a secondary sense, the mining claim covered by a single act of appropriation or location. The act or series of acts whereby the boundaries of the claim are marked, etc., but it confers no right in the absence of discovery, both being essential to a valid claim. United States v. Mobley, D.C.Cal., 45 F.Supp. 407, 410. See also Mining claim; Mining location.

Real property. The designation of the boundaries of a particular piece of land, either upon record or on the land itself. The finding, surveying and marking out the bounds of a particular tract of land or mining claims. See Locative calls.

Locatio operis /lówkéysh(ý)yow ó(w)parás/. In the civil law, the contract of hiring work, i.e., labor and services. It is a contract by which one of the parties gives a certain work to be performed by the other, who binds himself to do it for the price agreed between them, which he who gives the work to be done promises to pay to the other for doing it.

Locatio operis faciendi /lówkéysh(ý)yow ó(w)parás fásíshiyéniday/. A letting out of work to be done, a bailment of a thing for the purpose of having some work and labor or care and pains bestowed on it for a pecuniary recompense.

Locatio operis mercium vehendarum /lówkéysh(ý)yow ó(w)parás márs(h)(ý)yom viy(h)ándérm/. A letting of work to be done in the carrying of goods; a contract of bailment by which goods are delivered to a person to carry for hire.

Locatio rei /lówkéysh(ý)yow ríyay/. A letting of a thing to hire. The bailment or letting of a thing to be used by the bailee for a compensation to be paid by him.

Locative calls. In a deed, patent, or other instrument containing a description of land, locative calls are specific calls, descriptions, or marks of location, referring to landmarks, physical objects, or other points by which the land can be exactly located and identified.

In harmonizing conflicting calls in a deed or survey of public lands, courts will ascertain which calls are locative and which are merely directory, and conform the lines to the locative calls; "directory calls" being those which merely direct the neighborhood where the different calls may be found, whereas "locative calls" are those which serve to fix boundaries.

Locator /lówkéytsár/lákéytsár/. One who locates land, or sets the boundaries of a mining claim, or intends or is entitled to locate. See Finder; Location.

Locatum /lákéytsám/. A hiring. See Bailment.

Locked in. A predicament of one who has profits on securities which he owns but which he is unwilling to sell because of the liability for capital gains. A fixed rate of return on an investment or savings instrument, or an interest rate on a loan, rate is assured for a specified period of time.

Lockout. Employer's withholding of work from employees in order to gain concession from them; it is employer's counterpart of employee's strike. Smith v. Michigan Employment Sec. Commission, 410 Mich. 231, 301 N.W.2d 285, 291. Refusal by employer to furnish available work to its regular employees, whether refusal is motivated by employer's desire to protect itself against economic injury, by its desire to protect itself at bargaining table, or by both. Laclede Gas Co. v. N.L.R.B., C.A.Mo., 421 F.2d 610, 615.

Lockup. A place of detention in a police station, court or other facility used for persons awaiting trial.

In corporate law, a slang term that refers to the setting aside of securities for purchase by friendly interests in order to defeat or make more difficult a takeover attempt. A lockup option is a takeover defensive measure permitting a friendly suitor to purchase divisions of a corporation for a set price when any person or group acquires a certain percentage of corporation's shares. To be legal, such agreement must advance or stimulate the bidding process, so as to best serve the interests of the shareholders through encouraged competition. MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings, Inc. v. Revlon, Inc., Del. Ch., 501 A.2d 1239, 1250. See also Poison pill; Porcupine provisions; White knight.
Locession. The act of giving place.

Loco parentis /łówków paréntas/. See in loco parentis.

Locum tenens /łówkam týnanz/"ten"/. Lat. Holding the place, a deputy, substitute, lieutenant, or representative.

Locuples /łókypalíys/. Lat. In the civil law, able to respond in an action; good for the amount which the plaintiff might recover.

Locus /łókwas/. A place; the place where a thing is done.

Locus contractus /łókwas kantrárktás/. The place of a contract; the place where a contract is made. The place where the last act is performed which makes an agreement a binding contract. Grain Dealers Mut. Ins. Co. v. Van Buskirk, 241 Md. 58, 215 A.2d 467, 471.

Locus criminis /łókwas krímanas/. The locality of a crime; the place where a crime was committed.

Locus delicti /łókwas dalíktay/. The place of the offense; the place where an offense was committed. State where last event necessary to make actor liable occurs. Hunter v. Derby Foods, C.C.A.N.Y., 110 F.2d 970, 972.

Locus in quo /łókwas in kwów/. The place in which. The place in which the cause of action arose, or where anything is alleged, in pleadings, to have been done. The phrase is most frequently used in actions of trespass quare clausum fregit.

Locus partitus /łókwas partáytas/. In old English law, a place divided. A division made between two towns or counties to make out in which the land or place in question lies.

Locus penitentiae /łókwas pénsténshiyiy/. A place for repentance; an opportunity for changing one's mind; an opportunity to undo what one has done; a chance to withdraw from a contemplated bargain or contract before it results in a definite contractual liability; a right to withdraw from an incompleted transaction. Morris v. Johnson, 219 Ga. 81, 132 S.E.2d 45, 51. Also, used of a chance afforded to a person, by the circumstances, of relinquishing the intention which he has formed to commit a crime, before the perpetration thereof.

Locus pro solutione reditus aut pecuniae secundum conditionem dimissionis aut obligationis est stricte observandum /łókwas prów salîj/wîshiyówny rédatas ot pokyúwniyiy sâkîndam kandishyównam damish(i)jyównas ot oblágéshiyównas est striktiy obszavándas/. The place for the payment of rent or money, according to the condition of a lease or bond, is to be strictly observed.

Locus publicus /łókwas pâblakas/. In the civil law, a public place.

Locus regit actum /łókwas ríyjat áektám/. In private international law, the rule that, when a legal transaction complies with the formalities required by the law of the country where it is done, it is also valid in the country where it is to be given effect, although by the law of that country other formalities are required.

Locus rei sitze /łókwas ríyay sáytiy/. The place where a thing is situated. In proceedings in rem, or the real actions of the civil law, the proper forum is the locus rei sitze.

Locus sigilli /łókwas sajilay/. In place of the seal; the place occupied by the seal of written instruments. Usually abbreviated to "L.S." on documents in place of a seal.

Locus standi /łókwas stánday/. A place of standing; standing in court. A right of appearance in a court of justice, or before a legislative body, on a given question.

Lodemanage /łówdmáñaj/. The hire of a pilot for conducting a vessel from one place to another.

Lodestar Rule. In determining amount of statutorily authorized attorneys' fees, "lodestar" is equal to number of hours reasonably expended multiplied by prevailing hourly rate in community for similar work and is then adjusted to reflect other factors such as contingent nature of suit and quality of representation. Cooper Liquor, Inc. v. Adolph Coors Co., C.A.Tex., 684 F.2d 1087, 1092. See also Equal Access to Justice Act; Fee.

Lodger has been defined as a tenant of part of another's house, one who for time being has his home at his lodging place, one who has leave to inhabit another man's house, one who inhabits portion of a house of which another has general possession and custody, one who lives at board or in a hired room or who has a bed in another's house, one who lives in a hired room or rooms in house of another, one who occupies hired apartments in another's house. The term is also defined as a person who lives and sleeps in a place, a person whose occupancy is a part of a house and subordinate to and in some degree under the control of a landlord or his representative. The term is used to indicate a personal relationship of some one lodging somewhere with somebody. Marden v. Radford, 229 Mo.App. 789, 84 S.W.2d 947, 955, 957, 959.

Lodging house. A house where lodgings are let; houses containing furnished apartments which are let out by the week or by the month, without meals, or with limited meals. Marden v. Radford, 229 Mo.App. 789, 84 S.W.2d 947, 955.

Lodging place. A place of rest for a night or a residence for a time; a temporary habitation.
Lodgings. Habitation in another's house; apartments in another's house, furnished or unfurnished, occupied for habitation; the occupier being termed a "lodger."

Lods et ventes /lōw ē véⁿ/ı/. In old French and Canadian law, a fine payable by a roturier on every change of ownership of his land; a mutation or alienation fine.

Logbook. A ship's or aircraft's journal containing a detailed account of the ship's course, with a short history of every occurrence during the voyage.

Logia /lōjˈiːə/ı/. In Roman law, a public hall.

Logic. The science of reasoning, or of the operations of the understanding which are subservient to the estimation of evidence. The term includes both the process itself of proceeding from known truths to unknown, and all other intellectual operations, in so far as auxiliary to this.

Logical relationship. Under "logical relationship" test for determining whether counterclaim is sufficiently related to main claim to be compulsory, logical relationship is found when same operative facts serve as basis of both claims or aggregate core of facts upon which claim rests activates additional legal rights, otherwise dormant, in the defendant. U.S. v. Aronson, C.A.Fla., 617 F.2d 119, 121.

Logical relevancy. Existence of such a relationship in logic between the fact of which evidence is offered and a fact in issue that the existence of the former renders probable or improbable the existence of the latter.

Logium /lōjˈiːəm/ı/. In old records, a lodge, hovel, or outhouse.

Logographus /lōɡəˈɡrɛfəs/ı/. In Roman law, a public clerk, register, or book-keeper; one who wrote or kept books of accounts.

Log rolling. A legislative practice of embracing in one bill several distinct matters, none of which, perhaps, could singly obtain the assent of the legislature, and then procuring its passage by a combination of the minorities in favor of each of the measures into a majority that will adopt them all.

Practice of including in one statute or constitutional amendment more than one proposition, inducing voters to vote for all, notwithstanding they might not have voted for all if amendments or statutes had been submitted separately.

Loiter /lōˈtər/ı/. To be dilatory; to be slow in movement; to stand around or move slowly about; to stand idly around; to lag behind; to linger or spend time idly. Traditionally includes acts constituting vagrancy and as such, many ordinances have been struck as unconstitutional. See Papachristou v. City of Jacksonville, 405 U.S. 156, 92 S.Ct. 859, 31 L.Ed.2d 110. See also Vagrancy.

Term as used in statute prohibiting loitering or prowling upon the private property of another, means to be slow in moving, to delay, to linger, to saunter, to lag behind. State ex rel. Purcell v. Superior Court In and For Maricopa County, 111 Ariz. 582, 535 P.2d 1299, 1301.

Lombardian law. See Lex longobardorum.

Lombards. A name given to the merchants of Italy, numbers of whom, during the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, were established as merchants and bankers in the principal cities of Europe.

London Lloyds. Voluntary association of merchants, shipowners, underwriters, and brokers, which writes no policies, but, when broker for one wishing insurance posts particulars of risk, underwriting members wishing to so subscribe name and share of total that each wishes to take, and policy is issued when total is reached containing names of underwriters bound thereby and name of attorney in fact who handles insurance affairs of the group. See Lloyd's of London.

Long. In various compound legal terms (see infra) this word carries a meaning not essentially different from its signification in the vernacular.

Long account. An account involving numerous separate items or charges, on one side or both, or the statement of various complex transactions, such as a court of equity will refer to a master, referee or commissioner.

Longa patientia trahitur ad consensum /lōŋɡə pāshˈiːnəʃ(ɪ)ˈjʌ trəˈhɪstr əd kənsənˈsəm/. Long sufferance is construed as consent.

Longa possessio est pacis jus /lōŋɡə poʊzəˈʃɪ (ɪ)ˈow ɛst pəˈsɪs jʌs/. Long possession is the law of peace.

Longa possessio jus parit /lōŋɡə poʊzəˈʃɪ (ɪ)ˈow jʌs pəˈræt/. Long possession begets right.

Longa possessio parit jus possidenti, et tollit action- em vero domino /lōŋɡə poʊzəˈʃɪ (ɪ)ˈow pəˈræt jʌs pəˈsɪdɪˈjʌndə, ɛt tʊˈlət ɛkˈsɪʃjʊən̩m ˈvoʊrɪ dəməˈnəʊn/. Long possession produces the right of possession, and takes away from the true owner his action.

Long arm statutes. Various state legislative acts which provide for personal jurisdiction, via substituted service of process, over persons or corporations which are nonresidents of the state and which voluntarily go into the state, directly or by agent, or communicate with persons in the state, for limited purposes, in actions which concern claims relating to the performance or execution of those purposes, e.g. transacting business in the state, contracting to supply services or goods in the state, or selling goods outside the state when the seller knows that the goods will be used or consumed in the state. See International Shoe Co. v. State of Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 66 S.Ct. 154, 158, 90 L.Ed. 95. E.g. in New York, as to a cause of action arising from any of the following acts, the court may exercise personal jurisdiction over any nondomiciliary, or his executor or administrator, who in person or through agent: (1) Transacts any business within state; (2) commits tortious act other than defamation within state; (3) commits tortious act, other than defamation, outside state causing injury to person or property within state, if such nondomiciliary regularly does or solicits business, or engages in any other persistent course of conduct, or derives substantial revenue from goods used or consumed or services rendered within state; or (4) owns, uses, or possesses real property within state. N.Y. Consol. Laws, CPLR § 302. See also Mass. G.L.A. c. 223A. See also Minimum contacts: Service (Service of process).

Long parliament. The name usually given to the parliament which met in November, 1640, under Charles I., and was dissolved by Cromwell on the 10th of April, 1653. The name "Long Parliament" is, however, also given to the parliament which met in 1661, after the restoration of the monarchy, and was dissolved on the 30th of December, 1678. This latter parliament is sometimes called, by way of distinction, the "long parliament of Charles II."

Long position. The status of one who owns securities which he holds in expectation of a rise in the market or for income as contrasted with one who goes in and out of the market on a short point spread.

In the language of the stock exchange, a broker or speculator is said to be "long" on stock, or as to a particular security, when he has in his possession or control an abundant supply of it, or a supply exceeding the amount which he has contracted to deliver, or, more particularly, when he has bought a supply of such stock or other security for future delivery, speculating on a considerable future advance in the market price. A trader is said to be "long" on the market when he takes the full price risk; that is, gains if the market price goes up, and loses if it goes down. Valley Waste Mills v. Page, C.C.A.Ga., 115 F.2d 466, 467.

Long robe. A metaphorical expression designating the practice of profession of the law; as, in the phrase "gentlemen of the long robe."

Longshore and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act. Federal Act (33 U.S.C.A. § 901 et seq.) designed to provide workers' compensation benefits to employees, other than seamen, or private employers any of whose employees work in maritime employment upon the navigable waters of the United States (including any adjoining pier, wharf, dry dock, terminal, building way, marine railway, or other adjoining area customarily used by an employer in loading, unloading, repairing, or building a vessel). The principal employments subject to the Act are stevedoring and ship service operations. The Act is administered by the Office of Workers' Compensation Programs.

Longshoreman. A maritime laborer, such as a stevedore or loader, who works about wharves of a port. Duke v. Helena-Glendale Ferry Co., 203 Ark. 865, 159 S.W.2d 74, 77. Person who loads and unloads ships.

For federal compensation act covering seamen, see Jones Act.

Long term capital gain. See Capital (Capital gain).

Long term capital loss. See Capital (Capital loss).

Long term debt. Term generally refers to debt with a maturity date beyond one year.

Long term financing. A mortgage or deed of trust for a term of one year or more, as distinguished from construction, interim, or other short term loans.

Long ton. A measure of weight equivalent to 200 pounds, as distinguished from the "short" ton of 2,000 pounds.

Longum tempus et longus usus qui excedit memoria hominum sufficit pro jure /lóngom tēmpēs ēt lōngās yīūwsās kwāy aksǐyǒt mǎmōrǐyā hōmīnām sǐfāst prōw jūriy/. Long time and long use, exceeding the memory of men, suffices for right.

Look and listen. The requirement that a man shall "look and listen" before crossing street railroad track means only that he shall observe and estimate with reasonable accuracy his distance from the car and the speed of its oncoming, and then make calculation and comparison of the time it will take the car to come and the time it will take to cross the track. Kansas City Public Service Co. v. Knight, C.C.A.Kan., 116 F.2d 233, 234.

Lookout. The exercise of ordinary diligence requires that the driver of a motor vehicle be on the lookout for other travelers so that he may avoid placing himself or them in peril. As variously expressed, the rule requires that a motorist maintain a reasonable and proper lookout, which implies being watchful of the movements of the driver's own vehicle as well as of the movements of other traffic; a careful lookout; an efficient lookout; a vigilant watch ahead. A lookout must be made from the most effective place reasonably possible. The failure of a motorist to exercise ordinary care with respect to lookout, proximately resulting in injury or damage, may constitute negligence. Pickett v. Travelers Indem. Co., C.A.Wis., 283 F.2d 835. That watchfulness which prudent and reasonable person must maintain for his own safety and safety of others taking into consideration circumstances with which he is immediately concerned or confronted. Cobb v. Atkins, 239 Ark. 151, 388 S.W.2d 8, 11.

Generally, a "lookout" is a person, other than pilot, who has duty of observing sounds, lights, echoes and obstructions to navigation and he is generally stationed on the bow of the vessel. Clary Towing Co., Inc. v. Port Arthur Towing Co., D.C.Tex., 367 F.Supp. 6, 12.

See also Proper lookout.

Loophole. In taxation, a provision in the tax code by which a taxpayer may legally avoid or reduce his income taxes. For example, prior to the Tax Reform Act of 1986, a tax shelter was an effective loophole in reducing an individual's taxes; however, with the change in the law, the advantages of such shelters have been substantially reduced.
Loquela /lɔkwɪˈla/. Lat. A colloquy; talk. In old English law, this term denoted the oral altercations of the parties to a suit, which led to the issue, now called the "pleadings." It also designated an "imparlance" (q.v.), both names evidently referring to the talking together of the parties. Loquela sine die, a postponement to an indefinite time.

Loquendum ut vulgus; sentiendum ut docti /lɔkwɛndəm ət ˈvʊlɡəs, ˈsɛnʃiˈɛndəm ət ˈdɔktəɪ/. We must speak as the common people; we must think as the learned. This maxim expresses the rule that, when words are used in a technical sense, they must be understood technically; otherwise, when they may be supposed to be used in their ordinary acceptance.

Lord. A feudal superior or proprietor; one who granted a feudal estate in land to a tenant; one of whom a fee or estate is held.

A title of honor or nobility belonging properly to the degree of baron, but applied also to the whole peerage, as in the expression "the House of Lords." 1 Bl.Com. 396–400. See House (House of Lords).

A title of office, as lord mayor, lord commissioner, etc.

Law lords. See Law.

Lord and vassal. In the feudal system, the grantor, who retained the dominion or ultimate property, was called the "lord," and the grantee, who had only the use or possession, was called the "vassal" or "feudatory."

Lord chief baron. The chief judge of the English court of exchequer, prior to the judicature acts.

Lord chief justice. See Justice.

Lord high chancellor. See Chancellor.

Lord high steward. In England, when a person was impeached, or when a peer was tried on indictment for treason or felony before the house of lords, one of the lords was appointed lord high steward, and acted as speaker pro tempore. The privilege of peerage in criminal proceedings was abolished in 1948.

Lord high treasurer. An officer formerly existing in England, who had the charge of the royal revenues and customs duties, and of leasing the crown lands. His functions are now vested in the lords commissioners of the treasury.

Lord in gross. In feudal law, he who is lord, not by reason of any manor, but as the king in respect of his crown, etc. "Very lord" is he who is immediate lord to his tenant; and "very tenant," he who holds immediately of that lord. So that, where there is lord paramount, lord mesne, and tenant, the lord paramount is not very lord to the tenant.

Lord keeper. Originally another name for the lord chancellor. After Henry II's reign they were sometimes divided, but now there cannot be a lord chancellor and lord keeper at the same time, for by St. 5 Eliz. c. 18, they are declared to be the same office.

Lord lieutenant. In English law, the viceroy of the crown in Ireland. The principal military officer of a county, originally appointed for the purpose of mustering the inhabitants for the defense of the country.

Lord mayor. The chief officer of the corporation of the city of London was formerly so called. The origin of the appellation of "lord," which the mayor of London enjoyed was attributed to the fourth charter of Edward III, which conferred on that officer the honor of having maces, the same as royalty, carried before him by the sergeants.

Lord mayor's court. In English law, this was a court of record, of law and equity, and was the chief court of justice within the corporation of London. Such was abolished by the Courts Act of 1971.

Lord of a manor. The grantee or owner of a manor.

Lord paramount. A term applied to the King of England as the chief feudal proprietor, the theory of the feudal system being that all lands in the realm were held mediately or immediately from him.

Lord's day. A name sometimes given to Sunday.

Lords justices of appeal. In English law, the title of the ordinary judges of the court of appeal, by Jud.Act 1877, § 4. Prior to the judicature acts, there were two "lords justices of appeal in chancery," to whom an appeal lay from a vice-chancellor, by 14 & 15 Vict., c. 83.

Lords of appeal. Those members of the house of lords of whom at least three must be present for the hearing and determination of appeals. They are the lord chancellor, the lords of appeal in ordinary, and such peers of parliament as hold, or have held, high judicial offices, such as ex-chancellors and judges of the superior courts in Great Britain and Ireland.

Lords of appeal in ordinary. These are appointed to aid the house of lords in the hearing of appeals. They rank as barons for life, but sit and vote in the house of lords during the tenure of their office only.

Lords of parliament. Those who have seats in the house of lords.

Lords ordainers. Lords appointed in 1312, in the reign of Edward II, for the control of the sovereign and the court party, and for the general reform and better government of the country.

Lords spiritual. The archbishops and bishops who have seats in the house of lords.

Lords temporal. Those lay peers who have seats in the house of lords.

Lord Campbell Act. An act which fixes the maximum amount recoverable for wrongful death. Most states have such statutes. See Wrongful death statutes.

In England, also refers to the Libel Act of 1843 which permits the defendant in a libel action to assert the defense of truth and that the publication was made for the benefit of the public.

Lord Mansfield's Rule. Such rule renders inadmissible testimony by either spouse on the question of whether the husband had access to the wife at time of conception.
This Rule has been abandoned by several states as having outlived its original policy foundations. Serafin v. Serafin, 401 Mich. 629, 258 N.W.2d 461.

Lordship. In English law, dominion, manor, seigniory, domain; also a title of honor used to a nobleman not being a duke. It is also the customary titulary appellation of the judges, and some other persons in authority and office.

Lose. To bring to destruction; to ruin; to destroy; to suffer the loss of; to be deprived of; to part with, especially in an accidental or unforeseen manner; as to lose an eye. Logan v. Johnson, 218 N.C. 200, 10 S.E.2d 653, 655. See also Lost; Mislay.

Loss. Loss is a generic and relative term. It signifies the act of losing or the thing lost; it is not a word of limited, hard and fast meaning and has been held synonymous with, or equivalent to, "damage", "damages", "deprivation", "detriment", "injury", and "privation". Mason v. City of Albertville, 276 Ala. 68, 158 So.2d 924, 927.

It may mean expenses exceeding costs; actual losses, N. L. R. B. v. Cowell Portland Cement Co., C.C.A.9, 148 F.2d 237, 246; bad and uncollectible accounts, damage, Wilbur v. U. S. ex rel. C. L. Wold Co., 38 App.D.C. 347, 30 F.2d 871, 872; a decrease in value of resources or increase in liabilities; depletion or depreciation or destruction of value; deprivation; destruction, Wells v. Thomas W. Garland, Inc., Mo.App., 39 S.W.2d 408, 411; detriment, United States v. City Nat. Bank of Duluth, D.C.Minn., 31 F.Supp. 530, 534, 538; failure to keep that which one has or thinks he has; injury, United Service Automobile Ass'n v. Miles, 139 Tex. 138, 161 S.W.2d 1048; privation, United States v. City Nat. Bank of Duluth, D.C.Minn., 31 F.Supp. 530, 534, 538; ruin, Logan v. Johnson, 218 N.C. 200, 10 S.E.2d 653, 655; shrinkage in value of estate or property; state or fact of being lost or destroyed, Logan v. Johnson, 218 N.C. 200, 10 S.E.2d 653, 655; that which is gone and cannot be recovered or that which is withheld or that of which a party is dispossessed, Walker v. Thomas, 64 App.D.C. 148, 75 F.2d 667, 669; Surety Co., 60 S.D. 100, 243 N.W. 664, 666; unintentional parting with something of value, Providence Journal Co. v. Broderick, C.C.A.R.I., 104 F.2d 614, 616.

See also Actual loss; Capital (Capital loss); Casualty loss; Consequential loss; Constructive loss; Constructive total loss; Damages; Direct loss; Disaster loss; General average loss; Hobby loss; Net operating loss; Pain and suffering; Partial loss; Pecuniary injury; Pecuniary loss; Reasonable certainty, rule of; Total loss. As to loss of consortium, see Consortium; salvage loss, see Salvage; proof of loss, see Proof. Compare Profit.

Disability benefits. State workers' compensation laws, social security, and disability insurance contracts provide disability benefits for partial or permanent loss of use of limbs, eyes, etc.

Insurance. Ascertained liability of insurer, Michel v. American Fire & Casualty Co., C.C.A.Fla., 82 F.2d 583, 586; decrease in value of resources or increase in liabilities; depletion or depreciation or destruction or shrinkage of value; injury, damage, etc., to property or persons injured, Miles v. United Services Automobile Ass'n, Tex.Civ.App., 149 S.W.2d 233, 235, 236; injury or damage sustained by insured in consequence of happening of one or more of the accidents or misfortunes against which insurer has undertaken to indemnify the insured; pecuniary injury resulting from the occurrence of the contingency insured against, Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation v. Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., C.C.A.Mo., 100 F.2d 441, 446. Word "loss" implies that property is no longer in existence. Littrell v. Allemania Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa., 222 App.Div. 302, 226 N.Y.S. 243, 244.

"Loss of eye" means loss of use for any practical purpose, Order of United Commercial Travelers of America v. Knorr, C.C.A.Kan., 112 F.2d 679, 682. Loss of member or loss of an entire member means destruction of usefulness of member or entire member for purposes to which in its normal condition it is susceptible of application, in absence of more specific definition. Loss of use of hand means substantial and material impairment of use in practical performance of its function. Loss of use of member is equivalent to loss of member, Continental Casualty Co. v. Linn, 226 Ky. 328, 10 S.W.2d 1079, 1082, Noel v. Continental Casualty Co., 138 Kan. 136, 23 P.2d 610. Loss of vision to extent that one cannot perceive and distinguish objects is "loss of sight".

To constitute "loss or damage by fire" existence of actual fire, which becomes uncontrollable or breaks out from where it was intended to be and becomes a hostile element, is sufficient. Princess Garment Co. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. of San Francisco, Cal., C.C.A.Ohio, 115 F.2d 380, 382.

Loss carry-back. See Carry-back.

Loss carry-over (or Carry forward). See Carry-over.

Loss leader. Item sold by a merchant at very low price and sometimes below cost in order to attract people to store with the hope that they will buy additional items on which a profit will be made. See also Bait and switch.

Loss of bargain. Under "loss of bargain" rule, applicable in common-law contract actions brought for misrepresented in the nature of breaches of warranty, damages are measured by difference between value of goods as warranted and value as received. Chrysler Corp. v. McMorries, Tex.App. 7 Dist., 657 S.W.2d 858, 864.

Loss of consortium. See Consortium.
LOST OF EARNING CAPACITY

Loss of earning capacity. Damage to one’s ability to earn wages in the future and recoverable as element of damage in tort actions. It is not the same as loss of earnings though loss of actual earnings is competent evidence of loss of earning capacity. A person unemployed at the time of the accident has an earning capacity though he has no earnings.

Loss payable clause. A clause in a fire insurance policy, listing the priority of claims in the event of destruction of the property insured. Generally, a mortgagee, or beneficiary under a deed of trust, is the party appearing in the clause, being paid to the amount owing under the mortgage or deed of trust before the owner is paid. A provision in property insurance contracts that authorizes payments to persons other than the insured to the extent that they have an insurable interest in the property.

Loss payee. Person named in insurance policy to be paid in event of loss or damage to property insured.

Loss ratio. In insurance, the proportion between premiums collected and loss payments made. In finance, loan losses of a bank or the receivable losses of a business compared to the assets of that class.

Loss reserve. That portion of insurance company’s assets set aside for payment of losses which will probably arise or which have arisen but have not been paid.

Lost. An article is “lost” when the owner has lost the possession or custody of it, involuntarily and by any means, but more particularly by accident or his own negligence or forgetfulness, and when he is ignorant of its whereabouts or cannot recover it by an ordinarily diligent search. See also Lost property.

As applied to ships and vessels, the term means “lost at sea,” and a vessel lost is one that has totally gone from the owners against their will, so that they know nothing of it, whether it still exists or not, or one which they know is no longer within their use and control, either in consequence of capture by enemies or pirates, or an unknown foundering, or sinking by a known storm, or collision, or destruction by shipwreck.

Lost corner. A point of survey whose position cannot be determined beyond reasonable doubt either from traces of the original marks or from acceptable evidence, and whose location can be restored only by reference to one or more independent corners. Finley v. Yuba County Water Dist., 99 C.A.3d 691, 160 Cal.Rptr. 423, 426. See Corner.

Lost or not lost. A phrase sometimes inserted in policies of marine insurance. It signifies that the contract is meant to relate back to the beginning of a voyage now in progress, or to some other antecedent time, and to be valid and effectual even if, at the moment of executing the policy, the vessel should have already perished by some of the perils insured against, provided that neither party has knowledge of that fact or any advantage over the other in the way of superior means of information. Hooper v. Robinson, 98 U.S. 528, 25 L.Ed. 219; Insurance Co. v. Folsom, 85 U.S. (18 Wall.) 237, 21 L.Ed. 827.

Lost papers. Papers which have been so mislaid that they cannot be found after diligent search.

Lost property. Property which the owner has involuntarily parted with, through neglect, carelessness or inadvertence, and does not know where to find or recover it, not including property which he has intentionally concealed or deposited in a secret place for safe-keeping. Distinguishable from mislaid property which has been deliberately placed somewhere and forgotten. The majority of the states have adopted the Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act. Compare Property (Mislaid property).

A person who comes into control of property of another that he knows to have been lost, mislaid, or delivered under a mistake as to the nature or amount of the property or the identity of the recipient is guilty of theft if, with purpose to deprive the owner thereof, he fails to take reasonable measures to restore the property to a person entitled to have it. Model Penal Code § 223.5.

Lost will. A will which was once executed but cannot be found at death of testator. The contents can be proved by parol in many jurisdictions, though in some states there is a rebuttable presumption that a will once in existence has been revoked if it cannot be found at testator’s death.

Real estate. A share; one of several parcels into which property is divided. Any portion, piece, division or parcel of land. Fractional part or subdivision of block, according to plat or survey, Mawson-Peterson Lumber Co. v. Sprinkle, 59 Wyo. 334, 140 P.2d 588, 591; portion of platted territory measured and set apart for individual and private use and occupancy, Hunter v. Roman Catholic Bishop of Los Angeles and San Diego Corporation Sole, 128 Cal.App. 90, 16 P.2d 1048, 1049.

A lot is commonly one of several other contiguous parcels of land making up a block. Real property is typically described by reference to lot and block numbers on recorded maps and plats.

Local zoning laws commonly require minimum lot sizes for residential and commercial building. See also Minimum lot; Nonconforming lot; Parcel.

Sales. In sales, a parcel or single article which is the subject matter of a separate sale or delivery whether or not it is sufficient to perform the contract. U.C.C. § 2–105(5).

Securities. In securities and commodities market, a specified number of shares or specific quantity of a commodity designated for trading. See Odd lot; Odd lot doctrine.

Lot and scot. In English law, certain duties which formerly had to be paid by those who claimed to exercise the elective franchise within certain cities and boroughs, before they were entitled to vote.

Lottery. A boundary of a tract of land used to describe such land and often used in description of contiguous land.

Lottery /ˈlɔtəri/. A chance for a prize for a price. A scheme for the distribution of a prize or prizes by lot or chance, the number and value of which is determined by the operator of the lottery. U.S. v. Baker, C.A.Pa., 364 F.2d 107, 111. Essential elements of a lottery are consideration, prize and chance and any scheme or device by which a person for a consideration is permitted to receive a prize or nothing as may be determined predominantly by chance. State v. Wassick, W.Va., 191 S.E.2d 283, 288.

An unlawful gambling scheme in which (a) the players pay or agree to pay something of value for chances, represented and differentiated by numbers or by combinations of numbers or by some other media, one or more of which chances are to be designated the winning ones; and (b) the winning chances are to be determined by a drawing or by some other method based upon the element of chance; and (c) the holders of the winning chances are to receive something of value. New Jersey Criminal Code, § 2C:37-1.

Also defined as device whereby anything of value is for a consideration allotted by lot or chance. State ex Inf. McKittrick v. Globe-Democrat Pub. Co., 341 Mo. 862, 110 S.W.2d 705, 713, 714, 717, 718. Game by which a person paying money becomes entitled to money or other thing of value on certain contingencies, determinable by lot cast in a particular way by the manager of the game; game of hazard in which small sums of money are ventured for chance of obtaining a larger value in money or other articles; State v. Jones, 44 N.M. 623, 107 P.2d 324, 326; gaming contract by which for a valuable consideration one may by favor of the lot obtain a prize of value superior to the amount or value of that which he risks, Troy Amusement Co. v. Attenweiler, 64 Ohio App. 105, 28 N.E.2d 483, 488. Scheme by which result is reached by some action or means taken, and in which result man's choice or will has no part nor can human reason, foresight, sagacity, or design enable him to know or determine such result until the same has been accomplished, State v. Schwemler, 154 Or. 533, 60 P.2d 938, 940; scheme for distribution of prizes or things of value by lot or chance, Engle v. State, 593 Ariz. 458, 90 P.2d 988, 992, 993; scheme for raising money by selling chances to share in distribution of prizes. Scheme where money is paid for chance of receiving money or a prize in return. People v. Psallis, Mag.Ct.N.Y., 12 N.Y. S.2d 796, 797, 798, 799. Scheme whereby one on paying money or other valuable thing to another becomes entitled to receive from him such a return in value or nothing as some formula of chance may determine. Scheme which, played or operated once, destroys the value of ticket provided as the prizes are distributed. Scheme which tends to induce one to pay or agree to pay a valuable consideration for a chance to draw a prize.

A number of states, by statute, provide for state-run lotteries (e.g. Mass.G.L. Ch. 10, § 22 et seq.). The advertising and sending of lottery tickets through the mails and by other instrumentalities of interstate commerce is prohibited by federal law. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1301 et seq., 1953. Though most states also have similar laws prohibiting such activities, these federal laws do not apply to state-run lotteries. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1307.

See also Dutch lottery; Gambling; Game of chance; Sweepstakes.

Louage /luwaʒ/. Fr. This is the contract of hiring and letting in French law, and may be either of things or of labor. The varieties of each are the following: 1. Letting of things,—ball à loyer being the letting of houses; bail à ferme being the letting of lands. 2. Letting of labor, em loger being the letting of personal services; bail à cheptel being the letting of animals.

L'ou le ley done chose, la ceo done remedie a vener a coe /ləw la léy dən ʃəz, la səw dən ɾəˈme di də vəner a kə/. Where the law gives a right, it gives a remedy to recover.

Love and affection. Such is a sufficient consideration when a gift is contemplated, but is not considered "valuable" consideration where such is required. See Nudum pactum.

Love-day. In old English law, the day on which any dispute was amicably settled between neighbors; or a day on which one neighbor helps another without hire.

Lowbote. In old English law, a recompense for the death of a man killed in a tumult.

Lower of cost or market. A basis for inventory valuation where the inventory value is set at the lower of acquisition cost or current replacement cost (market).

Lowers. Fr. In French maritime law, wages.

Lowest responsible bidder. Bidder who not only has lowest price which conforms with the specifications, but also is financially able and competent to complete work as evidenced by prior performance.

Low justice. In old European law, jurisdiction of petty offenses, as distinguished from "high justice" (q.v.).

Low-water mark. Line on the shore marking the lowest ebb of the tide. See also Water-mark.

Loyal. Legal; authorized by or conforming to law. Also faithful in one's political relations; giving faithful support and allegiance to one's prince or sovereign or to the existing government. Faithful support to cause, ideal, office, or person.

Loyalty. Adherence to law. Faithfulness to one's office or sovereign or to the existing government.

Loyalty oath. An oath whereby an individual declares his allegiance to his government and its institutions and disclaims any support of foreign ideologies or associations. Such oaths as are required of various classifications of public officials and persons working in “sensitive” government positions. See e.g. Art. II, § 1, cl. 7; Art. VI, cl. 3, U.S. Const. However, oaths too vague to specify clearly what constitutes seditious acts and utterances have been declared unconstitutional. Communist Party of Indiana v. Whitcomb, 414 U.S. 441, 94 S.Ct. 656, 38 L.Ed.2d 635. See also Oath.

L.S. An abbreviation for “Locus sigilli,” the place of the seal; i.e., the place where a seal is to be affixed, or a scroll which stands instead of a seal. See Locus sigilli.

LSAT. Law School Admission Test. This test is given to law school applicants. The LSAT is a half-day multiple choice test designed to measure certain basic reasoning abilities important in the study of law, general academic ability and command of written English. It provides two scores: an LSAT score and a writing ability (WA) score. The LSAT portion measures the ability to understand and reason with a variety of verbal, quantitative, and symbolic materials. The writing ability portion measures the use of standard English to express ideas clearly and precisely. The test is intended to supplement the undergraduate record and other information about the student in the assessment of potential for law school work. It covers a broad range of disciplines, measures skills acquired over a long period of time, and gives no advantage to students with particular specializations.

Ltd. Limited.

Lubricum linguæ non facile trahendum est in prenam /luvrbrk’smn lingwiyw nôô fâssâly trâhââdêm èst in plûnâm/. A slip of the tongue ought not lightly to be subjected to punishment.

Lucid. Easily understood; clear; rational; sane.

Lucid interval. A temporary cure; temporary restoration to sanity. Intervals occurring in the mental life of an insane person during which he is completely restored to the use of his reason, or so far restored that he has sufficient intelligence, judgment, and will to enter into contractual relations, or perform other legal acts, without disqualification by reason of his disease. Oklahoma Natural Gas Corporation v. Lay, 175 Okl. 75, 51 P.2d 580, 583. With respect to marriage, refers to period of time during which person had sufficient mental capacity to know and understand nature and consequence of marriage relation, and the reciprocal and mutual duties and obligations thereof. Carter v. Bacle, Tex.Civ.App., 94 S.W.2d 817, 819. In connection with wills, a period of time within which an insane person enjoys the restoration of his faculties sufficiently to enable him to judge his act. In re Cook’s Estate, 231 Or. 133, 372 P.2d 520, 522. See also Insanity.

Lucra nuptialia /luvkrw nûpshiyêy(i)yâ/. Lat. In Roman law, a term including everything which a husband or wife, as such, acquires from the estate of the other, either before the marriage, or on agreeing to it, or during its continuance, or after its dissolution, and whether the acquisition is by pure gift, or by virtue of the marriage contract, or against the will of the other party by law or statute.

Lucrativa causa /luvrâttâvâ koza/. Lat. In Roman law, a consideration which is voluntary; that is to say, a gratuitous gift, or such like. It was opposed to onerosa causa, which denoted a valuable consideration. It was a principle of the Roman law that two lucrative causes could not concur in the same person as regarded the same thing; that is to say, that, when the same thing was bequeathed to a person by two different testators, he could not have the thing (or its value) twice over.

Lucrativa usucapio /luvrâttâvâ yûwz(y)uwkâpi-yow/. Lat. This species of usucapio was permitted in Roman law only in the case of persons taking possession of property upon the decease of its late owner, and in exclusion or defacement of the heir, whence it was called “usucapio pro herede.” The adjective “lucrativa” denoted that property was acquired by this usucapio without any consideration or payment for it by way of purchase; and, as the possessor who so acquired the property was a malâ fide possessor, his acquisition, or usucapio, was called also “improba” (i.e., dishonest); but this dishonesty was tolerated (until abolished by Hadrian) as an incentive to force the heres to take possession, in order that the debts might be paid and the sacrifices performed; and, as a further incentive to the heres, this usucapio was complete in one year.

Lucrative. Yielding gain or profit; profitable; bearing or yielding a revenue or salary.

Lucrative bailment. See Bailment.

Lucrative office. One which yields a revenue (in the form of fees or otherwise) or a fixed salary to the incumbent. According to some authorities, one which yields a compensation supposed to be adequate to the services rendered and in excess of the expenses incidental to the office. One the pay of which is affixed to performance of duties of office.

Lucre /luwrkar/. Gain in money or goods; profit; usually in an ill sense, or with the sense of something base or unworthy.

Lucri causa /luwrkry kôza/. Lat. In criminal law, a term descriptive of the intent with which property is taken in cases of larceny, the phrase meaning “for the sake of lucre” or gain.

Lucrum /luwrkram/. A small slip or parcel of land.

Lucrum cessans /luwrkram sézêna/. Lat. A ceasing gain, as distinguished from damnum datum, an actual loss. That element of contract damages which accounts for lost profits.

Lucrum facere ex pupilli tutela tutor non debet /luwrkram féysaryi èks pỳapilay tỳatiyâ tyútá nôn débât/. A guardian ought not to make money out of the guardianship of his ward.

Luctuosa hereditas /lûktiùwuòswa harilystâs/. A mournful inheritance. See Hereditas luctuosa.
Luctus /lʊktəs/. In Roman law, mourning. See Annus luctus.

Luminare /luˈmɪnəri/ . A lamp or candle set burning on the altar of any church or chapel, for the maintenance whereof lands and rent-charges were frequently given to parish churches, etc.

Lumping sale. As applied to judicial sales, this term means a sale in mass, as where several distinct parcels of real estate, or several articles of personal property, are sold together for a "lump" or single gross sum. See Bulk sale.

Lump-sum alimony. Settlement or payment of money or property in divorce action made in single payment instead of installments. Sometimes called "alimony in gross." See Alimony.

Lump-sum distribution. Single payment of the entire amount due at one time rather than in installments. Such distributions often occur from qualified pension or profit-sharing plans upon the retirement or death of a covered employee.

Lump-sum payment. A single payment in contrast to installments; e.g. single premium payment for life insurance; a single lump sum divorce settlement; or single worker's compensation payment in lieu of future monthly installment payments. See also Alimony.

Lunacy. See Insanity.

Lunar. Belonging to or measured by the revolutions of the moon.

Lunar month. See Month.

Lunatic. See Insanity.

Lushbarow /luʃˈbaːrəʊ/ /luʃˈbaːrɡ/. In old English law, a base sort of money, coined beyond sea in the likeness of English coin, and introduced into England in the reign of Edward III. Prohibited by St. 25 Edw. III, c. 4.

Luxury tax. Generic term for excise imposed on purchase of items which are not necessaries; e.g. tax on liquor or cigarettes.

Lying by. A person who, by his presence and silence at a transaction which affects his interests, may be fairly supposed to acquiesce in it, if he afterwards propose to disturb the arrangement, is said to be prevented from doing so by reason that he has been lying by. See also Estoppel.

Lying in franchise. A term descriptive of waifs, wrecks, estrays, and the like, which may be seized without suit or action.

Lying in grant. A phrase applied to incorporeal rights, incapable of manual tradition, and which must pass by mere delivery of a deed.

Lying in wait. Lying in ambush; lying hidden or concealed for the purpose of making a sudden and unexpected attack upon a person when he shall arrive at the scene. For purposes of aggravating circumstance, elements necessary to constitute "lying in wait" are watching, waiting and concealment from person killed with intent to kill or inflict bodily injury upon that person. Davis v. State, Ind., 477 N.E.2d 889, 896. In some jurisdictions, where there are several degrees of murder, lying in wait is made evidence of that deliberation and premeditated intent which is necessary to characterize murder in the first degree.

Lynch law. A term descriptive of the action of unoffical persons, organized bands, or mobs, who seize persons charged with or suspected of crimes, or take them out of the custody of the law, and inflict summary punishment upon them, without legal trial, and without the warrant or authority of law.

Lyndhurst's (Lord) Act /ˈlɪndhɜːrstz ˈæk/. This English statute (5 & 6 Wm. IV, c. 54) renders marriages within the prohibited degrees absolutely null and void. Theretofore such marriages were voidable merely.

Lyte /ˈlaɪt/. In old Roman law, a name given to students of the civil law in the fourth year of their course, from their being supposed capable of solving any difficulty in law.
M

M.  This letter, used as a Roman numeral, stands for one thousand.

It was also, in old English law, a brand or stigma impressed upon the brawn of the thumb of a person convicted of manslaughter and admitted to the benefit of clergy.

This letter was sometimes put on the face of treasury notes of the United States, and signified that the treasury note bears interest at the rate of one mill per centum, and not one per centum interest. U. S. v. Hardyman, 38 U.S. (13 Pet.) 176, 10 L.Ed. 113.

Mace.  A large staff, made of the precious metals, and highly ornamented. It is used as an emblem of authority, and carried before certain public functionaries by a mace-bearer. In many legislative bodies, the mace is employed as a visible symbol of the dignity and collective authority of the house. In the house of lords and house of commons of the British parliament, it is laid upon the table when the house is in session. In the United States House of Representatives, it is borne upright by the sergeant-at-arms on extraordinary occasions, as when it is necessary to quell a disturbance or bring refractory members to order.

Chemical liquid which, when sprayed in face of person, causes dizziness and immobilization.

Macedonian decree /mâssdówniyän dâkriy/.  In Roman law, this was the Senatus-consultum Macedonianum, a decree of the Roman senate, first given under Claudius, and renewed under Vespasian by which it was declared that no action should be maintained to recover a loan of money made to a child who was under the patria potestas. It was intended to strike at the practice of usurers in making loans, on unconscionable terms, to family heirs who would mortgage their future expectations from the paternal estate. The law is said to have derived its name from that of a notorious usurer.

Mace-greff /mêysgrêf/.  In old English law, one who buys stolen goods, particularly food, knowing it to have been stolen.

Mace-proof.  Secure against arrest.

Machination /mâkóneyshan/ˈmâsh/.  The act of planning or contriving a scheme for executing some purpose, particularly an evil purpose; an artful design formed with deliberation. See also Artifice; Scheme.

Mactator /mêktêytor/.  L. Lat. In old European law, a murderer.

Maculare /mèkyaléry/.  In old European law, to wound.

Made known.  Where a process or other legal paper has been actually served upon a defendant, the proper return is that its contents have been "made known" to him. A crime is "made known" to an officer when facts which come to knowledge of the officer are such as to indicate to him that it is his official duty to act or to see that an investigation of the alleged crime is instituted within his jurisdiction. See also Notice.

Madman.  This is not a technical term either of medicine or the law, and because of this it is incapable of being applied with scientific precision; as such, is no longer in use. See Insanity.

Mad Parliament.  Henry III, in 1258, at the desire of the Great Council in Parliament, consented to the appointment of a committee of twenty-four, of whom twelve were appointed by the Barons and twelve by the King, in a parliament which was stigmatized as the "Mad Parliament." Unlimited power was given to it to carry out all necessary reforms. It drew up the Provisions of Oxford.

Mæc-burgh /mækɪærbær/.  In Saxon law, kindred; family.

Mæg /mæg/.  A kinsman.

Mægbote /mægbowt/.  In Saxon law, a recompense or satisfaction for the slaying or murder of a kinsman.

Magic.  In English statutes, witch-craft and sorcery.

Magis de bono quam de malo lex intendit /mêyjâs diy bâwnow kwèhm diy mâlôw lêks ântêndât/. The law favors a good rather than a bad construction. Where the words used in an agreement are susceptible of two meanings, the one agreeable to, the other against, the law, the former is adopted. Thus, a bond conditioned "to assign all offices" will be construed to apply to such offices only as are assignable.

Magis dignum trahit ad se minus dignum /mêyjâs dîgnâm trê(h)ât âd siy màynâs dîgnâm/. The more worthy draws to itself the less worthy.
Magister. Lat. Civil law. A title of several offices under the Roman Empire.

English law. A master or ruler; a person who has attained to some eminent degree in science.

Magister ad facultates /majîstr ad fâkaltîtiyiz/. In English ecclesiastical law, the title of an officer who grants dispensations; as to marry, to eat meat on days prohibited and the like.

Magister bonorum vendendorum /majîstr baňôram vêndêndôram/. In Roman law, a person appointed by judicial authority to inventory, collect, and sell the property of an absent or abscinding debtor for the benefit of his creditors. He was generally one of the creditors, and his functions corresponded generally to those of a receiver or an assignee for the benefit of creditors under modern bankruptcy practice.

Magister cancellarie /majîstr kânsslîriiyiy/. In old English law, master of the chancery; master in chancery. These officers were said to be called "magistri," because they were priests.

Magisterial /mâjîstîriyl/. Relating or pertaining to the character, office, powers, or duties of a magistrate or of the magistracy.

Magisterial precinct. In some American states, a local subdivision of a county, defining the territorial jurisdiction of justices of the peace and constables; also called magisterial district.

Magister libellorum /majîstr lâylôlôram/. Master of requests. A title of office under the Roman Empire.

Magister litis /majîstr lîtôs/. Master of the suit; the person who controls the suit or its prosecution, or has the right so to do.

Magister navis /majîstr nêyvas/. In the civil law, the master of a ship or vessel. He to whom the care of the whole vessel is committed.

Magister palatii /majîstr palêshiyyay/. Master of the palace or of the offices. An officer under the Roman Empire bearing some resemblance to the modern lord chamberlain.

Magister rerum usus /majîstr rîram yûwsas/. Use is the master of things. Usage is a principal guide in practice.

Magister rerum usus; magistra rerum experientia /majîstr rîram yûwsas, majîstr rîram akspiyîn-sh(i)yô/\. Use is the master of things; experience is the mistress of things.

Magister societatis /majîstr sasâyätîyî/. In the civil law, the master or manager of a partnership; a managing partner or general agent; a manager specially chosen by a firm to administer the affairs of the partnership.

Magistracy /mâjîstrasyiy/\. This term may have a more or less extensive signification according to the use and connection in which it occurs. In its widest sense it includes the whole body of public functionaries, whether their offices be legislative, judicial, executive, or administrative. In a more restricted (and more usual) meaning, it denotes the class of officers who are charged with the application and execution of the laws. In a still more confined use, it designates the body of judicial officers of the lowest rank, and more especially those who have jurisdiction for the trial and punishment of petty misdemeanors or the preliminary steps of a criminal prosecution, such as police judges and justices of the peace. The term also denotes the office of a magistrate. Golden v. Golden, 41 N.M. 356, 68 P.2d 928, 930. See also Magistrate.

Magistralia brevia /mâjîstrêlyi(yô) bryîv(i)yô/\. In old English practice, magisterial writs; writs adapted to special cases, and so called from being framed by the masters or principal clerks of the chancery.

Magistrate. A public civil officer, possessing such power—legislative, executive, or judicial—as the government appointing him may ordain. In a narrower sense, an inferior judicial officer, such as a justice of the peace. Shadwick v. City of Tampa, 407 U.S. 345, 348, 92 S.Ct. 2119, 2122, 32 L.Ed.2d 783.

U.S. (Federal) Magistrates. A judicial officer, appointed by judges of federal district courts, having many but not all of the powers of a judge. 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 631-639. Generally exercising duties formerly performed by U.S. Commissioners, magistrates may be designated to hear a wide variety of motions and other pretrial matters in both criminal and civil cases. With the consent of the parties, they may conduct civil or misdemeanor criminal trials. However, magistrates may not preside over felony trials or over jury selection in felony cases. Gomez v. United States, 109 S.Ct. 2237, 104 L.Ed.2d 923.

For Chief magistrate; Committing magistrate; Police magistrate; and Stipendiary magistrates, see those titles.

Magistrate's courts. The jurisdiction of these courts of limited jurisdiction differs from state to state. Such may be divisions of courts of general jurisdiction, and may have concurrent jurisdiction with other courts. Commonly their jurisdiction is restricted to the handling of minor offenses, small claims or preliminary hearings.

Magistratus /mâjîstrêtyas/\. Lat. In the civil law, a magistrate. A judicial officer who had the power of hearing and determining causes, but whose office properly was to inquire into matters of law, as distinguished from fact.

Magna assisa /mâgna asîyya/\. In old English law, the grand assise.

Magna assisa eligenda /mâgna asîyya élajénda/\. An ancient writ to summon four lawful knights before the justices of assise, there to choose twelve others, with themselves to constitute the grand assise or great jury, to try the matter of right. The trial by grand assise was instituted by Henry II, in parliament, as an alternative to the dual in a writ of right. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 27.

Magna Carta /mâgna kârta/\. The great charter. The name of a charter (or constitutional enactment) granted by King John of England to the barons, at Runnymede, on June 15, 1215, and afterwards, with some alterations, confirmed in parliament by Henry III and Edward I. This charter is justly regarded as the foundation of English constitutional liberty. Among its thirty-eight chapters are found provisions for regulating the administration of justice, defining the temporal and ecclesiastical jurisdictions, securing the personal liberty of the subject and his rights of property, and the limits of taxation, and for preserving the liberties and privileges of the church. Magna Carta is so called, partly to distinguish it from the Charta de Foresta, which was granted about the same time, and partly by reason of its own transcendent importance.

Magna centum /mâgna sêntam/. The great hundred, or six score.

Magna Charta et Charta de Foresta sont appelés les "deux grandes charters" /mâgna kârta ê kârta diy forêstâ sowt anpeley lêy dyûw grênd chârtarz/. Magna Charta and the Charter of the Forest are called the "two great charters."

Magna componere parvis /mâgna kâmpûnâriy pârâvâs/. To compare great things with small things.

Magna culpa /mâgna kâlpâ/. Great fault; gross negligence.

Magna negligentia /mâgna négléjânh(i)yâ/. In the civil law, great or gross negligence.

Magna negligentia culpa est; magna culpa dolus est /mâgna négléjânh(i)yâ kâlpâ êst; mâgna kâlpâ dâlwâs êst/. Gross negligence is fault; gross fault is fraud.

Magnus rotulus statutorum /mâgnâs rôt(y)âlas stâ-tyuwtôrâm/. The great statute roll. The first of the English statute rolls, beginning with Magna Charta, and ending with Edward III.

Maiden A young unmarried woman. In an indictment for adultery, not necessarily a virgin.

Maiden assize /mêydan âsâyâ/. In English law, originally an assize at which no person was condemned to die; later a session of a criminal court at which there were no prisoners to be tried.

Maiden rents In old English law, a fine paid to lords of some manors, on the marriage of tenants, originally given in consideration of the lord's relinquishing his customary right of lying the first night with the bride of a tenant.

Maihem /mêy(h)îm/. See Maim; Mayhem.

Maihematus /mêy(h)âmêytâs/. Maimed or wounded.

Maihemium /mêyhiêm(i)yam/. In old English law, maihem (q.v.).

Maihemium est homicidium inchoatum /mêyhiêm(i)yam êst hûmasûyâ(i)yam inkoûwêytâm/. Mayhem is incipient homicide.

Maihemium est inter crimina majora minimum, et inter minora maximum /mêyhiêm(i)yam êst intar krimînâ majoûrâ mínûmâm, êt intar manôrâ mëksûmâm/. Mayhem is the least of great crimes, and the greatest of small.

Maihemium est membri mutilatio, et dici poterit, ubi aliquis in aliqua parte sui corporis effectus sit inutilis ad pugnam undum /mêyhiêm(i)yam êst mëmbray myûwalésh(i)yôw, êt dâysay pôtarât, yûwbay âlakwîs in âlakwa pârtiû synwyû kôrparas afektas sit inûwûdalas âd pagnûndam/. Mayhem is the mutilation of a member, and can be said to take place when a man is injured in any part of his body so as to be useless in fight.

Mail. See Mailed; Registered mail.

Mailable. Suitable or admissible for transmission by the mail; belonging to the classes of articles which, by the laws and postal regulations, may be sent by mail.

Mailbox rule. In contract law, unless otherwise agreed or provided by law, acceptance of offer is effective when deposited in mail if properly addressed. See Liquoroma Inc. v. American Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago, 86 Ill.App.3d 974, 41 Ill.Dec. 951, 953, 408 N.E.2d 373, 375.

Mailed. A letter, package, or other mailable matter is "mailed" when it is properly addressed, stamped with the proper postage, and deposited in a proper place for receipt of mail. Texas Cas. Ins. Co. v. McDonald, Tex. Civ.App., 269 S.W.2d 456, 457.

Under rules practice in some jurisdictions, an action is deemed commenced when the complaint and appropriate entry fee is deposited in the mails under either certified or registered mail procedure; e.g. Mass.R.Civ.P. 3.

Mail order divorce. Divorce obtained by parties who are not physically present nor domiciled in the jurisdiction which purports to grant divorce (e.g. Mexican divorce). Such divorces are not recognized because of the complete absence of the usual bases for divorce jurisdiction. Unruh v. Industrial Commission, 81 Ariz. 118, 301 P.2d 1029.

Maim. To cripple or mutilate in any way. To inflict upon a person any injury which deprives him of the use of any limb or member of the body, or renders him lame or defective in bodily vigor. To inflict bodily injury; to seriously wound or disfigure; disable. State v. Thomas, 157 Kan. 526, 142 P.2d 692, 693. See also Mayhem.
Main. Principal, leading, primary, chief. Most important in size, extent, rank, importance, strength or utility.

Mainad /meynad/. In old English law, a false oath; perjury. Probably from Sax. "manath" or "mainath" a false or deceitful oath.

Main-a-main. Immediately.

Main channel. The main channel of a river is that bed over which the principal volume of water flows. The deeper or more navigable channel of river.

Maine-port. In old English law, a small tribute, commonly of loaves of bread, which in some places the parishioners paid to the rector in lieu of small tithes.

Mainly. Principally, chiefly, in the main.

Mainour /meynour/. An article stolen, when found in the hands of the thief. A thief caught with the stolen goods in his possession is said to be taken "with the mainour," that is, with the property in manu, in his hands. 4 Bl.Comm. 307.

Mainovre, or maineuvre /man(y)uuv/ /a/. A trespass committed by hand.

Mainpernable /meynpornabal/. Capable of being bailed; bailable; admissible to bail on giving surety by mainpernors.

Mainperor /meynporn/. In old practice, a surety for the appearance of a person under arrest, who is delivered out of custody into the hands of his bail.

Mainprise. In old English law, the delivery of a person into the custody of mainpernors (q.v.). Also the name of a writ (now obsolete) commanding the sheriff to take the security of mainpernors and set the party at liberty. "Mainpernors" differ from "bail" in that a man's bail may imprison or surrender him up before the stipulated day of appearance; mainpernors can do neither, but are barely sureties for his appearance at the day. Bail are only sureties that the party be answerable for the special matter for which they stipulate; mainpernors are bound to produce him to answer all charges whatsoever. 3 Bl.Comm. 128. Other distinctions are made in the old books.

Main purpose doctrine. The Statute of Frauds requires contracts to answer for the debt, default or misdoing of another to be in writing to be enforceable. However, if the main purpose of the promisor's undertaking is his own benefit or protection, such promise need not be in writing. MacDonald v. Stack, 345 Mass. 709, 189 N.E.2d 221. The "main purpose rule" is that whenever the main purpose and object of promisor is not to answer for another but to subserve some purpose of his own, his promise is not within statute of frauds, although it may be in form a promise to pay debt of another and although performance of promise may incidentally have effect of extinguishing liability of another. Cooper Petroleum v. La Gloria Oil & Gas Co., Tex.Civ.App., 423 S.W.2d 645, 655.

Main-rent. Vassalage.

Main sea. See Sea.

Maintain. The term is variously defined as acts of repairs and other acts to prevent a decline, lapse or cessation from existing state or condition; bear the expense of; carry on; commence; continue; furnish means for subsistence or existence of; hold; hold or keep in an existing state or condition; hold or preserve in any particular state or condition; keep from change; keep from falling, declining, or ceasing; keep in existence or continuance; keep in force; keep in good order; keep in proper condition; keep in repair; keep up; preserve; preserve from lapse, decline, failure, or cessation; provide for; rebuild; repair; replace; supply with means of support; supply with what is needed; support; sustain; uphold. Negatively stated, it is defined as not to lose or surrender; not to suffer or fail or decline. El Paso County Water Imp. Dist. No. 1 v. City of El Paso, D.C.Tex., 243 F.2d 927, 931.

To "maintain" an action is to uphold, continue on foot, and keep from collapse a suit already begun, or to prosecute a suit with effect. George Moore Ice Cream Co. v. Rose, Ga., 289 U.S. 373, 53 S.Ct. 620, 77 L.Ed. 1265. To maintain an action or suit may mean to commence or institute it; the term imports the existence of a cause of action. Maintain, however, is usually applied to actions already brought, but not yet reduced to judgment. Smallwood v. Gallardo, 275 U.S. 56, 48 S.Ct. 23, 72 L.Ed. 152. In this connection it means to continue or preserve in or with; to carry on.

The words "maintains" and "maintaining" in statutes prohibiting maintenance of a liquor nuisance denote continuous or recurrent acts approaching permanence. The term "maintaining government" means providing money to enable government to perform duties which it is required by law to perform.

See also Maintenance; Repair.

Maintained. Carried on; kept possession and care of; kept effectively; commenced and continued.

Maintainor. In criminal law, one who maintains or seconds a cause pending in litigation between others, either by disbursing money or otherwise giving assistance. One who is guilty of maintenance (q.v.).

Maintenance. The upkeep or preservation of condition of property, including cost of ordinary repairs necessary and proper from time to time for that purpose. Bogan v. Postlewait, 265 N.E.2d 195, 197. See also Maintain.

Sustenance; support; assistance; aid. The furnishing by one person to another, for his or her support, of the means of living, or food, clothing, shelter, etc., particularly where the legal relation of the parties is such that one is bound to support the other, as between father and child, or husband and wife. State ex rel. Blume v. State Board of Education of Montana, 97 Mont. 371, 34 P.2d 515, 519. The supplying of the necessaries of life. Federal Land Bank of St. Louis v. Miller, 184 Ark. 415, 42 S.W.2d 564, 566. While term primarily means food, clothing and shelter, it has also been held to include such items as reasonable and necessary transportation or automobile expenses, medical and drug expenses, utilities and household expenses. Hughes v. Hughes, La.App., 303 So.2d 766, 769. See also Separate maintenance; Support.

Assets. Expenditures undertaken to preserve an asset’s service potential for its originally-intended life; these expenditures are treated as periodic expenses or product costs. Contrast with Improvement. See also Maintain; Repair.

Lawsuits. An officious intermeddling in a lawsuit by a non-party by maintaining, supporting or assisting either party, with money or otherwise, to prosecute or defend the litigation. Schnabel v. Taft Broadcasting Co., Inc., Mo.App., 525 S.W.2d 819, 823. The offense committed by a maintainor (q.v.). See also Champerty.

Seamen. See Maintenance and cure.

Maintenance and cure. Contractual form of compensation given by general maritime law to seaman who falls ill while in service of his vessel. McCorpen v. Central Gulf S. S. Corp., C.A.Tex., 396 F.2d 547, 548. Seaman is entitled to maintenance and cure if he is injured or becomes ill in service or vessel, without regard to negligence of his employer or to unseaworthiness of ship; and “maintenance” is a per diem living allowance for food and lodging and “cure” is payment for medical, therapeutic and hospital expenses; and employer’s duty to pay maintenance and cure continues until seaman has reached “maximum cure.” Kratz v. Capital Marine Supply, Inc., D.C.La., 490 F.Supp. 222, 229. Pacific S.S. Co. v. Peterson, 278 U.S. 130, 49 S.Ct. 75, 73 L.Ed. 220. See also Cure.

Maintenance call. See Margin call.

Maintenance or assessment fee. A monthly charge for maintaining and repairing the commonly owned areas in a condominium subdivision or planned unit development.

Maior /mé(y)or/. An old form of “mayor.”

Maister /méystar/. An old form of “master.”

Maitre /méytr/. Fr. In French maritime law, master; the master or captain of a vessel.

Majestas /majéstæs/. Lat. In Roman law, the majesty, sovereign authority, or supreme prerogative of the state or prince. Also a shorter form of the expression “crimen majestatis,” or “crimen læse majestatis,” an offense against sovereignty, or against the safety or organic life of the Roman people; i.e., high treason.

Majesty. Royal dignity. A term used of kings and emperors as a title of honor.

Major. A person of full age; one who is no longer a minor; one who has attained the management of his own concerns and the enjoyment of his civic rights. See also Adult; Legal age; Majority.

Military law. The officer next in rank above a captain.

Major and minor fault rule. Vessel guilty of gross fault has burden of showing that other vessel committed a plain fault. General Seafoods Corporation v. J. S. Packard Dredging Co., C.C.A.Mass., 120 F.2d 117, 119, 120. Where fault on part of one vessel is established by uncontradicted testimony and such fault is, of itself, sufficient to account for the disaster, it is not enough for such vessel to raise a doubt with regard to management of other vessel and any reasonable doubt with regard to propriety of conduct of such other vessel should be resolved in its favor. Intagliata v. Shipowners & Merchants Towboat Co., 26 Cal.2d 365, 159 P.2d 1, 10.

Major annus /méyjar’ anás/. The greater year; the bissextile year, consisting of 366 days.

Majora regalia /majór'a rágěllíyás/. The king’s dignity, power, and royal prerogative, as opposed to his revenue, which is comprised in the minora regalia.

Major crimes. A loose classification of serious crimes such as murder, rape, armed robbery, etc.

Major (or minor) dispute. Major disputes within Railway Labor Act are those concerned with formation of collective bargaining agreements or with efforts to secure such agreements and look to acquisition of rights of future rather than to rights which vested in past; and, “minor disputes” are those arising where there is existing agreement and there has been no effort to bring about formal change in terms or to create new agreement but dispute relates to application of particular provision. Railway Exp. Agency, Inc. v. Gulf Dept., Dist. Bd. of Adjustment, Broth. of Ry., Airline and S. S. Clerks, Freight Handlers, Exp. and Station Emp., D.C. Ga., 306 F.Supp. 1243, 1246. Compare Minor dispute.

Majore pcena affectus quam legibus statuta est, non est infamis /májóři pién’ sĕktäsk kwèrm liyábs statyýwás ėst, nón ėst anféymas/. One affected with a greater punishment than is provided by law is not infamous.

Majores /májóřiiz/. In old English law, greater persons; persons of higher condition or estate.

In Roman law and genealogical tables, the male descendants beyond the sixth degree.

Major general. An officer next in rank above a brigadier general, and next below a lieutenant general, and who usually commands a division or an army corps.
Major hereditas venit unicique nostrum a jure et legibus quam a parentibus /méyjar herēdātēs viynat ywēnak(y)u̯jēkwīvi nóstrām ēy jūri yē liyjas kwām ēy pērēntābas/. A greater inheritance comes to every one of us from right and the laws than from parents.

Majority. Full age; legal age; age at which a person is no longer a minor. The age at which, by law, a person is capable of being legally responsible for all his or her acts (e.g., contractual obligations), and is entitled to the management of his or her own affairs and to the enjoyment of civic rights (e.g., right to vote). The opposite of minority. Also the status of a person who is a major in age. See Adult; Capacity; Legal age.

The greater number. The number greater than half of any total.

Majority of qualified electors. Refers to those who actually vote on election day. Harris v. Baden, 154 Fla. 373, 17 So.2d 608, 609. See Majority rule; Majority vote.

Majority opinion. The opinion of an appellate court in which the majority of its members join. May also refer to a view of a legal principle in which most jurisdictions concur. See also Opinion.

Majority stockholder. One who owns or controls more than 50 percent of the stock of a corporation, though effective control may be maintained with far less than 50 percent if most of the stock is widely held. In close corporation, majority shareholders may owe fiduciary, partner-like duties to minority shareholders. See Donahue v. Rodd Electrotype Co. of N.E., Inc., 367 Mass. 578, 328 N.E.2d 505.

Majority vote. Vote by more than half of voters for candidate or other matter on ballot. When there are only two candidates, he who receives the greater number of the votes cast is said to have a majority; when there are more than two competitors for the same office, the person who receives the greatest number of votes has a plurality, but he has not a majority unless he receives a greater number of votes than those cast for all his competitors combined.

As regards voting by stockholders, means majority per capita when the right to vote is per capita, and a majority of stock when each share of stock is entitled to a vote, each particular case being determined by provisions of charter regulating voting. Simon Borg & Co. v. New Orleans City R. Co., D.C.La., 244 F. 617, 619.

Major numerus in se continet minorem /méyjar ny(y)u̯wmares ēsī kōntān manōrām/. The greater number contains in itself the less.

Majus dignum trahit ad se minus dignum /méyjas dignōm trēy(h)bəd ād ēsī māynas dignōm/. The more worthy draws to itself the less worthy.

Majus est delictum seipsum occidere quam alium /méyjas ēst daliktsm sīyipsem oksidariy kwām ēy-līyam/. It is a greater crime to kill one's self than another. See Suicide.

Majus jus /méyjas jās/. In old practice, greater right or more right. A plea in the old real actions. Majus jus merum, more mere right.

A writ proceeding in some customary manors to try a right to land.

Majus Latium /méyjas léysh(i)am/. See Jus Latium.

Make. To cause to exist. United States v. Giles, 300 U.S. 41, 57 S.Ct. 340, 344, 81 L.Ed. 493. To form, fashion, or produce. To do, perform, or execute; as to make an issue, to make oath, to make a presentment.

To do in form of law; to perform with due formalities; to execute in legal form; as to make answer, to make a return or report.

To execute as one's act or obligation; to prepare and sign; to issue; to sign, execute, and deliver; as to make a conveyance, to make a note. To conclude, determine upon, agree to, or execute; as to make a contract.

To cause to happen by one's neglect or omission; as to make default. To make acquisition of; to procure; to collect; as to make the money on an execution or to make a loan. To have authority or influence; to support or sustain; as in the phrase, "This precedent makes for the plaintiff."

Make a contract. To agree upon, and conclude or adopt, a contract. In case of a written contract, to reduce it to writing, execute it in due form, and deliver it as binding.

Make an award. To form and publish a judgment on the facts.

Make default. To fail or be wanting in some legal duty; particularly to omit the entering of an appearance when duly summoned in an action at law or other judicial proceeding. To neglect to obey the command of a subpoena, etc. See also Default.

Maker. One who makes, frames, executes, or ordains; as a "lawmaker," or the "maker" of a promissory note. One who signs a note to borrow and, as such, assumes obligation to pay note when due. The person who creates or executes a note, that is, issues it, and in signing the instrument makes the promise of payment contained therein. One who signs a check; in this context, synonymous with drawer. U.C.C. § 3-413(1). One who issues a promissory note or certificate of deposit (i.e., one who promises to pay a certain sum to the holder of the note or CD). See Draft; Drawer.

Accommodation maker. See Accommodation.

Making law. In old practice, the formality of denying a plaintiff's charge under oath, in open court, with copurgators. One of the ancient methods of trial, frequently, though inaccurately, termed "waging law," or "wager of law." 3 Bl.Comm. 341.

Term may also refer to a court decision that establishes new law on a particular matter or subject.
Making record. The preparation of an appellate record. May also refer to the process of trying a case with a view towards an eventual appeal in which the record of the trial is important. In the later instance care is taken during trial to make all appropriate objections so that such become part of the record on appeal.

Male. A prefix meaning bad, wrong, fraudulent; as maladministration, malpractice, malversation, etc.

Mala /mála/. Lat. Bad; evil; wrongful.

Maladministration /máladministréyshán/. This term is used interchangeably with misadministration, and both words mean "wrong administration."

Mala fides /mála féádiyus/. Bad faith. The opposite of bona fides (q.v.). Malá fidei possessor, a possessor in bad faith.

Mala grammatica non vitiat chartam. Sed in expositione instrumentorum mala grammatica quoad fieri possit evitanda est /mála grámátka nón víshiyat kárta m séd in ékspsázishíywni instrumentórm mála grámátka kwówéed fáyár y póat étátáná sít/. Bad grammar does not vitiate a deed. But in the exposition of instruments, bad grammar, as far as it can be done, is to be avoided.

Mala in se /mála in síy/. Wrongs in themselves; acts morally wrong; offenses against conscience.

Malandrinus /máladráynas/. In old English law, a thief or pirate.

Maliapportionment. An improper or unconstitutional apportionment of legislative districts. See Gerrymander; Legislative apportionment.

Mala praxis /mála prékss/>. Malpractice; unskillful management or treatment. Particularly applied to the neglect or unskillful management of a physician, surgeon, or apothecary. See Malpractice.

Mala prohibita /mála prohibíta/. Prohibited wrongs or offenses; acts which are made offenses by positive laws, and prohibited as such. Acts or omissions which are made criminal by statute but which, of themselves, are not criminal. Generally, no criminal intent or mens rea is required and the mere accomplishment of the act or omission is sufficient for criminal liability. Term is used in contrast to mala in se which are acts which are wrongs in themselves such as robbery.

Malconduct /málköndóktt/>. Ill conduct, especially dishonest conduct, maladministration, or, as applied to officers, official misconduct. See Malefeasance; Miskeance.

Male /méyl/. Of the masculine sex.

Male creditus /máliy krédítsas/. In old English law, unfavorably thought of; in bad repute or credit.

Maledicta est expositio quo corruptit textum /máledíkta ét ékspsázííyow kwíy kármpót téks-tam/. That is a cursed interpretation which corrupts the text.

Malediction /máladíkshán/. A curse, which wasanciently annexed to donations of lands made to churches or religious houses, against those who should violate their rights.

Malefaction /málsfékshán/. A crime; an offense.

Malefactor /málsfektor/. He who is guilty, or has been convicted, of some crime or offense.

Maleficia non debent remanere impunita; et impunitas continuum affectum tribuit delinquenti /málfíshííyow nón débánt réymiñíry impýúwnáta; éd impýúwnántés kantínywúm sféktam tríbyuwat délajkwéntay/. Evil deeds ought not to remain unpunished; and impunity affords continual incitement to the delinquent.

Maleficia propositis distinguuntur /málfíshííyow a prôpózástas distingwántar/. Evil deeds are distinguished from evil purposes, or by their purposes.

Maleficium /málfíshííyow a/. In the civil law, waste; damage; tort; injury.

Maleson, or malison /málsan/"zán/ A curse.

Malesworn, or malsworn /méalíswórn/. Forsworn.

Malefeasance /málfíseyzíínt/. Evil doing; ill conduct. The commission of some act which is positively unlawful; the doing of an act which is wholly wrongful and unlawful; the doing of an act which person ought not to do at all or the unjust performance of some act which the party had no right or which he had contracted not to do. Comprehensive term including any wrongful conduct that affects, interrupts or interferes with the performance of official duties. State ex rel. Knabb v. Frater, 198 Wash. 675, 89 P.2d 1046, 1048. Malefeasance is a wrongful act which the actor has no legal right to do, or any wrongful conduct which affects, interrupts, or interferes with performance of official duty, or an act for which there is no authority or warrant of law or which a person ought not to do at all, or the unjust performance of some act, which party performing it has no right, or has contracted not to do. Daugherty v. Ellis, 142 W.Va. 340, 97 S.E.2d 33, 42. It differs from "misfeasance" and "non-feasance" (q.v.).

Mal gree /mál griy/ L. Fr. Against the will; without the consent. Hence the single word "malgre," and more modern "maugre" (q.v.).

Malice. The intentional doing of a wrongful act without just cause or excuse, with an intent to inflict an injury or under circumstances that the law will imply an evil intent. A condition of mind which prompts a person to do a wrongful act willfully, that is, on purpose, to the injury of another, or to do intentionally a wrongful act toward another without justification or excuse. A conscious violation of the law (or the prompting of the mind to commit it) which operates to the prejudice of another person. A condition of the mind showing a heart regardless of social duty and fatally bent on mischief. Cockrell v. State, 135 Tex.Cr.R. 218, 117 S.W.2d 1105, 1109, 1110. Malice in law is not necessarily personal hate or ill will, but it is that state of mind which is reckless of law and of the legal rights of the citizen.

In murder, that condition of mind which prompts one to take the life of another without just cause, legal justification, or provocation. A willful or corrupt intention of the mind. It includes not only anger, hatred and revenge, but also every other unlawful and unjustifiable motive. People v. Aaron, 299 N.W.2d 304, 326.

As requirement to sustain award of punitive damages is wrongful act done intentionally without just cause or excuse. Malik v. Apex Intern. Alloys, Inc., C.A.Okl., 762 F.2d 77, 80.

As used in Bankruptcy Code (§ 523(a)(6)) provision excepting from discharge liabilities for willful and malicious injuries to another entity or property of another entity does not require personal hatred or ill will, but requires that debtor know his act will harm another and proceed in face of such knowledge. Matter of Chambers, Bkrty.Wis., 23 B.R. 206, 210.

In libel and slander, as to privileged communications, "malice" involves an evil intent or motive arising from spite or ill will; personal hatred or ill will; or culpable recklessness or a willful and wanton disregard of the rights and interests of the person defamed. In a libel case it consists in intentionally publishing, without justifiable cause, any written or printed matter which is injurious to the character of another. Becker v. Brinkop, 230 Mo.App. 871, 78 S.W.2d 538, 541. Malice may be defined, insofar as defamation is concerned, as acting in bad faith and with knowledge of falsity of statements. Rice v. Winkelman Bros. Apparel, Inc., 13 Mich.App. 281, 164 N.W.2d 417, 420. In the context of a libel suit brought by a public figure, it consists in publishing the false defamation knowing it to be false or with a reckless disregard of whether it is true or false. New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 256, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686. See also Libel; Slander.

In the law of malicious prosecution, it means that the prosecution was instituted primarily because of a purpose other than that of bringing an offender to justice. Brown v. Kisner, 192 Miss. 746, 6 So.2d 611, 617. It is the intentional doing of a wrongful act without legal justification, and may be inferred from the absence of probable cause; it does not necessarily involve hatred or ill will. Palermo v. Cottom, Mo.App., 525 S.W.2d 758, 765. See also Malicious prosecution.

Actual malice. Express malice, or malice in fact. Etteanpain Co-op. Soc. v. Lillback, C.C.A.Mass., 18 F.2d 912, 917. In libel law, "actual malice" can be established either by proving the publication was made with the knowledge of its falsity of its contents or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not. Hepps v. Philadelphia Newspapers, Inc., 506 Pa. 304, 485 A.2d 374, 389. Such will be found where an intent to inflict harm through falsehood is established. Cochran v. Indianapolis Newspapers, Inc., 175 Ind.App. 548, 372 N.E.2d 1211, 1219. See also Malice in fact.

Constructive malice. Implied malice; malice inferred from acts; malice imputed by law; malice which is not shown by direct proof of an intention to do injury (express malice), but which is inferentially established by the necessarily injurious results of the acts shown to have been committed. See also Implied malice, below.

Express malice. Actual malice; malice in fact; ill will or wrongful motive. A deliberate intention to commit an injury, evidenced by external circumstances. Sparf v. U. S., 156 U.S. 51, 15 S.Ct. 273, 39 L.Ed. 343. See also Express malice; Malice in fact.

Implied malice. Malice inferred by legal reasoning and necessary deduction from the res gestae or the conduct of the party. Malice inferred from any deliberate cruel act committed by one person against another, however sudden. What is called "general malice" is often thus inferred. Sparf v. U. S., 156 U.S. 51, 15 S.Ct. 273, 39 L.Ed. 343. See also Constructive malice, above; and Malice in law.

Legal malice. See Legal malice; Malice in law.

Particular malice. Malice directed against a particular individual. Ill will; a grudge; a desire to be revenged on a particular person. See also Special malice, below.

Preconceived malice. Malice prepense or aforethought. See Malice aforethought; Premeditation.

Premeditated malice. An intention to kill unlawfully, deliberately formed in the mind as the result of a determination meditated upon and fixed before the act. See Malice aforethought; Premeditation.

Special malice. Particular or personal malice; that is, hatred, ill will, or a vindictive disposition against a particular individual.

Universal malice. By this term is not meant a malicious purpose to take the life of all persons, but it is that depravity of the human heart which determines to take life upon slight or insufficient provocation, without knowing or caring who may be the victim.

Malice aforethought. A predetermination to commit an act without legal justification or excuse. Harrison v. Commonwealth, 279 Ky. 510, 131 S.W.2d 454, 455. A malicious design to injure. State v. Thomas, 157 Kan. 526, 142 P.2d 692, 693. The intentional doing of an unlawful act which was determined upon before it was executed. State v. Lane, Mo., 371 S.W.2d 261, 263. An intent, at the time of a killing, willfully to take the life of a human being, or an intent willfully to act in callous and wanton disregard of the consequences to human life; but "malice aforethought" does not necessarily imply any ill will, spite or hatred towards the individual killed. See also Premeditation.

Malice in fact. Express or actual malice. Ill will towards a particular person; an actual intention to injure or defame such person. Judge v. Rockford Memorial Hospital, 17 Ill.App.2d 365, 150 N.E.2d 202, 208. It implies desire or intent to injure, while "malice in law," or "implied malice," means wrongful act done intentionally, without just cause or excuse, and jury may infer it. See Malice (Actual malice). Compare Malice in law.
MALICE IN LAW

Malicious accusation. The intentional doing of a wrongful act without just cause or excuse. Lyons v. St. Joseph Belt Ry. Co., 223 Mo.App. 575, 84 S.W.2d 933, 944. Implied, inferred, or legal malice. As distinguished from malice in fact, it is presumed from tortious acts, deliberately done without just cause, excuse, or justification, which are reasonably calculated to injure another or others. See also Legal malice. Compare Malice in fact.

Malice prepense. Malice aforethought; deliberate, predetermined malice.

Malicious /malish'is/. Characterized by, or involving, malice; having, or done with, wicked, evil or mischievous intentions or motives; wrongful and done intentionally without just cause or excuse or as a result of ill will. See also Malice; Willful.

Malicious abandonment. In criminal law, the desertion of a wife or husband without just cause.

Malicious abuse of legal process. Wilfully misapplying court process to obtain object not intended by law. The willful misuse or misapplication of process to accomplish a purpose not warranted or commanded by the writ. The malicious perversion of a regularly issued process, whereby a result not lawfully or properly obtained on a writ is secured; not including cases where the process was procured maliciously but not abused or misused after its issuance. The employment of process where probable cause exists but where the intent is to secure objects other than those intended by law. Hughes v. Swinehart, D.C.Pa., 376 F.Supp. 650, 652. The tort of “malicious abuse of process” requires a perversion of court process to accomplish some end which the process was not designed to accomplish, and does not arise from a regular use of process, even with ulterior motives. Capital Elec. Co. v. Cristaldi, D.C Md., 157 F.Supp. 646, 648. See also Abuse (Process); Malicious prosecution. Compare Malicious use of process.

Malicious accusation. Procuring accusation or prosecution of another from improper motive and without probable cause. See Malicious prosecution.

Malicious act. A wrongful act intentionally done without legal justification or excuse; an unlawful act done willfully or purposely to injure another.

Malicious arrest. See Malicious prosecution.

Malicious assault with deadly weapon. Form of aggravated assault in which the victim is threatened with death or serious bodily injury from the defendant’s use of a deadly weapon. The element of malice can be inferred from the nature of the assault and the selection of the weapon.

Malicious injury. An injury committed against a person at the prompting of malice or hatred towards him, or done spitefully or wantonly. The willful doing of an act with knowledge it is liable to injure another and regardless of consequences. Injury involving element of fraud, violence, wantonness and willfulness, or criminality. An injury that is intentional, wrongful and without just cause or excuse, even in the absence of hatred, spite or ill will. Panchula v. Kaya, 59 Ohio App. 556, 18 N.E.2d 1003, 1005, 13 O.O. 301. Punitive damages may be awarded to plaintiff for such injury.

Malicious killing. Any intentional killing without a legal justification or excuse and not within the realm of voluntary manslaughter. State v. Cope, 78 Ohio App. 429, 67 N.E.2d 912, 920, 34 O.O. 171.

Maliciously. Imports a wish to vex, annoy, or injure another, or an intent to do a wrongful act, and may consist in direct intention to injure, or in reckless disregard of another’s rights. See also Malice; Malicious.

Malicious mischief. Willful destruction of personal property of another, from actual ill will or resentment towards its owner or possessor. Though only a trespass at the common law, it is now a crime in most states.

Malicious motive. Any motive for instituting a prosecution, other than a desire to bring an offender to justice. Louder v. Jacobs, 119 Colo. 511, 205 P.2d 236, 238. See Malicious prosecution.

Malicious prosecution. One begun in malice without probable cause to believe the charges can be sustained. An action for damages brought by person, against whom civil suit or criminal prosecution has been instituted maliciously and without probable cause, after termination of prosecution of such suit in favor of person claiming damages. Beaurline v. Smith, Tex.Civ.App., 426 S.W.2d 295, 298.

One who takes an active part in the initiation, continuation or procurement of civil proceedings against another is subject to liability to the other for wrongful civil proceedings if: (a) he acts without probable cause, and primarily for a purpose other than that of securing the proper adjudication of the claim in which the proceedings are based, and (b) except when they are ex parte, the proceedings have terminated in favor of the person against whom they are brought. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 674.

Elements of a cause of action for malicious prosecution are: (1) commencement of prosecution of proceedings against present plaintiff; (2) its legal causation by present defendant; (3) its termination in favor of present plaintiff; (4) absence of probable cause for such proceedings; (5) presence of malice therein; and (6) damage to plaintiff by reason thereof. Palermo v. Cotton, Mo.App., 525 S.W.2d 758, 764.

In addition to the tort remedy for malicious criminal proceedings, the majority of states also permit tort actions for malicious institution of civil actions. See also Advice of counsel; False arrest; Vexatious proceeding.

Malicious trespass. The act of one who maliciously or mischievously injures or causes to be injured any property of another or any public property.

Malicious use of process. Utilization of process to intimidate, oppress or punish a person against whom it is sued out. Austin Liquor Mart, Inc. v. Department of Revenue, 18 Ill.App.3d 894, 310 N.E.2d 719, 728. Exists where plaintiff proceeds maliciously and without probable cause to execute object which law intends process to... subserve. It has to do with the wrongful initiation of such process, while "abuse of civil process" is concerned with perversion of a process after it is issued. Hughes v. Swinehart, D.C.Pa., 376 F.Supp. 650, 653. See also Abuse (Process). Compare Malicious abuse of legal process.

Malignare /mælngréə/. To malign or slander; also to maim.

Malinger /mælnjə/. To feign sickness or any physical disablement or mental lapse or derangement, especially for the purpose of escaping the performance of a task, duty, or work, or for purpose of continuing to receive disability payments. Person who consciously feigns or simulates mental or physical illness for gain.

Malitia /malish(iy)ə/. Lat. Actual evil design; express malice. Malitia est acida; est mali animi affectus /malish(iy)ə est āsāda, ēst mēlay ānāmay afēktās/. Malice is sour; it is the quality of a bad mind.

Malitia precogitata /malish(iy)ə priykojytēta/. Malice aforethought.

Malitia supplet ætatem /malish(iy)ə sīplat ātēytēm/. Malice supplies [the want of] age.

Malitiis hominum est obviantum /malishiyas hōmanum ēst obvyjandam/. The wicked or malicious designs of men must be thwarted.

Malleable /māliyabal/. Capable of being drawn out and extended by beating; capable of extension by hammering; reducible to laminated form by beating.

Mallory Rule. Rule derived from case of the same name in which the court held that a confession given by one who had been detained an unreasonable time before being brought before magistrate was inadmissible though it was otherwise voluntary and trustworthy. Mallory v. U. S., 354 U.S. 449, 77 S.Ct. 1356, 1 L.Ed.2d 1479. Also known as McNabb-Mallory Rule.

Mallum. In old European law, a court of the higher kind in which the more important business of the county was dispatched by the count or earl. A public national assembly.

Malo animo /mālow ānəmōw/. Lat. With an evil mind; with a bad purpose or wrongful intention; with malice.

Malo grato /mālow grēytoy/. Lat. In spite; unwillingly.

Malpractice. Professional misconduct or unreasonable lack of skill. This term is usually applied to such conduct by doctors, lawyers, and accountants. Failure of one rendering professional services to exercise that degree of skill and learning commonly applied under all the circumstances in the community by the average prudent reputable member of the profession with the result of injury, loss or damage to the recipient of those services or to those entitled to rely upon them. It is any professional misconduct, unreasonable lack of skill or fidelity in professional or fiduciary duties, evil practice, or illegal or immoral conduct. Matthews v. Walker, 34 Ohio App.2d 128, 296 N.E.2d 569, 571, 63 O.O.2d 208. See also Discovery rule; Standard of care.

Legal malpractice. Consists of failure of an attorney to use such skill, prudence, and diligence as lawyers of ordinary skill and capacity commonly possess and exercise in performance of tasks which they undertake, and when such failure proximately causes damage it gives rise to an action in tort. Neel v. Magana, Olney, Levy, Cathcart and Gelfand, 6 Cal.3d 176, 98 Cal.Rptr. 837, 838, 491 P.2d 421.

Medical malpractice. In medical malpractice litigation, negligence is the predominant theory of liability. In order to recover for negligent malpractice, the plaintiff must establish the following elements: (1) the existence of the physician's duty to the plaintiff, usually based upon the existence of the physician-patient relationship; (2) the applicable standard of care and its violation; (3) a compensable injury; and, (4) a causal connection between the violation of the standard of care and the harm complained of. Kosberg v. Washington Hospital Center, Inc., 129 U.S.App.D.C. 322, 394 F.2d 947, 949. See also Captain of the ship doctrine; Continuous Treatment Doctrine; Discovery rule; Maltreatment.

Maltreatment. In reference to the treatment of his patient by a surgeon, this term signifies improper or unskillful treatment; it may result either from ignorance, neglect, or willfulness; but the word does not necessarily imply that the conduct of the surgeon, in his treatment of the patient, is either willfully or grossly careless. See also Malpractice (Medical malpractice).

Malum /mālam/, adj. Lat. Wrong; evil; wicked; reprehensible.

Malum in se /mālam in siy/. A wrong in itself; an act or case involving illegality from the very nature of the transaction, upon principles of natural, moral, and public law. Grindstaff v. State, 214 Tenn. 58, 377 S.W.2d 921, 926; State v. Shedoudy, 45 N.M. 516, 118 P.2d 280, 287. An act is said to be malum in se when it is inherently and essentially evil, that is, immoral in its nature and injurious in its consequences, without any regard to the fact of its being noticed or punished by the law of the state. Such are most or all of the offenses cognizable at common law (without the denouncement of a statute); as murder, larceny, etc. Compare Malum prohibitum.

Malum non habet efficientem, sed deficientem, causam /mālam nōn hēbat afis(h)iyēntam sēd afis(h)iyyêntam kōzam/. Evil has not an efficient, but a deficient, cause.
Malum non præsumitur /mælam nɒn præzɪˈjuːwmaʊtər/. Wickedness is not presumed.

Malum prohibitum /mælam prəhiˈbɪtəm/. A wrong prohibited; a thing which is wrong because prohibited; an act which is not inherently immoral, but becomes so because its commission is expressly forbidden by positive law; an act involving an illegality resulting from positive law. Compare Malum in se.

Malum quo communius eo pejus /mælam kwɔː ˈkomjuːnɪʊs ɪˈpjuːʃ/. The more common an evil is, the worse it is.

Malus usus abolendus est /mæləs juːˈzuːs æbələndəs ɛst/. A bad or invalid custom is [ought] to be abolished.

Malveilles. In old English law, ill will; crimes and misdemeanors; malicious practices.

Malveis procurors /mælvẹi prəˈkjuːrərz/. L. Fr. Such as used to pack juries, by the nomination of either party in a cause, or other practice.

Malversation /mælərˈvɛʃən/. In French law, this word is applied to all grave and punishable faults committed in the exercise of a charge or commission (office), such as corruption, exaction, concussion, larceny.

In its most extended sense the term includes not only the adult male sex of the human species, but women and children. See Mankind.

In feudal law, a vassal; a tenant or feudatory. The Anglo-Saxon relation of lord and man was originally purely personal, and founded on mutual contract.

Manacles. Chain for the hands; shackles.

Manage. To control and direct, to administer, to take charge of. To conduct; to carry on the concerns of a business or establishment. Generally applied to affairs that are somewhat complicated and that involve skill and judgment.

Management. Government, control, superintendence, physical or manual handling or guidance; act of managing by direction or regulation, or administration, as management of family, or of household, or of servants, or of great enterprises, or of great affairs. Branch v. Veterans’ Administration, 189 Ark. 662, 74 S.W.2d 800, 804. Discretionary power of direction.

Manager. One who has charge of corporation and control of its business, or of its branch establishments, divisions, or departments, and who is vested with a certain amount of discretion and independent judgment. Braniff v. McPherren, 177 Okt. 292, 58 P.2d 871, 872. A person chosen or appointed to manage, direct, or administer the affairs of another person or of a business, sports team, or the like. The designation of "manager" implies general power and permits reasonable inferences that the employee so designated is invested with the general conduct and control of his employer’s business. U. S. Auto Ass’n v. Alexander Film Co., D.C.Mun.App., 93 A.2d 770, 771. See also General manager.

Also one of the persons appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to prosecute impeachments before the Senate.

Managers of a conference. In England, members of the houses of parliament appointed to represent each house at a conference between the two houses. It is an ancient rule that the number of commons named for a conference should be double those of the lords.

Managing agent. See Agent.

Managium /mənəˈjɪm/. A mansion-house or dwelling-place.

Manas media /mənəs miˈdiːə/. Men of a mean condition, or of the lowest degree.

Manbote /mənˈbət/-. In Roman law, a compensation or recompense for homicide, particularly due to the lord for killing his man or vassal, the amount of which was regulated by that of the were.

Manca, mancus, or mancusa /mənˈkaʊ mənˈkəʊsə/-. A square piece of gold coin, commonly valued at thirty pence.

Manceps /mənˈsɛps/-. Lat. In Roman law, a purchaser; one who took the article sold in his hand; a formality observed in certain sales. A farmer of the public taxes.

Manche-present /mənʃ present/-. A bribe; a present from the donor’s own hand.

Mancipare /mənˈsɛpərə/. Lat. In Roman law, to sell, alienate, or make over to another; to sell with certain formalities; to sell a person; one of the forms observed in the process of emancipation.

Mancipate /mənˈsɛpət/-. To enslave; to bind; to tie.

Mancipatio /mənˈsɛpiˈʃəʊ/-. Lat. In Roman law, a certain ceremony or formal process anciently required to be performed, to perfect the sale or conveyance of res mancipi (land, houses, slaves, horses, or cattle).

The parties were present (vendor and vendee), with five witnesses and a person called "libripons," who held a balance or scales. A set form of words was repeated on either side, indicative of transfer of ownership, and certain prescribed gestures made, and the vendee then struck the scales with a piece of copper, thereby symbolizing the payment, or weighing out, of the stipulated price.

The ceremony of mancipatio was used, in later times, in one of the forms of making a will. The testator acted as vendor, and the heir (or familia emptor) as purchaser, the latter symbolically buying the whole estate or succession, of the former. The ceremony was also used by a father in making a fictitious sale of his son, which sale, when three times repeated, effectuated the emancipation of the son.

Mancipi res /mənˈsɛpi rɪˈriː/>. Lat. In Roman law, certain classes of things which could not be aliened or transferred except by means of a certain formal ceremony of conveyance called "mancipatio" (q.v.). These included land, houses, slaves, horses, and cattle. All other things were called "res nec mancipi."
The distinction was abolished by Justinian. The distinction corresponded as nearly as may be to the early distinction of English law into real and personal property; res mancipi being objects of a military or agricultural character, and res nec mancipi being all other subjects of property. Like personal estate, res nec mancipi were not originally either valuable in se or valued.

Mancipium /mânsipiym/ Lat. In Roman law, the momentary condition in which a filius, etc., might be when in course of emancipation from the potestas, and before that emancipation was absolutely complete. The condition was not like the dominica potestas over slaves, but slaves are frequently called "mancipia" in the non-legal Roman authors.

To form a clear conception of the true import of the word in the Roman jurisprudence, it is necessary to advert to the four distinct powers which were exercised by the pater familias, viz: the manus, or martial power; the mancipium, resulting from the mancipatio, or alienatio per se et libram, of a freeman; the dominica potestas, the power of the master over his slaves, and the patria potestas, the paternal power. When the pater familias sold his son, venum dare, mancipare, the paternal power was succeeded by the mancipium, or the power acquired by the purchaser over the person whom he held in mancipio, and whose condition was assimilated to that of a slave. What is most remarkable is, that on the emancipation from the mancipium he fell back into the paternal power, which was not entirely exhausted until he had been sold three times by the pater familias. Si pater filium ter venum dat, filius a patre liber esto. Gaius speaks of the mancipatio as imaginaria quaedam venditio, because in his times it was only resorted to for the purpose of adoption or emancipation.

Mancomunal /mânikomuwnal/. In Spanish law, an obligation is said to be mancomunal when one person assumes the contract or debt of another, and makes himself liable to pay or fulfill it.

Mancus /mânskos/. See Manca, mancus, or mancusia.

Mandamiento /mândamyentow/. In Spanish law, commission; authority or power of attorney. A contract of good faith, by which one person commits to the gratuitous charge of another his affairs, and the latter accepts the charge.

Mandamus /mândéymas/. Lat. We command. This is the name of a writ (formerly a high prerogative writ) which issues from a court of superior jurisdiction, and is directed to a private or municipal corporation, or any of its officers, or to an executive, administrative or judicial officer, or to an inferior court, commanding the performance of a particular act therein specified, and belonging to his or their public, official, or ministerial duty, or directing the restoration of the complainant to rights or privileges of which he has been illegally deprived. A writ issuing from a court of competent jurisdiction, commanding an inferior tribunal, board, corporation, or person to perform a purely ministerial duty imposed by law. Nebel v. Nebel, 241 N.C. 491, 85 S.E.2d 876, 882. Extraordinary writ which lies to compel performance of ministerial act or mandatory duty where there is a clear legal right in plaintiff, a corresponding duty in defendant, and a want of any other appropriate and adequate remedy. Cohen v. Ford, 19 Pa.Cmvth. 417, 339 A.2d 175, 177. See also Ministerial act.

The U.S. District Courts have original jurisdiction of any action in the nature of mandamus to compel an officer or employee of the United States or any agency thereof to perform a duty owed to the plaintiff. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1361.

Mandamus has traditionally issued in response to abuses of judicial power. Thus, where a district judge refuses to take some action he is required to take or takes some action he is not empowered to take, mandamus will lie. Bankers Life & Cas. Co. v. Holland, 346 U.S. 379, 384, 74 S.Ct. 145, 98 L.Ed. 106. The Supreme Court may issue a writ of mandamus in aid of the appellate jurisdiction that might otherwise be defeated by the unauthorized action of the court below. McClellan v. Carland, 217 U.S. 268, 30 S.Ct. 501, 503, 54 L.Ed. 762.

The remedy of mandamus is a drastic one, to be invoked only in extraordinary situations. Banker's Life & Cas. Co. v. Holland, 346 U.S. 379, 382-385, 74 S.Ct. 145, 147-149, 98 L.Ed. 106; Ex parte Fahey, 332 U.S. 258, 259, 67 S.Ct. 1558, 1559, 91 L.Ed. 2041. The writ has traditionally been used in the federal courts only "to confine an inferior court to a lawful exercise of its prescribed jurisdiction or to compel it to exercise its authority when it is its duty to do so." Will v. United States, 389 U.S., at 95, 88 S.Ct., at 273, quoting Roche v. Evaporated Milk Assn., 319 U.S. 21, 26, 63 S.Ct. 938, 941, 87 L.Ed. 1185.

Pleading. Like most of the extraordinary writs, the writ of mandamus has been abolished under rules practice in favor of a complaint or motion in the nature of mandamus which accomplishes the same object; e.g. Federal or Mass.R.Civ.P. 81(b).

Mandans /mândenә/. Lat. In the civil law, the employing party in a contract of mandate. One who gives a thing in charge to another; one who requires, requests, or employs another to do some act for him.

Mandant /mândant/. In French and Scotch law, the employing party in the contract of mandatum, or mandate.

Mandataire /mândatәr/. Fr. In French law, a person employed by another to do some act for him; a mandatory.

Mandata licta recipiunt strictam interpretationem, sed illicita latam et extensam /mandéýda lisista rasisiyant striktam intárpratěšhiyónam, séd alíista léytam et áksténsam/. Lawful commands receive a strict interpretation, but unlawful commands a broad and extended one.

Mandatarius terminos sibi positos transgressi non posse /mandatéřijias tármanas sibay pózatows trěnzgryday nôn pówtést/. A mandatory cannot exceed the limits assigned him.
Mandatory /mændstêrîy/. He to whom a mandate, charge, or commandment is given; also, he that obtains a benefice by mandamus. Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U.S. 132, 11 S.Ct. 924, 35 L.Ed. 662.

Mandate. A command, order, or direction, written or oral, which court is authorized to give and person is bound to obey. Silverman v. Seneca Realty Co., 154 Misc. 35, 276 N.Y.S. 466. A judicial command or precept proceeding from a court or judicial officer, directing the proper officer to enforce a judgment, sentence, or decree. A precept or order issued upon the decision of an appeal or writ of error, directing action to be taken, or disposition to be made of case, by inferior court. Official mode of communicating judgment of appellate court to lower court, directing action to be taken or disposition to be made of cause by trial court. Tierney v. Tierney, Fla.App., 290 So.2d 136, 137. See also Decree; Order.

A bailment of property in regard to which the bailee engages to do some act without payment. Agreement to perform services for another without pay. A contract by which a lawful business is committed to the management of another, and by him undertaken to be performed gratuitously. The mandatory is bound to the exercise of slight diligence, and is responsible for gross neglect. Williams v. Conger, 125 U.S. 397, 8 S.Ct. 933, 31 L.Ed. 778.

A mandate, procurement, or letter of attorney is an act by which one person gives power to another to transact for him and in his name one or several affairs. See also Power of attorney.

Mandato /mándatów/. In Spanish law, the contract of mandate.

Mandator /mándêytar/. The person employing another to perform a mandate.

Mandatory /mándatóriy/. adj. Containing a command; preceptive; imperative; peremptory; obligatory.

Mandatory injunction /mándatóri injîngkayshan/. See Injunction.

Mandatory instructions. See Jury instructions.

Mandatory presumption. See Presumption.

Mandatory sentencing. See Sentence.

Mandatory statutes. Generic term describing statutes which require and not merely permit a course of action. They are characterized by such directives as "shall" and not "may."

A "mandatory" provision in a statute is one the omission to follow which renders the proceedings to which it relates void, while a "directory" provision is one the observance of which is not necessary to validity of the proceeding. It is also said that when the provision of a statute is the essence of the thing required to be done, it is mandatory, Kavanaugh v. Fash, C.C.A.Okl., 74 F.2d 435, 437; otherwise, when it relates to form and manner, and where an act is incident, or after jurisdiction acquired, it is directory merely.

Mandatory statutory provision is one which must be observed, as distinguished from "directory" provision, which leaves it optional with department or officer to which addressed to obey it or not. State ex rel. Dworken v. Court of Common Pleas of Cuyahoga County, 131 Ohio St. 23, 1 N.E.2d 138, 139, 5 O.O. 291.

Mandatum /mándéytam/. Lat. In the civil law, the contract of mandate (q.v.).

Mandatum nisi gratuitum nullum est /mándéytam náyasy grátyústam námá ēst/. Unless a mandate is gratuitous, it is not a mandate.

Mandavi ballivo /mándéyvay béllâvow/. (I have commanded or made my mandate to the bailiff.) In English practice, the return made by a sheriff, where the bailiff of a liberty has the execution of a writ, that he has commanded the bailiff to execute it.

Manerium /mâniriyam/. In old English law, a manor.

Manerium dicitur a manendo, secundum excellencia, sedes magna, fixa, et stabilis /mâniriyam dishtar éy manéndo, sakándam ékslaéniyiyiam, síydiyiz màagna, fíksam, et létéybalas/. A manor is so called from manendo, according to its excellence, a seat, great, fixed, and firm.

Mangonare /mêngonéry/. In old English law, to buy in a market.

Manhood. The status of one who has reached his legal majority which in most jurisdictions is 18. Formerly, it was the age of 21. When this status is achieved, a person may act sui juris. See also Legal age; Majority.

In feudal law, a term denoting the ceremony of doing homage by the vassal to his lord. The formula used was, "Devenio vester homo", I become your man. 2 Bl.Comm. 54.

Mania /mêniyay/. See Insanity.

Manic. Phase of manic-depressive psychosis in which the mood of the patient is overactive and expansive; characterized by excessive ego valuation and over-estimation of personal importance. Manic mood may include boisterousness, joviality, anger, joyousness.

Manifest. Evident to the senses, especially to the sight, obvious to the understanding, evident to the mind, not obscure or hidden, and is synonymous with open, clear, visible, unmistakable, indubitable, indisputable, evident, and self-evident. In evidence, that which is clear and requires no proof; that which is notorious. Houston v. Leyden Motor Coach Co., 102 Ill.App.2d 348, 243 N.E.2d 293, 296; Graf v. Ford Motor Co., 102 Ill.App.2d 390, 243 N.E.2d 337, 341.

Document used in shipping and warehousing containing a list of the contents, value, origin, carrier and destination of the goods to be shipped or warehoused. A written document required to be carried by merchant vessels, containing an account of the cargo, with other particulars, for the facility of the customs officers. The Sylvia II, D.C.Mass., 28 F.2d 215, 216. See 19 U.S.C.A. § 1431 et seq. List of passengers and cargo kept by vessel and aircraft.
Manifesta probatione non indigent /mænəˈfɛstə prəˈbɛʃəˌləni nən inˈdeɪənt/. Things manifest do not require proof.

Manifestation of intention. In trusts and wills, the external expression of intention as distinguished from the undisclosed internal intention. Restatement of Trusts, Second, § 2, comment g.

Manifest law. See Lex manifesta, s. v. Lex.

Manifest necessity. Doctrine of "manifest necessity" which will authorize granting of mistrial in criminal case, and preclude defendant from successfully raising plea of former jeopardy, contemplates a sudden and overwhelming emergency beyond control of court and unforeseeable, and it does not mean expediency. Fonseca v. Judges of Family Court of Kings County, 59 Misc.2d 492, 496, 299 N.Y.S.2d 493, 498. Such exists where, due to circumstances beyond control of parties and court, it becomes no longer possible to conduct trial, or to reach a fair result based upon the evidence. People v. Turner, 105 Ill.App.3d 393, 61 Ill.Dec. 275, 278, 434 N.E.2d 428, 431.

Manifesto /mænəˈfɛstəʊ/. A formal written declaration, promulgated by a sovereign, or by the executive authority of a state or nation, proclaiming its reasons and motives for declaring a war, or for any other important international action. Public declaration or proclamation of political or social principals.

Manifest weight of evidence. The word "manifest", in rule that appellate court cannot substitute its opinion for that of trial court as to facts unless trial court's finding is manifestly against the weight of the evidence, means unmistakable, clear, plain, or indisputable, and requires that an opposite conclusion be clearly evident. Levin v. Siver, 27 Ill.App.2d 134, 169 N.E.2d 156.

Manipulation. Series of transactions involving the buying or selling of a security for the purpose of creating a false or misleading appearance of active trading or to raise or depress the price to induce the purchase or sale by others. Such acts are prohibited by Sec. 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C.A. § 78i, j. See also Wash sale.

Mankind. The race or species of human beings. In law, females, as well as males, are included under this term.

Mann Act. Federal statute (White Slave Traffic Act, 18 U.S.C.A. § 2421) making it a crime to transport a woman or girl in interstate or foreign commerce for the purpose of prostitution or debauchery, or for any other immoral purpose.

Manner. A way, mode, method of doing anything, or mode of proceeding in any case or situation. See also Custom and Usage.

Manner and form; modo et forma. In common law pleading, formal words introduced at the conclusion of a traverse. Their object is to put the party whose pleading is traversed not only to the proof that the matter of fact denied is, in its general effect, true as alleged, but also that the manner and form in which the fact or facts are set forth are also capable of proof.

Manning. A day's work of a man. A summoning to court.

Mannire /mənˈɛriə/. To cite any person to appear in court and stand in judgment there. It is different from bannire; for, though both of them are citations, this is by the adverse party, and that is by the judge.

Mannopous /mənˈoʊpəs/. In old English law, goods taken in the hands of an apprehended thief. The same as "mainour" (q.v.).

Man of straw. See Men of straw.

Manor. A house, dwelling, seat, or residence.

In English law, the manor was originally a tract of land granted out by the king to a lord or other great person, in fee. It was otherwise called a "barony" or "lordship," and appendant to it was the right to hold a court, called the "court-baron." The lands comprised in the manor were divided into terra tenementales (tenantland or bockland) and terra dominicales, or demesne lands. The former were given by the lord of the manor to his followers or retainers in freehold. The latter were such as he reserved for his own use; but of these part were held by tenants in copyhold, i.e., those holding by a copy of the record in the lord's court; and part, under the name of the "lord's waste," served for public roads and commons of pasture for the lord and tenants. The tenants, considered in their relation to the court-baron and to each other, were called "pares curiae". The word also signified the franchise of having a manor, with jurisdiction for a court-baron and the right to the rents and services of copyholders.

Reputed manor. Whenever the demesne lands and the services become absolutely separated, the manor ceases to be a manor in reality, although it may (and usually does) continue to be a manor in reputation, and is then called a "reputed manor," and it is also sometimes called "seigniory in gross."

Manorial extent /mənəˈriəl ækˈstɛnt/. In old English law, a survey of a manor made by a jury of tenants, often of unfree men sworn to sit for the particulars of each tenancy, and containing the smallest details as to the nature of the service due. These manorial extents were made in the interest of the lords, who were anxious that all due services should be done; but they imply that other and greater services were not due, that the customary tenants, even though they be unfree men, owed these services for their tenements, no less and no more. Statements that the tenants were not bound to do services of a particular kind were not very uncom-
MANORIAL EXTENT

Mon. The "extents" of manors are descriptions which give the numbers and names of the tenants, the size of their holdings, the legal kind of their tenure and the kind and amount of their service.

Manorial system. A medieval system of land ownership by lords of the manor for whom serfs and some freemen toiled in the soil in return for protection from the lord. See also Manor.

Manqueller /mænkwɛələr/’kɪlər/. In Saxon law, a murderer.

Manse /mæns/. In old English law, a habitation or dwelling, generally with land attached. A residence or dwelling-house for the parish priest; a parsonage or vicarage house.

Manser /mænsər/. A bastard.

Mansio /mænsi(y)əʊ/. In Anglo-Saxon times the amount of land which would support a man and his family, called by various names.

Mansion-house. In the law of burglary, etc., any species of dwelling-house.

Manslaughter. The unjustifiable, inexcusable and intentional killing of a human being without deliberation, premeditation and malice. State v. Banister, Mo.App., 512 S.W.2d 843, 845. The unlawful killing of a human without any deliberation, which may be involuntary, in the commission of a lawful act without due caution and circumspection. Wallace v. U. S., 162 U.S. 466, 16 S.Ct. 859, 40 L.Ed. 1039.

Criminal homicide constitutes manslaughter when: (a) it is committed recklessly; or (b) a homicide which would otherwise be murder is committed under the influence of extreme mental or emotional disturbance for which there is reasonable explanation or excuse. The reasonableness of such explanation or excuse shall be determined from the viewpoint of a person in the actor's situation under the circumstances as he believes them to be. Model Penal Code, § 210.3.

The heat of passion, which will reduce a murder to manslaughter, must be such passion as would be aroused naturally in the mind of the ordinary reasonable person under the same or similar circumstances, as shown by the evidence in the case. See also Adequate cause; Assault with intent to commit manslaughter; Hot blood; Negligent manslaughter; Sudden heat of passion.

There are various types or degrees of manslaughter recognized by federal and state statutes:

Involuntary manslaughter. Such exists where a person in committing an unlawful act not felonious or tending to great bodily harm, or in committing a lawful act without proper caution or requisite skill, unguardedly or undesignedly kills another. Model Penal Code, § 210.3(1)(a); 18 U.S.C.A. § 1112. Compare Accidental killing.

Voluntary manslaughter. Manslaughter committed voluntarily upon a sudden heat of the passions; as if, upon a sudden quarrel, two persons fight, and one of them kills the other. Model Penal Code, § 210.3(1)(b); 18 U.S.C.A. § 1112. It is the unlawful taking of human life without malice and under circumstances falling short of willful, premeditated, or deliberate intent to kill and approaching too near thereto to be justifiable homicide.

The absence of intention to kill or to commit any unlawful act which might reasonably produce death or great bodily harm is the distinguishing feature between voluntary and involuntary homicide.

Manstealing. A word sometimes used synonymously with "kidnapping" (q.v.).

Mansuetae naturae /mænswiˈtiː nəˈtʃʊri/’. Tamed and domesticated animals.

Mansuetus /mænswiˈtiːs/. Lat. Tame; as though accustomed to come to the hand.

Mantheoff /mænθɪˈjɪf/. In Saxon law, a horse-stealer.

Manticulate /mæntɪˈkjuːlət/. To pick pockets.

Mantle children /mɑːntəl ˈtʃɪldrən/. See Pallio cooper-ire.

Manual. Of, or pertaining to, the hand or hands; done, made, or operated by or used with the hand or hands; or as manual labor. Performed by the hand; used or employed by the hand; held in the hand. See also Manual labor.

Manual delivery. Delivery of personal property sold, donated, mortgaged, etc., by passing it into the "hand" of the purchaser or transferee, that is, by an actual and corporeal change of possession.

Manual gift. The manual gift, that is, the giving of corporeal movable effects, accompanied by a real delivery; such is not subject to any formality.

Manualis obedientia /mænjuˈwɛɪləs əbˈlɪdiˈɛnʃ(ɪ)ə/’. Sworn obedience or submission upon oath.

Manual labor. Work done with the hand. State v. Ash, 53 Ariz. 197, 87 P.2d 270, 272. Labor performed by hand or by the exercise of physical force, with or without the aid of tools, machinery or equipment, but depending for its effectiveness chiefly upon personal muscular exertion rather than upon skill, intelligence or adroitness.

Manu brevi /mɑːn(ˈjuː)ˈwiə bɹɪˈvɪv/. Lat. With a short hand. A term used in the civil law, signifying shortly; directly; by the shortest course; without circuity.

Manuceptio /mænjuˈwʊkɛptʃ(ɪ)əʊ/. In old English practice, a writ which lay for a man taken on suspicion of felony, and the like, who could not be admitted to bail by the sheriff, or others having power to let to mainprise.

Manuaptors /mænjuˈwʊkɛptərz/. Same as mainpernors (q.v.).

Manufacture. v. From Latin words manus and factura, literally, put together by hand. Now it means the process of making products by hand, machinery, or other automated means. United States v. Anderson, D.C.Cal., 45 F.Supp. 943, 946. Meaning of word "manufactory,” which is defined as the making of goods or wares by manual labor or by machinery, especially on a large scale, has expanded as workmanship and art have advanced, so that now nearly all artificial products of human industry, nearly all such materials as have acquired changed conditions or new and specific combinations, whether from the direct action of the human hand, from chemical processes devised and directed by human skill, or by the employment of machinery, are commonly designated as “manufactured.”

Manufacture. n. The process or operation of making goods or any material produced by hand, by machinery or by other agency; anything made from raw materials by the hand, by machinery, or by art. The production of articles for use from raw or prepared materials by giving such materials new forms, qualities, properties or combinations, whether by hand labor or machine. Cain's Coffee Co. v. City of Muskogee, 171 Okl. 635, 44 P.2d 50, 52.

In patent law, any useful product made directly by human labor, or by the aid of machinery directed and controlled by human power, and either from raw materials, or from materials worked up into a new form. Also the process by which such products are made or fashioned.

Manufacturer. One who by labor, art, or skill transforms raw material into some kind of a finished product or article of trade. Henry v. Markesan State Bank, C.C.A.Minn., 68 F.2d 554, 557. Any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal relationship which manufactures, assembles, or produces goods.

Manufacturers liability doctrine. The foundation for the liability under this doctrine is knowledge of the danger attending use of manufactured or assembled product and negligence in failing to give appropriate warning, or negligence in failing to discover and appreciate the danger, and the probable consequences that injury will proximately result from the use of such product for the purposes for which it was intended. See Strict liability.

Manufacturing corporation. A corporation engaged in the production of some article, thing, or object, by skill or labor, out of raw material, or from matter which has already been subjected to artificial forces, or to which something has been added to change its natural condition.

Manufacturing establishment. Any place where machinery is used for manufacturing purposes. Lilley v. Eberhardt, Mo., 37 S.W.2d 599, 601.

Manu fortis /mæn(y)yu fuːrtɔː/ /Latin. With strong hand. A term used in old writs of trespass. Manu fortis et cum multitudine gentium, with strong hand and multitude of people.

Manu longa /mæn(y)yu lɔŋɡə/ /Latin. With a long hand. A term used in civil law for indicating indirectly or circuitously.

Manumission /ˌmænjuːmiʃən/ The act of liberating a slave from bondage and giving him freedom. In a wider sense, releasing or delivering one person from the power or control of another. Enfranchisement.

Manumittere idem est quod extra manum vel postestatem ponere /ˌmænjuːmiˈtɛrə iˈdem est kəd ekstra mænəm vĕl póʊldɛstɛtɛm póʊnɔrniː/ To manumit is the same as to place beyond hand and power.

Manung or monung. In old English law, the district within the jurisdiction of a reeve, apparently so called from his power to exercise therein one of his chief functions, viz., to exact (amanian) all fines.

Manu opera /ˌmænjuˈɔːpərə/ /Latin. Cattle or implements of husbandry; also stolen goods taken from a thief caught in the fact.

Manupes /ˌmænjuˈpiːz/ In old English law, a foot of full and legal measure.

Manupretium /ˌmænjuˈpriːʃ̩(i)əm/ /Latin. In Roman law, the hire or wages of labor; compensation for labor or services performed.

Manurable /ˌmæn(y)ˈʃʊrəbəl/ In old English law, capable of being had or held in hand; capable of manual occupation; capable of being cultivated; capable of being touched; tangible; corporeal.

Manure. In old English law, to occupy; to use or cultivate; to have in manual occupation; to bestow manual labor upon.

Manus /ˌmænəs/ /Latin. A hand. In the civil law, this word signified power, control, authority, the right of physical coercion, and was often used as synonymous with "potestas." In old English law, it signified an oath or the person taking an oath; a compurgator.

Manus mortua /ˌmænəs mɔːrtjuːwə/ A dead hand; mortmain.

Manutenentia /ˌmænjuˈtɛnəntiə/ The old writ of maintenance.

Manworth. In old English law, the price of value of a man's life or head.

Many. The word “many” is defined as consisting of a great number, numerous, not few. Many is a word of very indefinite meaning, and, though it is defined to be numerous and multitudinous, it is also recognized as synonymous with "several", "sundry", "various" and "divers". Goslin v. Kurn, 361 Mo. 395, 173 S.W.2d 79, 87.

Map. A representation of the earth's surface, or of some portion of it, showing the relative position of the parts represented, usually on a flat surface. See also Plat map.

MAPP v. Ohio. Landmark Supreme Court case decided in 1961 in which it was ruled that evidence illegally obtained by state officers is not admissible in a state trial if appropriate motions are filed to suppress. The rationale for the rule is that the 4th Amendment (U.S. Const.) protection against unreasonable search and seizure is applicable to the states under and through the 14th Amendment. Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 81 S.Ct. 1684, 6 L.Ed.2d 1081.

Mar. To make defective; to damage greatly; to impair, spoil, ruin; to do physical injury to, especially by cutting off or defacing a part; to mutilate; mangle; disfigure; deface.

Mara /méra/. In old records, a mere or moor; a lake, pool, or pond; a bog or marsh that cannot be drained.

Marajuana. See Marihuana.

Maraud. To rove about in search of booty; to pillage or plunder. To invade another's domain to pillage or to loot.

Marbury v. Madison. Landmark case decided in 1803 in which the Supreme Court established the right of the judicial branch to pass on the constitutionality of an act of Congress, thereby establishing the functions and prerogatives of the judiciary in its relation to the legislative branch. Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 2 L.Ed. 60.

Marcatus /markéytos/. The rent of a mark by the year. An old English term for boundaries or frontiers, particularly the boundaries and limits between England and Wales, or between England and Scotland, or the borders of the dominions of the crown, or the boundaries of properties in Scotland.

Marchers. In old English law, noblemen who lived on the marches of Wales or Scotland, and who, according to Camden, had their private laws, as if they had been petty kings; which were abolished by the statute 27 Hen. VIII, c. 26. Called also "lords marchers."

Marches. An old English term for boundaries or frontiers, particularly the boundaries and limits between England and Wales, or between England and Scotland, or the borders of the dominions of the crown, or the boundaries of properties in Scotland.

Marcheta /markéyt/. In old English law, a fine paid for leave to marry, or to bestow a daughter in marriage.

Marchioness /márshénés/. A dignity in a woman answerable to that of marquis in a man, conferred either by creation or by marriage with a marquis.

Mare /mériy/. Lat. The sea.

Marescallus /mårskálas/. In old English law, a marshal; a master of the stables; an officer of the exchequer; a military officer of high rank, having powers and duties similar to those of a constable. See also Marshal.

Mareschal /mårshéál/. L. Fr. Marshal; a high officer of the royal household.

Marettum /märétum/. Marshy ground overflowed by the sea or great rivers.

Margin. The edge or border; the edge of a body of water where it meets the land. As applied to a boundary line of land, the "margin" of a river, creek, or other water-course means the center of the stream. But in the case of a lake, bay, or natural pond, the "margin" means the line where land and water meet.

In finance, difference between market value of loan collateral and face value of loan.

A sum of money, or its equivalent, placed in the hands of a broker by the principal or person on whose account a purchase or sale of securities is to be made, as a security to the former against losses to which he may be exposed by subsequent fluctuations in the market value of the stock. The amount paid by the customer when he uses his broker's credit to buy a security. See also Margin account; Margin transaction.

In commercial transactions the difference between the purchase price paid by a middleman or retailer and his selling price, or difference between price received by manufacturer for its goods and costs to produce. Also called gross profit margin. See also Profit; Remargining.

Margin account. Securities industry's method of extending credit to customers. Under such practice customer purchases specified amount of stock from securities firm by advancing only portion of purchase price, with brokerage firm extending credit or making loan for balance due, and firm maintains such stock as collateral for loan and charges interest on balance of purchase price. Margin account requirements are specified by regulations of Federal Reserve Board. See 15 U.S.C.A. § 78g. Stephens v. Reynolds Securities, Inc., D.C.Ala., 433 F.Supp. 50. See also Margin transaction.

Marginal street. Dock or wharf used in conjunction with and in furtherance of commerce and navigation. In re Triborough Bridge Approach, City of New York, 159 Misc. 617, 288 N.Y.S. 697, 711, 716.

Margin call. A demand by a broker to put up money or securities upon purchase of a stock, or, if the stock is already owned on margin, to increase the money or securities in the event the price of the stock has or is likely to fall since purchase. The last process (of maintaining the minimum required margin) is remargining. See Margin requirement.

Margin list. List of Federal Reserve Board which limits the loan value of a bank's stock to a certain per cent (e.g. 50%) of its market value. When a bank is not on the margin list, no limit is placed on the value of its stock for use as collateral.

Margin profit. See Margin; Profit.

Margin requirement. The percentage of the purchase price that must be deposited with a broker to purchase a security on margin. The margin requirement is set or adjusted by the Federal Reserve Board.

Margin trading. See Margin; Margin account; Margin transaction.

Margin transaction. The purchase of a stock or commodity with payment in part in cash (called the margin) and in part by a loan. Usually the loan is made by the broker effecting the purchase. See also Margin account.
Marine interest. Interest, allowed to be stipulated for at an extraordinary rate, for the use and risk of money loaned on respondentia and bottomry bonds.
and hence not admissible, even with the consent of the witness spouse. This privilege is subject to certain limitations; e.g., prosecutions for crimes committed by one spouse against the other or against the children of either; also, communications made in letter dictated by husband to stenographer to his wife is not within privilege, Wolfe v. U.S., 291 U.S. 7, 54 S.Ct. 279, 78 L.Ed. 617; presence of third party and intent that third party communicate message destroys privilege. See also Husband-wife privilege.

Marital deduction. A deduction allowed upon the transfer of property from one spouse to another. The deduction is allowed under the Federal gift tax for lifetime (i.e., inter vivos) transfers and also under the Federal estate tax for testamentary transfers. There is no ceiling on the estate tax marital deduction for decedents dying after 1981. I.R.C. §§ 2056, 2523. See also Pecuniary formulas.

Marital deduction trust. In estate planning, a device in the form of a trust utilized to gain the maximum benefit of the marital deduction by dividing the property in half. Commonly, one half of the property is transferred to the marital deduction trust and the other half is disposed of in a trust or like arrangement with a view towards having it escape taxation in the estate of the surviving spouse. As a result of a change in the law with respect to the estate of decedents dying after 1981, the marital deduction trust is generally not used. The law provides that there is no monetary ceiling on the estate tax marital deduction for decedents dying after 1981.

Marital portion. In Louisiana, the name given to that part of a deceased husband’s estate to which the widow is entitled.

Marital privileges. Those rights, immunities and advantages which attach to the state of marriage such as the right to connubial relations and the right to hold property as husband and wife. See also Marital communications privilege.

Marital property. Term used to describe property of spouses subject to equitable distribution upon termination of marriage. Marriage of Schwartz, 1 Dist., 131 Ill.App.3d 351, 86 Ill.Dec. 698, 701, 475 N.E.2d 1077, 1080. Property purchased or otherwise accumulated by spouses while married to each other and which, in most jurisdictions, on dissolution of the marriage is divided in proportions as the court deems fit. Claunich v. Claunich, Mo.App., 525 S.W.2d 788, 790. See Community property; Equitable distribution; Property; Separate property.

Marital rights and duties. Those arising from marriage contract and constituting its object, and therefore embracing what the parties agree to perform towards each other and to society. Rights of husband and wife to a specified share of other’s personal estate upon death of other. In re Dean’s Estate, 350 Mo. 494, 166 S.W.2d 529, 534, 535.

Maritime Angliae /maritima ñngliiyiy/. In old English law, the emolument or revenue coming to the king from the sea, which the sheriffs ancienly collected, but which was afterwards granted to the admiral.

Maritima incrementa /maritama ʒkrmemtã/. In old English law, marine increases. Lands gained from the sea.

Maritime. Pertaining to navigable waters, i.e. to the sea, ocean, great lakes, navigable rivers, or the navigation or commerce thereof.

See also Federal Maritime Commission; Maritime court; Navigable waters.

Maritime Administration. An agency within the Department of Commerce which promotes and regulates the activities of the U.S. merchant marine, directs emergency operations related to merchant marine activities, establishes specifications for shipbuilding and design, determines routes, and manages other areas of merchant operations. The Maritime Act of 1981 transferred the Maritime Administration to the Department of Transportation. See also Maritime Commission.

Maritime belt. That part of the sea which, in contradistinction to the open sea, is under the sway of the riparian states. Louisiana v. Mississippi, 202 U.S. 1, 26 S.Ct. 408, 50 L.Ed. 913. See also Marine belt; Territorial waters.

Maritime bills. See Bill (Maritime Law).

Maritime cause of action. A case arising on the sea, ocean, great lakes, or navigable rivers, or from some act or contract concerning the commerce and navigation thereof. The Thomas Jefferson, 23 U.S. (10 Wheat.) 428, 6 L.Ed. 358; and Peyroux v. Howard, 32 U.S. (7 Pet.) 324, 8 L.Ed. 700. An action based upon an injury to a passenger of a vessel while on navigable waters and caused by negligence comes within scope of “maritime cause of action” within original jurisdiction of federal District Court. Cuozzo v. Italian Line, Italia-Societa Per Azioni Di Navigazione-Genoa, D.C.N.Y., 168 F.Supp. 304, 306. See also Maritime jurisdiction; Maritime law; Maritime tort; Navigable waters.

Maritime Commission. The Federal Maritime Commission regulates the waterborne foreign and domestic offshore commerce of the United States, assures that United States international trade is open to all nations on fair and equitable terms, and guards against unauthorized monopoly in the waterborne commerce of the United States. This is accomplished through maintaining surveillance over steamship conferences and common carriers by water; assuring that only the rates on file with the Commission are charged; approving agreements between persons subject to the Shipping Acts of 1916 and 1984; guaranteeing equal treatment to shippers and carriers by terminal operators, freight forwarders, and other persons subject to the shipping statutes; and ensuring that adequate levels of financial responsibility are maintained for indemnification of passengers or oil spill cleanup. See also Maritime Administration.

Maritime contract. A contract relating to business of navigation. Massman Const. Co. v. Bassett, D.C.Mo., 30 F.Supp. 813, 815. A contract whose subject-matter has relation to the navigation of the seas or to trade or commerce to be conducted by navigation or to be done upon the sea or in ports. One having reference to maritime services or maritime transactions. Marubeni-Iida (America), Inc. v. Nippon Yusen Kaisha, D.C.N.Y., 207 F.Supp. 418, 419. As regards right to jury trial in contract disputes, see 28 U.S.C.A. § 1873.

Maritime court. A court exercising jurisdiction in maritime causes; one which possesses the powers and jurisdiction of a court of admiralty. See Admiralty court; Maritime jurisdiction.

Maritime interest. An expression equivalent to marine interest (q.v.).

Maritime law. That which the Congress has enacted or the Federal courts, sitting in admiralty, or in the exercise of their maritime jurisdiction, have declared and would apply. J. B. Effenson Co. v. Three Bays Corp., C.A.Fla., 238 F.2d 611, 615. That system of law which particularly relates to marine commerce and navigation, to business transacted at sea or relating to navigation, to ships and shipping, to seamen, to the transportation of persons and property by sea, and to marine affairs generally. The law relating to harbors, ships, and seamen, divided into a variety of subject areas, such as those concerning harbors, property of ships, duties and rights of masters and seamen, contracts of affreightment, average, salvage, etc. It extends to civil marine torts and injuries, illegal dispossession or withholding of possession from the owners of ships, municipal seizures of ships, etc.

Substantively, in the United States, it is federal law, and jurisdiction to administer it is vested in the federal courts, though not to the entire exclusion of the courts of the states. O'Donnell v. Great Lakes Dredge & Dock Co., 318 U.S. 36, 63 S.Ct. 488, 87 L.Ed. 596. See Maritime jurisdiction.

Maritime lien. A privileged claim on a vessel for some service rendered to it to facilitate its use in navigation, or an injury caused by it in navigable waters, to be carried into effect by legal process in the admiralty court. The Westmoor, D.C.Or., 27 F.2d 886, 887. A special property right in a ship given to a creditor by law as security for a debt or claim subsisting from the moment the debt arises with right to have the ship sold and debt paid out of proceeds. Such a lien is a proprietary interest or right of property in the vessel itself, and not a cause of action or demand for personal judgment against the owner. The lien is enforced by a direct proceeding against the vessel or other property in which it exists. See Supp.Admiralty Rule C.

Any person furnishing repairs, supplies, towage, use of dry dock or marine railway, or other necessities, to any vessel, whether foreign or domestic, upon the order of the owner of such vessel, or of a person authorized by the owner, shall have a maritime lien on the vessel, which may be enforced by suit in rem, and it shall not be necessary to allege or prove that credit was given to the vessel. Federal Maritime Lien Act, § 971.

Maritime loan. A contract or agreement by which one, who is the lender, lends to another, who is the borrower, a certain sum of money, upon condition that if the thing upon which the loan has been made should be lost by any peril of the sea, or via major, the lender shall not be repaid unless what remains shall be equal to the sum borrowed; and if the thing arrive in safety, or in case it shall not have been injured but by its own defects or the fault of the master or mariners, the borrower shall be bound to return the sum borrowed, together with a certain sum agreed upon as the price of the hazard incurred.

Maritime prize. See Prize.

Maritime service. In admiralty law, a service rendered upon the seas, ocean, great lakes, or a navigable river, and which has some relation to commerce or navigation, —some connection with a vessel employed in trade, with her equipment, her preservation, or the preservation of her cargo or crew.

Maritime state. In English law, consists of the officers and mariners of the British navy, who are governed by express and permanent laws, or the articles of the navy, established by act of parliament.

Maritus /marýtäts/märátos/. Lat. A husband; a married man.

Mark. A character, usually in the form of a cross, made as a substitute for his signature by a person who cannot write, in executing a conveyance, will or other legal document. It is commonly made as follows: A third person writes the name of the marksman, leaving a blank space between the Christian name and surname; in this space the latter traces the mark, or crossed lines, and above the mark is written "his" (or "her"), and below it, "mark." See Cross.

The sign, writing, or ticket put upon manufactured goods to distinguish them from others, appearing thus in the compound, "trade-mark."

A token, evidence, or proof; as in the phrase "a mark of fraud."

In trademark law, the term "mark" includes any trademark, service mark, collective mark, or certification mark. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1127. See also Trademark.
MARK

A weight used in several parts of Europe, and for several commodities, especially gold and silver.

Monetary unit, e.g. German Deutsche mark.

The word is sometimes used as another form of "mark," a license of reprisals.

In early Teutonic and English law, a species of village community, being the lowest unit in the political system; one of the forms of the gens or clan, variously known as the "mark," "gemeinde," "commune," or "parish." Also the land held in common by such a community. The union of several such village communities and their marks, or common lands, forms the next higher political union, the hundred.

See also Bench mark; Certification mark; Collective mark.

Demi-mark. Half a mark; a sum of money which was anciently required to be tendered in a writ of right, the effect of such tender being to put the demandant, in the first instance, upon proof of the seisin as stated in his count; that is, to prove that the seisin was in the king's reign there stated.

High and low water-mark. See Water-mark.

Markdown. Reduction in selling price.

Marked money. Term used to describe money given by undercover agent who buys contraband or gives bribe in money, or ransom money given to kidnapper, or money given to bank robber, which bears a tell-tale mark for use in identifying and connecting the money to the perpetrator of the crime.

Market. Place of commercial activity in which goods, commodities, securities, services, etc., are bought and sold. Zemel v. Commercial Warehouses, 132 N.J.L. 341, 40 A.2d 642, 643. The region in which any commodity or product can be sold; the geographical or economic extent of commercial demand. A public time and appointed place of buying and selling; also purchase and sale. It differs from the forum, or market of antiquity, which was a public marketplace on one side only, or during one part of the day only, the other sides being occupied by temples, theaters, courts of justice, and other public buildings.

In a limited sense, "market" is the range of bid and asked prices reported by brokers making the market in over-the-counter securities. Opper v. Hancock Securities Corp., D.C.N.Y., 250 F.Supp. 668, 675.

By the term "market" is also understood the demand there is for any particular article; as, "the cotton market is depressed." Is also an abbreviated term for "stock" or "commodity" markets.

See also Common market; Current market value.

Clerk of the market. See Clerk of the Market.

Geographic market. In antitrust context, that geographic area in which a product is sold and in which there is or is not competition. It generally implies agreement allocating different areas to each competitor with the understanding that the other competitors will not sell in those areas. Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. U. S., 341 U.S. 593, 71 S.Ct. 971, 95 L.Ed. 1199. A relevant "geographic market" for purposes of assessing monopoly power is the territorial area in which businessmen effectively compete. Telex Corp. v. International Business Machines Corp., D.C.Okl., 367 F.Supp. 258, 336. Within broad geographic market, well-defined submarkets may exist which, in themselves, constitute "geographic markets" for antitrust purposes. U. S. Steel Corp. v. F. T. C., C.A. Ohio, 426 F.2d 592, 596. See also Product market; Relevant market, below.

Listed market securities. The market value of a security as reflected by transactions of that security on the floor of an exchange.

Open market. A market wherein supply and demand are expressed in terms of a price.

Product market. In antitrust context, a market in which competitors agree among themselves to limit the manufacture or sales of products so as to prevent competition among themselves. Hartford Empire Co. v. U. S., 323 U.S. 386, 65 S.Ct. 373, 89 L.Ed. 322.

Public market. A market which is not only open to the resort of the general public as purchasers, but also available to all who wish to offer their wares for sale, stalls, stands, or places being allotted to those who apply, to the limits of the capacity of the market, on payment of fixed rents or fees.

Relevant market. In antitrust context, it may refer to geographic area in which competitors agree to respect the rights of others to sell a product. It may also refer to product markets in which competitors agree among themselves to limit the manufacture or sales of products so as to prevent or limit competition among themselves. Hartford Empire Co. v. U. S., 323 U.S. 386, 65 S.Ct. 373, 89 L.Ed. 322. See also Relevant market.

Thin market. A market for publicly traded securities in which the number of transactions and/or the number of securities offered for sale or purchase at any one time are relatively few. In a thin market a single substantial purchase or sale order may cause a significant price movement.

Marketability. Salability. The probability of selling property, goods, securities, services, etc., at a specific time, price, and terms.

Marketable. Salable. Such things as may be sold in the market; those for which a buyer may be found; merchantable.

Marketable securities. Stocks and bonds held of other companies that can be readily sold on stock exchanges or over-the-counter markets and that the company plans to sell as cash is needed. Classified as current liquid assets and as part of working capital.

 Marketable title. A title which is free from encumbrances and any reasonable doubt as to its validity, and such as a reasonably intelligent person, who is well informed as to facts and their legal bearings, and ready and willing to perform his contract, would be willing to accept in exercise of ordinary business prudence. Sinclair v. Weber, 204 Md. 324, 104 A.2d 561, 565. Such a title as is free from reasonable doubt in law and in fact; not merely a title valid in fact, but one which readily can be sold or mortgaged to a reasonably prudent pur­chaser or mortgagee; one acceptable to a reasonable pur­chaser, informed as to the facts and their legal meaning, willing to perform his contract, in the exercise of that prudence which businessmen usually bring to bear on such transactions; one under which a purchaser may have quiet and peaceful enjoyment of the property; one that is free from material defects, or grave doubts, and reasonably free from litigation. Myrick v. Austin, 141 Kan. 778, 44 P.2d 266, 268.

Marketable title is one which is free from reasonable doubt and will not expose party who holds it to hazards of litigation. Tri-State Hotel Co. v. Sphinx Investment Co., 212 Kan. 234, 510 P.2d 1223, 1230. One that may be freely made the subject of resale. Krulee v. F. C. Huyck & Sons, 121 Vt. 299, 156 A.2d 74, 77.

A marketable title to land is such a title as a court, when asked to decree specific performance of the contract of sale, will compel the vendee to accept as sufficient. It is said to be not merely a defensible title, but a title which is free from plausible or reasonable objections.

See also Marketable title.

Marketable Title Acts. Many states have adopted Marketable Title Acts the purpose of which is to simplify land title transactions through making it possible to determine marketability by limited title searches over some reasonable period of the immediate past (e.g. 40 yrs.) and thus avoid the necessity of examining the record back into distant time for each new transaction.

Market geld. The toll of a market.

Marketing contract. An agreement between a cooperative and its members in which the members agree to sell their products through the cooperative and the cooperative agrees to obtain their price. Hiroshi Kaneko v. Jones, 192 Or. 523, 235 P.2d 768.

Market making. Regarding securities in over the counter trading, the process consisting of bid and ask quotations which results in the establishment of a market for such securities. Opper v. Hancock Securities Corp., D.C.N.Y., 250 F.Supp. 668, 671.

Market order. An order to buy or sell on a stock or commodity exchange at the current (best) price when the order reaches the floor of the exchange. Requests by customers to purchase or sell securities at the market price existing when the order reaches the exchange floor.

Market overt. In English law, an open and public market. The market-place or spot of ground set apart by custom for the sale of particular goods is, in the country, the only market overt; but in London every shop in which goods are exposed publicly to sale is market overt, for such things only as the owner professes to trade in. An expression applied to the open sale of goods.

Market power. Term for purposes of the Sherman Act, is the ability to raise prices significantly above the competitive level without losing all of one's business; the ability to raise prices above those which would be charged in a competitive market. National Bancard Corp. (NaBanco) v. VISA U.S.A., Inc., D.C.Fla., 596 F.Supp. 1231, 1265. See Market share.

Market price. The price at which a seller is ready and willing to sell and a buyer ready and willing to buy in the ordinary course of trade. The price actually given in current market dealings; price established by public sales or sales in the way of ordinary business. The actual price at which given stock or commodity is currently sold, or has recently been sold in open market, that is, not at forced sale, but in the usual and ordinary course of trade and competition between sellers and buyers equally free to bargain, as established by records of late sales. In the case of a security, market price is usually considered the last reported price at which the stock or bond sold.

Market price is synonymous with market value, and means the price actually given in current market dealings, or the price at which the supply and demand are equal. Public Service Commission of State v. Montana-Dakota Utilities Co., N.D., 100 N.W.2d 140, 146. The point of intersection of supply and demand in the market. See Market value.

Market quotations. The latest (most current) prices at which securities or commodities have been bought and sold on an exchange or other market. Board of Trade of Chicago v. L. A. Kinsey Co., C.A.Ind., 130 F. 507, affd 198 U.S. 236, 25 S.Ct. 637, 49 L.Ed. 1031.

Market share. The percentage of a market that is controlled by a firm. A 20 percent share of market means that the firm has captured 20 percent of the actual sales in the market. See Market power.

Market structure. Refers to the broad organizational characteristics of a market. The major characteristics are seller concentration, product differentiation, and barriers to entry.

Market value. The price property would command in the open market. The highest price a willing buyer would pay and a willing seller accept, both being fully informed, and the property being exposed for a reasonable period of time. The market value may be different from the price a property can actually be sold for at a given time (market price). The market value of an article or piece of property is the price which it might be expected to bring if offered for sale in a fair market; not the price which might be obtained on a sale at public auction or a sale forced by the necessities of the owner, but such a price as would be fixed by negotiation and mutual agreement, after ample time to find a purchaser, as between a vendor who is willing (but not compelled) to sell and a purchaser who desires to buy but is not compelled to take the particular article or piece of property. U. S. v. Certain Property in Borough of Manhattan, City, County and State of New York, C.A. N.Y., 403 F.2d 800, 802. See also Actual market value;
MARKET VALUE

Cash value; Clear market value; Fair cash market value; Fair market value; Market price.

Marking up. The process wherein a legislative committee goes through a bill section by section, revising its language and amending the bill as desired. Extensive revision may lead to the introduction of a clean bill under a new number. May also refer to procedure by which a case is placed on the trial calendar; e.g. "marking up for trial."

Markon. An amount originally added to cost to obtain list price. Usually expressed as a percentage of cost. Further increases in list price are called markups; decreases are called markdowns. See also Markup.

Marksmen. In practice and canvancing, one who makes his mark; a person who cannot write, and only makes his mark in executing instruments.

Markup. An amount originally added to cost. Usually expressed as a percentage of selling price. Also refers to an increase above an originally-established retail price. See Margin; Marking up; Markon.

Markush doctrine. The doctrine permits an applicant for a patent where there is no known subgeneric term which would include elements which applicant found useful and exclude those which are not, to employ a generic term limited to the elements found to be operative and recognizes as unobjectionable as to form, claims expressed as a percentage of cost. Also refers to procedure by which persons take each other for husband and wife.

Marque and reprisal, letters of. These words, "marque" and "reprisal," are frequently used as synonymous, but, taken in their strict etymological sense, the latter signifies a "taking in return;" the former, the passing the frontiers (marches) in order to such taking. Letters of marque and reprisal are grantable, by the law of nations, whenever the subjects of one state are oppressed and injured by those of another, and justice is denied by that state to which the oppressor belongs; and the party to whom these letters are granted may then seize the bodies or the goods of the subjects of the state to which the offender belongs, until satisfaction be made, wherever they happen to be found. Reprisals are to be granted only in case of a clear and open denial of justice. At the present day, in consequence partly of treaties and partly of the practice of nations, the making of reprisals is confined to the seizure of commercial property on the high seas by public cruisers, or by private cruisers specially authorized thereto. Article I, Sec. 8, of U.S. Const. grants Congress the power to grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal.

Marque, law of. A sort of law of reprisal, which entitles him who has received any wrong from another and cannot get ordinary justice to take the shipping or goods of the wrongdoer, where he can find them within his own bounds or precincts, in satisfaction of the wrong.

Marquis, or marquess. In English law, one of the second order of nobility; next in order to a duke.

Marquisate. The seigniory of a marquis.

Marriage. Legal union of one man and one woman as husband and wife. Singer v. Hara, 11 Wash.App. 247, 522 P.2d 1187, 1193. Marriage, as distinguished from the agreement to marry and from the act of becoming married, is the legal status, condition, or relation of one man and one woman united in law for life, or until divorced, for the discharge to each other and the community of the duties legally incumbent on those whose association is founded on the distinction of sex. A contract, according to the form prescribed by law, by which a man and woman capable of entering into such contract, mutually engage with each other to live their whole lives (or until divorced) together in state of union which ought to exist between a husband and wife. The word also signifies the act, ceremony, or formal proceeding by which persons take each other for husband and wife.

In old English law, marriage is used in the sense of "maritandum" or the feudal right enjoyed by the lord or guardian in chivalry of disposing of his ward in marriage.

See also Avail of marriage; Banns of matrimony; Common-law marriage; Consensual marriage; Restraint of marriage; Voidable marriage; Void marriage.

Ceremonial marriage. Marriage which follows all the statutory requirements of blood tests, license, waiting period, and which has been solemnized before an official (religious or civil) capable of presiding at the marriage.

Informal marriage. A marriage in which promises are exchanged between the parties without an official ecclesiastical representative present. In most cases, the law requires consummation of the marriage to consider such valid. See Consensual marriage.

Jactitation of marriage. See Jactitation.

Manus marriage. A form of marriage in early Rome; it formed a relation called manus (hand) and brought the wife into the husband's power, placing her as to legal rights in the position of a daughter.

Marriage in jest. A marriage in jest is subject to annulment for lack of requisite consent and intention to marry.

Mixed marriage. A marriage between persons of different nationalities or religions; or, more particularly, between persons of different racial origin; as between a white person and a negro or an Indian. See Miscegenation.

Morganatic marriage. The lawful and inseparable conjunction of a man, of noble or illustrious birth, with a woman of inferior station, upon condition that neither the wife nor her children shall partake of the titles, arms, or dignity of the husband, or succeed to his inheritance, but be contented with a certain allowed rank assigned to them by the morganatic contract. But since these restrictions relate only to the rank of the parties and succession to property, without affecting the nature of a matrimonial engagement, it must be considered as a just marriage. The marriage ceremony is regularly performed; the union is indissoluble; the children legitimate.

Plural marriage. In general, any bigamous or polygamous union, but particularly, a second or subsequent marriage of a man who already has one wife living under system of polygamy. Such marriages are prohibited.

Proxy marriage. Marriage contracted or celebrated by one or more agents rather than by the parties themselves.

Putative marriage. One contracted in good faith and in ignorance (on one or both sides) of some existing impediment on the part of at least one of the contracting parties. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Henderson, Tex.Civ.App., 53 S.W.2d 811. Such marriages are recognized in very few jurisdictions.

Marriage Act, Royal. An English act of 12 Geo. III, c. 1 (1772), by which members of the royal family are forbidden to marry without the king’s (or queen’s) consent, or except on certain onerous conditions.

Marriage articles. Articles of agreement between parties contemplating marriage, intended as preliminary to a formal marriage settlement, to be drawn after marriage.

Marriage broker. One who for a consideration brings a woman and man together in marriage. Such activity is void and illegal as against public policy.

Marriage ceremony. The form, religious or civil, for the solemnization of a marriage.

Marriage certificate. An instrument which certifies a marriage, and is executed by the person officiating at the marriage; it is not intended to be signed by the parties, but is evidence of the marriage.

Marriage license. A license or permission granted by public authority to persons who intend to intermarry, usually addressed to the minister or magistrate who is to perform the ceremony, or, in general terms, to any one authorized to solemnize marriages. By statute in most jurisdictions, it is made an essential prerequisite to the lawful solemnization of the marriage.

Marriage-notice book. A book kept, in England, by the registrar, in which applications for and issue of registrar’s licenses to marry are recorded.

Marriage per verba de praesenti /marrj par varba diy prəzɛntə/ To constitute such a marriage, there must be an agreement to become husband and wife immediately from the time when the mutual consent is given. Pitney v. Pitney, 151 Kan. 848, 101 P2d 933, 935.

Marriage portion. Dowry; a sum of money or other property which is given to or settled on a woman on her marriage.
of a junior creditor of the common debtor, to avoid the inequity which would result from an election of the senior creditor to satisfy its demand out of the only fund available to the junior creditor, thereby excluding the junior creditor from any satisfaction. Matter of Central R. Co. of New Jersey, D.C.N.J., 45 B.R. 1011, 1019.

The arrangement or ranking of assets in a certain order towards the payment of debts.

Under the common law, a doctrine whereby encumbered lands, which are sold to different persons at different times by conveyances the grantees and the person holding the lien, are chargeable in equity with the encumbrance in the inverse order of their alienation. Ingersoll v. Somers Land Co., 82 N.J.Eq. 476, 89 A. 288.

Marshal of the queen's bench. An officer who had the custody of the queen's bench prison. The St. 5 & 6 Vict., c. 22, abolished this office, and substituted an officer called "keeper of the queen's prison."

Marshalsea /márhshal'si/. In English law, a prison belonging to the king's bench. It was subsequently consolidated with others, under the name of the "King's Prison."

Marshalsea, court of /kórt əv márhshal'si/. In English law, the court or seat of the marshal. A court originally held before the steward and marshal of the king's house, instituted to administer justice between the king's domestic servants. It had jurisdiction of all trespasses committed within the verge of the king's court, where one of the parties was of the royal household; and of all debts and contracts, when both parties were of that establishment. It was abolished by 12 & 13 Vict., c. 101, § 13.

Mart. A place of public traffic or sale. See also Market.

Marte suo decurrere /már'tiy s'yúwów dák'shərəri/. Lat. To run by its own force. A term applied in the civil law to a suit when it ran its course to the end without any impediment.

Martial law /már'shal lo/. Exists when military authorities carry on government or exercise various degrees of control over civilians or civilian authorities in domestic territory. Ochikubo v. Bonesteel, D.C.Cal., 60 F.Supp. 916, 928, 929, 930. Such may exist either in time of war or when civil authority has ceased to function or has become ineffective. A system of law, obtaining only in time of actual war and growing out of the exigencies thereof, arbitrary in its character, and depending only on the will of the commander of an army, which is established and administered in a place or district of hostile territory held in belligerent possession, or, sometimes, in places occupied or pervaded by insurgents or mobs, and which suspends all existing civil laws, as well as the civil authority and the ordinary administration of justice. See also Military government; Military law.

Mary Carter agreement. The term "Mary Carter Agreement" arises from the agreement popularized by the case of Booth v. Mary Carter Paint Co., Fla.App. 1967, 202 So.2d 8, and now is used rather generally to apply to any agreement between the plaintiff and some, but less than all, defendants whereby the parties place limitations on the financial responsibility of the agreeing defendants, the amount of which is variable and usually in some inverse ratio to the amount of recovery which the plaintiff is able to make against the nonagreeing defendant or defendants. Such agreements are held to be void as against public policy in certain states, while in others are permissible if disclosed to the jury.

Mashgiach /mashg'yək/. A qualified supervisor designated by rabbinical authority to supervise the receipt and handling of kosher meat. People on Complaint of Waller v. Jacob Branfman & Son, 147 Misc. 290, 263 N.Y.S. 629.

Masochism /mə'sskizəm/. [From Leopold von Sacher-Masoch, a nineteenth-century Austrian novelist and historian.] A form of perversion in which sexual pleasure is heightened when one is beaten and maltreated at the hands of the other party; the opposite of sadism. Sexual perversion, in which a member of one sex takes delight in being dominated, even to the extent of violence or cruelty, by one of the other sex.

Mason and Dixon Line. The boundary line between Pennsylvania on the north and Maryland on the south, celebrated before the extinction of slavery as the line of demarcation between the slave and the free states. It was run by Charles Mason and Jeremiah Dixon, commissioners in a dispute between the Penn Proprietors and Lord Baltimore. The line was carried 244 miles from the Delaware river where it was stopped by Indians. A resurvey was made in 1849, and in 1900 a new survey was authorized by the two states.

Massa /mə'sə/. In the civil law, a mass; an unwrought substance, such as gold or silver, before it is wrought into cups or other articles.

Massachism. See Masochism.

Massachusetts ballot. The office-block type of Australian ballot in which, under each office, the names of candidates, with party designations, are printed in alphabetical order.

Massachusetts rule. As regards sending out checks through banks for collection, the "Massachusetts rule" is that each bank that receives the item acts as an agent for the depositor; but in some other states, the "New York rule" prevails, under which only the bank first receiving the item is responsible to, or is the agent of, the depositor, the other banks being the agent of the bank, in the process of the collection.

Massachusetts trust. A business organization wherein property is conveyed to trustees and managed for benefit of holders of certificates like corporate stock certificates. A "Massachusetts business trust" is an unincorporated association organized under Massachusetts law for purpose of investing in real estate in much the same manner as a mutual fund invests in corporate securities. Kusner v. First Pa. Corp., D.C.Pa., 395 F.Supp. 276, 281. See also Common-law trust; Real estate investment trust; Trust estates as business companies.
Masses. Religious ceremonials or observances of the Roman Catholic Church.

Master. A principal who employs another to perform service in his affairs and who controls or has right to control physical conduct of other in performance of the service. Restatement, Second, Agency, § 2. One who stands to another in such a relation that he not only controls the results of the work of that other but also may direct the manner in which such work shall be done. Matonti v. Research-Cottrell, Inc., D.C.Pa., 202 F.Supp. 527, 532.

One having authority; one who rules, directs, instructs, or superintends; a head or chief; an instructor; an employer. See various "Master" titles below.

One who has reached the summit of his trade and who has the right to hire apprentices and journeymen.

Fed.R.Civ.P. 53, and analogous state rules, provide for the appointment by the court of a master to assist it in specific judicial duties as may arise in a case. The master's powers and duties depend upon the terms of the order of reference and the controlling court rule, and may include taking of testimony, discovery of evidence and other acts or measures necessary for the performance of his duties specified in the order of reference. The master is required to prepare a report of his proceedings for the court. In the federal courts the appointment of a master is the "exception rather than the rule", while under many state rules, the court has more liberal powers to appoint such. See also Reference.

Special master. A master appointed to act as the representative of the court in some particular act or transaction, as, to make a sale of property under a decree. Pewabic Min. Co. v. Mason, 145 U.S. 349, 12 S.Ct. 887, 36 L.Ed. 732. A federal judge may appoint a U.S. magistrate to serve as a special master. 28 U.S.C.A. § 636.

Master agreement. The omnibus labor agreement reached between a union and the leaders of the industry or a trade association. It becomes the pattern for labor agreements between the union and individual employers.

Master and servant. The relation of master and servant exists where one person, for pay or other valuable consideration, enters into the service of another and devotes to him his personal labor for an agreed period. The relation exists where the employer has the right to select the employee, the power to remove and discharge him and the right to direct both what work shall be done and the manner in which it shall be done. Matonti v. Research-Cottrell, Inc., D.C.Pa., 202 F.Supp. 527, 532. Restatement, Second, Agency § 2. Such term has generally been replaced by "employer and employee". Compare Agency; independent contractor.

Master at common law. The title of officers of the English superior courts of common law appointed to record the proceedings of the court to which they belong; to superintend the issue of writs and the formal proceedings in an action; to receive and account for the fees charged on legal proceedings, and moneys paid into court.

Master deed or lease. Conveyancing document used by owners or lessees of condominiums.

Master in chancery. An officer of a court of chancery who acts as an assistant to the judge or chancellor. His duties are to inquire into such matters as may be referred to him by the court, examine causes, take testimony, take accounts, compute damages, etc., reporting his findings to the court in such shape that a decree may be made; also to take oaths and affidavits and acknowledgments of deeds. In modern practice, many of the functions of a master are performed by clerks, commissioners, auditors, and referees, and in those states that have merged law and equity courts in adopting Rules of Civil Procedure the office has been superseded. See Master.

Master in lunacy. In old English law, the masters in lunacy were judicial officers appointed by the lord chancellor for the purpose of conducting inquiries into the state of mind of persons alleged to have been lunatics. Such inquiries usually took place before a jury.

Master lease. See Lease; Sublease.

Master of a ship. In maritime law, the commander of a merchant vessel, who has the chief charge of her government and navigation and the command of the crew, as well as the general care and control of the vessel and cargo, as the representative and confidential agent of the owner. He is commonly called the "captain."

Master of the Crown Office. In England, the Queen's coroner and attorney in the criminal department of the court of Queen's bench, who prosecutes at the complaint or relation of some private person or common informer, the crown being the nominal prosecutor. He is an officer of the Supreme Court.

Master of the Faculties. In English law, an officer under the archbishop, who grants licenses and dispensations, etc.

Master of the Horse. In English law, the third great officer of the royal household, being next to the lord steward and lord chamberlain. He has the privilege of making use of any horses, footmen, or pages belonging to the royal stables.

Master of the Mint. In English law, an officer who received bullion for coinage, and paid for it, and superintended everything belonging to the mint. He was usually called the "warden of the mint." It was provided by St. 33 Vict., c. 10, § 14, that the chancellor of the exchequer for the time being was to be the master of the mint. Such office was repealed by the Coinage Act of 1971.

Master of the Ordnance. In English law, a great officer, to whose care all the royal ordnance and artillery were committed. In modern times called Master-General of the Ordnance, a post held by a senior officer in the Ministry of Defense.
MASTER OF THE ROLLS

Master of the Rolls. In English law, an assistant judge of the court of chancery, who held a separate court ranking next to that of the lord chancellor, and had the keeping of the rolls and grants which passed the great seal, and the records of the chancery. He was originally appointed only for the superintendence of the writs and records appertaining to the common-law department of the court, and is still properly the chief of the masters in chancery. Under the act constituting the Supreme Court of Judicature, the master of the rolls became a judge of the high court of justice and ex officio a member of the court of appeal. The same act, however, provided for the abolition of this office, under certain conditions, when the next vacancy occurs. Also sits as an ex officio judge of the Court of Appeal (Supreme Court Act, 1981, § 2(2)), and presides over the Civil Division of the Court of Appeal (Supreme Court Act, 1981, § 10).

Master plan. Term used in land use control law, zoning and urban redevelopment to describe the omnibus plan of a city or town for housing, industry and recreational facilities and their impact on environmental factors. See also Planned unit development.

Master policy. An insurance policy which covers a group of persons as in health or life insurance written as group insurance. Generally, there is only one master policy and the participants have only certificates evidencing their participation.

Masters of the supreme court. In English law, officials deriving their title from Jud. (Officers') Act 1879, and being, or filling the places of, the sixteen masters of the common-law courts, the queen's coroner and attorney, the master of the crown office, the two record and writ clerks, and the three associates.

Master's report. The formal report or statement made by a master in chancery of his decision on any question referred to him, or of any facts or action he has been directed to ascertain or take.

The document filed with the court after a master has heard the evidence and made his findings. The report should contain his findings and conclusions of law where necessary. Fed.R.Civ. P. 53(e).

Master-servant rule. Under this rule, master (employer) is liable for conduct of servant (employee) which occurs while servant is acting within scope of his employment or within scope of his authority. See also Fellow servant; Respondeat superior; Servant.

Mast-selling. In old English law, the practice of selling the goods of dead seamen at the mast.

Mate. A spouse. The officer second in command on a merchant vessel. In Navy, petty officer who is assistant to warrant officer.

Matelotage /mætloʊtæʒ/. In French law, the hire of a ship or boat.

Seamanship; seaman's wages, pay.

Mater-familias /mɛtərˈfæmɪliəs/. Lat. In civil law, the mother or mistress of a family. A chaste woman, married or single.

Materia /məˈtriə/. Lat. In Civil law, materials; as distinguished from species, or the form given by labor and skill.

In English law, matter; substance; subject-matter. 3 Bl.Comm. 322.

Material. Important; more or less necessary; having influence or effect; going to the merits; having to do with matter, as distinguished from form. Representation relating to matter which is so substantial and important as to influence party to whom made is "material." See Material fact; Relevant.

Material allegation. An allegation is said to be material when it forms a substantive part of the case presented by the pleading. A material allegation in a pleading is one essential to the claim or defense, and which could not be stricken from the pleading without leaving it insufficient.

Material alteration. A material alteration in any written instrument is one which changes its tenor, or its legal meaning and effect; one which causes it to speak a language different in effect from that which it originally spoke. A material alteration of a deed is one which effects a change in its legal effect. Boys v. Long, Okl., 268 P.2d 890, 893.

Any alteration of an instrument is material which changes the contract of any party thereto in any respect, including any such change in: (a) the number or relations of the parties; or (b) an incomplete instrument, by completing it otherwise than as authorized; or (c) the writing as signed, by adding to it or by removing any part of it. U.C.C. § 3-407(1). The term is defined similarly when applied to other kinds of commercial paper.

Material breach. See Breach of contract.

Material evidence. That quality of evidence which tends to influence the trier of fact because of its logical connection with the issue. Evidence which has an effective influence or bearing on question in issue. Barr v. Dolphin Holding Corp., Sup., 141 N.Y.S.2d 906, 908. "Materiality" of evidence refers to pertinency of the offered evidence to the issue in dispute. Vine Street Corp. v. City of Council Bluffs, Iowa, 220 N.W.2d 860, 863. Evidence which is material to question in controversy, and which must necessarily enter into the consideration of the controversy, and which by itself or in connection with other evidence is determinative of the case. Camurati v. Sutton, 48 Tenn.App. 54, 342 S.W.2d 732, 739.

To establish Brady violation requiring reversal of a conviction, defendant must show that prosecution has suppressed evidence, that such evidence was favorable to defendant or was exculpatory, and that evidence was material; evidence is "material" if there is reasonable probability that, but for failure to produce such evidence, outcome of case would have been different. U.S.
Material fact. Contracts. One which constitutes substantially the consideration of the contract, or without which it would not have been made. See also Reliance.

Insurance. A fact which, if communicated to the agent or insurer, would induce him either to decline the insurance altogether, or not accept it unless a higher premium is paid. One which necessarily has some bearing on the subject-matter. A fact which increases the risk, or which, if disclosed, would have been a fair reason for demanding a higher premium. Any fact the knowledge or ignorance of which would naturally influence the insurer in making or refusing the contract, or in estimating the degree and character of the risk, or in fixing the rate.

Pleading and practice. One which is essential to the case, defense, application, etc., and without which it could not be supported. One which tends to establish any of issues raised. The "material facts" of an issue of fact are such as are necessary to determine the issue. Material fact is one upon which outcome of litigation depends. Amant v. Pacific Power & Light Co., 10 Wash. App. 785, 520 P.2d 481, 484. See also Material allegation.

Securities. To be a "material" fact within the Securities Act of 1933, it must concern information about which an average prudent investor ought reasonably be informed before purchasing a security. Gridley v. Sayre & Fisher Co., D.C.S.C., 409 F.Supp. 1266, 1270. Within purview of Securities Act provision rendering it unlawful for any person in connection with offer, sale or purchase of any security, directly or indirectly, to make any untrue statement of material fact, or fail to disclose a material fact, is one which a reasonable person would attach importance to in determining his or her choice of action in the transaction. Or, stated alternatively, a fact is deemed "material" if its disclosure would have been viewed by a reasonable investor as having significantly altered the "total mix" of information made available. Securities and Exchange Commission v. Paro, D.C.N.Y., 468 F.Supp. 635, 646. An omitted fact is material if there is a substantial likelihood that a reasonable shareholder would consider it important in deciding how to vote. TSC Industries, Inc. v. Northway Inc., 426 U.S. 438, 96 S.Ct. 2126, 48 L.Ed.2d 757. See also Reliance; Rule 10b-5.

Summary judgment. In determining what constitutes a genuine issue as to any material fact for purposes of summary judgment, an issue is "material" if the facts alleged are such as to constitute a legal defense or are of such nature as to affect the result of the action. Austin v. Wilder, 26 N.C.App. 229, 215 S.E.2d 794, 796. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(c).

A fact is "material" and precludes grant of summary judgment if proof of that fact would have effect of establishing or refuting one of essential elements of a cause of action or defense asserted by the parties, and would necessarily affect application of appropriate principle of law to the rights and obligations of the parties. Johnson v. Soulis, Wyo., 542 P.2d 867, 872.

Materialman. A person who has furnished materials or supplies used in the construction or repair of a building, structure, etc.

Materialman's lien. By statute in most states, a person who furnishes material for the construction, improvement or alteration of a building or other structure has a priority for payment of his claim based on his lien as a supplier of such materials. See also Mechanic's lien.

Material representation or misrepresentation. A misrepresentation is "material" if it relates to a matter upon which plaintiff could be expected to rely in determining to engage in the conduct in question. Barrington Press, Inc. v. Morey, C.A.Ill., 752 F.2d 307, 310. In law of deceit, a statement or undertaking of sufficient substance and importance as to be the foundation of an action if such representation is false. See also Material fact; Representation.

Material witness. A person who can give testimony relating to a particular matter no one else, or at least very few, can give. In an important criminal case, a material witness may sometimes be held by the government against his or her will. He may be the victim or an eye witness. See also Witness.

Maternal. That which belongs to, or comes from, the mother; as maternal authority, maternal relation, maternal estate, maternal line.

Maternal line. A line of descent or relationship between two persons which is traced through the mother of the younger.

Maternal property. That which comes from the mother of the party, and other ascendants of the maternal stock.

Materna maternis. Lat. A maxim of the French law, signifying that property of a decedent who furnishes materials or supplies used in the construction or repair of a building or other structure has a priority for payment of his claim based on his lien as a supplier of such materials. See also Mechanic's lien.

Material witness. A person who can give testimony relating to a particular matter no one else, or at least very few, can give. In an important criminal case, a material witness may sometimes be held by the government against his or her will. He may be the victim or an eye witness. See also Witness.

Maternal property. That which comes from the mother of the party, and other ascendants of the maternal stock.

Materna maternis. Lat. A maxim of the French law, signifying that property of a decedent who furnishes materials or supplies used in the construction or repair of a building or other structure has a priority for payment of his claim based on his lien as a supplier of such materials. See also Mechanic's lien.

Material witness. A person who can give testimony relating to a particular matter no one else, or at least very few, can give. In an important criminal case, a material witness may sometimes be held by the government against his or her will. He may be the victim or an eye witness. See also Witness.

Maternal. That which belongs to, or comes from, the mother; as maternal authority, maternal relation, maternal estate, maternal line.

Maternal line. A line of descent or relationship between two persons which is traced through the mother of the younger.

Maternal property. That which comes from the mother of the party, and other ascendants of the maternal stock.
Matricide /mætrəsæɪd/. The murder of a mother; or one who has slain his mother.

Matricula /mətrɪkylə/. In civil and old English law, a register of the admission of officers and persons entered into any body or society, whereof a list was made. Hence those who are admitted to a college or university are said to be "matriculated." Also a kind of almshouse, which had revenues appropriated to it, and was usually built near the church, whence the name was given to the church itself.

Matriculate /mətrɪkyləlt/. To enroll; to enter in a register; specifically, to enter or admit to membership in a body or society, particularly in a college or university, by enrolling the name in a register; to go through the process of admission to membership, as by examination and enrollment, in a society or college.

Matrimonial. Of or pertaining to matrimony or the estate of marriage.

Matrimonial action. Term that includes actions for a separation, for an annulment or dissolution of a marriage, for a divorce, for a declaration of the nullity of a void marriage, for a declaration of the validity or nullity of a foreign judgment of divorce and for a declaration of the validity or nullity of a marriage. See C.P.L.R. § 105. See also Annulment; Custody; Divorce; Equitable distribution; Separation of spouses.

Matrimonial cohabitation. The living together of a man and woman ostensibly as husband and wife. Also the living together of those who are legally husband and wife, the term carrying with it, in this sense, an implication of mutual rights and duties as to sharing the same habitation.

Matrimonial domicile. Place where parties live together as husband and wife either actually or constructively.

Matrimonium /mətrɪməwn(i)əm/. Lat. In Roman law, a legal marriage, contracted in strict accordance with the forms of the older Roman law, i.e., either with the farreum, the coemn princeps, or by usus. This was allowed only to Roman citizens and to those neighboring peoples to whom the right of connubium had been conceded. The effect of such a marriage was to bring the wife into the manus, or marital power, of the husband, and to create the patria potestas over the children.

Matrimonium subsequens tollit peccatum praecedens /mətrɪməwn(i)əm sɪbɛskwənɔ tʊlət pæktəm prəsi̱dənt/. Subsequent marriage cures preceding criminality.

Matrimony. Marriage (q.v.), in the sense of the relation or status, not of the ceremony.

Matrix /mɛtrətrɪks/. In civil law, the protocol or first draft of a legal instrument, from which all copies must be taken.

Matrix ecclesia /mɛtrətrɪks əklɪziə/. Lat. A mother church. This term was anciently applied to a cathedral, in relation to the other churches in the same see, or to a parochial church, in relation to the chapels or minor churches attached to it or depending on it.

Matron. A married woman; an elderly woman. The female superintendent of an establishment or institution, such as a hospital, an orphan asylum, etc., is often so called.

Matrons, jury of. Jury impaneled to determine if a woman condemned to death is pregnant. In common-law practice, a jury of twelve matrons or discreet women, impaneled upon a writ de ventre inspiciendo, or where a female prisoner, being under sentence of death, pleaded her pregnancy as a ground for staying execution. In the latter case, such jury inquired into the truth of the plea.

Matter. Substantial facts forming basis of claim or defense; facts material to issue; substance as distinguished from form; transaction, event, occurrence; subject-matter of controversy. See issue; Material fact; Matter in issue; Subject-matter.

Matter in controversy or in dispute. Subject of litigation; matter on which action is brought and issue is joined and in relation to which, if issue be one of fact, testimony is taken. Golden v. Sixth Judicial Dist. Ct. in and for Pershing County, 57 Nev. 114, 58 P.2d 1042, 1044. Rights which plaintiffs assert and seek to have protected and enforced. Gavica v. Donaugh, C.C.A.Or., 93 F.2d 173, 175. See also Cause of action; Issue; Matter in issue; Subject-matter.

Matter in deed. In English law, such matter as may be proved or established by a deed or specialty. Matter of fact, in contradistinction to matter of law. See also Matter of record.

Matter in issue. That matter on which plaintiff proceeds by his action, and which defendant controverts by his pleadings, MacKenzie v. Union Guardian Trust Co., 262 Mich. 563, 247 N.W. 914; not including facts offered in evidence to establish the matters in issue. That ultimate fact or state of facts in dispute upon which the verdict or finding is predicated. See also Matter in controversy or in dispute.

Matter in ley ne serra mise in boutche del jurors /mætər ɪn lɛ̃ nə sɛʁə miːz i̱n bʊʃ dəl jʊərəs/. Matter of law shall not be put into the mouth of the jurors.

Matter in pais /mætər ɪn pɛɪs/. Matter of fact that is not in writing; thus distinguished from matter in the jurors.

Matter of course. Anything done or taken in the course of routine or usual procedure, which is permissible and valid without being specially applied for and allowed.
Matter of fact. That which is to be ascertained by the senses, or by the testimony of witnesses describing what they have perceived. Distinguished from matter of law and matter of opinion. See also Demonstrative evidence; Fact.

Matter of form. See Form.

Matter of law. Whatever is to be ascertained or decided by the application of statutory rules or the principles and determinations of the law, as distinguished from the investigation of particular facts.

Matter of record. Any judicial matter or proceeding entered on the records of a court, and to be proved by the production of such record. It differs from matter in deed, which consists of facts which may be proved by specialty.

Matter of record, estoppel by. See Record, estoppel by.

Matter of substance. That which goes to the merits. The opposite of matter of form.

Matters of subsistence for man. This phrase comprehends all articles or things, whether animal or vegetable, living or dead, which are used for food, and whether they are consumed in the form in which they are bought from the producer or are only consumed after undergoing a process of preparation, which is greater or less, according to the character of the article.

Matured claim. Claim which is unconditionally due and owing. See Liquidated claim; Ripeness doctrine.

Maturity date. The date on which the principal amount of a note, draft, acceptance, bond, or other debt instrument becomes due and payable.

Maturity value. The amount which is due and payable on the maturity date of an obligation.

Mayhem /máy(h)am/.

Maim /máyn/. L. Fr. A hand; handwriting.

Mayor /máyər/. In Spanish law, the right to the enjoyment of certain aggregate property, left with the condition thereon imposed that they are to pass in their integrity, perpetually, successively to the eldest son.

Mayor's court. A court established in some cities, in which the mayor sits with the powers of a police judge... or committing magistrate in respect to offenses committed within the city (e.g. traffic or ordinance violations) and sometimes with civil jurisdiction in small causes, or other special statutory powers.

McCarran Act. A federal statute which permits a state to regulate and to tax foreign insurance companies which do business within the state. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1011 et seq. See also internal security acts.

McNabb-Mallory Rule. The rule which requires that a suspect be promptly brought before a magistrate or else incriminating statements made by him during the illegal detention will be suppressed. McNabb v. U.S., 318 U.S. 332, 63 S.Ct. 608, 87 L.Ed. 819, and Mallory v. U.S., 354 U.S. 449, 77 S.Ct. 1356, 1 L.Ed.2d 1479. "McNabb Rule" is that there must be reasonable promptness in taking prisoner before committing magistrate, or confession obtained during period between arrest and commitment is inadmissible in prosecution of party arrested, and that rule applies to voluntary as well as involuntary confessions. Muldrow v. U.S., C.A. Cal., 281 F.2d 903, 906. See also Fed.R.Crim.P. 5(a); 18 U.S.C.A. § 3501. See also Confession.

McNaughten Rule. See M'Naghten Rule.

M.D. An abbreviation for "Middle District," in reference to the division of the United States into judicial districts; e.g. U.S. District Court for middle district of Ohio. Also an abbreviation for "Doctor of Medicine" or "Medical Doctor."

Meadow. A tract of low or level land producing grass which is mown for hay. A tract which lies above the shore, and is overflowed by spring and extraordinary tides only, and yields grasses which are good for hay.

Mean or mesne. A middle between two extremes, whether applied to persons, things, or time. Average, having an intermediate value between two extremes or between the several successive values of variable quantity during one cycle of variation. Western & Southern Life Ins. Co. v. Huwe, C.C.A. Ohio, 116 F.2d 1008, 1009.

Meander /mi'ándar/. To meander means to follow a winding or flexuous course; and when it is said, in a description of land, "thence with the meander of the river," it must mean a meandered line,—a line which follows the sinuosities of the river,—or, in other words, that the river is the boundary between the points indicated.

This term is used in some jurisdictions with the meaning of surveying and mapping a stream according to its meanderings, or windings and turnings. See Meander lines.

Meander lines. Lines run in surveying particular portions of the public lands which border on navigable rivers, not as boundaries of the tract, but for the purpose of defining the sinuosities of the banks of the stream, and as the means of ascertaining the quantity of land in the fraction subject to sale, and which is to be paid for by the purchaser. In preparing the official plat from the field notes, the meander line is represented as the border line of the stream, and shows that the water-course, and not the meander line as naturally run on the ground, is the boundary. Niles v. Cedar Point Club, 175 U.S. 300, 20 S.Ct. 124, 44 L.Ed. 171.

Mean high tide. The "mean high tide" or "ordinary high tide" is a mean of all the high tides, and the average to be used should be, if possible, the average of all the high tides over a period of 18.6 years. O'Neill v. State Highway Dept., N.J., 50 N.J. 307, 235 A.2d 1, 9.

Mean high water mark. The point on the shore which the average high tide will reach.

Meaning. That which is, or is intended to be, signified or denoted by act or language; signification; sense; import. See also Construction.

Mean lower low tide. The average of lower low tides over a fixed period of time. State v. Edwards, 188 Wash. 467, 62 P.2d 1094, 1095.

Mean low tide. The average of all low tides both low and lower low over a fixed period of time. State v. Edwards, 188 Wash. 467, 62 P.2d 1094, 1095.

Mean low water mark. The point on the shore which the average low tide will reach.

Mean reserve. The mean of the reserve at the beginning of the policy year, after the premium for such year is paid, and the terminal reserve at end of such policy year. Kentucky Home Life Ins. Co. v. Leisman, 268 Ky. 825, 105 S.W.2d 1046, 1047.

Means. That through which, or by the help of which, an end is attained; something tending to an object desired; intermediate agency or measure; necessary condition or co-agent; instrument. Under insurance policy, equivalent to cause. Pope v. Business Men's Assur. Co. of America, 235 Mo.App. 263, 131 S.W.2d 887, 892.

Resources; available property; money or property, as an available instrumentality for effecting a purpose, furnishing a livelihood, paying a debt, or the like.

Measure. That by which extent or dimension is ascertained, either length, breadth, thickness, capacity, or amount. The rule by which anything is adjusted or proportioned. See Land measure; Metes and bounds; Survey.

Measure of damages. The rule, or rather the system of rules, governing the adjustment or apportionment of damages as a compensation for injuries in actions at law. See Damages.

Measure of value. In the ordinary sense of the word, "measure" would mean something by comparison with which we may ascertain what is the value of anything. When we consider, further, that value itself is relative, and that two things are necessary to constitute it, independently of the third thing, which is to measure it, we may define a "measure of value" to be something by comparing with which any two other things we may infer their value in relation to one another. See Value.
Measuring money. In old English law, a duty which some persons exacted, by letters patent, for every piece of cloth made, besides alnage. Now abolished.

Mechanical equivalent. If two devices do the same work in substantially the same way, and accomplish substantially the same result, they are “mechanical equivalents.” Wire Tie Machinery Co. v. Pacific Box Corporation, C.C.A.Cal., 107 F.2d 54, 56. A device which may be substituted or adopted, instead of another, by any person skilled in the particular art from his knowledge of the art, and which is competent to perform the same functions or produce the same result, without introducing an original idea or changing the general idea of means. The test of equivalency is whether the substituted element operates in substantially the same way to produce substantially the same result. See also Equivalent.

Mechanical process. See Process.

Mechanic’s lien. A claim created by state statutes for the purpose of securing priority of payment of the price or value of work performed and materials furnished in erecting, improving, or repairing a building or other structure, and as such attaches to the land as well as buildings and improvements erected thereon. In re Louisville Daily News & Enquirer, D.C.Ky., 20 F.Supp. 465, 466. Such lien covers materialmen, tradesmen, suppliers, and the like, who furnish services, labor, or materials on construction or improvement of property. See also Commencement (Commencement of building or improvement); Lien waiver; Stop notice statute.

Mechanic’s lienor. The term “mechanic’s lienor” means any person who under local law has a lien on real property (or on the proceeds of a contract relating to real property) for services, labor, or materials furnished in connection with the construction or improvement of such property. I.R.C. § 6323(h).

Medee /med/i/. In old English law, a bribe or reward; a compensation given in exchange, where the things exchanged were not of equal value.

Media annata /mědíya anáta/mîydiya ânêya/. In Spanish law, half-yearly profits of land.

Media concludendi /miýdiya kökglwédêyday/. The steps of an argument. Thus “a judgment is conclusive as to all the media concludendi.” Fauntleroy v. Lum, 210 U.S. 230, 28 S.Ct. 641, 52 L.Ed. 1039. The theory or basis of facts upon which a legal conclusion is reached, per Holmes, C. J., in Hoseason v. Keegen, 178 Mass. 247, 59 N.E. 627. Grounds for asserting the right known when the suit was brought. Mendez v. Baetjer, C.C.A. Puerto Rico, 106 F.2d 163, 166.

Medie et infirma manus homines /miydiyiê ét infármiý mêmâs hómaníyz/. Men of a middle and base condition.

Media nox /miydiya nóks/. In old English law, midnight. Ad medium noctem, at midnight.

Medianus homo /miydiýëynas hówmow/. A man of middle fortune.

Mediate datum /miydiyêdyi déyta/. A fact from whose existence may berationally inferred the existence of ultimate facts. The Evergreens v. Nunan, C.C.A. N.Y., 141 F.2d 927, 928.

Mediate descent. See Descent.

Mediate powers. Those incident to primary powers given by a principal to his agent. For example, the general authority given to collect, receive, and pay debts by or to the principal is a primary power. In order to accomplish this, it is frequently required to settle accounts, adjust disputed claims, resist those which are unjust, and answer and defend suits. These subordinate powers are sometimes called “mediate powers.”

Mediate testimony. Secondary evidence (q.v.).

Mediation. Private, informal dispute resolution process in which a neutral third person, the mediator, helps disputing parties to reach an agreement. The mediator has no power to impose a decision on the parties. See also Alternative dispute resolution; Arbitration; Conciliation.

Also, the friendly interference of a neutral nation in the controversies of others, for the purpose, by its influence and by adjusting their difficulties, of keeping the peace in the family of nations.

Mediation and Conciliation Service. An independent department of the federal government charged with trying to settle labor disputes by conciliation and mediation. 29 U.S.C.A. § 172 et seq.

The Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service represents the public interest by promoting the development of sound and stable labor-management relationships; preventing or minimizing work stoppages by assisting labor and management to settle their disputes through mediation; advocating collective bargaining, mediation, and voluntary arbitration as the preferred processes for settling issues between employers and representatives of employees; developing the art, science, and practice of dispute resolution; and fostering constructive joint relationships of labor and management leaders to increase their mutual understanding and solution of common problems. See also American Arbitration Association; National Mediation Board.

Mediator. Neutral third person who helps disputing parties to reach agreement through the mediation process. See also Arbitrator; Referee.

Mediators of questions. In old English law, six persons authorized by statute (27 Edw. III, St. 2, c. 24), who, upon any question arising among merchants relating to unmerchantable wool, or undue packing, etc., might, before the mayor and officers of the staple upon their oath certify and settle the same; to whose determination therein the parties concerned were to submit.

Medicaid. A form of public assistance sponsored jointly by the federal and state governments providing medical aid for people whose income falls below a certain level. See also Medicare.
Medical deduction. See Medical expenses.

Medical evidence. Evidence furnished by doctors, nurses, and other medical personnel testifying in their professional capacity as experts, or by standard treatises on medicine or surgery. Fed.Evid.R. 702, 703. See Expert witness.

Medical examiner. Public officer charged with responsibility of investigating all sudden, unexplained, unnatural or suspicious deaths reported to him, including the performance of autopsies and assisting the state in criminal homicide cases. Term may also include a physician who conducts examinations for insurance companies and other institutions. The medical examiner has replaced the coroner in many states. See also Coroner.

Medical expenses. Medical expenses, including medicines and drugs and health insurance premiums, of an individual and his or her dependents are allowed as an itemized deduction to the extent that such amounts (less insurance reimbursements) exceed a certain percent of adjusted gross income. I.R.C. § 213. See also Medical care.

Medical jurisprudence. The science which applies the principles and practice of the different branches of medicine to the elucidation of doubtful questions in a court of law. Otherwise called "forensic medicine" (q.v.). A sort of mixed science, which may be considered as common ground to the practitioners both of law and medicine.

Medico-legal. Relating to the law concerning medical questions. See Forensic medicine.

Medietas linguae /mádiáystáês língwiy/. In old practice, moiety of tongue; half-tongue. Applied to a jury impaneled in a cause consisting the one half of natives, and the other half of foreigners. See De medietate linguae.

Medio acquietando /miédiyow ákwáystándow/. A judicial writ to distrain a lord for the acquitting of a mesne lord from a rent, which he had acknowledged in court not to belong to him.

Mediterranean passport. A pass issued by the admiralty of Great Britain under various treaties with the Barbary States in the eighteenth century. They were granted to British built ships and were respected by the Barbary pirates. They were also issued by the United States.

Medium tempus /miédíyam témpas/. In old English law, meantime; mesne profits.

Medietum /mediáytam/. In old English law, a mixing together; a medley or mêlée; an affray or sudden encounter. An offense suddenly committed in an affray. The English word "medley" is preserved in the term "chance-medley." An intermeddling, without violence, in any matter of business.

Medley /médiély/. An affray; a sudden or casual fighting; a hand to hand battle; a mêlée. See Chance-medley; Chaud-medley.

Medsequ /médzechiy/. In old English law, a bribe; hush money.

Meeting. A coming together of persons; an assembly. Particularly, in law, an assembling of a number of persons for the purpose of discussing and acting upon some matter or matters in which they have a common interest; e.g. in corporate law, a meeting of the board of directors or of the stockholders.

Annual meeting. See Regular meeting, below.

Called meeting. In the law of corporations, a meeting not held at a time specially appointed for it by the charter or by-laws, but assembled in pursuance of a "call" or summons proceeding from some officer, committee or group of stockholders, or other persons having authority in that behalf.

Family meeting. See Family.

General meeting. A meeting of all the stockholders of a corporation, all the creditors of a bankrupt, etc.

Regular meeting. In the law of public and private corporations, a meeting (of directors, trustees, stockholders, etc.) held at the time and place appointed for it by statute, by-law, charter or other positive direction. This is commonly termed the "annual" meeting of such group.

Forensic medicine. Another name for medical jurisprudence. See Forensic medicine.
Meeting of creditors.  See Creditor's meeting.

Meeting of minds.  As essential element of contract, is mutual agreement and assent of parties to contract to substance and terms. It is an agreement reached by the parties to a contract and expressed therein, or as the equivalent of mutual assent or mutual obligation. Rice v. McKinley, App., 267 Ark. 659, 590 S.W.2d 305, 306. The "meeting of the minds" required to make a contract is not based on secret purpose or intention on the part of one of the parties, stored away in his mind and not brought to the attention of the other party, but must be based on purpose and intention which has been made known or which from all the circumstances should be known. McClintock v. Skelly Oil Co., 232 Mo.App. 1204, 114 S.W.2d 181, 189. A subjective understanding is not required; it suffices that the conduct of the contracting parties indicates an agreement to the terms of the alleged contract. Steinberg v. Chicago Medical School, 69 Ill.2d 320, 13 Ill.Dec. 699, 371 N.E.2d 634, 640.

Megalomania /mêgaloméniya/.  See Insanity.

Megalopolis.  Heavily populated continuous urban area including many cities.

Megbote /mêgbówt/.  In Saxon law, a recompense for the murder of a relation.

Meigne, or maisnader /miyn/.  In old English law, a family.

Meindre age /mindar éyj/"ázh/.  L. Fr. Minority; lesser age.

Meiný, meine, or meinie /miýn(i)y/.  In old English law, a household; staff or suite of attendants; a retinue; particularly, the royal household.

Melancholia /mêlângkówliya/.  A kind of mental un-soundness characterized by extreme depression of spirits, ill-grounded fears, delusions, and brooding over one particular subject or train of ideas. Depressed phase of manic-depressive psychosis, the intensity and duration of which is out of proportion to any apparent precipitating factors.  See Insanity.

Meldfeoh /mêldfó/i/.  In Saxon law, the recompense due and given to him who made discovery of any breach of penal laws committed by another person, called the "promoter's [i.e., informer's] fee."

Melior /miýl(i)yâr/.  Lat. Better; the better. Melior res, the better (best) thing or chattel.

Meliorations /miýl(i)yâr éyýshun(d)iz/.  In Scottish law, improvements of an estate, other than mere repairs; betterments. Occasionally used in English and American law in the sense of valuable and lasting improvements or betterments.

Meliorum conditionem ecclesie suæ facere potest prælatus, deteriorem nequaquam /miýl(i)yâr kandishiyównam akliýziyiy s'yúwiý fáyshiy pówtast praléytas, datiriýora nakwéykwam/. A bishop can make the condition of his own church better, but by no means worse.

Meliorum conditionem suam facere potest minor, deteriorem nequaquam /miýl(i)yâr kandishiyównam s(y)úwâam fáyshiy pówtast máynar, datiriýora nakwéykwam/. A minor can make his own condition better, but by no means worse.

Melior est causa possidentis /miýl(i)yâr ét kózá pósdéntas/. The cause of the possessor is preferable.

Melior est conditio defendentis /miýl(i)yâr ét kondish(i)yow dâfêndéntas/. The condition of the party in possession is the better one, i.e., where the right of the parties is equal.

Melior est conditio possidentis, et rei quam actoris /miýl(i)yâr ét kandish(i)yow pósdéntas ét riýay kwâm âktôrâs/. The condition of the possessor is the better, and the condition of the defendant is better than that of the plaintiff.

Melior est conditio possidentis ubi neuter jus habet /miýl(i)yâr ét kandish(i)yow pósdéntas yuwbay n(y)úwâtar jáz hêybat/. The condition of the possessor is the better where neither of the two has a right.

Melior est justitia vere preveniens quam severe puniens /miýl(i)yâr ét jástish(i)yô viriy prâviñ(i)yân kwâm savîriý pyúwînyâzyâ/. That justice which absolutely prevents [a crime] is better than that which severely punishes it.

Melius est in tempore occurrere, quam post causam vulneratum remedium quæreere /miýl(i)ýas ét in têmprây akâhrâyîy, kwâm póst kózam váînârêydam rômiýl(i)yam kwirâriy/. It is better to meet a thing in time than after an injury inflicted to seek a remedy.

Melius est jus deficiens quam juss incertum /miýl(i)ýas ét jáz dáshîhiyân kwâm jáz ânsârzâm/. Law that is deficient is better than law that is uncertain.

Melius est omnia mala pati quam malo consentire /miýl(i)ýas ét ómniya mála pótyay kwâm mâló kôntêntâryiy/. It is better to suffer every ill than to consent to ill.

Melius est petere fontes quam sectari rivulos /miýl(i)ýas ét râkâhrâriy kwâm mâló kâhrâriy/. It is better to run back than to run badly; it is better to retrace one's steps than to proceed improperly.

Melius est recurrire quam malo currere /miýl(i)ýas ét râkâhrâriy kwâm mâló kâhrâriy/.
MELIUS INQUIRENDUM

Melius inquirendum /miyl(i)yas inkwaréndam/. To be better inquired into.

In old English law, the name of a writ commanding a further inquiry respecting a matter; as, after an imperfect inquisition in proceedings in outlawry, to have a new inquest as to the value of lands.

Member. One of the persons constituting a family, partnership, association, corporation, guild, court, legislature, or the like.

A part or organ of the body; especially a limb or other separate part. California Casualty Indemnity Exchange v. Industrial Accident Commission, Cal.App., 82 P.2d 1115, 1116.

Member bank. A bank which has become affiliated with (i.e. purchased stock in) one of the Federal Reserve banks. Member of Federal Reserve System (which includes all nationally chartered banks and any state-chartered banks that have been accepted for membership). See Federal Reserve System.

Member firm. In securities and commodities trading, a brokerage firm that is a member of a particular exchange (e.g. member of New York Stock Exchange).

Member of Congress. A member of the Senate or House of Representatives of the United States. In popular usage, particularly the latter.

Member of crew. To qualify as a "member of the crew" and thus as a "seaman" under the Jones Act, one must be more or less permanently attached to a vessel or fleet, must be one whose duties serve naturally and primarily as an aid to navigation in the broadest sense, and the vessel must be in the navigation.

Member of Parliament. One having the right to sit in either house of the British parliament.

Membrana /membrénya/. Lat. In old Civil and English law, a skin of parchment. The ancient rolls usually consist of several of these skins, and the word "membrana" is used, in citations to them, in the same way as "page" or "folio," to distinguish the particular skin referred to.

Membrum /mémbrum/. A slip or small piece of land.

Mémoire /mémwóhr/mémwóhr/. In French law, a document in the form of a petition, by which appeals to the court of cassation are initiated.

Memorandum /mémorándam/. Lat. To be remembered; be it remembered. A formal word with which the body of a record in the Court of King's Bench anciently commenced.

An informal record, note or instrument embodying something that the parties desire to fix in memory by the aid of written evidence, or that is to serve as the basis of a future formal contract or deed. A brief written statement outlining the terms of an agreement or transaction. Informal interoffice communication.

Under portion of statute of frauds providing that a contract not to be performed within a year is invalid unless the contract, or some memorandum of the contract, is in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged or his agent, the word "memorandum" implies something less than a complete contract, and the "memorandum" functions only as evidence of the contract and need not contain every term, so that a letter may be a sufficient "memorandum" to take a case out of the statute of frauds.

This word is used in the statute of frauds as the designation of the written agreement, or note or evidence thereof, which must exist in order to bind the parties in the cases provided. The memorandum must be such as to disclose the parties, the nature and substance of the contract, the consideration and promise, and be signed by the party to be bound or his authorized agent. See U.C.C. § 2-201. See also Contract.

Memorandum articles. In the law of marine insurance, this phrase designates the articles of merchandise which are usually mentioned in the memorandum clause (q.v.), and for which the underwriter's liability is thereby limited.

Memorandum check. See Check.

Memorandum clause. In a policy of marine insurance, the memorandum clause is a clause inserted to prevent the underwriters from being liable for injury to goods of a peculiarly perishable nature, and for minor damages. It might begin, for example, as follows: "N. B. Corn, fish, salt, fruit, flour, and seed are warranted free from average, unless general, or the ship be stranded,"—meaning that the underwriters are not to be liable for damage to these articles caused by seawater or the like.

Memorandum decision. A court's decision that gives the ruling (what it decides and orders done), but no opinion (reasons for the decision).

Memorandum in error. A document alleging error in fact, accompanied by an affidavit of such matter of fact.

Memorandum of alteration. Formerly, in England, where a patent was granted for two inventions, one of which was not new or not useful, the whole patent was bad, and the same rule applied when a material part of a patent for a single invention had either of those defects. To remedy this the statute 5 & 6 Wm. IV, c. 83, empowers a patentee (with the fiat of the attorney general) to enter a disclaimer (q.v.) or a memorandum of an alteration in the title or specification of the patent, not being of such a nature as to extend the exclusive right granted by the patent, and thereupon the memorandum is deemed to be part of the letters patent or the specification.

Memorandum of association. In England, a document to be subscribed by seven or more persons associated for a lawful purpose, by subscribing which, and otherwise complying with the requisitions of the companies' acts in respect of registration, they may form themselves into an incorporated company, with or without limited liability. See also Articles of association; Articles of incorporation.

Memorandum sale. See Sale.
Memorial. A document presented to a legislative body, or to the executive, by one or more individuals, containing a petition or a representation of facts.

In practice, a short note, abstract, memorandum, or rough draft of the orders of the court, from which the records thereof may at any time be fully made up. See Memorandum decision.

In English law, that which contains the particulars of a deed, etc., and is the instrument registered, as in the case of an annuity which must be registered.

Memoriter /mamórstar/. Lat. From memory; by or from recollection. Thus, memoriter proof of a written instrument is such as is furnished by the recollection of a witness who had seen and known it.

Memory. The word as used in Blackstone and other ancient authorities, appeared to be synonymous with "mind", whereas the word "memory" in modern times is used in a more restricted sense of recollection of past events rather than the general state of one's mental power.

Mental capacity; the mental power to review and recognize the successive states of consciousness in their consecutive order.

This word, as used in jurisprudence to denote one of the psychological elements necessary in the making of a valid will or contract or the commission of a crime, implies the mental power to conduct a consecutive train of thought, or an orderly planning of affairs, by recalling correctly the past states of the mind and past events, and arranging them in their due order of sequence and in their logical relations with the events and mental states of the present. See also Mind and memory.

The phrase "sound and disposing mind and memory" means not merely distinct recollection of the items of one's property and the persons among whom it may be given, but entire power of mind to dispose of property by will. See Capacity.

The reputation and name, good or bad, which a man leaves at his death.

Legal memory. An ancient usage, custom, supposed grant (as a foundation for prescription) and the like, are said to be immemorial when they are really or fictitiously of such an ancient date that "the memory of man runoff not to the contrary," or, in other words, "beyond legal memory." And legal memory or "time out of mind," according to the rule of the common law, commenced from the reign of Richard I, A.D. 1189. But under the statute of limitation of 32 Hen. VIII this was reduced to 60 years, and again by that of 2 & 3 Wm. IV, c. 71, to 20 years. In the American states, by statute, the time of legal memory is generally fixed at a period corresponding to that prescribed for actions for the recovery of real property, usually about 20 years.

Menace. To threaten; make threats. An unlawful threat of duress or injury to the person, property or character of another. Odorizzi v. Bloomfield School Dist., 246 C.A.2d 123, 54 Cal.Rptr. 533, 538. Menace may constitute a ground for divorce, or duress such as would vitiate a contract. See also Assault.

Men of straw. Men who used in former days to ply about courts of law, so called from their manner of making known their occupation (i.e., by a straw in one of their shoes), recognized by the name of "straw-shoes." An advocate or lawyer who wanted a convenient witness knew by these signs where to meet with one, and the colloquy between the parties was brief. "Don't you remember?" said the advocate; to which the ready answer was, "To be sure I do." "Then come into court and swear it." And straw-shoes went into court and swore. Athens abounded in straw-shoes. See also Straw man or party.

Mens /ménz/. Lat. Mind; intention; meaning; understanding; will.

Mensa et thoro /ménæs e θérow/. From bed and board. See Divorce.

Mensalla /mënšéylliýa/. Parsonages or spiritual livings united to the tables of religious houses, and called "mensal benefices" amongst the canonists.

Mensis /mensís/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, a month. Mensis vetitus, the prohibited month; fence-month (q.v.).

Mens legis /ménz liýjas/. The mind of the law; that is, the purpose, spirit, or intention of a law or the law generally.

Mens legislatoris /ménz lêjyslattórás/. The intention of the law-maker.

Mensor /ménsoð/. In civil law, a measurer of land; a surveyor.

Mens rea /ménz riýa/. As an element of criminal responsibility: a guilty mind; a guilty or wrongful purpose; a criminal intent. Guilty knowledge and wilfulness. United States v. Greenbaum, C.C.A.N.J., 138 F.2d 437, 438. See Model Penal Code § 2.02. See also Criminal (Criminal intent); Knowledge; Knowingly; Premeditation; Specific intent.

Mens testatoris in testamentis spectanda est /ménz têjstórás in têjstaméntis spektândo ést/. The intention of the testator is to be regarded in wills.

Mensularius /mënsélriýas/. In civil law, a money-changer or dealer in money.

Mensura /mens(y)úða/. In old English law, a measure.

Mensura domini regis /mens(y)úða dòmáñay riýjas/. "The measure of our lord the king," being the weights and measures established under King Richard I, in his parliament at Westminster, 1197.

Mental. Relating to or existing in the mind; intellectual, emotional, or psychic, as distinguished from bodily or physical.

Mental alienation. A phrase sometimes used to describe insanity (q.v.).

Mental anguish. When connected with a physical injury, this term includes both the resultant mental sensation of pain and also the accompanying feelings of distress, fright, and anxiety. As an element of damages implies a relatively high degree of mental pain and distress; it is more than mere disappointment, anger, worry, resentment, or embarrassment, although it may include all of these, and it includes mental sensation of pain resulting from such painful emotions as grief, severe disappointment, indignation, wounded pride, shame, despair and/or public humiliation. Trevino v. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 582 S.W.2d 582, 584. In other connections, and as a ground for divorce or for compensable damages or an element of damages, it includes the mental suffering resulting from the excitation of the more poignant and painful emotions, such as grief, severe disappointment, indignation, wounded pride, shame, public humiliation, despair, etc. See also Mental anguish.

Mental capacity or competence. Term contemplates the ability to understand the nature and effect of the act in which a person is engaged and the business he or she is transacting. Jones v. Traders & General Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 144 S.W.2d 689, 694. Such a measure of intelligence, understanding, memory, and judgment relative to the particular transaction (e.g. making of will or entering into contract) as will enable the person to understand the nature, terms, and effect of his or her act. Conley v. Nailor, 118 U.S. 127, 6 S.Ct. 1001, 30 L.Ed. 112. See also Capacity; Insanity.

Mental cruelty. A course of conduct on the part of one spouse toward the other spouse which can endanger the mental and physical health and efficiency of the other spouse to such an extent as to render continuance of the marital relation intolerable. As a ground for divorce, is conduct which causes embarrassment, humiliation and anguish so as to render life miserable and unendurable or to cause a spouse's life, person or health to become endangered. McGowan v. McGowan, 15 Ill.App.2d 913, 305 N.E.2d 261, 262. See also Indignity; Mental anguish.

Mental disease or defect. See Insanity.

Mental incapacity; mental incompetency. Such is established when there is found to exist an essential privation of reasoning faculties, or when a person is incapable of understanding and acting with discretion in the ordinary affairs of life. See Incapacity; Insanity.

Mental reservation. A silent exception to the general words of a promise or agreement not expressed, on account of a general understanding on the subject. But the word has been applied to an exception existing in the mind of the one party only, and has been degraded to signify a dishonest excuse for evading or infringing a promise.

Mental state. Capacity or condition of one's mind in terms of ability to do or not do a certain act. See Mental capacity or competence.

Mental suffering. See Mental anguish; Mental cruelty.

provisions such as are purchased day by day for immediate consumption (e.g., food).

Stock of merchandise. See Stock.

Merchandise broker. One who negotiates the sale of merchandise without having it in his possession or control, being simply an agent with very limited powers. Hughes v. Young, 17 Tenn.App. 24, 65 S.W.2d 858. See Broker.

Merchandise Marks Act, 1862. The statute 25 & 26 Vict., c. 88, designed to prevent the fraudulent marking of merchandise and the fraudulent sale of merchandise falsely marked.

Merchant. One who is engaged in the purchase and sale of goods; a trafficker; a retailer; a trader. Term commonly refers to person who purchases goods at wholesale for resale at retail; i.e., person who operates a retail business (retailer).

A person who deals in goods of the kind or otherwise by his occupation holds himself out as having knowledge or skill peculiar to the practices or goods involved in the transaction or to whom such knowledge or skill may be attributed by his employment of an agent or broker or other intermediary who by his occupation holds himself out as having such knowledge or skill. U.C.C. § 2-104(1).

A man who traffics or carries on trade with foreign countries, or who exports and imports goods and sells them by wholesale. Merchants of this description are commonly known by the name of “shipping merchants.”

Commission merchant. See Commission merchant.

Law merchant. See Commercial law; Mercantile law.

Statute merchant. See Statute merchant.

Merchantability /märchantabilitāt/. Means that the article sold shall be of the general kind described and reasonably fit for the general purpose for which it shall have been sold, and where the article sold is ordinarily used in but one way, its fitness for use in that particular way is impliedly warranted unless there is evidence to the contrary. See also Fitness for particular purpose; Merchantable; Warranty.

Merchantable /märchantable/. Goods, to be “merchantable,” must be fit for the ordinary purposes for which such goods are to be used. Consolidated Supply Co. v. Babbitt, 96 Idaho 636, 534 P.2d 466, 468, and conform to any promises or affirmations of fact made on the container or label. Virgil v. Kash N’ Karry Service, 484 A.2d 652, 655. Within § 2-314 of the U.C.C. creating implied warranty of merchantability, term “merchantable” implies that the goods sold conform to ordinary standards of care and that they are of average grade, quality and value of similar goods sold under similar circumstances. Woodruff v. Clark County Farm Bureau Co-op Ass’n, 153 Ind.App. 31, 286 N.E.2d 188, 194.

Goods to be merchantable must be at least such as: pass without objection in the trade under the contract description; and in the case of fungible goods, are of fair average quality within the description; and are fit for the ordinary purposes for which such goods are used; and run, within the variations permitted by the agreement, of even kind, quality and quantity within each unit and among all units involved; and are adequately contained, packaged, and labeled as the agreement may require; and conform to the promises or affirmations of fact made on the container or label if any. U.C.C. § 2-314(2).

See also Fitness for particular purpose; Warranty (Implied Warranty of Merchantability or fitness for particular purpose).

Merchantable title. A good and marketable title in fee simple, free from litigation, palpable defects, and grave doubts; a title which will enable the owner not only to hold it in peace but to sell it to a person of reasonable prudence. Overboe v. Overboe, N.D., 160 N.W.2d 650, 654. Good record title acceptable to a knowledgeable buyer not being under duress to purchase. One that can be held without reasonable apprehension of being assailed and readily transferable in market. Crow Creek Gravel & Sand Co. v. Dooley, 182 Ark. 1009, 33 S.W.2d 369, 370. See also Marketable title; Warranty (Warranty of title).

Merchant appraiser. See Appraiser.

Merchantman /märchantman/. A ship or vessel employed in foreign or domestic commerce or in the merchant service.

Merchants’ accounts. Accounts between merchant and merchant, which must be current, mutual, and unsettled, consisting of debts and credits for merchandise.

Merchant seaman. A sailor employed in a private vessel, as distinguished from one employed in the navy or public ships.

Merchant Shipping Acts. Certain English statutes, beginning with the St. 16 & 17 Vict., c. 131, whereby a general superintendence of merchant shipping is vested in the board of trade. See Maritime Commission.

Merchant /märchant/ /märcht/már*. In feudal law, a fine or composition paid by inferior tenants to the lord for liberty to dispose of their daughters in marriage. The same as marcheta (q.v.).

Merciament /mārs(h)yəmant/. An amercement, penalty, or fine (q.v.).

Mercimoniatus Anglie /mārmoməwnediyətəs æŋglɪə/. In old records, the impost of England upon merchandise.

Mercis appellatio ad res mobiles tantum pertinet /mārsəs æpələʃi(ˈ)ələʊ æd rɪz məwəbəliəz təntəm pərtəntəs/. The term “merchantise” belongs to movable things only.

Mercisappellatione homines non contineri /mārsəs æpələʃi(ˈ)ənəz nən kəntənərə/. Men are not included under the denomination of “merchantise.”

Mercna lagu /mārknə ləgwə/. See Lago; Mercen-lage.

Merry. In old English practice, the arbitration of the king or judge in punishing offenses not directly censured by law. So, "to be in mercy" signifies to be amerced or fined for bringing or defending an unjust suit, or to be liable to punishment in the discretion of the court.

In criminal law, the discretion of a judge, within the limits prescribed by law, to remit altogether the punishment to which a convicted person is liable, or to mitigate the severity of his sentence; as when a jury recommends the prisoner to the mercy of the court.

Mercy killing. Euthanasia. The affirmative act of bringing about immediate death allegedly in a painless way and generally administered by one who thinks that the dying person wishes to die because of a terminal or hopeless disease or condition. See also Brain death; Death (Natural Death Acts); Right to die laws; Will (Living will).

Mere /mér/. L. Fr. Mother. Elle, mere, fille, grandmother, mother, daughter. En ventre sa mere, in its mother's womb.

Mere evidence rule. In search and seizure, it was once the rule that in a lawful search the officer had a right to seize instrumentalities and fruits of the crime but no right to seize other items (e.g., clothing of the suspect) which are mere evidence. This rule no longer prevails. Warden, Md. Penitentiary v. Hayden, 387 U.S. 294, 87 S.Ct. 1502, 18 L.Ed.2d 782. See Fruit of poisonous tree doctrine.

Mere licensee. One who enters upon the land or property of another without notice of any kind or by the mere permission, sufferance, or acquiescence of the owner or occupier. Mann v. Des Moines Ry. Co., 232 Iowa 1049, 7 N.W.2d 45, 50. See License.

Merely. Without including anything else; purely; only; solely; absolute; wholly. In re Plymouth Motor Corporation, Cust. & Pat.App., 46 F.2d 211, 212.

Mere motion. The free and voluntary act of a party himself, done without the suggestion or influence of another person, is said to be done of his mere motion, ex mero motu (q.v.).

The phrase is used of an interference of the courts of law, who will, under some circumstances, of their own motion, object to an irregularity in the proceedings, though no objection has been taken to the informality by the plaintiff or defendant in the suit.

Mere right. The mere right of property in land; the jus proprietas, without either possession or even the right of possession. The abstract right of property.

Mere-stone. In old English law, a stone for bounding or dividing lands.

Meretricious /mēhrətrishəs/. Of the nature of unlawful sexual connection. The term is descriptive of the relation sustained by persons who contract a marriage that is void by reason of legal incapacity.

Merger. The fusion or absorption of one thing or right into another; generally spoken of a case where one of the subjects is of less dignity or importance than the other. Here the less important ceases to have an independent existence.

 Corporations. An amalgamation of two corporations pursuant to statutory provision in which one of the corporations survives and the other disappears. The absorption of one company by another, the former losing its legal identity, and latter retaining its own name and identity and acquiring assets, liabilities, franchises, and powers of former, and absorbed company ceasing to exist as separate business entity. Morris v. Investment Life Ins. Co., 27 Ohio St.2d 26, 272 N.E.2d 105, 108, 109, 56 O.O.2d 14. It differs from a consolidation wherein all the corporations terminate their existence and become parties to a new one.

The antitrust laws seek not only to control existing monopolies but also to discourage the acquisition of market power. Historically, mergers have provided an important route to positions of market dominance. Accordingly, Congress has required all mergers, whether vertical, horizontal, or conglomerate, to be scrutinized under the provisions of section 7 of the Clayton Act. 15 U.S.C.A. § 18. See also Kefauver-Celler Act; Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvement Act.

Accounting methods. See Pooling of interests; Purchase method of accounting.

Cash merger. A merger transaction in which certain shareholders or interests in a corporation are required to accept cash for their shares while other shareholders receive shares in the continuing enterprise. Modern statutes generally authorize cash mergers, though courts test such mergers on the basis of fairness and, in some states, business purpose.

Conglomerate merger. Merger of corporations which are neither competitors nor potential or actual customers or suppliers of each other. U. S. v. General Dynamics Corp., D.C.N.Y., 258 F.Supp. 36, 56. One in which there are no economic relationships between the acquirers and the acquired firm. Kennecott Copper Corp. v. F. T. C., C.A.Colo., 467 F.2d 67, 75. A conglomerate merger is one that is neither vertical nor horizontal and can be of any of three types. A geographic extension merger occurs when the acquiring firm, by merger, extends its dominance to an adjacent geographic market. See, e.g., United States v. Marine Bancorporation, 418 U.S. 602, 94 S.Ct. 2866, 41 L.Ed.2d 978. A product extension merger occurs when the merger joins firms in related product markets. See, e.g., FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co. (Clorox), 386 U.S. 568, 87 S.Ct. 1224, 18 L.Ed.2d 303.

A "pure" conglomerate merger occurs when the two merging firms operate in unrelated markets having no functional economic relationship. See, e.g., United States v. International Tel. & Tel. Corp., 324 F.Supp. 19. These categories are not mutually exclusive: for example, a merger may have both horizontal and vertical aspects. See, e.g., Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 82 S.Ct. 1502, 8 L.Ed.2d 510.
Defacto merger. A transaction that has the economic effect of a statutory merger but is cast in the form of an acquisition of assets or an acquisition of voting stock and is treated by a court as if it were a statutory merger. Occurs where one corporation is absorbed by another, but without compliance with statutory requirements for a merger. Arnold Graphics Industries, Inc. v. Independent Agent Center, Inc., C.A.N.Y., 775 F.2d 38, 42.

Down stream merger. The merger of a parent corporation into its subsidiary.

Horizontal merger. Merger between business competitors, such as manufacturers of the same type products or distributors selling competing products in the same market area. See also Vertical merger.

Short form merger. A number of states provide special rules for the merger of a subsidiary corporation into its parent where the parent owns substantially all of the shares of the subsidiary. This is known as a "short-form" merger. Short-form mergers under such special statutes may generally be effected by: (a) adoption of a resolution of merger by the parent corporation, (b) mailing a copy of the plan of merger to all shareholders of record of the subsidiary, and (c) filing the executed articles of merger with the secretary of state and his issuance of a certificate of merger. This type of merger is less expensive and time consuming than the normal type merger. See e.g. Rev. Model Bus. Corp. Act § 11.04.

Triangular merger. A method of amalgamation of two corporations by which the disappearing corporation is merged into a subsidiary of the surviving corporation and the shareholders of the disappearing corporation receive shares of the surviving corporation. In a reverse triangular merger the subsidiary is merged into the disappearing corporation so that it becomes a wholly owned subsidiary of the surviving corporation.

Up stream merger. A merger of a subsidiary corporation into its parent. See Short form merger, above.

Criminal law. When a man commits a major crime which includes a lesser offense, or commits a felony which includes a tort against a private person, the latter is merged in the former.

Divorce law. Substitution of rights and duties under judgment or decree for those under property settlement agreement. Roesbery v. Roesbery, 88 Idaho 514, 401 P.2d 805, 807.

Judgments. A valid and personal judgment merges the original claim in the judgment and thereafter suit is brought on the judgment and not on the original claim. Restatement of Judgments § 45, comment a.

Law and equity. Under Rules of Civil Procedure, there is now only one form of action, the "civil action," in which the parties may be given both legal and equitable relief. Fed.R.Civil P. 2.

Property interests. It is a general principle of law that where a greater estate and a less coincide and meet in one and the same person, without any intermediate estate, the less is immediately annihilated, or, in the law phrase, is said to be merged; that is, sunk or drowned, in the greater. Thus, if there be tenant for years, and the reversion in fee-simple descends to or is purchased by him, the term of years is merged in the inheritance, and shall never exist any more. Similarly, a lesser interest in real estate merges into a greater interest when lessee purchases leased property.

Rights. This term, as applied to rights, is equivalent to "confusio" in the Roman law, and indicates that where the qualities of debtor and creditor become united in the same individual, there arises a confusion of rights which extinguishes both qualities; whence, also, merger is often called "extinguishment."

Rights of action. In the law relating to rights of action, when a person takes or acquires a remedy or security of a higher nature, in legal estimation, than the one which he already possesses for the same right, then his remedies in respect of the minor right or security merge in those attaching to the higher one; as, for example, where a claim is merged in the judgment recovered upon it.

Sentences. If a defendant is charged in two duplicitous indictments with commission of two crimes, he may be sentenced on conviction of the more serious crime but not on both indictments, e.g. possession of marihuana and possession of the same marihuana at the same time and place with intent to sell. Kuklis v. Com., 361 Mass. 302, 280 N.E.2d 155.

Title. See Property interests, above.

Merger clause. A provision in a contract to the effect that the written terms may not be varied by prior or oral agreements because all such agreements have been merged into the written document. See U.C.C. § 2–202.

Meridians. These are imaginary north and south lines which are used in the Governmental Survey System. These intersect the base line to form a starting point for the measurement of land under that system.

Meritorious /mərɪtərɪəs/. Possessing or characterized by "merit" in the legal sense of the word. See Merits.

Meritorious cause of action. This description is sometimes applied to a person with whom the ground of action, or the consideration, originated or from whom it moved. For example, where a cause of action accrues to a woman while single, and is sued for, after her marriage, by her husband and herself jointly, she is called the "meritorious cause of action."

Meritorious consideration. One founded upon some moral obligation; a valuable consideration in the second degree.

Meritorious defense. See Defense.

Merits. As a legal term, refers to the strict legal rights of the parties. Mink v. Keim, 266 App.Div. 184, 41
N.Y.S.2d 769, 771. The substance, elements, or grounds of a cause of action or defense. See Judgment on the merits.

Merit system. System used by federal and state governments for hiring and promoting governmental employees to civil service positions on basis of competence. See also Civil service; Merit Systems Protection Board.

Merit Systems Protection Board. As successor to the U.S. Civil Service Commission, this Board has responsibility for hearing and adjudicating appeals by Federal employees of adverse personnel actions, such as removals, suspensions, and demotions. It also resolves cases involving reemployment rights, the denial of periodic step-increases in pay, actions against administrative law judges, and charges of merit system violations. The Board has the authority to enforce its decisions and to order corrective and disciplinary actions. An employee or applicant for employment involved in an appealable order corrective and disciplinary action that also involves an allegation of discrimination may ask the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to review a Board decision. Final decisions and orders of the Board can be appealed to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit.

Mero motu /mirow mówtuw/. See Ex mero motu; Mere motion.

Merton, statute of /státyuwyt av mártan/. An old English statute, relating to dower, legitimacy, wardships, procedure, inclosure of common, and usury. It was passed in 1235 (20 Hen. III), and was named from Merton, in Surrey, where parliament sat that year.

Migratory game. Generally applied to birds which move from one place to another in season.

Mile. A measure of length or distance, containing 8 furlongs, or 1,760 yards, or 5,280 feet; or 1,609 meters. This is the measure of an ordinary or statute mile; but the nautical or geographical mile contains 6,080 feet. See Land measure.

Mileage. Allowance for traveling expenses at certain rate per mile. Especially to members of legislative bodies, witnesses, sheriffs, and bailiffs. See also Per diem.

Mileage tax. License tax imposed upon intrastate business of transportation for compensation on public roads of state.

Miles /máylyiz/. Lat. In civil law, a soldier.

In old English law, a knight, because military service was part of the feudal tenure. Also a tenant by military service, not a knight. 1 Bl.Comm. 404.

Milestones. Stones set up to mark the miles on a road or railway.

Military /mílatériy/. To be knighted.

Military. Pertaining to war or to the army; concerned with war. Also the whole of military forces, staff, etc. under the Department of Defense.

Military appeals. See Court of Military Appeals.

Military base. See Base.

Military boards. A military board is a body of persons appointed to act as a fact finding agency or as an advisory body to the appointing authority. A military board may be appointed to investigate, advise, administer or adjudicate. Military boards may act as investigating committees to determine the cause of property damage, injury, or death, or to inquire into loss or misappropriation of property or funds. Boards may also act as administrative tribunals to examine the applicable facts, hear evidence, and make determination concerning personnel matters such as promotion, separation, and retirement.

Military bounty land. See Bounty.

Military commissions. Courts whose procedure and composition are modeled upon courts-martial, being the tribunals by which alleged violations of martial law are tried and determined. The membership of such commissions is commonly made up of civilians and army officers. They are probably not known outside of the United States, and were first used by General Scott during the Mexican war.

Military court of inquiry. A military court of special and limited jurisdiction, convened to investigate specific matters. 10 U.S.C.A. § 935. Proceedings do not include a trial of issues in which anyone is formally a party; its traditional function has been to investigate and advise whether further proceedings shall be had. U.S. v. Shibley, D.C.Cal. 1953, 112 F.Supp. 734, 742-743.

Military courts. Courts convened subject to the Code of Military Justice (10 U.S.C.A. § 801 et seq.); e.g. Courts-martial, Court of Military Review, Military Court of Inquiry; Court of Military Appeals.

Military feuds. See Feud.

Military government. Such as is exercised by military commander under direction of President in time of foreign war without the boundaries of the United States, or in time of rebellion and civil war within states or districts occupied by rebels. Such supersedes local law. Hammond v. Squier, D.C.Wash., 51 F.Supp. 227, 230. See Military law.

Military jurisdiction. There are under the Constitution, three kinds of military jurisdiction: one to be exercised both in peace and war; another to be exercised in time of foreign war without the boundaries of the United States or in time of rebellion and civil war within states or districts occupied by rebels; and a third to be exercised in time of rebellion and civil war within states or districts occupied by rebels treated as belligerents; and a third to be exercised in time of rebellion and civil war within states or districts occupied by rebels. Such supersedes local law. Hammond v. Squier, D.C.Wash., 51 F.Supp. 227, 230. See Military law.

Military offenses. Those offenses which are cognizable by the military courts, as insubordination, sleeping on guard, desertion, etc. See Code of Military Justice; Court Martial.

Military office. See Office.

Military officer. See Officer.

Military Review, Courts of. Each armed service has a Court of Military Review which reviews courts-martial decisions. 10 U.S.C.A. § 866. Further appeal is to the U.S. Court of Military Appeals. See Court of Military Appeals.

Military tenures. The various tenures by knight-service, grand-serjeanty, cornage, etc., were frequently called "military tenures," from the nature of the services for which they were involved.

Military testament. See Testament.

Militia /mil'itiyz/. Lat. Knights.

Mill. One-tenth of one cent. Many states use a mill rate to compute property taxes. See Mill rate.

Miller Act. Federal statute which requires the posting of performance and payment bonds before an award may be made for a contract beyond a certain amount for construction, alteration or repair of a public building or public work of the United States government. 40 U.S.C.A. §§ 270a-270f.

Miller-Tydings Act. Federal Act (15 U.S.C. § 1) granting anti-trust exemption to State laws which permitted resale price maintenance agreements (fair trade laws). This exemption was repealed in 1975.

Milling in transit. A special privilege allowable at certain designated points, whereby the carrier, having transported grain to a shipper's mill, agrees that the shipper may reship the meal without charge and for which extra compensation is usually exacted by interstate carriers under control of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mill power. An expression designating a unit of water power. It is the descriptive term used to rate water power for the purpose of renting it. It indicates the amount of power due to a stated quantity of water used on the particular fall. It is a term of practical convenience in defining the quantity and weight of water available for use by the lessee. The actual amount of horse power developed may vary with the efficiency of the water wheels and other appliances supplied by the lessee.

Mill privilege. The right of a riparian proprietor to erect a mill on his land and to use the power furnished by the stream for the purpose of operating the mill, with due regard to the rights of other owners above and below him on the stream.

Mill rate. Tax applied to real property. Each mill represents $1 of tax assessment per $1000 of property value assessment. See also Mill.

Mill site. A parcel of land on or contiguous to a watercourse, suitable for the erection and operation of a mill operated by the power furnished by the stream. Specifically, in mining law, a parcel of land constituting a portion of the public domain, located and claimed by the owner of a mining claim under the laws of the United States (or purchased by him from the government and patented, not exceeding five acres in extent, not including any mineral land, not contiguous to the vein or lode), and occupied and used for the purpose of a mill or for other uses directly connected with the operation of the mine; or a similar parcel of land located and actually used for the purpose of a mill or reduction plant, but not by the owner of an existing mine nor in connection with any particular mining claim. See 30 U.S.C.A. § 42.

Mina /máyna/. In old English law, a measure of corn or grain.

Minage /mányaj/. A toll or duty paid for selling corn by the mina.

Minare /manériy/. In old records, to mine or dig mines. Minator, a miner.

Minatur innocentibus qui parcit nocentibus /manéytañ inséntatáb kaźw pársat naséntatás/. He threatens the innocent who spares the guilty.

Mind. In its legal sense, “mind” means only the ability to will, to direct, to permit, or to assent.

Mind and memory. A phrase applied to testators, denoting the possession of mental capacity to make a will. In other words, one ought to be capable of making his will, with an understanding of the nature of the business in which he is engaged, a recollection of the property he means to dispose of, of the persons who are the objects of his bounty, and the manner in which it is to be distributed between them. See also Capacity.

Mind, state of. Evidence is admissible to show a person's state of mind when this issue is material and relevant to the case; e.g. statements indicating despair may be admissible on issue of suicide. Fed.Evid.R. 803(3). See also Mental state.

Mine. An excavation in the earth from which ores, coal, or other mineral substances are removed by digging or other mining methods, and in its broader sense it denotes the vein, lode, or deposit of minerals. Atlas Milling Co. v. Jones, C.C.A.Okl., 115 F.2d 61, 63. It may include open cut, strip, or hydraulic methods of mining. Rudd v. Hayden, 265 Ky. 495, 97 S.W.2d 35, 37.

Mineral, adj. Relating to minerals or the process and business of mining; bearing or producing valuable minerals.

Mineral, n. Any valuable inert or lifeless substance formed or deposited in its present position through natural agencies alone, and which is found either in or upon the soil of the earth or in the rocks beneath the soil.

Any natural constituent of the crust of the earth, inorganic or fossil, homogeneous in structure, having a definite chemical composition and known crystallization. The term includes all fossil bodies or matters dug out of mines or quarries, whence anything may be dug, such as beds of stone which may be quarried.

The word is not a definite term and is susceptible of limitations or extensions according to intention with which it is used. In its ordinary and common meaning it is a comprehensive term including every description of stone and rock deposit whether containing metallic or nonmetallic substances. West Virginia Dept. of Highways v. Farmer, 159 W.Va. 823, 226 S.E.2d 717, 719. Standing alone it might by itself embrace the soil, hence include sand and gravel, or, under a strict definition, it might be limited to metallic substances. Puget Mill Co. v. DuEcY, 1 Wash.2d 421, 96 P.2d 571, 573, 574. The term "mineral" as it is used in the public land laws is more restricted than it is when used in some other respects. Its definition has presented many difficulties. It has been held that for purposes of mining laws, a mineral is whatever is recognized as mineral by the standard authorities on the subject. United States v. Toole, D.C.Mont., 224 F.Supp. 440, 444.

Mineral deed. A realty conveyance involving a severance from fee of present title to minerals in place, either effecting such severance in first instance or conveying part of such mineral ownership previously severed from the fee. Hickey v. Dirks, 156 Kan. 326, 133 P.2d 107, 109, 110.

Mineral district. A term occasionally used in acts of congress, designating in a general way those portions or regions of the country where valuable minerals are mostly found, or where the business of mining is chiefly carried on, but carrying no very precise meaning and not a known term of the law.

Mineral land entry. See Entry.

Mineral lands. Lands containing deposits of valuable, useful, or precious minerals in such quantities as to justify expenditures in the effort to extract them, and which are more valuable for the minerals they contain than for agricultural or other uses. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Soderberg, 188 U.S. 526, 23 S.Ct. 365, 47 L.Ed. 575; Deffeeback v. Hawke, 115 U.S. 392, 6 S.Ct. 95, 29 L.Ed. 423. Lands on which metals or minerals have been discovered in rock in place. Such lands include not merely metaliferous lands, but all such as are chiefly valuable for their deposits of mineral character, which are useful in arts or valuable for purposes of manufacture, Dunbar Lime Co. v. Utah-Idaho Sugar Co., C.C.A. Utah, 17 F.2d 351, 354; and embrace not only those which the lexicon defines as "mineral", but, in addition, such as are valuable for deposits of marble, slate, petroleum, asphaltum, and even guano. United States v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 311 U.S. 317, 61 S.Ct. 264, 284, 85 L.Ed. 210.

Mineral lease. An agreement permitting use of land to explore, and then, if mineral is discovered, giving right to take mineral either for definite term or so long as it can be produced in paying quantities upon reserved royalty. Gordon v. Empire Gas & Fuel Co., C.C.A.Tex., 63 F.2d 487, 488. A mineral lease so characterized as a real right, is merely a contract which permits the lessee to explore for minerals on the land of the lessor in consideration of the payment of a rental and/or bonuses. Prestridge v. Humble Oil & Refining Co., La.App., 131 So.2d 810, 820. See also Mining lease.

Mineral lode. A mineral bed of rock with definite boundaries in a general mass of the mountain and also any zone or belt of mineralized rock lying within boundaries clearly separating it from the neighboring rock.

Mineral right. An interest in minerals in land, with or without ownership of the surface of the land. A right to take minerals or a right to receive a royalty. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Strohacker, 202 Ark. 645, 152 S.W.2d 557, 561.

Mineral servitude. The right to exploit or develop minerals. Frost Lumber Industries v. Republic Production Co., C.C.A.La., 112 F.2d 462, 466.

Minerator /mínérēyat/. In old records, a miner.

Miner's inch. See Inch.

Minimal contacts. See Minimum contacts.

Minima pœna corporalis est major qualibet pecunia /mínámə píyna körpərálës ëst méjërə kwələbət pokəuyówiëriə/. The smallest corporal punishment is greater than any pecuniary one.

Mini-maxi. An underwriting arrangement with a broker requiring the broker to sell the minimum on an all-or-none basis and the balance on a best-efforts basis.

Minime mutanda sunt quæ certam habuerunt interpretationem /mínimi miyuwténdə sánt kwí sártam həbyuwišánt antəprəṭəšíyównəm/. Things which had had a certain interpretation [whose interpretation has been settled, as by common opinion] are not to be altered.

Miniment /mínamənt/. An old form of muniment (q.v.).

Minimum charge. The lowest tariff which may be charged to a customer of a public utility or common carrier regardless of the amount of service rendered.

Minimum. The least quantity assignable, admissible or possible in given case and is opposed to maximum.

Board of Ed. of City of Rockford v. Page, 33 Ill.2d 372, 211 N.E.2d 361, 363.

Minimum contacts. A doctrine referring to the minimum due process requirement for subjecting a non-resident civil defendant to a court's personal jurisdiction. The defendant must have sufficient contacts with the forum state such that maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice. International Shoe Co. v. State of Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 66 S.Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed. 95. It exists when a defendant takes purposeful and affirmative action, the effect of which is to cause business activity, foreseen by the defendant, in the forum state. Mississippi Interstate Exp., Inc. v. Transpo, Inc., C.A.Miss., 681 F.2d 1003, 1007. See also Doing business; Long arm statutes.

Minimum est nihil proximum /mínäməm ëst náy-(h)əlow próksəməm/. The smallest is next to nothing.

Minimum fee schedules. Schedules of fees which may be charged by lawyers and published generally by bar associations for guidance of the members of the local bar. The trend has been to abolish such schedules as being in violation of the anti-trust laws. Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar Ass'n, 421 U.S. 773, 95 S.Ct. 2004, 44 L.Ed.2d 572.

Minimum lot. The least amount of square footage required for a lot to be approved under local zoning laws.

Minimum royalty clause. Provision in royalty agreement which prescribes a fixed obligation of the licensee regardless of whether the invention is used or not.

Minimum sentence. The least severe sentence which a judge may impose.

Minimum tax. See Alternative minimum tax.

Minimum wage. The minimum hourly rate of compensation for labor, as established by federal statute and required of employers engaged in businesses which affect interstate commerce. 29 U.S.C.A. § 206 et seq. Most states also have similar statutes governing minimum wages (e.g., Mass.G.L. ch. 151). The least wage on which an ordinary individual can be self-sustaining and obtain the ordinary requirements of life. Associated Industries of Oklahoma v. Industrial Welfare Commission, 185 Okl. 177, 90 P.2d 899, 913. See also Fair Labor Standards Act.

Mining. The process or business of extracting from the earth the precious or valuable metals, either in their native state or in their ores.

Mining claim. A parcel of land, containing precious metal in its soil or rock, and appropriated by an individual, according to established rules, by the process of "location." St. Louis Smelting & Refining Co. v. Kemp, 104 U.S. 636, 26 L.Ed. 875. 30 U.S.C.A. § 21 et seq.

A mining claim on public lands is a possessory interest in land that is mineral in character and as respects which discovery within the limits of the claim has been made. Best v. Humboldt Placer Min. Co., 371 U.S. 334, 83 S.Ct. 379, 382, 9 L.Ed.2d 380.

See also Mining location; Placer claim.
Mining district. A section of country usually designated by name and described or understood as being confined within certain natural boundaries, in which the precious metals (or their ores) are found in paying quantities, and which is worked therefor, under rules and regulations prescribed or agreed upon by the miners therein. See also Mining location.

Mining lease. A lease of a mine or mining claim or a portion thereof, to be worked by the lessee, usually under conditions as to the amount and character of work to be done, and reserving compensation to the lessor either in the form of a fixed rent or a royalty on the tonnage of ore mined, and which (as distinguished from a license) conveys to the lessee an interest or estate in the land, and (as distinguished from an ordinary lease) conveys not merely the temporary use and occupation of the land, but a portion of the land itself, that is, the ore in place and unsevered and to be extracted by the lessee. See also Mineral lease.

Mining location. The act of appropriating and claiming, according to certain established rules and local customs, a parcel of land of defined area, upon or in which one or more of the precious metals or their ores have been discovered, and which constitutes a portion of the public domain, with the declared intention to occupy and work it for mining purposes under the implied license of the United States. Also the parcel of land so occupied and appropriated. St. Louis Smelting & Refining Co. v. Kemp, 104 U.S. 636, 26 L.Ed. 875. Essential to any valid location is the discovery of a valuable mineral deposit. Upon making a valid location the locator has vested rights in the land which are property in the true sense of the word. Cole v. Ralph, 252 U.S. 286, 295, 40 S.Ct. 321, 325, 64 L.Ed. 567. Once the land is patented, the land is private property. See also Location (Mining law).

Mining partnership. An association of several owners of a mine for co-operation in working the mine. Kahn v. Central Smelting Co., 102 U.S. 645, 26 L.Ed. 266; Kimberly v. Arms, 129 U.S. 512, 9 S.Ct. 355, 32 L.Ed. 764. Generally, where the parties co-operate in developing a lease for oil and gas, each agreeing to pay his part of the expenses and to share in the profits or losses, a "mining partnership" exists. Continental Supply Co. v. Dickson Oil Co., 194 Okl. 660, 153 P.2d 1017, 1019. A special type of partnership different in many respects from ordinary or trading partnerships. Meister v. Farrow, 109 Mont. 1, 92 P.2d 753, 757, 758, 760, 761.

Mining rent. Consideration given for a mining lease, whether such lease creates a tenancy, conveys a fee, or grants an incorporeal right or a mere license.

Minister. Person acting as agent for another in performance of specified duties or orders. A person ordained according to the usages of some church or associated body of Christians for the preaching of the gospel and filling the pastoral office. In England, holder of government office; e.g. Prime Minister.

Foreign minister. An ambassador, minister, or envoy from a foreign government.

International law. An officer appointed by the government of one nation as a mediator or arbitrator between two other nations who are engaged in a controversy, with their consent, with a view to effecting an amicable adjustment of the dispute.

A general name given to the diplomatic representatives sent by one state to another, including ambassadors, envoys, and residents.

Public law. One of the highest functionaries in the organization of civil government, standing next to the sovereign or executive head, acting as his immediate auxiliary, and being generally charged with the administration of one of the great bureaus or departments of the executive branch of government. In England, otherwise called a "cabinet minister," "secretary of state," or "secretary of a department". See also Ministry.

Public minister. A general term comprehending all the higher classes of diplomatic representatives,—as ambassadors, envoys, residents,—but not including the commercial representatives, such as consuls.

Ministerial act. /minəstər(ɪ)l/. That which is done under the authority of a superior; opposed to judicial. That which involves obedience to instructions, but demands no special discretion, judgment, or skill. Arrow Exp. Forwarding Co. v. Iowa State Commerce Commission, 256 Iowa 1088, 130 N.W.2d 451, 453. An act is "ministerial" when its performance is positively commanded and so plainly prescribed as to be free from doubt. J.E. Brennan Co. v. Schramm, D.C.Pa., 473 F.Supp. 1316, 1319. Official's duty is "ministerial" when it is absolute, certain and imperative, involving merely execution of a specific duty arising from fixed and designated facts. Long v. Seabrook, 260 S.C. 562, 197 S.E.2d 659, 662.

One which a person or board performs under a given state of facts in a prescribed manner in obedience to the mandate of legal authority without regard to or the exercise of his or their own judgment upon the propriety of the act being done. State, Dept. of Mental Health v. Allen, Ind.App., 427 N.E.2d 2, 4; Gibson v. Winterset Community School Dist., 258 Iowa 440, 138 N.W.2d 112, 115. Compare Discretionary acts. See also Mandamus.

Ministerial duty. One regarding which nothing is left to discretion—a simple and definite duty, imposed by law, and arising under conditions admitted or proved to exist.

Ministerial function. A function as to which there is no occasion to use judgment or discretion. Hood Motor Co., Inc. v. Lawrence, La., 320 So.2d 111, 115. See also Ministerial act.

Ministerial office. See Office.

Ministerial officer. One whose duties are purely ministerial, as distinguished from executive, legislative, or judicial functions, requiring obedience to the mandates of superiors and not involving the exercise of judgment or discretion.

Ministerial power. See Power.
Ministerial trust. See Trust.

Ministers plenipotentiary /minæstræ plænæpætæn(t)-sharəri/ "shiyehri/. Ministers plenipotentiary possess full powers, and are of much greater distinction than simple ministers. These are without any particular attribution of rank and character, but by custom are now placed immediately below the ambassador, or on a level with the envoy extraordinary.

Ministrant /minæstrænt/. The party cross-examining a witness was so called, under the old system of the ecclesiastical courts.

Ministri regis /minɪstrɪ ˈrɪdʒɪs/. Lat. In old English law, ministers of the king, applied to the judges of the realm, and to all those who hold ministerial offices in the government.

Ministry. The term as used in England is wider than Cabinet and includes all the holders of public office who come in and go out with the Prime Minister. In this respect it may be contrasted with the Permanent Civil Service, whose tenure is independent of public changes. The term stands for a department of government for which a minister is responsible to Parliament. The first English Ministry as now understood was formed after the general election of 1696.

Mini-trial. A private, voluntary, informal form of dispute resolution in which attorneys for each disputant make a brief presentation of his or her best case before officials for each side who have authority to settle. Usually, a neutral, third-party advisor is present at the hearing. Following the attorneys' presentations, the principals attempt to settle the dispute. The neutral third-party may be asked to render a non-binding advisory opinion regarding the outcome of the dispute if it were litigated.

Minor. An infant or person who is under the age of legal competence. A term derived from the civil law, which described a person under a certain age as less than so many years. In most states, a person is no longer a minor after reaching the age of 18 (though state laws might still prohibit certain acts until reaching a greater age; e.g., purchase of liquor). See also Delinquent child; infancy; Juvenile; Legal age; Majority.

Also, less; of less consideration; lower; a person of inferior condition.

Minor àtæs /mæynər ˈɪtəs/. Lat. Minority or infancy. Literally, lesser age.

Minor ante tempus agere non potest in casu proprietatis nec etiam convenire; differetur usque àtatem; sed non cadit breve /mæynər ˈɛnti tiˈmpɔs əˈʃirɪə nɔn ˈpɔwtəst ɪn kɛˈʃiljuə prəˈprɛʃətətʃəs nɛk ˈɛʃiˈjem ˈkʊvənəriəli; dəˈfɪərətər æskwɪə ætətəm; sɛd nɔn ˈkɛdət bɾɪviə/. A minor before majority cannot act in a case of property, nor even agree; it should be deferred until majority; but the writ does not fail.

Minor regalia /mænər ˈreɡəliə/. In English law, the lesser prerogatives of the crown, including the rights of the revenue.

Minor deviation rule. Under "minor deviation rule" for determining when the deviation from purpose and use for which permission to drive insured vehicle is granted will preclude coverage under omnibus clause of policy, if bailee's use is not gross, substantial, or major violation, even though it may have amounted to deviation, protection is still afforded to bailee under omnibus clause. James v. Aetna Life & Cas., 1148, 26 Ariz.App. 137, 546 P.2d 1146.

Minor dispute. A "minor dispute" within the meaning of the Railway Labor Act is one which relates to the interpretation of an existing labor management contract and is directed to rights already vested, in contrast to a major dispute, which involves the formation of the collective bargaining agreement or the substantial alteration of an existing agreement and which involves the acquisition of rights. Gregory v. Burlington Northern R. Co., D.Minn., 638 F.Supp. 538, 541. Compare Major (or minor) dispute.

Minor fact. In the law of evidence, a relative, collateral, or subordinate fact; a circumstance. Compare Material fact. .

Minority. The state or condition of a minor; infancy. Opposite of "majority." See Minor. Compare Legal age; Majority.

The smaller number of votes of a deliberative assembly; opposed to majority (q.v.).

In context of Constitution's guarantee of equal protection, "minority" does not have merely numerical denotation but refers to identifiable and specially disadvantaged group. Graves v. Barnes, D.C.Tex., 343 F.Supp. 704, 730.

Minority opinion. See Opinion.

Minority stockholder. Those stockholders of a corporation who hold so few shares in relation to the total outstanding that they are unable to control the management of the corporation or to elect directors.

Minor jurare non potest /mæynər ˈʃəriə nɔn ˈpɔwtəst/. A minor cannot make oath. An infant cannot be sworn on a jury.

Minor minorem custodire non debet, alios enim præsumitur male regere qui seipsum regere nescit /mæynər ˈmənər ˈkɔstədəriə nɔn ˈdɛbɛt, əˈliəs ənəm prəˈsəmɪtər ˈmɔl ˈrɛgərə ˈnuːsətɪə rəˈɡɛrə ˈnɛsət/. A minor ought not to be guardian to a minor, for he who knows not how to govern himself is presumed to be unfit to govern others.

Minor non tenetur respondere durante minori àtætæ, nisi in causa dotis, propter favorem /mæynər nɔn ˈtɛnətər ˈrɛspəndərə ˈdərəntəs duˈɾætəs, prəˈpɔrt fəˈvɔrmər/. A minor is not bound to reply during his minority, except as a matter of favor in a cause of dower.

Minor offenses. See Petty offense.
Minor qui infra ætatem 12 annorum fuerit utegarini non potest, nec extra legem ponit, quia ante talem ætatem, non est sub lege aliqua, nec in decennia /mānyār kway infra stētām d(y)uwendām ānōrām fūyurāstrāstāgāryāt nōn pōwstāt, nēk ēkstrā līyānām pōw-nayā, kwayā žēnti tymālāstātymā, nōn ēst sō līyājī ālākā nēk īn dāsēnā/. A minor who is under twelve years of age cannot be outlawed, nor placed without the law, because before such age he is not under any law, nor in a decennary.

Minor septemdecim annis non admittitur fore execucr. Mintage /mint/. Minor qui infra retatem nōn ēditi tār foriy. Mint-mark. A place designated by law where bullion is coined into money under authority of the government.

MINORS' ESTATES

Minors' estates. Property of those who have not reached their legal majority and which must be administered after their death or during their lives under a court appointed fiduciary.

Mint. The place designated by law where bullion is coined into money under authority of the government.

Mintage /mintaj/. The charge or commission taken by the mint as a consideration for coining into money the bullion which is brought to it for that purpose; the same as "seigniorage."

Also that which is coined or stamped as money; the product of the mint.

Mint-mark. The masters and workers of the English mint, in the indentures made with them, agreed "to make a privy mark in the money they make, of gold and silver, so that they may know which moneys were of their own making."

Mint-master. One who manages the coinage.

Minus /māynas/. Lat. In the civil law, less; less than.

Miscalculation. A mischance or accident; a casualty caused by the act of one person inflicting injury upon another. Homicide "by misadventure" occurs where a person, doing a lawful act, without any intention of harm, hurt, unfortunately kills another.

Miscallege /misalēj/. To cite falsely as a proof or argument.

Misapplication. Improper, illegal, wrongful, or corrupt use of application of funds, property, etc. See also Misappropriation.

Misadventure. A miscalculation or accident; a casualty caused by the act of one person inflicting injury upon another. Homicide "by misadventure" occurs where a person, doing a lawful act, without any intention of harm, hurt, unfortunately kills another.

Miranda hearing. A pre-trial proceeding to determine whether there has been compliance with the requirements of the Miranda Rule (q.v.). The outcome will decide whether the prosecution will be permitted to introduce into evidence statements of the defendant made during custodial interrogation. See Miranda Rule; Suppression hearing.

Miranda Rule /mārāndā rōwl/. Prior to any custodial interrogation (that is, questioning initiated by law enforcement officers after a person is taken into custody or otherwise deprived of his freedom in any significant way) the person must be warned: 1. That he has a right to remain silent; 2. That any statement he does make may be used as evidence against him; 3. That he has a right to the presence of an attorney; 4. That if he cannot afford an attorney, one will be appointed for him prior to any questioning if he so desires.

Unless and until these warnings or a waiver of these rights are demonstrated at the trial, no evidence obtained in the interrogation may be used against the accused. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 444, 478, 479, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 1612, 1630, 16 L.Ed.2d 694.

See also In custody; Interrogation.

Misa /māyzy/. In old English law, the mise or issue in a writ of right; a compact or agreement; a form of compromise.
practices are prohibited by federal and state statutes; e.g. Fair Packaging and Labeling Act.

Miscarriage /miskærəj/miskærə/. Poor management or administration; mismanagement.

Miscarriage of justice. Decision or outcome of legal proceeding that is prejudicial or inconsistent with substantial rights of party.

As used in constitutional standard of reversible error, "miscarriage of justice" means a reasonable probability of more favorable outcome for the defendant. People v. Lopez, 251 Cal.App.2d 918, 60 Cal.Rptr. 72, 76. A miscarriage of justice, warranting reversal, should be declared only when the court, after examination of entire cause, including the evidence, is of the opinion that it is reasonably probable that a result more favorable to appealing party would have been reached in absence of the error. People v. Bernhardt, 222 C.A.2d 567, 35 Cal.Rptr. 401, 419.

Miscarriage of justice from erroneous charge to jury, under statute declaring that no judgment shall be set aside or new trial granted on basis of error which does not result in such miscarriage, results only when an erroneous charge is reasonably calculated to confuse or mislead. Marley v. Saunders, Fla., 249 So.2d 30, 35.

Miscegenation /məsəjənˈeɪʃən/missiʒə/. Mixture of races. Term formerly applied to marriage between persons of different races. Statutes prohibiting marriage between persons of different races have been held to be invalid as contrary to equal protection clause of Constitution. Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1, 87 S.Ct. 1817, 18 L.Ed.2d 1010.

MischARGE. An erroneous charge; a charge, given by a court to a jury, which involves errors for which the judgment may be reversed.

Mischief. In legislative parlance, the word is sometimes used to signify the evil or danger which a statute is intended to cure or avoid.

In the phrase "malicious mischief," (q.v.) it imports a wanton or reckless injury to persons or property.

A person is guilty of criminal mischief if he: (a) damages tangible property of another purposely, recklessly, or by negligence in the employment of fire, explosives, or other dangerous means, or (b) purposely or recklessly tampers with tangible property of another so as to endanger person or property; or (c) purposely or recklessly causes another to suffer pecuniary loss by deception or threat. Model Penal Code, § 220.3.

Misconduct. A transgression of some established and definite rule of action, a forbidden act, a dereliction from duty, unlawful behavior, willful in character, improper or wrong behavior; its synonyms are misdemeanor, misdeed, misbehavior, delinquency, impropriety, mismanagement, offense, but not negligence or carelessness. Term "misconduct" when applied to act of attorney, implies dishonest act or attempt to persuade court or jury by use of deceptive or reprehensible methods. People v. Sigal, 249 C.A.2d 299, 57 Cal.Rptr. 541, 549. Misconduct, which renders discharged employee ineligible for unemployment compensation, occurs when conduct of employee evinces willful or wanton disregard of employer's interest, as in deliberate violations, or disregard of standards of behavior which employer has right to expect of his employees, or in carelessness or negligence of such degree or recurrence as to manifest wrongful intent or evil design. Wilson v. Brown, La. App., 147 So.2d 27, 29. See also Wanton misconduct.

Misconduct in office. Any unlawful behavior by a public officer in relation to the duties of his office, willful in character. Term embraces acts which the office holder had no right to perform, acts performed improperly, and failure to act in the face of an affirmative duty to act. See also Malfeasance; Missease.

Miscontinuance. In practice, an improper continuance; want of proper form in a continuance; the same with "discontinuance."

Miscreant /mískriːənt/. In old English law, an apostate; an unbeliever; one who totally renounced Christianity. 4 Bl.Com. 44.

Misdate. A false or erroneous date affixed to a paper or document.

Misdelivery. Delivery of mail, freight, goods, or the like, to person other than authorized or specified recipient. The delivery of property by a carrier or warehouseman to a person not authorized by the owner or person to whom the carrier or warehouseman is bound by his contract to deliver it. In commercial law, refers to a bailee surrendering goods to someone other than the person entitled to them under a document covering the goods.

Misdemeanant /misdəmiːənt/. A person guilty of a misdemeanor; one sentenced to punishment upon conviction of a misdemeanor.

Misdemeanor /misdəmiːər/. Offenses lower than felonies and generally those punishable by fine, penalty, forfeiture or imprisonment otherwise than in penitentiary. Under federal law, and most state laws, any offense other than a felony is classified as a misdemeanor. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1, 19, 3401. Certain states also have various classes of misdemeanors (e.g. Class A, B, etc.). See Fed.R.Crim.P. 58 with respect to "Procedure for Misdemeanors and Other Petty Offenses". See also Degrees of crime; Infraction; Petty offense.

Misdescription. An error or falsity in the description of the subject-matter of a contract which deceives one of the parties to his injury, or is misleading in a material or substantial point. In commercial law, refers to a bailee inaccurately identifying, in a document of title, the goods received from the bailor. See also Misrepresentation.

Misdirection. An error made by a judge in instructing the jury upon the trial of a cause.

Mise /máyz/míyz/. In common law pleading, the issue in a writ of right. When the tenant in a writ of right pleads that his title is better than the demandant's, he is said to join the mise on the mere right.

Also expenses; costs; disbursements in an action.

Mise-money. In old English law, money paid by way of contract or composition to purchase any liberty, etc.

Miserable depositum /mizaréybaiy dapózátam/. Lat. In the civil law, the name of an involuntary deposit, made under pressing necessity; as, for instance, shipwreck, fire, or other inevitable calamity.

Miserere /mizaréryi/. The name and first word of one of the penitential psalms, being that which was commonly used to be given by the ordinary to such condemned malefactors as were allowed the benefit of clergy; whence it is also called the "psalm of mercy."

Misericordia /mizarékórd(i)iya/. Lat. Mercy; a fine or amerciament; an arbitrary or discretionary amerciament.

Misericordia communis /mizarékórd(i)iya kamyúynas/. In old English law, a fine set on a whole county or hundred.

Misfeasance /misfíyzâns/. The improper performance of some act which a person may lawfully do. "Nonfeasance" means the omission of an act which a person ought to do; "misfeasance" is the improper doing of an act which a person might lawfully do; and "malfeasance" is the doing of an act which a person ought not to do at all. Compare Malfeasance.

Misfeasance. See Misfeasance.

Misfortune. An adverse event, calamity, or evil fortune, arising by accident (or without the will or concurrence of him who suffers from it), and not to be foreseen or guarded against by care or prudence. In its application to the law of homicide, this term always involves the further idea that the person causing the death is not at the time engaged in any unlawful act. See also Accident.

Misjoinder. See Joinder.

Miskening /miskénig/. In Saxon and old English law, an unjust or irregular summoning to court; to speak unsteadily in court; to vary in one's plea.

Mislaid property. See Property.

Mislay. To deposit in a place not afterwards recollected; to lose anything by forgetfulness of the place where it was laid.

Misleading. Delusive; calculated to lead astray or to lead into error. A Judge's instructions which are of such a nature as to be misunderstood by the jury, or to give them a wrong impression, are said to be "misleading." See also Deception; Deceit; Misrepresentation.

Mismomer. Mistake in name; giving incorrect name to person in accusation, indictment, pleading, deed or other instrument. Under rules practice in some states, such is ground for dismissal by motion. In most states, however, as well as in the federal courts, such misnomer can be corrected by amendment of the pleadings.

When a misnomer occurs in a deed, the normal procedure is to prepare and record a correction deed. Commonly, a quit claim deed is used for this purpose.

Mispleading. Pleading incorrectly, or omitting anything in pleading which is essential to the support or defense of an action, is so called; as in the case of a plaintiff not merely stating his title in a defective manner, but setting forth a title which is essentially defective in itself; or if, to an action of debt, the defendant pleads "not guilty" instead of nil debet. Rules of Civil Procedure (in effect in the federal and many state courts) permit liberal amendment of incorrect or deficient pleadings. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 15.

Misprision. A word used to describe an offense which does not possess a specific name. United States v. Perlstein, C.C.A.N.J., 126 F.2d 789, 798. But more particularly and properly the term denotes either: (1) a contempt against the sovereign, the government, or the courts of justice, including not only contempt of court, properly so called, but also all forms of seditious or disloyal conduct and lese-majesty; (2) maladministration of public office; neglect or improper performance of official duty, including peculation of public funds; (3) neglect of light account made of a crime, that is, failure in the duty of a citizen to endeavor to prevent the commission of a crime, or, having knowledge of its commission, to fail to reveal it to the proper authorities.

Concealment of crime. See Misprision of felony.

Negative misprision. The concealment of something which ought to be revealed; that is, misprision in the third of the specific meanings given above.

Positive misprision. The commission of something which ought not to be done; that is, misprision in the first and second of the specific meanings given above.

Misprision of felony. The offense of concealing a felony committed by another, but without such previous concert with or subsequent assistance to the felon as would make the party concealing an accessory before or after the fact. United States v. Perlstein, C.C.A.N.J., 126 F.2d 789, 798. Elements of the crime are that the principal committed and completed the felony alleged, that the defendant had full knowledge of that fact, that the defendant failed to notify the authorities, and that defendant took an affirmative step to conceal the crime. U.S. v. Ciambrone, C.A.Nev., 750 F.2d 1416, 1417.

Whoever, having knowledge of the actual commission of a felony cognizable by a court of the United States, conceals and does not as soon as possible make known the same to some judge or other person in civil or military authority under the United States, is guilty of the federal crime of misprision of felony. 18 U.S.C.A. § 4.

See also Obstructing justice.
Misprision of treason. The bare knowledge and concealment of an act of treason or treasonable plot by failing to disclose it to the appropriate officials; that is, without any assent or participation therein, for if the latter elements be present the party becomes a principal. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2382.

Misreading. Reading a deed or other instrument to an illiterate or blind man (who is a party to it) in a false or deceitful manner, so that he conceives a wrong idea of its tenor or contents.

Misrecital /misrësäytal/. The erroneous or incorrect recital of a matter of fact, either in an agreement, deed, or pleading.

Misrepresentation. Any manifestation by words or other conduct by one person to another that, under the circumstances, amounts to an assertion not in accordance with the facts. An untrue statement of fact. An incorrect or false representation. That which, if accepted, leads the mind to an apprehension of a condition other and different from that which exists. Colloquially it is understood to mean a statement made to deceive or mislead.

As amounting to actual legal fraud consists of material representation of presently existing or past fact, made with knowledge of its falsity and with intention that other party rely thereon, resulting in reliance by that party to his detriment. Jewish Center of Sussex County v. Whale, 86 N.J. 619, 432 A.2d 521, 524.

In a limited sense, an intentional false statement respecting a matter of fact, made by one of the parties to a contract, which is material to the contract and influential in producing it. A "misrepresentation," which justifies the rescission of a contract, is a false statement of a substantive fact, or any conduct which leads to a belief of a substantive fact material to proper understanding of the matter in hand, made with intent to deceive or mislead.

See also Deceit; Deception; False; Fraud; Material fact; Reliance.

Insurance law. A statement of something as a fact which is untrue and material to the risk, and which assured states knowing it to be untrue and with intent to deceive, or which insured states positively as true, not knowing it to be true, and which has a tendency to mislead. One that would influence a prudent insurer in determining whether or not to accept the risk, or in fixing the amount of the premium in the event of such acceptance. See also Material fact.

Missilia /masáyl(i)ya/. In Roman law, gifts or liberalities, which the prretors and consuls were in the habit of throwing among the people.

Missing ship. In maritime law, a vessel is so called when, computed from her known day of sailing, the time that has elapsed exceeds the average duration of similar voyages at the same season of the year.

Missions. In church parlance, the establishment of churches and schools and relief depots through which are taught the principles of Christianity, the afflicted cared for, and the needy supplied.

Missura /mis(y)üra/. The ceremonies used in a Roman Catholic church to recommend and dismiss a dying person.

Mistake. Some unintentional act, omission, or error arising from ignorance, surprise, imposition, or misplaced confidence. A state of mind not in accord with reality. A mistake exists when a person, under some erroneous conviction of law or fact, does, or omits to do, some act which, but for the erroneous conviction, he would not have done or omitted. It may arise either from unconscionness, ignorance, forgetfulness, imposition, or misplaced confidence. Salazar v. Steelman, 22 Cal.App.2d 402, 71 P.2d 79, 82. See also Error; Ignorance.

Mistake of fact is a mistake not caused by the neglect of a legal duty on the part of the person making the mistake, and consisting in (1) an unconscious ignorance or forgetfulness of a fact, past or present, material to the contract; or (2) belief in the present existence of a thing material to the contract which does not exist, or in the past existence of such a thing which has not existed.

A mistake of law happens when a party, having full knowledge of the facts, comes to an erroneous conclusion as to their legal effect. It is a mistaken opinion or inference, arising from an imperfect or incorrect exercise of the judgment, upon facts, Page v. Provines, 179 Okl. 391, 66 P.2d 7, 10; and necessarily presupposes that the person forming it is in full possession of the facts. The facts precede the law, and the true and false opinion alike imply an acquaintance with them. The one is the result of a correct application of legal principles, which every man is presumed to know, and is called "law;" the other, the result of a faulty application, and is called a "mistake of law."

In criminal law, ignorance or mistake as to a matter of fact or law is a defense if: (a) the ignorance or mistake negatives the purpose, knowledge, belief, recklessness or negligence required to establish a material element of the offense; or (b) the law provides that the state of mind established by such ignorance or mistake constitutes a defense. Model Penal Code, § 2.04(1).

Mutual mistake is where the parties have a common intention, but it is induced by a common or mutual mistake. "Mutual" as used in the expression mutual mistake of fact expresses a thought of reciprocity and distinguishes it from a mistake which is a common mistake of both parties. There is something of the thought of a common mistake because it must affect both parties. Mistake of fact as ground for relief may be neither "mutual" nor common in the strict sense because it may be wholly the mistake of one of the parties, the other being wholly ignorant both of the fact upon the faith of which the other has mistakenly acted and that the other has acted upon such an understanding of the fact situation.
MISTAKE

Unilateral mistake. A mistake by only one party to an agreement and generally not a basis for relief by re-scission or reformation.

Mistery. A trade or calling.

Mistrial. An erroneous, invalid, or nugatory trial. A trial of an action which cannot stand in law because of want of jurisdiction, or a wrong drawing of jurors, or disregard of some other fundamental requisite before or during trial. Trial which has been terminated prior to its normal conclusion. A device used to halt trial proceedings when error is so prejudicial and fundamental that expenditure of further time and expense would be wasteful if not futile. Ferguson v. State, Fla., 417 So.2d 639, 641. The judge may declare a mistrial because of some extraordinary event (e.g. death of juror, or attorney), for prejudicial error that cannot be corrected at trial, or because of a deadlocked jury.

"Mistrial" is equivalent to no trial and is a nugatory trial while "new trial" recognizes a completed trial during trial. Trial which has been terminated prior to its normal conclusion. A device used to halt trial proceedings when error is so prejudicial and fundamental that expenditure of further time and expense would be wasteful if not futile. Ferguson v. State, Fla., 417 So.2d 639, 641. The judge may declare a mistrial because of some extraordinary event (e.g. death of juror, or attorney), for prejudicial error that cannot be corrected at trial, or because of a deadlocked jury.

"Mistrial" is equivalent to no trial and is a nugatory trial while "new trial" recognizes a completed trial for sufficient reasons has been set aside so that the issues may be tried de novo. People v. Jamerson, 196 Colo. 63, 580 P.2d 805, 806.

Mitigating circumstances. Such as do not constitute a justification or excuse for the offense in question, but which, in fairness and mercy, may be considered as extenuating or reducing the degree of moral culpability. For example, mitigating circumstances which will reduce degree of homicide to manslaughter are the commission of the killing in a sudden heat of passion caused by adequate legal provocation. People v. Morrin, 31 Mich.App. 301, 187 N.W.2d 434, 438.

Those that affect basis for award of exemplary damages, or reduce actual damages by showing, not that they were never suffered, but that they have been partially extinguished.

In actions for libel and slander, refer to circumstances bearing on defendant's liability for exemplary damages by reducing moral culpability, or on liability for actual damages by showing partial extinguishment thereof. The "mitigating circumstances" which the statute allows defendant in libel action to prove are those which tend to show that defendant in speaking the slanderous words acted in good faith, with honesty of purpose, and not maliciously. Roemer v. Retail Credit Co., 44 C.A.3d 926, 119 Cal.Rptr. 82, 91.

See also Comparative negligence; Extinguishing circumstances; Extraordinary circumstances.

Mitigation. To make less severe. Alleviation, reduction, abatement or diminution of a penalty or punishment imposed by law.

Mitigation of damages. Doctrine of "mitigation of damages," sometimes called doctrine of avoidable consequences, imposes on party injured by breach of contract or tort duty to exercise reasonable diligence and ordinary care in attempting to minimize his damages, or avoid aggravating the injury, after breach or injury has been inflicted and care and diligence required of him is the same as that which would be used by man of ordinary prudence under like circumstances. Darnell v. Taylor, La.App., 236 So.2d 57, 61. Mitigation of damages is an affirmative defense and applies when plaintiff fails to take reasonable actions that would tend to mitigate his injuries. Mott v. Persichetti, Colo.App., 534 P.2d 823, 825. See Restatement, Contracts § 336(1); U.C.C. § 2-603. See also Avoidable consequences doctrine.

Mitigation of punishment. A judge may reduce or order a lesser sentence in consideration of such factors as the defendant's past good behavior, his family situation, his cooperation with the police and kindred factors.

Mitior sensus /míshíyó sénsos/. Lat. The more favorable acceptance.

Mitius imperanti melius paretur /míshiýas imperántay míyíliýas parytárr/. The more mildly one commands, the better is he obeyed.

Mitter. L. Fr. To put, to send, or to pass; as, mitter l'estate, to pass the estate; mitter le droit, to pass a right. These words are used to distinguish different kinds of releases.

Mitter avant /mítaav svéánt/. L. Fr. In old practice, to put before; to present before a court; to produce in court.

Mittimus /mitímaas/. The name of a precept in writing, issuing from a court or magistrate, directed to the sheriff or other officer, commanding him to convey to the prisoner the person named therein, and to the jailer, commanding him to receive and safely keep such person until he shall be delivered by due course of law. State v. Lenihan, 151 Conn. 552, 200 A.2d 476, 478. Transcript of minutes of conviction and sentence duly certified by court clerk. United States ex rel. Chasteen v. Denemark, C.C.A.III., 138 F.2d 289, 291.

Old English law. A writ enclosing a record sent to be tried in a county palatine; it derives its name from the Latin word mittimus, "we send." It is the jury process of these counties, and commands the proper officer of the county palatine to command the sheriff to summon the jury for the trial of the cause, and to return the record, etc.

Mixed. Formed by admixture or commingling; partaking of the nature, character, or legal attributes of two or more distinct kinds or classes.

As to mixed Action; Blood relations (Mixed blood); Contract; Government; Jury; Larceny; Marriage; Nuisance; Policy; Presumption; Property; Tithes; and War, see those titles.
Mixed insurance company. One which has, at least in part, the nature of both stock and mutual companies, and in which a certain portion of the profits is divided among the stockholders and distribution of other funds is made among the insured. Ohio Farmers Indemnity Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Ohio, 108 F.2d 665, 667; Pink v. Town Taxi Co., 138 Me. 44, 21 A.2d 656, 658, 659.

Mixed laws. A name sometimes given to those which concern both persons and property.

Mixed question of law and fact. A question depending for solution on questions of both law and fact, but is really a question of either law or fact to be decided by either judge or jury.

Mixed questions. This phrase may mean either those which arise from the conflict of foreign and domestic laws, or questions arising on a trial involving both law and fact.

Mixed subjects of property. Such as fall within the definition of things real, but which are attended, nevertheless, with some of the legal qualities of things personal, as emblems, fixtures, and shares in public undertakings, connected with land. Besides these, there are others which, though things personal in point of definition, are, in respect of some of their legal qualities, of the nature of things real; such as animals force nature, charters and deeds, court rolls, and other evidences of the land, together with the chests in which they are contained, ancient family pictures, ornaments, tombstones, coats of armor, with pennons and other ensigns, and especially heirlooms.

Mixtion /miks(h)chan/. The mixture or confusion of goods or chattels belonging severally to different owners, in such a way that they can no longer be separated or distinguished; as where two measures of wine belonging to different persons are poured together into the same cask. See also Commingle; Fungibles.

Mixtum imperium /mikstam impiriym/. Lat. In old English law, mixed authority; a kind of civil power. A term applied by Lord Hale to the 'power' of certain subordinate civil magistrates as distinct from 'jurisdiction.'

M'Naghten Rule. The test applied in a number of the states for the defense of insanity. This test, as prescribed by statute or case law, has a number of variations in the respective states applying such. Under M'Naghten test or rule, an accused is not criminally responsible if, at the time of committing the act, he was laboring under such a defect of reason from disease of the mind as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or if he did know it that he did not know he was doing what was wrong. M'Naghten's Case, 8 Eng.Rep. 718 (1843). State v. Johnson, 383 A.2d 1012, 1022.

The standard under the "M'Naghten insanity" test to determine whether a person is sane is did the defendant have sufficient mental capacity to know and understand what he was doing, and did he know and understand that it was wrong and a violation of the rights of another. To be "sane" and thus responsible to the law for the act committed, the defendant must be able to both know and understand the nature and quality of his act and to distinguish between right and wrong at the time of the commission of the offense. People v. Crosier, 41 Cal.App.3d 712, 116 Cal.Rptr. 467, 471.

See also Insanity, supra, regarding other tests used by courts in determining criminal responsibility.

Mob. An assemblage of many people, acting in a violent and disorderly manner, defying the law, and committing, or threatening to commit, depredations upon property or violence to persons.

The word, in legal use, is practically synonymous with "riot," but the latter is the more correct term.

Mobilia /mowbiliyə/. Lat. Movables; movable things; otherwise called "res mobiles."

Mobilia non habent situm /mowbiliyə nòn hëybant sâytam/-. Movables have no situs or local habitation.

Mobilia sequuntur personam /mowbiliyə sskwântər parsównam/. Movables follow the [law of the] person.

Mock. To deride, to laugh at, to ridicule, to treat with scorn and contempt.

Modal legacy. See Legacy.

Mode. The manner in which a thing is done; as the mode of proceeding, the mode of process.

Model. A preliminary pattern or representation of something to be made or something already made. A facsimile of something invented, made on a reduced scale, in compliance with the patent laws. A replication of something made to scale. Style or design of product or item. See also Sample.

Model act. Statute proposed by the National Conference of Commissioners of Uniform State Laws for adoption by state legislatures, e.g. Uniform Commercial Code; Model Penal Code; Model Probate Code. Frequently, the state adopting the model act will modify it to some extent to meet its own needs or may adopt only a portion of such.

Model jury instructions. See Jury instructions.

Model Rules of Professional Conduct. Rules adopted by the American Bar Association in 1983, with technical amendments adopted in 1987, which provide comprehensive treatment of professional conduct in the form of rules as to what an attorney may and may not do in dealing with the court, opposing counsel, his/her client and third persons. These Rules, which replace the former ABA Code of Professional Responsibility, have been adopted by many states (usually by the state supreme court) to govern conduct of attorneys admitted to practice in the state.

Moderamen inculpatæ tutelæ /modaréyan inkalpétyilly/. Lat. In Roman law, the regulation of justifiable defense. A term used to express that degree of force in defense of the person or property which a person might safely use, although it should occasion the death of the aggressor.
Moderata misericordia /môdrâ′ētə mizərəskôrd(ī)yə/ . A writ founded on Magna Charta, which lies for him who is amerced in a court, not of record, for any transgression beyond the quality or quantity of the offense. It is addressed to the lord of the court, or his bailiff, commanding him to take a moderate amerciament of the parties.

Moderate castigavit /môdrâ′ētētētē kāstēgâvē′tē/. Lat. In old pleading, be moderately chastised. The name of a plea in trespass which justifies an alleged battery on the ground that it consisted in a moderate chastisement of the plaintiff by the defendant, which, from their relations, the latter had a legal right to inflict.

Moderator. A chairman or president of an assembly. A person appointed to preside at a popular meeting. The presiding officer of town meetings in New England is so called.

Modiatio /môwdi′ēsh(ī)yəw/. In old English law, a certain duty paid for every tare of wine.

Modica circumstantia facti jus mutat /môwda kâ sârka′mstânsh(ī)yəm fâkktâ jās mîwât/. A small circumstance attending an act may change the law.

Modification. A change; an alteration or amendment which introduces new elements into the details, or cancels some of them, but leaves the general purpose and effect of the subject-matter intact. See Amendment.

Modify. To alter; to change in incidental or subordinate features; enlarge, extend; amend; limit, reduce. Such alteration or change may be characterized, in quantitative sense, as either an increase or decrease. Johnson v. Three Bays Properties No. 2, Inc., Fla.App., 159 So.2d 924, 926. See Modification.

Modius /môwdi′yəs/. Lat. A measure. Specifically, a Roman dry measure having a capacity of about 550 cubic inches; but in medieval English law used as an approximate translation of the word "bushel."

Modius terre vel agri /môwdi′yəs tēhri′vēl āgrā/. In old English law, a quantity of ground containing in length and breadth 100 feet.

Modo et forma /môwdôw ēt fôrmə/. Lat. In manner and form. Words used in the old Latin forms of pleadings by way of traverse, and literally translated in the modern precedents, importing that the party traversing denies the allegation of the other party, not only in its general effect, but in the exact manner and form in which it is made.

Modus /môwdu′s/. Lat. In Civil law, manner; means; way.

Criminal pleading. The modus of an indictment is that part of it which contains the narrative of the commission of the crime; the statement of the mode or manner in which the offense was committed.

Ecclesiastical law. A peculiar manner of tithing, growing out of custom.

Old conveyancing. Mode; manner; the arrangement or expression of the terms of a contract or conveyance.

Also a consideration; the consideration of a conveyance, technically expressed by the word "ut".

A qualification, involving the idea of variance or departure from some general rule or form, either by way of restriction or enlargement, according to the circumstances of a particular case, the will of a donor, the particular agreement of parties, and the like.

Rank modus. One that is too large. Rankness is a mere rule of evidence, drawn from the improbability of the fact, rather than a rule of law.

Modus decimandi /môwdu′s dēsēm′mândə/. In Ecclesiastical law, a manner of tithing; a partial exemption from tithes, or a pecuniary composition prescribed by immeasurable, and of reasonable amount; for it will be invalid as a rank modus if greater than the value of the tithes in the time of Richard I.

Modus de non decimando /môwdu′s dī nôn dēs′mândon/. In Ecclesiastical law, a custom or prescription of entire exemption from the payment of tithes; this is not valid, unless in the case of abbey-lands.

Modus de non decimando non valet /môwdu′s dī nôn dēs′mândon nôn vâlət/. A modus (prescription) not to pay tithes is void.

Modus et conventio vincunt legem /môwdu′s ēt kônvĕntsh(ī)yəw vînk Kent lij′yəm/. Custom and agreement overrule law. This maxim forms one of the first principles relative to the law of contracts. The exceptions to the rule here laid down are in cases against public policy, morality, etc.

Modus habilis /môwdu′s hâbaləs/. A valid manner.

Modus legem dat donationi /môwdu′s lij′yəm dât dănēshiyə′wınəy/. Custom gives law to the gift.

Modus operandi /môwdu′s òpərə′nədə/. Method of operating or doing things (M.O.). Term used by police and criminal investigators to describe the particular method of a criminal's activity. It refers to pattern of criminal behavior so distinct that separate crimes or wrongful conduct are recognized as work of same person. People v. Kimbrough, 1 Dist., 138 Ill.App.3d 481, 93 Ill.Dec. 82, 485 N.E.2d 1292, 1297.

Modus tenendi /môwdu′s tənəndə/. The manner of holding; i.e., the different species of tenures by which estates are held.

Modus transferendi /môwdu′s trənəfə′rəndə/. The manner of transferring.

Modus vacandi /môwdu′s vakə′nəndə/. The manner of vacating. How and why an estate has been relinquished or surrendered by a vassal to his lord might well be referred to by this phrase.

Moerda /môrdə/. The secret killing of another; murder.

Mohantra. In French law, a transaction covering a fraudulent device to evade the laws against usury. It takes place where an individual buys merchandise from an-
A final order, decree or judgment of a court by which a defendant is required to pay a sum of money.
money in contrast to a decree or judgment of equity in which the court orders some other type of relief; e.g. injunction or specific performance. See also Judgment. For enforcement of money judgments, see Execution.

Money land. A phrase descriptive of money which is held upon a trust to convert it into land.

Money laundering. See Laundering.

Money lent. In common law pleading, the technical name of a declaration in an action of assumpsit for which the defendant promised to pay the plaintiff for money lent.

Money made. The return made by a sheriff to a writ of execution, signifying that he has collected the sum of money required by the writ.

Money market. The financial market for dealing in short term debt instruments such as U.S. Treasury bills, commercial paper, and bankers' acceptances, in contrast to the capital market which furnishes long term financing.

Money of adieu. In French law, earnest money; so called because given at parting in completion of the bargain. Arrhes is the usual French word for earnest money; "money of adieu" is a provincialism found in the province of Orleans.

Money order. A type of negotiable draft issued by banks, post offices, telegraph companies and express companies and used by the purchaser as a substitute for a check. Form of credit instrument calling for payment of money to named payee, and involving three parties: remitter, payee, and drawee. Fidelity Bank & Trust Co. v. Fitzimons, Minn., 261 N.W.2d 586, 589. Money order may encompass nonnegotiable as well as negotiable instruments and may be issued by a governmental agency, a bank, or private person or entity authorized to issue it, but essential characteristic is that it is purchased for purpose of paying a debt or to transmit funds upon credit of the issuer of the money order. People v. Norwood, 26 C.A.3d 148, 109 Cal.Rptr. 7, 12.

Money-order office. One of the post-offices authorized to draw or pay money orders.

Money paid. In common law pleading, the technical name of a declaration in assumpsit, in which the plaintiff declares for money paid for the use of the defendant. See also Money had and received.

Money-purchase plan. A pension plan where the employer contributes a specified amount of cash each year to each employee's pension fund. Benefits ultimately received by the employee are not specifically defined but depend on the rate of return on the cash invested.

Money supply. The amount of money in the economy at any point in time. Such consists of funds in circulation as well as in checking accounts. Money has been categorized into 4 groups based upon liquidity, as follows:

M-1 is generally funds in circulation, checking accounts, drafts.

M-2 includes M-1 as well as mutual funds, overnight repurchase agreements, and savings accounts.

M-3 includes M-2 as well as longer term repurchase agreements and time deposits in excess of $100,000.

L includes M-3 as well as banker's acceptances, T-bills and similar longer term investments.

Monger /mõngər/. A dealer or seller. It is seldom or never used alone, or otherwise than after the name of any commodity, to express a seller of such commodity; e.g. fishmonger, moneymonger.

Moniers, or moneyeers /móñi¿yərs/ /mówni¿yərs/. Ministers of the mint; also bankers.

Moniment /mónýmənt/. A memorial, superscription, or record.

Monition /mónishən/. In admiralty, formerly the summons to appear and answer, issued on filing the libel; which was either a simple monition in personam or an attachement and monition in rem. With the unification of the Admiralty Rules and Federal Rules of Civil Procedure in 1966, the monition was abolished.

General monition. In civil law practice, a monition or summons to all parties in interest to appear and show cause against the decree prayed for.

Practice. A monition is a formal order of the court commanding something to be done by the person to whom it is directed, and who is called the "person monished." Thus, when money is decreed to be paid, a monition may be obtained commanding its payment. In ecclesiastical procedure, a monition is an order monishing or warning the party complained against to do or not to do a certain act "under pain of the law and contempt thereof." A monition may also be appended to a sentence inflicting a punishment for a past offense; in that case the monition forbids the repetition of the offense.

Monitory letters /mónətəri léətərz/. Communications of warning and admonition sent from an ecclesiastical judge, upon information of scandal and abuses within the cognizance of his court.

Monocracy /mónəkrəsiə/. A government by one person.

Monocrat /mónəkræt/. A monarch who governs alone; an absolute governor.

Monogamy /mónəgəmiə/. The marriage of one wife only, or the state of such as are restrained to a single wife. The term is used in opposition to "bigamy" and "polygamy."

Monomachy /mónəmækiə/. A duel; a single combat. It was anciently allowed by law for the trial or proof of crimes. It was even permitted in pecuniary causes, but it is now forbidden both by the civil law and canon laws.

Monopolia dicitur, cum unus solus aliquod genus mercature universum emit, pretium ad suum libitum statuet, inodium qua simul utinam libatam statuywêndz/. It is said to be a monopoly when one person alone buys up the whole of one kind of commodity, fixing a price at his own pleasure.

Monopoly /mónópoli/. The sole power, right, or privilege of sale; monopoly; a monopoly.

Monopolium /mònopolium/. A privilege or peculiar advantage vested in one or more persons or companies consisting in the exclusive right (or power) to carry on a particular business or trade, manufacture a particular article, or control the sale of the whole supply of a particular commodity. A form of market structure in which one or only a few firms dominate the total sales of a product or service.

"Monopoly", as prohibited by Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, has two elements: possession of monopoly power in relevant market and willful acquisition or maintenance of that power, as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. U.S. v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 86 S.Ct. 1698, 1704, 16 L.Ed.2d 778. A monopoly condemned by the Sherman Act is the power to fix prices or exclude competition, coupled with policies designed to use or preserve that power. U.S. v. Otter Tail Power Co., D.C. Minn., 331 F.Supp. 54, 58.

It is "monopolization" in violation of Sherman Antitrust Act for persons to combine or conspire to acquire or maintain power to exclude competitors from any part of trade or commerce, provided they also have such power that they are able, as group, to exclude actual or potential competition and provided that they have intent and purpose to exercise that power. Davidson v. Kansas City Star Co., D.C. Mo., 202 F.Supp. 613, 617; Moore v. Jas. H. Matthews & Co., C.A. Or., 473 F.2d 328, 332.

See also Market; Relevant market.

Legal monopoly. Exclusive right granted by governmental unit to business to provide such services as electric and telephone service. The rates and services of such utilities are in turn regulated by the government.

Natural monopoly. A natural monopoly is one resulting where one firm of efficient size can produce all or more than market can take at remunerative price. Ovotron Corp. v. General Motors Corp., D.C. N.Y., 295 F.Supp. 373, 377. One which is created from circumstances over which the monopolist has no power. For example, a market for a particular product may be so limited that it is impossible to profitably produce such except by a single plant large enough to supply the whole demand. U.S. v. Aluminum Co. of America, C.C.A. N.Y., 148 F.2d 416, 430.

Monopoly power. The "monopoly power" which must exist in order to establish a violation of Sherman Antitrust Act may be defined as the power to fix prices, to exclude competitors, or to control the market in the relevant geographical area in question. ALW, Inc. v. United Air Lines, Inc., C.A. Nev., 510 F.2d 52, 56. See also Market; Monopoly; Relevant market.

Monopsony. A condition of the market in which there is but one buyer for a particular commodity.

Monstrans de droit /mónstraint dzó róit/. L. Fr. In English law, a showing or manifestation of right; one of the common law methods of obtaining possession or restitution from the crown, of either real or personal property. It is the proper proceeding when the right of the party, as well as the right of the crown, appears upon record, and consists in putting in a claim of right grounded on facts already acknowledged and established, and praying the judgment of the court whether upon these facts the king or the subject has the right. 3 Bl.Comm. 256.

Monstrans de faits /mónstraint dzó féyt(s)/. L. Fr. In old English practice, a showing of deeds; a species of profert.

Monstraverunt, writ of /rid av mónstrâvirant/. In English law, a writ which lies for the tenants of ancient demesne who hold by free charter, and not for those tenants who hold by copy of court roll, or by the rod, according to the custom of the manor.

Montes pietatis /môntiz pâystéytas/. Public pawnbroking establishments; institutions established by government in some European countries, for lending small sums of money on pledges of personal property. In France they are called "monts de piété."

Month. Word "month," unless otherwise defined, means "calendar month," or time from any day of any of the months as adjudged in the calendar to corresponding day, if any, if not any, to last day, of next month.

The space of time denoted by this term varies according as one or another of the following varieties of months is intended:

Astronomical, containing one-twelfth of the time occupied by the sun in passing through the entire zodiac.

Calendar, civil, or solar, which is one of the months in the Gregorian calendar,—January, February, March, etc.,—which are of unequal length.

Lunar, being the period of one revolution of the moon, or twenty-eight days.

The word "month," when used in a statute or contract without qualification, meant at common law a lunar month of 28 days. State v. White, 73 Fla. 426, 74 So. 486, 487.

Month to month tenancy. See Tenancy.

Monument. Anything by which the memory of a person, thing, idea, art, science or event is preserved or perpetuated. A tomb where a dead body has been deposited.

In real-property law and surveying, monuments are visible marks or indications left on natural or other objects indicating the lines and boundaries of a survey. Any physical object on ground which helps to establish location of boundary line called for; it may be either natural (e.g. trees, rivers, and other land features) or artificial (e.g. fences, stones, stakes, or the like placed by human hands). Delphey v. Savage, 227 Md. 373, 177 A.2d 249, 251. See also Natural monument.

Monumenta quae recorda vocamus sunt veritatis et vetustatis vestigia /mónymentə kwə nɔwks rəkórdə vəwkéyms sənt vəhr₁ʃtətæs ət vədəstætæs vəstɪʒɪə/. Monuments, which we call "records," are the vestiges of truth and antiquity.

Monung. See Manung or monung.

Moonshine. Intoxicating liquor illicitly produced or smuggled into community for beverage purposes, or spirituous liquor, illegally distilled or manufactured. State v. King, 331 Mo. 268, 53 S.W.2d 252, 254.

Mooring. Anchoring or making fast to the shore or dock. The securing or confining a vessel in a particular station, as by cables and anchors or by a line or chain run to the wharf.

Moot. A subject for argument; unsettled; undecided. A moot point is one not settled by judicial decisions.

Moot case. A case is "moot" when a determination is sought on a matter which, when rendered, cannot have any practical effect on the existing controversy. Leonhart v. McCormick, D.C.Pa., 395 F.Supp. 1073, 1076. Question is "moot" when it presents no actual controversy or where the issues have ceased to exist. Matter of Lawson's Estate, 41 Ill.App.3d 37, 353 N.E.2d 345, 347.

Generally, an action is considered "moot" when it no longer presents a justiciable controversy because issues involved have become academic or dead. Sigma Chi Fraternity v. Regents of University of Colo., D.C.Colo., 258 F.Supp. 515, 523. Case in which the matter in dispute has already been resolved and hence, one not entitled to judicial intervention unless the issue is a recurring one and likely to be raised again between the parties. Super Tire Engineering Co. v. McCorkle, 416 U.S. 115, 94 S.Ct. 1694, 40 L.Ed.2d 1. A case becomes "moot" when the issues presented are no longer "live" or the parties lack a legally cognizable interest in the outcome. Murphy v. Hunt, U.S.Neb., 455 U.S. 478, 102 S.Ct. 1181, 1182, 112 S.Ct. 1182, 97 L.Ed.2d 353.

Moot court. A court held (normally in law schools) for the arguing of moot or hypothetical cases.

Moot hill. Hill of meeting (gemot), on which the Britons used to hold their courts, the judge sitting on the eminence; the parties, etc., on an elevated platform below.

Mooting. The exercise of arguing questions of law or equity, raised for the purpose. See Moot court.

Moot man. One of those who used to argue the reader's cases in the inns of court.

Mora /mɔrə/. Lat. In the civil law, delay; default; neglect; culpable delay or default.

Moral. Pertains to character, conduct, intention, social relations, etc.

1. Pertaining or relating to the conscience or moral sense or to the general principles of right conduct.

2. Cognizable or enforceable only by the conscience or by the principles of right conduct, as distinguished from positive law.

3. Depending upon or resulting from probability; raising a belief or conviction in the mind independent of strict or logical proof.

4. Involving or affecting the moral sense; as in the phrase "moral insanity."

Moral actions. Those only in which men have knowledge to guide them, and a will to choose for themselves.

Moral certainty. That degree of assurance which induces a man of sound mind to act, without doubt, upon the conclusions to which it leads. A high degree of impression of the truth of a fact, falling short of absolute certainty, but sufficient to justify a verdict of guilty, even in a capital case. Such signifies a probability sufficiently strong to justify action on it; a very high degree of probability, although not demonstrable, as a certainty. It has also been used as indicating a conclusion of the mind established beyond a reasonable doubt. Gray v. State, 56 Okl.Cr. 208, 38 P.2d 967.

Moral consideration. See Consideration.

Moral duress. Consists in imposition, oppression, undue influence, or the taking of undue advantage of the business or financial stress or extreme necessity or weakness of another. Lafayette Dramatic Productions v. Ferenz, 305 Mich. 193, 9 N.W.2d 57, 66. See also Coercion; Duress.

Moral evidence. As opposed to "mathematical" or "demonstrative" evidence, this term denotes that kind of evidence which, without developing an absolute and necessary certainty, generates a high degree of probability or persuasive force. It is founded upon analogy or induction, experience of the ordinary course of nature or the sequence of events, and the testimony of men.

Moral fraud. This phrase is one of the less usual designations of "actual" or "positive" fraud or "fraud in fact," as distinguished from "constructive fraud" or "fraud in law." It means fraud which involves actual guilt, a wrongful purpose, or moral obliquity.

Moral hazard. See Hazard.

Moral law. The law of conscience; the aggregate of those rules and principles of ethics which relate to right and wrong conduct and prescribe the standards to which the actions of men should conform in their dealings with each other. See also Natural law.

Moral obligation. See Obligation.

Moral turpitude. The act of baseness, vileness, or the depravity in private and social duties which man owes to his fellow man, or to society in general, contrary to accepted and customary rule of right and duty between man and man. State v. Adkins, 40 Ohio App.2d 473, 320
Mortality tables. A means of ascertaining the probable number of years any man or woman of a given age and of ordinary health will live. A mortality table expresses, on the basis of the group studied, the probability that, of a number of persons of equal expectations of life who are living at the beginning of any year, a certain number of deaths will occur within that year. National Life & Acc. Ins. Co. v. U. S., D.C.Tenn., 381 F.Supp. 1034, 1037.

Such tables are used by insurance companies to determine the premium to be charged for those in the respective age groups.

Mort d'ancestor /mɔrt dænsæstər/. An ancient and now almost obsolete remedy in the English law. An assise of mort d'ancestor was a writ which lay for a person whose ancestor died seised of lands in fee-simple, and after his death a stranger abated; and this writ directed the sheriff to summon a jury or assize, who should view the land in question and recognize whether such ancestor was seised thereof on the day of his death, and whether the demandant were the next heir.

Mortgage /mɔrgæj/. A mortgage is an interest in land created by a written instrument providing security for the performance of a duty or the payment of a debt.

At common law, an estate created by a conveyance absolute in its form, but intended to secure the performance of some act, such as the payment of money, and the like, by the grantor or some other person, and to become void if the act is performed agreeably to the terms prescribed at the time of making such conveyance.
Such a mortgage today is called an equitable mortgage. The mortgage operates as a conveyance of the legal title to the mortgagor, but such title is subject to defeasance on payment of the debt or performance of the duty by the mortgagor.

The above definitions are applicable to the common-law (i.e. estate or title) conception of a mortgage. Such conception is still applicable in certain states. But in many other states, a mortgage is regarded as a mere lien, and not as creating a title or estate. Zeigler v. Sawyer, Tex.Civ.App., 16 S.W.2d 894, 896. It is a pledge or security of particular property for the payment of a debt or the performance of some other obligation, whatever form the transaction may take, but is not now regarded as a conveyance in effect, though it may be cast in the form of a conveyance. Still other states have adopted a hybrid or intermediate theory or category of mortgage.

See also Assumption of mortgage; Balloon mortgage; Bulk mortgage; Chattel mortgage; Collateral mortgage; Conversion or convertibility clause; Corporate mortgage trust; Deed (Deed of trust); Due-on-sale clause; In rem mortgage; Potomac mortgages; Release (Release of mortgage); Ship Mortgage Act; Submortgage; Tacit mortgage; Technical mortgage; Trust (Trust deed); Union mortgage clause. For Bona fide mortgage, see Bona fide.

Adjustable rate mortgage (ARM). A mortgage in which the interest rate is not fixed but is tied to an index and is periodically adjusted as the rate index moves up or down. Such ARM mortgages commonly provide for an option to convert to a fixed rate mortgage. See also Cap; Conversion or convertibility clause; Discount index.

Amortized mortgage. One in which the mortgagor pays the current interest charge as well as a portion of principal in his periodic payment.

Balloon-payment mortgage. Mortgage requiring interest payments for a specified period and full payment of principal (a balloon payment) at the end of the period.

Blanket mortgage. One which conveys title to or creates a lien on all the borrower's assets or a substantial portion of them rather than on a specific asset.

Chattel mortgage. Mortgage secured by personal property. See Chattel mortgage.

Closed-end mortgage. One in which neither the property mortgaged nor the amount borrowed may be altered during the term of the mortgage.

Consolidated mortgage. A single mortgage given to replace or to combine several outstanding mortgages.

Construction draw mortgage. Type of mortgage used to finance building construction.

Conventional mortgage. The conventional mortgage is a contract by which a person binds the whole of his property, or a portion of it only, in favor of another, to secure the execution of some engagement, but without divesting himself of possession. It is distinguished from the "legal" mortgage, which is a privilege which the law alone in certain cases gives to a creditor over the property of his debtor, without stipulation of the parties. This last is very much like a general lien at common law, created by the law rather than by the act of the parties, such as a judgment lien.

Conventional home mortgage. The common security device used by those who wish to purchase a home by transferring to the bank or other financial institution a lien or defeasible legal title in return for the price or part of the price of the home. A non-FHA or VA home loan; i.e. not backed by government insurance or security. The mortgage is conventional in that the lender looks only to the credit of the borrower and the security of the property, and not to the additional backing of another such as would be the case with an FHA insured mortgage.

Direct reduction mortgage. An amortized mortgage. One on which principal and interest payments are paid at the same time (usually monthly) with interest being computed on the remaining balance.

Equitable mortgage. A specific lien upon real property to secure the payment of money or the performance of some other obligation, which a court of equity will recognize and enforce, in accordance with the clearly ascertained intent of the parties to that effect, but which lacks the essential features of a legal mortgage, either because it grows out of the transactions of the parties without any deed or express contract to give a lien, or because the instrument used for that purpose is wanting in some of the characteristics of a common-law mortgage, or, being absolute in form, is accompanied by a collateral reservation of a right to redeem, or because an explicit agreement to give a mortgage has not been carried into effect.

FHA mortgage. One in which the loan has been insured in whole or in part by the Federal Housing Administration.

First mortgage. The first (in time or right) of a series of two or more mortgages covering the same property and successively attaching as liens upon it. Also, in a more particular sense, a mortgage which is a first lien on the property, not only as against other mortgages, but as against any other charges or incumbrances. Also called "senior" mortgage.

First mortgage bonds. Bonds the payment of which is secured by a first mortgage on property.

Fixed-rate mortgage. Such mortgage specifies an interest rate that remains fixed for the life of the mortgage regardless of market conditions. Compare Adjustable rate mortgage, above.

Future advances mortgage. A term used to describe a present mortgage transaction where part of the loan proceeds will not be paid out until a future date.

General mortgage. Mortgages are sometimes classified as general and special, a mortgage of the former class being one which binds all property, present and future, of the debtor (sometimes called a "blanket" mortgage); while a special mortgage is limited to certain particular and specified property.
Graduated payment adjustable rate mortgage (GPARM). A mortgage format that combines the features of the graduated payment mortgage (GPM) and the adjustable rate mortgage (ARM).

Graduated payment mortgage (GPM). A mortgage loan that carries monthly payments which increase annually by a specified percentage during the early years of the loan and then remain constant thereafter. See also Adjustable rate mortgage, above.

Growing equity mortgage (GEM). A mortgage loan that is fully amortized over a significantly shorter term than the traditional 25 or 30 year mortgage, and which may have payments which increase each year.

Joint mortgage. One which is given to or by two or more mortgagees jointly.

Judicial mortgage. In the law of Louisiana, the lien resulting from judgments, whether rendered on contested cases or by default, whether final or provisional, in favor of the person obtaining them. Civ.Code La. art. 3321.

Junior mortgage. One which ranks below another mortgage of the name property in the value of the security, and is subordinate to senior mortgages in its rights.

Leasehold mortgage. Mortgage secured by lessee's interest in leased property.

Legal mortgage. A term used in Louisiana. The law alone in certain cases gives to the creditor a mortgage on the property of his debtor, without it being requisite that the parties should stipulate it. That is called "legal mortgage." It is also called a tacit mortgage, because it is established by the law without the aid of any agreement. Civ.Code La. art. 3311.

Mortgage of goods. See Chattel mortgage.

Open-end mortgage. A mortgage permitting the mortgagor to borrow additional money under the same mortgage, with certain conditions, usually as to the assets of the mortgagor.

Package mortgage. A package mortgage is used to include not only the real property but many items of personal property incident to the real property, such as stoves, refrigerators, and the like.

Purchase money mortgage. Generally, any mortgage given to secure a loan made for the purpose of acquiring the land on which the mortgage is given; more particularly, a mortgage given to the seller of land to secure payment of a portion of the purchase price. A mortgage given, concurrently with a conveyance of land, by the vendee to the vendor, on the same land, to secure the unpaid balance of the purchase price.

Reverse annuity mortgage (RAM). A mortgage format under which the mortgage loan proceeds are disbursed periodically over a long time period to provide regular income for the borrower-mortgagor. The loan will usually be repaid in a lump sum when the mortgagor dies or the property is sold.

Second mortgage. One which takes rank immediately after a first mortgage on the same property, without any intervening liens, and is next entitled to satisfaction out of the proceeds of the property. Properly speaking, however, the term designates the second of a series of mortgages, not necessarily the second lien. For instance, the lien of a judgment might intervene between the first and second mortgages; in which case, the second mortgage would be the third lien. Also called "junior" mortgage. See also Wraparound mortgage, infra.

Senior mortgage. One which ranks ahead of another mortgage in terms of rights in the security. See also First mortgage, above.

Shared appreciation mortgage (SAM). A mortgage format that gives the lender the right to recover, as "contingent interest", some agreed-upon percentage of the property's appreciation in value measured when it is sold or at some other future fixed date.

Shared-equity mortgage (SEM). A mortgage format under which a purchaser-occupant and another person (often a relative) become co-owners and co-mortgagors of real estate. Usually the non-occupant owner pays all or a substantial part of the monthly payments and is entitled to share in any appreciation when the real estate is sold.

Straight mortgage. One in which the mortgagor is obligated to pay interest during the term of the mortgage and a final payment of principal at the end of the term in contrast to an amortized mortgage.

Tacit mortgage. See Legal mortgage, above.

VA Mortgage. Home mortgage loan provided to veterans and their spouses which is guaranteed by the Veterans Administration.

Variable rate mortgage. A long-term mortgage contract which includes a provision permitting the lending institution to adjust, upward and downward, the contract's interest rate in response to changes in money market rates and the conditions of demand for mortgages.

Wraparound mortgage. See Wraparound mortgage.

Mortgage banker. A person or firm engaged in the business of dealing in mortgages including their original placement, servicing, refinancing, and resale to other investors. Normally such banker uses its own funds as opposed to a commercial or savings and loan bank which uses primarily funds of depositors. While some mortgage bankers do provide long term (permanent) financing, the majority specialize in short term and interim financing.

Mortgage bond. Bonds for which real estate or personal property is pledged as security that the bond will be paid as stated in its terms. May be first, second, refunding, and so on.

Mortgage broker. Person or firm who functions as intermediary between borrower and lender in securing loan, or places loans with investors.
MORTGAGE CERTIFICATE

Mortgage certificate. Document evidencing participation in a large mortgage held by the mortgagee for the benefit of the certificate holders.

Mortgage clause. Provision in fire insurance policies protecting the mortgagee as his interest may appear.

Mortgage commitment. A formal written communication by a lender, agreeing to make a mortgage loan on specific property, specifying the loan’s amount, length of time, and other conditions. Because of interest rate fluctuations, such commitments normally have time limitations. See also Loan commitment.

Mortgage company. A firm engaged in the business of originating and closing mortgages which are then assigned or sold to investors.

Mortgage contingency clause. Clause in an agreement for sale of real estate conditioning the purchaser’s performance on his obtaining a mortgage from a third party.

Mortgage discount. The difference between the principal amount of a mortgage and the amount it actually sells for. Sometimes called points, loan brokerage fee, or new loan fee.

Mortgagor /mɔrgəd/. Person that takes or receives a mortgage.

Mortgagor in possession. A mortgagee of real property who is in possession of it with the agreement or assent of the mortgagor, express or implied, and in recognition of his mortgage and because of it, and under such circumstances as to make the satisfaction of his lien an equitable prerequisite to his being dispossessed.

Mortgage foreclosure. See Foreclosure.

Mortgage guarantee insurance. A type of insurance which guarantees to the mortgagee a given portion of the loss if the mortgagee suffers a loss due to nonpayment on the loan. See Federal Housing Administration; Insurance.

Mortgage insurance. See Insurance.

Mortgage lien. Encumbrances on property of mortgagor which secures debt obligation. In some states, the mortgagor retains legal title until foreclosure and the mortgagee has a security interest called a lien which is recognized ahead of other claims to the property.

Mortgage loan. A loan secured by a mortgage on real estate in which the borrower is the mortgagor and the lender the mortgagee. See Mortgage.

Mortgage market. Conditions which exist as to demand for purchase of mortgages generally by financial institutions which use mortgages as part of their investment portfolio.

Mortgage point. A percentage of the mortgage, generally 1%, charged by the mortgagee up front as a cost of financing.

Mortgage servicing. The responsibilities (which may be undertaken by a service company hired by the original lender) of mortgage lending, such as collecting installment payments, releasing liens, initiating foreclosure upon default, etc.

Mortgage warehousing. System under which mortgage company holds loans which would ordinarily be sold, in order to sell later at a lower discount. These mortgages are used as collateral security with a bank to borrow new money to loan.

Mortgaging out. The process by which a mortgagor secures one hundred percent financing of his purchase. He purchases property with no money of his own but entirely with mortgage money.

Mortgagor /mɔrgəg/. One who, having all or some part of title to property, by written instrument pledges that property for some particular purpose such as security for a debt. The party who mortgages the property; the debtor. That party to a mortgage who gives legal title or a lien to the mortgagee to secure the mortgage loan.

Morth. Sax. Murder, answering exactly to the French "assassinat" or "muertre de guet-apens".

Morthlaga /mɔrtələgə/. A murderer.

Morthlage /mɔrtələj/. Murder.

Mortis causa /mɔrtəs kəʊə/. Lat. By reason of death; in contemplation of death. Thus used in the phrase "Donatio mortis causa" (q.v.).

Mortis momentum est ultimum vitae momentum /mɔrtəs məˈmɛntəm ɛst əˈtæməm vəˈtɪtɪ məˈmɛntəm/. The last moment of life is the moment of death.

Mortmain /mɔrtˈmeɪn/. A term applied to denote the alienation of lands or tenements to any corporation, sole or aggregate, ecclesiastical or temporal. These purchases having been chiefly made by religious houses, in consequence of which lands became perpetually inherent in one "dead hand", this occasioned the general appellation of "mortmain" to be applied to such alienations. 2 Bl.Comm. 268; Perin v. Carey, 65 U.S. (24 How.) 465, 16 L.Ed. 701.

Mortmain acts. These acts had for their object to prevent lands getting into the possession or control of religious corporations, or, as the name indicates, in mortua manu. After numerous prior acts dating from the reign of Edward I, it was enacted by the statute 9 Geo. II, c. 36 (called the "Mortmain Act" par excellence), that no lands should be given to charities unless certain requisites should be observed. Some traces of these laws remained until 1960.

Mortuary. A burial-place. Term applied to undertaking and embalming establishments.

A kind of ecclesiastical heriot, being a customary gift of the second best living animal belonging to the deceased, claimed by and due to the minister in many parishes, on the death of his parishioners, whether buried in the church-yard or not. 2 Bl.Comm. 425.

Term has been sometimes used in a civil as well as in an ecclesiastical sense, and applied to a payment to the lord of the fee.
Mortuary tables. See Actuarial table; Mortality tables.

Mortuum vadium /mórtyuwam véydiyam/. A dead pledge; a mortgage (q.v.); a pledge where the profits or rents of the thing pledged are not applied to the payment of the debt.

Mortuus /mórtyuwas/. Lat. Dead. So in sheriff's return. Mortuus est, he is dead.

Mortuus civiliter /mórtyuwas savilصار/. Civil death (q.v.).

Mortuus exitus non est exitus /mórtyuwas égzatás nán ést égzadas/. A dead issue is no issue. A child born dead is not considered as issue.

Mortuus sine prole /mórtyuwas sá nyi prólwi/. Dead without issue. In genealogical tables often abbreviated to "m.s.p."

Moslem Law. One of the two great systems of customary law which the English found in India. It regulated the life and relations of all Moslems, and parts of it, especially its penal provisions, were applied to both Moslems and Hindus.

Mos retinendus est fidelissimae vetutatis /mówós rétanéndas ét fáydi lásmi vétutatytas/. A custom of the truest antiquity is to be retained.

Most favored nation clause. A clause found in most treaties providing that the citizens or subjects of the contracting nations may enjoy the privileges accorded by either party to those of the most favored nations. The general design of such clauses is to establish the principle of equality of international treatment. The test of whether this principle is violated by the concession of advantages to a particular nation is not the form in which such concession is made, but the condition on which it is granted; whether it is given for a price, or whether this price is in the nature of a substantial equivalent, and not of a mere evasion. The United States has generally taken the stand that reciprocal commercial concessions are given for a valuable consideration and are not within the scope of this clause. Whitney v. Robertson, 124 U.S. 190, 8 S.Ct. 456, 31 L.Ed. 386. See also Reciprocal trade agreements.

A primary effect of "most favored nation" status is lower import tariffs or duties.

Most suitable use valuation. For gift and estate tax purposes, property that is transferred normally is valued in accordance with its most suitable or highest and best use. Thus, if a farm is worth more as a potential shopping center, this value will control even though the transferee (i.e., the donee or heir) continues to use the property as a farm. For an exception to this rule concerning the valuation of certain kinds of real estate transferred by death, see Special use valuation.

Mote /mówt/. Sax. A meeting; an assembly. Used in composition, as burgmote, folkmote, etc.

Moteer. A customary service or payment at the mote or court of the lord, from which some were exempted by charter or privilege.
MOTION IN LIMINE

where properly drawn, granting of motion cannot be error. Redding v. Ferguson, Tex.Civ.App., 501 S.W.2d 717, 724. See also Motion to suppress; Suppression hearing.

Motion to dismiss. A motion requesting that a complaint be dismissed because it does not state a claim for which the law provides a remedy, or is in some other way legally insufficient. One which is generally interposed before trial to attack the action on the basis of insufficiency of the pleading, of process, venue, joinder, etc. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b). See also Demurrer.

Motion to strike. On motion of either party, the court may order stricken from any pleading any insufficient defense, or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent or scandalous matter. Fed.R.Civil P. 12(f).

Motion to suppress. Device used to eliminate from the trial of a criminal case evidence which has been secured illegally, generally in violation of the Fourth Amendment (search and seizure), the Fifth Amendment (privilege against self incrimination), or the Sixth Amendment (right to assistance of counsel, right of confrontation etc.), of U.S. Constitution. See Fed.R.Crim.P. 12(b) and 41(f); also Motion in limine; Suppression hearing.

Motive. Cause or reason that moves the will and induces action. An idea, belief or emotion that impels or incites one to act in accordance with his state of mind or emotion. People v. Gibson, 56 C.A.3d 119, 128 Cal.Rptr. 302, 308. The circumstance tending to establish the requisite mens rea for a criminal act and is the inducement which impels or leads the mind to indulge in a criminal act. State v. Segotta, App., 100 N.M. 18, 665 P.2d 280, 287.

In common usage intent and "motive" are not infrequently regarded as one and the same thing. In law there is a distinction between them. "Motive" is said to be the moving course, the impulse, the desire that induces criminal action on part of the accused; it is distinguished from "intent" which is the purpose or design with which the act is done, the purpose to make the means adopted effective. State v. Willis, Mo.App., 632 S.W.2d 63, 65.

As to criminal motive, see Criminal; Mens rea. See also Intent.

Motor Carrier Act. Federal statute (administered by ICC) which regulated (routes, rates, etc.) motor carriers of freight and passengers in interstate commerce. 49 U.S.C.A. § 301 et seq. This Act was repealed in 1983 when motor carriers became deregulated.

Mouth of river. By statute in some states, the mouth of a river or creek, which empties into another river or creek, is defined as the point where the middle of the channel of each intersects the other.

Movable. That which can be changed in place, as movable property; or in time, as movable feasts or terms of court. Compare Fixture.

Movable estate. A term equivalent to "personal estate" or "personal property."
fine unjustly; to punish. Gorton v. Doty, 57 Idaho 792, 69 P.2d 136, 142.

Formerly, an imposition laid on ships or goods by a company of trade for the maintenance of consuls and the like.

Multa damnum famæ non irrogat /málta démnam fémy mi nón írragat/. A fine does not involve loss of character.

Mulier /myúwl(i)yar/. Lat. A woman; a wife; a widow; a virgin; a legitimate child.

The term is used always in contradistinction to a bastard, mulier being always legitimate.

Mutieratus /myúwl(i)yáryítas/. A legitimate son.

Mulier puisné /myúwl(i)yar pyúwniyr/"pwiyné/ . L. Fr. When a man has a bastard son, and afterwards marries the mother, and by her has also a legitimate son, the elder son is bastard eigné, and the younger son is mulier puisné.

Muliert /myúwl(i)yáriyit/. In old English law, the state or condition of a mulier, or lawful issue. The opposite of bastardy.

Multa /málta/. A fine or final satisfaction, anciently given to the king by the bishops, that they might have power to make their wills, and that they might have the probate of other men's wills, and the granting of administration. Called, also, multura episcopi.

A fine imposed ex arbitrio by magistrates on the praesides probiniciarum.

Multa conceduntur per obliquum quæ non conceduntur de directo /málta konsádaytarc pár abláikykwam kwíy nón konsádaytarc diy dárekwó/. Many things are allowed indirectly which are not allowed directly.

Multa fidem promissa levant /málta fáydam promiss lévant/. Many promises lessen confidence.

Multa ignoramus quæ nobis non laterent si veterum lectio nobis fuit familiaris /málta ignaréyymas nówbá nówbá nówbá füyus familiéres/. We are ignorant of many things which would not be hidden from us if the reading of old authors was familiar to us.

Multa in jure communi contra rationem disputandi, pro communi utilitate introducta sunt /málta in júriy kamúwywnc yontra rásšíyúwniym dispyúwánday, prów kamúwywnc yuwítatyítí introádká tants/. Many things have been introduced into the common law, with a view to the public good, which are inconsistent with sound reason.

Multa muito exercitatione facilius quam regulis percpiales /málta múitáw egzárséshiýóníyí faskíylíyí kwáím régyalas parsipíyízy/. You will perceive many things much more easily by practice than by rules.

Multa non vetat lex, quæ tamen tacite damnavit /málta nón viytá léks, kwíy téyman tássstiy démnyáv/. The law forbids not many things which yet it has silently condemned.

Multa transeunt cum universitate quæ non per se transeunt /málta tránzyíyant kám yuwnavnarsétýtí kwíy nón pár síy tránzyíyant/. Many things pass with the whole which do not pass separately.

Multicraft union. A labor union which craftsmen in different trades may join.

Multidistrict litigation. When civil actions involving one or more common (and often complex) questions of fact are pending in several different federal district courts, such actions may be transferred to one district for coordinated and consolidated management and trial under a single judge. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1407. The types of cases in which massive filings of multidistrict litigation are reasonably certain to occur include not only civil antitrust actions but also, common disaster (air crash) actions, patent and trademark suits, products liability actions and securities law violation actions, among others. Such cases are assigned and transferred by a Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation, and are governed by the "Manual for Complex Litigation" and "Rules of Procedure of the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation."

Multifarious issue. A multifarious issue is one that inquires about several different facts when each fact should be inquired about in a separate issue. District Trustees of Campbellton Consol. Common School Dist. No. 16 v. Pleasanton Independent School Dist., Tex.Civ. App., 362 S.W.2d 122, 127. See Multifariousness.

Multifariousness /máltafériýyanss/. In equity pleading, the misjoinder of causes of action in a bill. The fault of improperly joining in one bill distinct and independent matters, and thereby confounding them; as, for example, the uniting in one bill of several matters perfectly distinct and unconnected against one defendant (more commonly called misjoinder of claims), or the demand of several matters of a distinct and independent nature against several defendants, in the same bill. Essen v. Adams, 342 Mo. 1196, 119 S.W.2d 773, 777.

This problem does not generally arise in the federal courts or in the majority of state courts, for Rule of Civil Procedure 8(e) permits pleading of inconsistent claims or defenses and Rule 18(a) permits liberal joinder of independent or alternative claims. Civil Rule 18 permits a party to join, either as independent or as alternate claims, as many claims, legal, equitable, or maritime, as he has against an opposing party.

Legislation. The joining, in a single legislative act, of dissimilar and discordant subjects, which, by no fair intention, can be considered as having a legitimate connection or relation to the subject of the act.

Multilateral agreement. An agreement among more than two persons, firms, or governments.

Multi multa, nemo omnia novit /málta máltá, nímyom ómiym nówuvat/. Many men have known many things; no one has known everything.

Multinational corporation. In a strict sense this term is descriptive of a firm which has centers of operation in many countries in contrast to an "international" firm Multiple listing. A multiple listing is a practice in which the owner of real estate and a broker in which the broker will permit other brokers to sell property for a percentage of his commission or on some other basis satisfactory to the brokers. Device used by real estate brokers to give wide exposure to properties listed for sale whereby each cooperating broker informs all other participating brokers of properties listed with him. Grempler v. Multiple Listing Bureau of Harford County, Inc., 258 Md. 419, 266 A.2d 1, 3. See also Listing.

Multiple access. The defense of several lovers in paternity actions. Yarmark v. Strickland, Fla.App., 193 So.2d 212.

Multiple counts. A civil pleading (e.g. complaint) or a criminal indictment which contains several separate causes of action or crimes within the framework of one pleading. Joinder of multiple claims against opposing party is permitted under Fed.R.Civ. P. 18. Joinder of offenses is provided for in Fed.R.Crim.P. 8.

Multiple evidence. That which is admissible for a specific purpose to which it must be confined and inadmissible to prove a different fact.

Multiple listing. An agreement between the owner of real estate and a broker in which the broker will permit other brokers to sell property for a percentage of his commission or on some other basis satisfactory to the brokers. Device used by real estate brokers to give wide exposure to properties listed for sale whereby each cooperating broker informs all other participating brokers of properties listed with him. Grempler v. Multiple Listing Bureau of Harford County, Inc., 258 Md. 419, 266 A.2d 1, 3. See also Listing.

Multiple offenses. A single act may be an offense against two statutes, and if each statute requires proof of an additional fact which the other does not, an acquittal or conviction under either statute does not exempt the defendant from prosecution and punishment under the other. If there is identity between the two charges, the defendant may not be punished for both, though he may be punished for the more serious. Com. v. Kuklis, 361 Mass. 302, 280 N.E.2d 155.

Multiple-party accounts. A multiple-party account is any of the following types of account: (i) a joint account, (ii) a P.O.D. account, or (iii) a trust account. It does not include accounts established for deposit of funds of a partnership, joint venture, or other association for business purposes, or accounts controlled by one or more persons as the duly authorized agent or trustee for a corporation, unincorporated association, charitable or civic organization or a regular fiduciary or trust account where the relationship is established other than by deposit agreement. Uniform Probate Code, § 6-101(5).

Multiple sentences. If a defendant has been found guilty of more than one offense, he may be given consecutive (“on and after”) sentences. See also Sentence.

Multiplex et indistinctum parit confusionem; et questiones, quo simpliciores, eo lucidiores /mâltaplakéyta trâzgrêshiyôwniy krêskat piñiy infliksh(y)ów/. As transgression is multiplied, the infliction of punishment should increase.

Multiplicity /mâltaplilisiy/. A state of being many. That quality of a pleading which involves a variety of matters or particulars. A multiplying or increasing.

Multiplicity of actions or suits. Numerous and unnecessary attempts to litigate the same right. A phrase descriptive of the situation where several different suits or actions are brought upon the same issue. The actions must be against a single defendant. Prospect Park & C. I. R. Co. v. Morey, 155 App.Div. 347, 140 N.Y.S. 380, 385. Under Civil Rules practice such claims should properly be joined or maintained as a single class action. Fed.R.Civ. P. 23.

Term “multiplicity” refers to the practice of charging the commission of a single offense in several counts. This practice is prohibited because single wrongful act cannot furnish basis for more than one criminal prosecution. State v. Hill, 10 Kan.App.2d 607, 706 P.2d 472, 475; U.S. v. Stanfa, C.A.Pa., 685 F.2d 85, 86. Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure have been drafted to discourage this practice. U. S. v. Allied Chemical Corp., D.C.Va., 420 F.Supp. 122, 123.

See Collateral estoppel doctrine; Duplicity; Final decision rule; Multiple counts; Res (Res judicata).

Multistate corporation. A corporation that has operations in more than one state; from which issues commonly arise relative to the assignment of appropriate amounts of the entity's taxable income to the states in which it has a presence.

Multitude. An assemblage of many people.

Multitudinem decem faciunt /mâltat(y)ûwdanam diyam fêyshiyant/. Ten makes a multitude.

Multitudo errantium non parit errori patrocinium /mâltatyûydow arâns(h)yam nôn pêrât arôray pêtrâsniyam/. The multitude of those who err furnishes no countenance or excuse for error. It is no excuse for error that it is entertained by numbers.

Multitudo imperitorum perdit curiam /mâltatyûydow imparatóram pârdat kyûriyam/. A great number of unskilful practitioners ruins a court.

Multo utilius est paucia idonea effundere quam multis inutilibus homines gravari /mâltow yuvtûlîys êst póka idôniyô sôndarîy kwâm mâltas inyuwallîbas hûmânîy grâvârîyam/. It is more useful to pour forth a few useful things than to oppress men with many useless things.

Multura episcopi /mâlt(y)ûro ñpîskapay/. See Multa.

Mummification /mûmâsfêkeyshan/. The complete drying up of the body as the result of burial in a dry, hot soil, or the exposure of the body to a dry, cold atmosphere.

Mund. In old English law, peace; whence mundbryc, a breach of the peace.
Municeps /mónésp/. A receiving into favor and protection.

Mundium /móndiųm/. In old French law, a tribute paid by a church or monastery to their seigniorial avoués and vireviers, as the price of protecting them.

Munera /myúwnara/. In the early ages of the feudal law, the name given to the grants of land made by a king or chieftain to his followers, which were held by no certain tenure, but merely at the will of the lord. Afterwards they became life-estates, and then hereditary, and were called first "benefices," and then "feudaetalit.

Municeps /myúwnasęps/. Lat. In Roman law, eligible to office. A provincial person; a countryman. This was the designation of one born in the provinces or in a city politically connected with Rome, who had come to Rome, and though a Roman citizen, yet was looked down upon as a provincial, and not allowed to hold the higher offices.

In the provinces the term seems to have been applied to the freemen of any city who were eligible to the municipal offices.

Municipal. In narrower, more common, sense, it means pertaining to a local governmental unit, commonly, a city or town or other governmental unit. In its broader sense, it means pertaining to the public or governmental affairs of a state or nation or of a people. Chadwick v. City of Crawfordsville, 216 Ind. 399, 24 N.E.2d 937, 941, 942. Relating to a state or nation, particularly when considered as an entity independent of other states or nations. Hammel v. Little, 66 App.D.C. 356, 87 F.2d 907, 910.

Municipal action. Exercise of governmental power by a municipal board, agency, or other body, or by a municipal officer. Orme v. Atlas Gas & Oil Co., 217 Minn. 27, 13 N.W.2d 757, 761.

Municipal affairs. A term referring to the internal business affairs of a municipality. Griffin v. City of Los Angeles, 134 Cal.App. 763, 26 P.2d 655. The term is frequently used in constitutional and statutory provisions concerning the power to legislate as to the concerns of municipalities. And it has come to include public service activities, such as supplying water to the inhabitants, the construction of a reservoir for their benefit, the sale and distribution of electrical energy, and the establishment and operation of transportation service, which were once regarded as being of a strictly private nature. See also Municipal function.

Municipal aid. A contribution or assistance granted by a municipal corporation towards the execution or progress of some enterprise, undertaken by private parties, but likely to be of benefit to the municipality; e.g., urban redevelopment projects.

Municipal authorities. As used in statutes contemplating the consent of such authorities, the term means the consent by the legislative authorities of the city acting by ordinance; for example, in a town, the members of the town board.

Municipal bonds. Evidences of indebtedness (debt obligations) issued by state or local government entities, negotiable in form, payable at designated future time, and intended for sale in market with object of raising money for municipal expense, which is beyond immediate resources of reasonable taxation, as distinguished from temporary evidences of debt, such as vouchers, certificates of indebtedness, orders, or drafts drawn by one officer on another and similar devices for liquidating current obligations in anticipation of collection of taxes. A bond issued by a village, town, city, county, state, or other public body. Interest on such bonds is generally exempt from federal income taxes and from some state income taxes. Sometimes referred to as "tax exempts."

Municipal charter. A legislative enactment conferring governmental powers of the state upon its local agencies.

Municipal corporation. A legal institution formed by charter from sovereign (i.e., state) power erecting a populous community of prescribed area into a body politic and corporate with corporate name and continuous succession and for the purpose and with the authority of subordinate self-government and improvement and local administration of affairs of state. A body corporate consisting of the inhabitants of a designated area created by the legislature with or without the consent of such inhabitants for governmental purposes, possessing local legislative and administrative power, also power to exercise within such area so much of the administrative power of the state as may be delegated to it and possessing limited capacity to own and hold property and to act in purveyance of public conveniences.

Municipal corporation is a body politic and corporate, created to administer the internal concerns of the district embraced with its corporate limits, in matters peculiar to such place and not common to the state at large. Tribe v. Salt Lake City Corp, Utah, 540 P.2d 499, 502. A municipal corporation has a dual character, the one public and the other private, and exercises correspondingly twofold functions and duties—one class consisting of those acts performed by it in exercise of delegated sovereign powers for benefit of people generally, as arm of state, enforcing general laws made in pursuance of general policy of the state, and the other consisting of acts done in exercise of power of the municipal corporation for its own benefit, or for benefit of its citizens alone, or citizens of the municipal corporation and its immediate locality. Associated Enterprises, Inc. v. Toltic Watershed Imp. Dist., Wyo., 490 P.2d 1069, 1070.

See also Public corporations.

Quasi municipal corporations. Bodies politic and corporate, created for the sole purpose of performing one or more municipal functions. Public corporations organized for governmental purposes and having for most purposes the status and powers of municipal corporations (such as counties, townships, school districts, drainage districts, irrigation districts, etc.), but not municipal Municipal corporation. One created or granted for the special benefit and advantage of the urban community embraced within the corporate boundaries. State ex rel. Gebhardt v. City Council of Helena, 102 Mont. 27, 55 P.2d 671, 673.

Municipal functions are those which specially and peculiarly promote the comfort, convenience, safety and happiness of the citizens of the municipality, rather than the welfare of the general public. Under this class of functions are included, in most jurisdictions, the proper care of streets and alleys, parks and other public places, and the erection and maintenance of public utilities and improvements generally.

Municipal government. Instrumentalities of state for purpose of local government. Moore v. State, 159 Tenn. 468, 19 S.W.2d 233. This term, in certain state constitutions, embraces the governmental affairs of counties, and includes all forms of representative municipal government—towns, cities, villages, etc. See also Municipality.

Municipality. A legally incorporated or duly authorized association of inhabitants of limited area for local governmental or other public purposes. A body politic created by the incorporation of the people of a prescribed locality invested with subordinate powers of legislation to assist in the civil government of the state and to regulate and administer local and internal affairs of the community. State ex rel. McIntire v. City Council of City of Libby, 107 Mont. 216, 82 P.2d 587, 588. A city, borough, town, township or village. Also, the body of officers taken collectively, belonging to a city, who are appointed to manage its affairs and defend its interests.

Political subdivision or public agency or instrumentality of a State. Bankruptcy Code § 101.

See also Person (Municipalities).

Municipal law. That which pertains solely to the citizens and inhabitants of a state, and is thus distinguished from political law, commercial law, and international law. City of Louisville v. Babb, C.C.A.Ind., 75 F.2d 162, 165. In its more common and narrower connotation however it means those laws which pertain to towns, cities and villages and their local government. People ex rel. Ray v. Martin, 294 N.Y. 61, 60 N.E.2d 541, 547, 548.

Municipal lien. A lien or claim existing in favor of a municipal corporation against a property owner for his proportionate share of a public improvement, made by the municipality, whereby his property is specially and individually benefited.

Municipal officer. One who holds an office of a municipality; e.g., mayor, city manager.

Municipal ordinance. A law, rule, or ordinance enacted or adopted by a municipal corporation for the proper conduct of its affairs or the government of its inhabitants; e.g., zoning or traffic ordinances, building codes. Particularly a regulation under a delegation of power from the state.

Municipal purposes. Public or governmental purposes as distinguished from private purposes. It may comprehend all activities essential to the health, morals, protection, and welfare of the municipality.

Municipal securities. The evidences of indebtedness issued by cities, towns, counties, townships, school-districts, and other such territorial divisions of a state. They are of two general classes: (1) Municipal warrants, orders, or certificates; (2) municipal bonds.

The term "municipal securities" means securities which are direct obligations of, or obligations guaranteed as to principal or interest by, a State or any political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality of a State or any political subdivision thereof, or any municipal corporate instrumentality of one or more States, or any security which is an industrial development bond (as defined in § 103(c)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code) the interest on which is excludable from gross income. Securities Exchange Act of 1934, § 3.

See Municipal bonds; Municipal warrants.

Municipal warrants. A municipal warrant or order is an instrument drawn by an officer of a municipality upon its treasurer, directing him to pay an amount of money specified therein to the person named or his order, or to bearer.

Municipium /myuwnasipiyom/. In Roman law, a foreign town to which the freedom of the city of Rome was granted, and whose inhabitants had the privilege of enjoying offices and honors there. A free town which retained its original right of self-government, but whose inhabitants also acquired certain rights of Roman citizens.

Muniment-house, or muniment-room. A house or room of strength, in cathedrals, collegiate churches, castles, colleges, public buildings, etc., purposely made for keeping deeds, charters, writings, etc.

Muniments of title /mywusnants ov táydal/. Documentary evidence of title. The instruments of writing and written evidences which the owner of lands, possessions, or inheritances has, by which he is enabled to defend the title of his estate. See Deed.

The records of title transactions in the chain of title of a person purporting to create the interest in land claimed by such person and upon which he relies as a basis for the marketability of his title, commencing with the root of title and including all subsequent transactions.

Under “muniment of title doctrine” when ownership of property has been litigated between individuals and title has been adjudicated in one of the parties, the losing party cannot relitigate the matter with those who rely upon the title of the winning party. Purdes v. Carvel Hall, Inc., D.C. Iowa, 301 F.Supp. 1256, 1264.

Murder. The unlawful killing of a human being by another with malice aforethought, either express or deliberate and premeditated killing, or which shall be of property has been litigated between individuals and basis for the marketability of his title, commencing with the root of title and including all subsequent transactions.

Under “muniment of title doctrine” when ownership of property has been litigated between individuals and title has been adjudicated in one of the parties, the losing party cannot relitigate the matter with those who rely upon the title of the winning party. Purdes v. Carvel Hall, Inc., D.C. Iowa, 301 F.Supp. 1256, 1264.

Murder. The unlawful killing of a human being by another with malice aforethought, either express or implied. Com. v. Carroll, 194 A.2d 911, 914. The crime is defined by statute in most states (e.g. Calif. Penal Code, § 187). The Model Penal Code definition is as follows:

Criminal homicide constitutes murder when: (a) it is committed purposely or knowingly; or (b) it is committed recklessly under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to the value of human life. Such recklessness and indifference are presumed if the actor is engaged or is an accomplice in the commission of, or an attempt to commit, or flight after committing or attempting to commit robbery, rape or deviate sexual intercourse by force or threat of force, arson, burglary, kidnapping or felonious escape. Model Penal Code, § 210.2.

See also Assassination; Assault with intent to commit murder; Felony murder doctrine; Homicide; Manslaughter.

Degrees of murder. In most states murder is divided into two degrees, for the purpose of imposing a more severe penalty for some murders than for others. All murder which shall be perpetrated by means of poison, or by lying in wait, or by any other kind of wilful, deliberate and premeditated killing, or which shall be committed in the perpetration of, or attempt to perpetrate any arson, rape, robbery or burglary, are commonly deemed murder of the first degree; and all other kinds of murder are deemed murder of the second degree. This general pattern has been followed in most of the states although slight changes have been made in a few of these. Some, for example, have omitted any reference to “poison”, while a few have added “torture” to “poison”. To the felony-murder clause of the statute several have added “mayhem” and sometimes the inclusion of some other felony may be found, such as kidnapping, sodomy or larceny. In certain states there is also the crime of murder in the third degree. For the definition of first and second degree murder under the federal criminal code, see 18 U.S.C.A. § 1111.

Depraved heart murder. Killing of a human being accomplished by extreme atrocity; malice is inferred from the act of atrocity. Extremely negligent conduct, which creates what a reasonable man would realize to be not only an unjustifiable but also a very high degree of risk of death or serious bodily injury to another or to others—though unaccompanied by any intent to kill or do serious bodily injury—and which actually causes the death of another, may constitute murder.

Serial murder. A pattern of murder in which a single individual selects victims either at random or because they share some characteristic.

Murderous act./múrdrom/. In old English law, the killing of a man in a secret manner.

The fine formerly imposed in England upon a person who had committed homicide per infortunium or se defendendo.

Murorum operatio /myuróram ópərəˈʃiː(ə)roʊ/. Lat. The service of work and labor done by inhabitants and adjoining tenants in building or repairing the walls of a city or castle; their personal service was commuted into murage (q.v.).

Must. This word, like the word “shall,” is primarily of mandatory effect, State ex rel. McCabe v. District Court of Third Judicial Dist. in and for Deer Lodge County, 106 Mont. 272, 76 P.2d 634, 637; and in that sense is used in antithesis to “may”. But this meaning of the word is not the only one, and it is often used in a merely directory sense, and consequently is a synonym for the word “may” not only in the permissive sense of that word, but also in the mandatory sense which it sometimes has.

Muster. To assemble together troops and their arms, whether for inspection, drill, or service in the field. To take recruits into the service in the army and inscribe their names on the muster-roll or official record. To summon together; to enroll in service. In the latter sense the term implies that the persons mustered are not already in the service.

Muster-roll. In maritime law, a list or account of a ship's company, required to be kept by the master or other person having care of the ship, containing the name, age, national character, and quality of every person employed in the ship. At time of war it is of great use in ascertaining the ship's neutrality.

Mustizow /məstɪˈjoʊ/. A name given in a South Carolina Act of 1740 to the issue of an Indian and a negro.

Mutatio nominis /myyuwtéysh(ɪ)yəw nómənas/. Lat. In the civil law, change of name.

Mutatis mutandis /myyuwtéyds muwytɛndaɪs/. Lat. With the necessary changes in points of detail, meaning that matters or things are generally the same, but to be altered when necessary, as to names, offices, and the like. Housman v. Waterhouse, 191 App.Div. 850, 182 N.Y.S. 249, 251.

Mute. Speechless; dumb; that cannot or will not speak.
Mutilation. As applied to written documents, such as wills, court records, and the like, this term means rendering the document imperfect by the subtraction from it of some essential part, as, by cutting, tearing, burning, or erasure, but without totally destroying it. See U.C.C. § 3-407. Also, the alteration in the writing, as in a negotiable instrument, so as to make it another and different instrument and no longer evidence of the contract which the parties made. Clem v. Chapman, Tex. Civ.App., 262 S.W. 168, 171. See also Alteration; Deface; Spoilation.

In criminal law, the depriving a man of the use of any of those limbs which may be useful to him in fight, the loss of which amounts to mayhem. People v. Bullington, 27 Cal.App.2d 396, 80 P.2d 1030, 1032. See Maim; Mayhem.

It is a federal crime to mutilate public records (18 U.S.C.A. § 2071), coins (§ 331), passports (§ 1543). It is a federal crime to mutilate public records (18 U.S.C.A. § 2071), coins (§ 331), passports (§ 1543). It is a federal crime to mutilate public records (18 U.S.C.A. § 2071), coins (§ 331), passports (§ 1543).

Mutinous. Insubordinate; disposed to mutiny; tending to incite or encourage mutiny.

Mutiny, n. To rise against lawful or constituted authority, particularly in the naval or military service.

 MUTINY Act. In English law, an act of parliament annu­ ally passed to punish mutiny and desertion, and for the better payment of the army and their quarters. It was first passed April 12, 1689, and was the only provision for the payment of the army. 1 Bl.Comm. 415.

Mutual. Common to both parties. Interchangeable; reciprocal; each acting in return or correspondence to the other; given and received;—spoken of an engagement or relation in which like duties and obligations are exchanged; e.g., the marital relation.

As to mutual Account; Assent; Combat; Condition; Contract; Covenant; Credits; Debt; Insurance; Insurance (Mutual insurance); Mistake; Promise; and Testament, see those titles. See also Mutuality.

Mutual affray. A fight in which both parties willingly enter and is similar to a duel. Taylor v. Commonwealth, 281 Ky. 442, 136 S.W.2d 544. See Affray.

Mutual agreement. A meeting of the minds on a specific subject, and a manifestation of intent of the parties to do or refrain from doing some specific act or acts. See Agreement; Contract; Treaty.

Mutual association. See Savings and loan association.

Mutual benefit association. One based on reciprocal contracts and requires that a member receive benefits as a matter of right. In re Henderson's Estate, 17 Cal.2d 853, 112 P.2d 605, 609. Commonly a fraternal or social organization which provides insurance for its members on an assessment basis.

Mutual benefit insurance. Type of insurance offered to members of a mutual benefit association commonly characterized by assessment of members to meet claims. See Mutual benefit association.

Mutual company. A corporation in which shares are held exclusively by members to whom profits are distributed as dividends in proportion to the business which the members did with the company (e.g. state-chartered mutual savings banks, federal savings and loan associations). One in which the members are both the insurers and the insured (mutual insurance companies). Pink v. Town Taxi Co., 138 Me. 44, 21 A.2d 656, 659.

Mutual demands. Those between the same parties and due in the same capacity or right. Thompson v. Prince, Tex.Civ.App., 126 S.W.2d 574, 576.

Mutual fund. A fund managed by an investment company in which money is raised through the sale of stock and subsequently invested in publicly traded securities. The investment performance of the mutual fund depends on the performance of the underlying investments. Each mutual fund tends to have an investment objective such as; a growth fund strives for capital appreciation in the portfolio; an income fund looks for a stream of income over the life of the investment.

There are two general types of mutual funds; "open-end" in which capitalization is not fixed and more shares may be sold at any time, and "closed-end" in which capitalization is fixed and only the number of shares originally authorized may be sold.

See also Investment company; Load; Open-end investment company.

Closed-end funds. Mutual funds that do not repurchase their shares from investors; the shares are sold in a secondary market, such as on a stock exchange.

Growth funds. Mutual funds that are composed of stocks of companies that are still experiencing growth; the objective is to generate an increase in investment value, with less concern about the provision of steady income. Compare with Income funds, below.

Income funds. Mutual fund consisting of securities that provide periodic dividends or coupon payments; they usually consist of coupon bonds; they are designed to provide investors with a stable income. Compare with Growth funds, above.

Index fund. A mutual fund whose portfolio is designed to match the performance of a broad-based index such as Standard & Poor's Index and whose performance therefore mirrors the market as reflected by the index.

Load fund. Mutual fund in which a charge (load) is made at time of purchase of shares to cover administrative and commission expenses.

Money market funds. Mutual fund that invests in money market securities.
Mutuality doctrine. Doctrine in equity to the effect that equitable relief will be denied a party to a contract on a showing that the plaintiff is not bound to the same extent as the defendant in fulfilling the contract. In another context, it refers to the obligation of a meeting of the minds before a contract can be found. See Mutuality of obligation.

Mutuality of estoppel. This doctrine dictates that a judgment will not be held conclusive in favor of one party unless it would be conclusive against him had the case been decided the other way. Foltz v. Pullman, Inc., Del.Super., 319 A.2d 38, 41.

Mutuality of obligation. Mutuality of obligation requires that unless both parties to a contract are bound, neither is bound. Sala & Ruthe Realty, Inc. v. Campbell, 89 Nev. 483, 515 P.2d 394, 396. Such obligation as pertaining to executory contract requires that each party to agreement be bound to perform, and if it appears that one party was never bound to do the acts which formed the consideration for promise of the other, there is lack of mutuality of obligation and other party is not bound. McCandles v. Schick, 85 Idaho 509, 380 P.2d 893, 898. See Mutuality doctrine.

Mutuality of remedy. In equity, one party to a contract may not have equitable relief if he is not bound by the contract to the same extent as the other party, or if his remedy is not co-extensive. Generally, specific performance will be granted only where there is "mutuality of remedy", which means that right to performance must be mutual. Burr v. Greenland, Tex.Civ.App., 356 S.W.2d 370, 375.

Mutual mistake. As justifying reformation of an instrument is one common to both or all parties, where each party labors under the same misconception respecting a material fact, the terms of the agreement, or the provision of a written instrument designed to embody such an agreement. RGS, Cardox Recovery, Inc. v. Dorchester Enhanced Recovery Co., Tex.App. 13 Dist., 700 S.W.2d 635, 639. Mutual mistake with regard to contract, justifying reformation, exists where there has been a meeting of the minds of the parties and an agreement actually entered into but the agreement in its written form does not express what was really intended by the parties. Sierra Blanca Sales Co., Inc. v. Newco Industries, Inc., App., 84 N.M. 524, 505 P.2d 867, 873.

Mutual relief association. An insurer, chartered under a designated statute, having no capital stock, having relief funds created and sustained by assessments made upon the members, which files reports with insurance commissioner evidencing that it is not conducted for profit of its officers. State v. Texas Mut. Life Ins. Co. of Texas, Tex.Civ.App., 51 S.W.2d 405, 412.

Mutual rescission. An agreement between the parties to cancel their contract, releasing the parties from further obligations under the contract. The object of the agreement is to restore the parties to positions they would have occupied had no contract ever been made. See also Rescission of contract.

Mutual reserve company. A company issuing "benefit thrift certificates" containing both savings features and renewable term insurance features, paid for by a single premium, with cash and loan values and limitation upon the expense liable for cost of supervision and management, was a "mutual reserve company".

Mutual savings bank. A bank organized by depositors, whose interest is shown by certificates of deposit, for the purpose of furnishing a safe depositary for money of members. It need not be incorporated or under supervision unless state law so requires. A-C Investment Ass'n v. Helvering, 62 App.D.C. 339, 68 F.2d 386, 387. A banking institution in which the depositors are the owners and which has no capital stock. See also Savings and Loan Association.

Mutual wills. Those made as the separate wills of two people which are reciprocal in provisions. Or those executed pursuant to agreement or compact between two or more persons to dispose of their property in particular manner, each in consideration of the other's doing so. See Reciprocal wills.

Mutuant. The person who lends chattels in the contract of mutuum (q.v.).

Mutuari /myúwtyuweřay/ . To borrow; mutuatus, a borrowing.

Mutuary /myúwtyuweřriy/ . A person who borrows personal chattels to be consumed by him and returned to the lender in kind and quantity; the borrower in a contract of mutuum.

Mutuatus /myúwtyuwey̱tas/ . A loan of money.

Mutus et surdus /myúwtaς et sǐrdς/. Lat. In civil and old English law, dumb and deaf.
Mutuum /myùwtuwwam/. Lat. A loan for consumption; a loan of chattels, upon an agreement that the borrower may consume them, returning to the lender an equivalent in kind and quantity; as, a loan of corn, wine, or money which is to be used or consumed, and is to be replaced by other corn, wine, or money. In re Ellis' Estate, 24 Del.Ch. 393, 6 A.2d 602, 611. At common law, such a transaction is regarded as a sale or exchange, and not a bailment. See also Loan for exchange; Loan for use.

Mysterious disappearance. Term refers to theft insurance policy provision covering any disappearance or loss under unknown, puzzling or baffling circumstances which arouse wonder, curiosity or speculation, or circumstances which are difficult to understand or explain. Claiborne v. U. S. Fire Ins. Co., La.App., 193 So.2d 315, 317.

Mystery. A trade, art, or occupation. Masters frequently bind themselves in the indentures with their apprentices to teach them their art, trade, and mystery.
N.A. An abbreviation for “non allocatur”; it is not allowed. Also sometimes used as abbreviation for “not available” or “not applicable”.

Naam /näm/. Sax. The attaching or taking of movable goods and chattels, called “vif” or “mort” according as the chattels were living or dead.

Naif /nayıf/. L. Fr. A villein; a born slave; a bondwoman.

Nail. A lineal measure of two inches and a quarter.

Naked. Bare; wanting in necessary conditions; incomplete, as a naked contract (nudum pactum), i.e., a contract devoid of consideration, and therefore invalid; or, simple, unilateral, comprising but a single element, as a naked authority, i.e., one which is not coupled with any interest in the agent, but subsists for the benefit of the principal alone.

As to naked Confession; Deposit; Option; Possession; Possibility; Power; Promise; and Trust, see those titles.

Nam /näm/. In old English law, a distress or seizure of chattels.

As a Latin conjunction, for; because. Often used by the old writers in introducing the quotation of a Latin maxim.

Namatio /nاميژiًح(i)كow/. L. Lat. In old English and Scotch law, a distraining or taking of a distress; an impounding.

Name. The designation of an individual person, or of a firm or corporation. Word or combination of words used to distinguish person or thing or class from others.

A person’s “name” consists of one or more Christian or given names and one surname or family name. It is the distinctive characterization in words by which one is known and distinguished from others, and description, or abbreviation, is not the equivalent of a “name.”

See also Alias; Christian name; Corporate name; Fictional name; Full name; Generic (Generic name); Legal name; Nickname; Street name; Surname; Tradename.

Corporate name. Most states require corporations doing business under an assumed or fictitious name to register, record, or register and record, the name with state, county, or state and county officials.

Distinctive name. As used in regulation of United States Department of Agriculture, a trade, arbitrary, or fancy name which clearly distinguishes a food product, mixture, or compound from any other food product, mixture, or compound. U. S. v. Forty Barrels and Twenty Kegs of Coca Cola, 241 U.S. 265, 36 S.Ct. 573, 580, 60 L.Ed. 995.

Generic name. The general or nontrademark name of a product. For example, the trade names of a particular type of fiber may be Antron, Cantree, Qiana; but the generic name of that fiber is nylon.

Name and arms clause. The popular name in English law for the clause, sometimes inserted in a will or settlement by which property is given to a person, for the purpose of imposing on him the condition that he shall assume the surname and arms of the testator or settlor, with a direction that, if he neglects to assume or discontinues the use of them, the estate shall devolve on the next person in remainder, and a provision for preserving contingent remainders.

Named insured. In insurance, the person specifically designated in the policy as the one protected and, commonly, it is the person with whom the contract of insurance has been made.

Namely. A difference, in grammatical sense, in strictness exists between the words namely and including. Namely imports interpretation, i.e., indicates what is included in the previous term; but including imports addition, i.e., indicates something not included.

Namium /némiyam/. L. Lat. In old English law, a taking; a distress. Things, goods, or animals taken by way of distress. Simplex namium, a simple taking or pledge.

Namium vetitum /némiyam vétadam/. An unjust taking of the cattle of another and driving them to an unlawful place, pretending damage done by them.

Nantissem ent /nontismon/. In French law, the contract of pledge; if of a movable, it is called “gage;” and if of an immovable, it is called “antichrèse.”

Narcoanalysis. Process whereby a subject is put to sleep, or into a semi-somnolent state by means of chemical injections and then interrogated while in this dream-like state.

Narcotics. Generic term for any drug which dulls the senses and commonly becomes addictive after prolonged use. An addictive or otherwise harmful drug, the manufacture, importation, sale, or possession of which is statutorily prohibited. 21 U.S.C.A. § 801 et seq.

Narr. A common abbreviation of "narratio" (q.v.). A declaration in an action.

Narr and cognovit law. Law providing that judgment may be had for plaintiff on notes by confession of any attorney that amount shown on notes, together with interest and costs, constitutes legal and just claim; word
"narr" being an abbreviation of Latin word "narratio," meaning complaint or petition, and word "cognovit" meaning that defendant has confessed judgment and S.W.2d 421, 422. See Judgment (Confession of judgment).

Narratio /narey(y)ψow/. Lat. One of the common law names for a plaintiff’s count or declaration, as being a narrative of the facts on which he relies.

Narrative evidence. Testimony from a witness which he is permitted to give without the customary questions and answers; e.g. when witness explains in detail what happened without interruption.

Narrator. A counter; a pleader who draws narrs. Serviens narrator, a serjeant at law.

Narrow seas. Those seas which run between two coasts not far apart. The term is sometimes applied to the English channel.

Nation. A people, or aggregation of men, existing in the form of an organized jural society, usually inhabiting a distinct portion of the earth, speaking the same language, using the same customs, possessing historic continunity, and distinguished from other like groups by their racial origin and characteristics, and generally, but not necessarily, living under the same government and soveignity. Montoya v. U. S., 180 U.S. 261, 21 S.Ct. 358, 45 L.Ed. 521.

In American constitutional law the word "state" is applied to the several members of the American Union, while the word "nation" is applied to the whole body of the people embraced within the jurisdiction of the federal government.

National. Pertaining or relating to a nation as a whole.
Commonly applied in American law to institutions, laws, or affairs of the United States or its government, as opposed to those of the several states. "National" contemplates an activity with a nationwide scope. In re
National Foundation for Diarrheal Diseases, 8 Misc.2d 12, 164 N.Y.S.2d 177, 178. See also Federal.
A person owning permanent allegiance to a state. 8

The term "national" as used in the phrase "national of the United States" is broader than the term "citizen".

National bank. A bank incorporated and doing business under the laws of the United States, whose charter is approved by the Comptroller of the Currency as distinguished from a state bank, which derives its power from the authority of a particular state. Most such banks are members of the Federal Reserve System and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. See Member Bank.

National currency. Legal tender; that which circulates as money. Notes issued by national banks, and by the United States government. See Currency; Federal Reserve notes; Legal tender.

National debt. The money owing by government to some of the public or to financial institutions, consisting of such obligations as Treasury bills, notes, and bonds, the interest of which is paid out of the taxes raised by the whole of the public (i.e. out of general revenues).

National defense. A generic concept that refers to the military and naval establishments and the related activities of national preparedness and includes all matters directly and reasonably connected with the defense of the nation against its enemies. Gorin v. United States, 312 U.S. 19, 61 S.Ct. 429, 434, 436, 85 L.Ed. 488. Implicating the term "national defense" is the notion of defendning those values and ideals which set this nation apart.
L.Ed.2d 508.

National domain. See Domain.

National domicile. See Domicile.

National emergency. A state of national crisis; a situation demanding immediate and extraordinary national or federal action. Congress has made little or no distinction between a "state of national emergency" and a 728, 732.

National Environmental Policy Act. Federal Act set-forth declaration of national environmental policy and goals. Major provision requires that every federal agency submit an environmental impact statement with every legislative recommendation or program affecting the quality of the environment. 42 U.S.C.A. § 4321 et seq. See Environmental impact statements.

National government. The government of a whole nation, as distinguished from that of a state, local or territorial division of the nation, and also as distinguished from that of a league or confederation. Commonly referred to as the "federal government".

National Guard. Organization of men maintained as a reserve for the U.S. Army and Air Force. Members serve on a state-wide basis but are subject to being activated for federal service as well as for state emergencies.

Nationality. That quality or character which arises from the fact of a person's belonging to a nation or state. Nationality determines the political status of the individual, especially with reference to allegiance; while domicile determines his civil status. Nationality arises either by birth or by naturalization. See also Naturalization.

Nationality Act. Shortened name for Immigration and Nationality Act which is a comprehensive federal statute embracing such matters as immigration, naturalization and admission of aliens. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1101 et seq.

Naturalization. The acquisition and control of privately owned business by government. See also Denaturalization.

National Labor Relations Act. A federal statute known as the Wagner Act of 1935 and amended by the Taft-Hartley Act of 1947; it is comprehensive legislation regulating the relations between employers and employees, including supervised elections, and establishing National Labor Relations Board. 29 U.S.C.A. § 151 et seq.

The Board has two principal functions under the act: preventing and remedying unfair labor practices by employers and labor organizations or their agents, and conducting secret ballot elections among employees in appropriate collective-bargaining units to determine whether or not they desire to be represented by a labor organization. The Board also conducts secret ballot elections among employees who have been covered by a union-shop agreement to determine whether or not they wish to revoke their union's authority to make such agreements; in jurisdictional disputes, decides and determines which competing group of workers is entitled to perform the work involved; and conducts secret ballot elections among employees concerning employers' final settlement offers in national emergency labor disputes.

The Board's major responsibilities are: (1) the mediation of disputes over wages, hours, and working conditions which arise between rail and air carriers and organizations representing their employees, and (2) the investigation of representation disputes and certification of employee organizations as representatives of crafts or classes of carrier employees.

National origin. In equal employment opportunities provisions of Civil Rights Act, term "national origin" on its face refers to country where person was born, or, more broadly, country from which his or her ancestors came, and was not intended to embrace requirement of United States citizenship. Espinoza v. Farah Mfg. Co., Inc., Tex., 414 U.S. 86, 94 S.Ct. 334, 336, 38 L.Ed.2d 287.

National Service Life Insurance. Special type of life insurance for military and naval personnel during and after their service created by the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940 and containing highly favorable rates and terms.

Nations, law of. See International law.

Native. A natural-born subject or citizen; a citizen by birth; one who owes his domicile or citizenship to the fact of his birth within the country referred to. The term may also include one born abroad, if his parents were then citizens of the country, and not permanently residing in foreign parts. U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U.S. 649, 18 S.Ct. 456, 42 L.Ed. 890.

The word "natives", as used in Alien Enemy Act, refers to person's place of birth, so that a person remains a native of country of his birth, though he has moved away therefrom. United States ex rel. D'Esquivel v. Uhl, C.C.A.N.Y., 137 F.2d 903, 905.

Native born. See Native.

Nativi conventionarii /natáyvay konvësh(shiy)anéríyay/. Villeins or bondmen by contract or agreement.

Nativi de stipite /natáyvay dyi stipádiy/. Villeins or bondmen by birth or stock.

Nativitas /nástivtas/. Villenage; that state in which men were born slaves.

Nativo habendo /natáyvov habéndow/. In old English law, a writ which lay for a lord when his villein had run away from him. It was directed to the sheriff, and commanded him to apprehend the villein, and to restore him together with his goods to the lord.

Nativus /nástáyvos/. Lat. In old English law, a native; specifically, one born into a condition of servitude; a born serf or villein.

Natura appetit perfectum; ita et lex /nátyúra apéétot prófektam; áyta ét léks/. Nature covets perfection; so does law also.

Natura vis maxima; natura bis maxima /nátyúriy vis méksoma; nátyúra bis méksoma/. The force of nature is greatest; nature is doubly great.

Natura fide jussionis sit strictissimi juris et non durat vel extendatur de re ad rem, de persona ad personam, de tempore ad tempus /nátyúra fáidyj jússióönows sit stríktsismay júras ´et nón duýrat vēl ēkstendéytor diy ríy ad rém, diy persówna ad
Natural. Untouched by man or by influences of civilization; wild; untutored, and is the opposite of the word "artificial". Department of Public Works and Bldgs. for and in Behalf of People v. Keller, 22 Ill.App.3d 54, 316 N.E.2d 794, 796. The juristic meaning of this term does not differ from the vernacular, except in the cases where it is used in opposition to the term "legal;" and then it means proceeding from or determined by physical causes or conditions, as distinguished from positive enactments of law, or attributable to the nature of man rather than to the commands of law, or based upon moral rather than legal considerations or sanctions.

As to natural Allegiance; Boundary; Channel; Child; Children; Day; Death; Domicile; Equity; Fruit; Guardian; Heirs; Infancy; Liberty; Obligation; Person; Possession; Presumption; Rights; Succession; Watercourse, and Year, see those titles.

Natural affection. Such as naturally subsists between near relatives, as a father and child, brother and sister, husband and wife. This is regarded in law as a good consideration. See Nudum pactum.

Natural and probable consequences. Those consequences that a person by prudent human foresight can anticipate as likely to result from an act, because they happen so frequently from the commission of such an act that in the field of human experience they may be expected to happen again. Pope v. Pinkerton-Hays Lumber Co., Fla.App., 120 So.2d 227, 230.

Natural born citizen. Persons who are born within the jurisdiction of a national government, i.e., in its territorial limits, or those born of citizens temporarily residing abroad. See Jus soli; Naturalization clause.

Natural consequences. See Natural and probable consequences.

Natural death. Death from causes other than accident or violence. Also called death from natural causes.

Natural Death Acts. See Right to die laws; Will (Living will).

Naturale est quidlibet dissolvi eo modo quo ligatur/nétyárélyi ést kwidlabst dazólyav iyow mówdow kwów lagéytor/. It is natural for a thing to be unbound in the same way in which it was bound.

Natural flood channel. A channel beginning at some point on banks of stream and ending at some other point lower down stream, through which flood waters naturally flow at times of high water. C. M. Bott Furniture Co. v. City of Buffalo, 131 Misc. 624, 227 N.Y.S. 660, 665.

Naturalization. The process by which a person acquires nationality after birth and becomes entitled to the privileges of U.S. citizenship. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1401 et seq.

In the United States collective naturalization occurs when designated groups are made citizens by treaty (as Louisiana Purchase), or by a law of Congress (as in annexation of Texas and Hawaii). Individual naturalization must follow certain steps: (a) petition for naturalization by a person of lawful age who has been a lawful resident of the United States for 5 years; (b) investigation by the Immigration and Naturalization Service to determine whether the applicant can speak and write the English language, has a knowledge of the fundamentals of American government and history, is attached to the principles of the Constitution and is of good moral character; (c) hearing before a U.S. District Court or certain State courts of record; and (d) after a lapse of at least 30 days a second appearance in court when the oath of allegiance is administered.

Naturalization clause. The Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, Section 1, provides that all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States, and of the State wherein they reside. See Jus soli.

Naturalization courts. Both federal and state courts of record have jurisdiction over naturalization matters. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1421.

Naturalized citizen. One who, being an alien by birth, has received U.S. citizenship under naturalization laws. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1421 et seq.

Natural law. This expression, "natural law," or jus naturale, was largely used in the philosophical speculations of the Roman jurists of the Antonine age, and was intended to denote a system of rules and principles for the guidance of human conduct which, independently of enacted law or of the systems peculiar to any one people, might be discovered by the rational intelligence of man, and would be found to grow out of and conform to his nature, meaning by that word his whole mental, moral, and physical constitution. The point of departure for this conception was the Stoic doctrine of a life ordered "according to nature," which in its turn rested upon the purely supposititious existence, in primitive times, of a "state of nature;" that is, a condition of society in which men universally were governed solely by a rational and consistent obedience to the needs, impulses, and promptings of their true nature, such nature being as yet undefaced by dishonesty, falsehood, or indulgence of the baser passions. In ethics, it consists in practical universal judgments which man himself elicits. These express necessary and obligatory rules of human conduct which have been established by the author of human nature as essential to the divine purposes in the universe and have been promulgated by God solely through human reason.

Natural life. The period of a person's existence considered as continuing until terminated by physical dissolution or death occurring in the course of nature; used in contradistinction to that juristic and artificial conception of life as an aggregate of legal rights or the possession of a legal personality, which could be terminated by "civil death" (q.v.), that is, the extinction of personality which resulted from entering a monastery or being attainted of treason or felony.

Natural monument. Objects permanent in character which are found on the land as they were placed by nature, such as streams, lakes, ponds, shores, and beaches; sometimes including highways and streets, walls, fences, trees, hedges, springs, and rocks, and the like.

Natural object of testator's bounty. In testamentary law, term comprises whoever would take, in the absence of a will, because they are the persons whom the law has so designated, and in the ordinary case the law follows the normal condition of near relationship.

Natural objects. In interpretation of boundaries term includes mountains, lakes, rivers, etc. See also Natural monument.

Natural premium. Actual sum necessary to meet maturing death claims each year and is necessarily exceeded by the "net premium". Fox v. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 107 F.2d 715, 718.

Natural resources. Any material in its native state which when extracted has economic value. Timberland, oil and gas wells, ore deposits, and other products of nature that have economic value. The cost of natural resources is subject to depletion. Often called "wasting assets."

The term includes not only timber, gas, oil, coal, minerals, lakes, and submerged lands, but also, features which supply a human need and contribute to the health, welfare, and benefit of a community, and are essential to the well-being thereof and proper enjoyment of property devoted to park and recreational purposes.

Natural rights. Those which grow out of nature of man and depend upon his personality and are distinguished from those which are created by positive laws enacted by a duly constituted government to create an orderly civilized society. In re Gogabashvele's Estate, 195 Cal. App.2d 503, 16 Cal.Rptr. 77, 91.

Natura non facit saltum; ita nec lex /natyúra non féysát sóltám; aýta něk léks/. Nature makes no leap [no sudden or irregular movement]; so neither does law. Applied in old practice to the regular observance of the degrees in writs of entry, which could not be passed over per saltum.

Natura non facit vacuum, nec lex supervacuum /natyúra nón féysát vákyuwm; něk léks s(y)úwpár-vákyuwm/. Nature makes no vacuum, the law nothing purposeless.

Natus /néyta/. Lat. Born, as distinguished from nasciturus, about to be born. Ante natus, one born before a particular person or event, e.g., before the death of his father, before a political revolution, etc. Post natus, one born after a particular person or event.

Nauclerus /nóklérus/. Lat. In the civil law, the master or owner of a merchant vessel.

Naulage /nóleýj/. The freight of passengers in a ship.

Naulum /nólam/. In the civil law, the freight or fare paid for the transportation of cargo or passengers over the sea in a vessel. This is a Latinized form of a Greek word.

Nauta /nóta/. Lat. In the civil and maritime law, a sailor; one who works a ship. Any one who is on board a ship for the purpose of navigating her. The employer of a ship.

Nautical. Pertaining to ships or to the art of navigation or the business of carriage by sea. See also Marine.

Nautical assessors. Experienced shipmasters, or other persons having special knowledge of navigation or nautical affairs, who are called to the assistance of a court of admiralty, in difficult cases involving questions of negligence, and who sit with the judge during the argument, and give their advice upon questions of seamanship or the weight of testimony.

Nautical mile. See Mile.

Nautica pecunia /nótaika pákyúwn(i)ya/. A loan to a shipowner, to be repaid only upon the successful termination of the voyage, and therefore allowed to be made at an extraordinary rate of interest (nauticum fænus).

Nauticum fænus /nótaikam fýnas/. Lat. In the civil law, nautical or maritime interest; an extraordinary rate of interest agreed to be paid for the loan of money on the hazard of a voyage; corresponding to interest on contracts of bottomry or respondentia in English and American maritime law.

Navagium /návyéyi(j)am/. In old English law, a duty on certain tenants to carry their lord's goods in a ship.

Naval. Appertaining to the navy (q.v.).

Naval base. See Base.

Naval law. The system of regulations and principles for the government of the navy. See Code of Military Justice.

Navarchus /návárkas/. In the civil law, the master or commander of a ship; the captain of a man-of-war.

Navicularius /návyklériýas/. In the civil law, the master or captain of a ship.

Navigable. See Navigable waters.

Navigable in fact. Streams or lakes are navigable in fact when they are used or are susceptible of being used in their natural and ordinary condition as highways for commerce over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on water. Taylor Fishing Club v. Hammett, Tex.Civ. App., 88 S.W.2d 127, 129. See also Navigable waters.

Navigable river or stream. At common law, a river or stream in which the tide ebbs and flows, or as far as the

NAVIGABLE RIVER OR STREAM

At common law, a river or stream in which the tide ebbs and flows, or as far as the tide ebbs and flows. But as to the definition in American law, see Navigable waters.

Navigable sea. The "navigable sea" is divided into three zones: (1) nearest to the nation's shores are its internal or "inland waters"; (2) beyond the inland waters, and measured from their seaward edge, is a belt known as the marginal or "territorial sea"; and (3) outside the territorial sea are the "high seas". U.S. v. State of La., 394 U.S. 11, 89 S.Ct. 773, 780, 788, 22 L.Ed.2d 44.

Navigable waters. Those waters which afford a channel for useful commerce.

Any body of water, navigable in fact, which by itself or by uniting with other waters forms a continuous highway over which commerce may be carried on with other states or countries. United States v. Appalachian Electric Power Co., 311 U.S. 377, 85 L.Ed. 243, rehearing denied 312 U.S. 712, 61 S.Ct. 548, 85 L.Ed. 1143, petition denied 317 U.S. 594, 63 S.Ct. 67, 87 L.Ed. 487. In determining whether water is "navigable," the factual inquiry is whether the water has capability of use by the public for the purpose of transportation and commerce. U.S. v. Kaiser Aetna, C.A. Hawaii, 584 F.2d 378, 381.

A water is "navigable," for purposes of admiralty jurisdiction, provided that it is used or susceptible of being used as an artery of commerce. Adams v. Montana Power Co., C.A.Mont., 528 F.2d 437, 440. Rivers are "navigable" in fact when they are used, or are susceptible of being used, in their ordinary condition as highways for commerce over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on water. Madole v. Johnson, D.C.La., 241 F.Supp. 379, 381.

Navigable waters of the United States. A body of water is "navigable water of the United States" if it is presently being used or is suitable for use for transportation and commerce, or if it has been so used or was suitable for such use in the past, or if it could be made suitable for such use in the future by reasonable improvements. U.S. v. Cannon, D.C.Del., 363 F.Supp. 1045, 1050. Such waters have been held to include the high seas, which begin at a line three miles offshore. Reynolds v. Ingalls Shipbuilding Div., Litton Systems, Inc., C.A. Miss., 53 F.Supp. 1028.

Navigate. To journey by water; to go in a vessel; to sail or manage a vessel; to use the waters as a highway for commerce or communication; to ply. To direct one's course through any medium; to steer, especially to operate an airplane or airship. United States v. Montana, C.C.A.Cal., 134 F.2d 986, 987, 988.

Navigation. The act or the science or the business of traversing the sea or other navigable waters in ships or vessels. The Silvia, 171 U.S. 462, 19 S.Ct. 7, 43 L.Ed. 241.

Regular navigation. In this phrase, the word "regular" may be used in contradistinction to "occasional," rather than to "unlawful," and refer to vessels that, alone or with others, constitute lines, and not merely to such as are regular in the sense of being properly documented under the laws of the country to which they belong.

Rules of navigation. Rules and regulations adopted by commercial nations to govern the steering and management of vessels approaching each other at sea so as to avoid the danger of collision or fouling.

Navigational visibility. Visibility as affecting speed with reference to distance within which boat in fog could be brought to stop, before any course of any vessel emerging from fog on either side would cross her projected course alongside the fog bank at its nearest point. The Silver Palm, C.C.A.Cal., 94 F.2d 754, 767.

Navis /néyvæs/. Lat. A ship; a vessel.

Navy. A fleet of ships; the aggregate of vessels of war belonging to a nation. In a broader sense, and as equivalent to "naval forces," the entire corps of officers and men enlisted in the naval service and who man the public ships of war, including in this sense, in the United States, the officers and men of the Marine Corps. Wilkes v. Dinsman, 48 U.S. (7 How.) 89, 12 L.Ed. 618; U.S. v. Dunn, 120 U.S. 249, 7 S.Ct. 507, 30 L.Ed. 667. One of the Armed Forces of the United States.

Navy Department. Part of the Department of Defense, presided over by the Secretary of the Navy, who is responsible to the Secretary of Defense for the operation and efficiency of the Navy. (10 U.S.C.A. § 5031). The primary mission of the Navy is to protect the United States, as directed by the President or the Secretary of Defense, by the effective prosecution of war at sea including, with its Marine Corps component, the seizure or defense of advanced naval bases; to support, as required, the forces of all military departments of the United States; and maintain freedom of the seas.

Nazaranna /názərənə/. In old English law, a sum paid to government as an acknowledgment for a grant of lands, or any public office.

N.B. An abbreviation for "nota bene," mark well, observe; also "nulla bona," no goods.

N.C.D. Nemine contra dicente. No one dissenting.

N.D. An abbreviation for "Northern District," e.g. U.S. District Court for Northern District of N.Y.

Ne admittas /nīy admītās/. Lat. In ecclesiastical law, the name of a prohibitory writ, directed to the bishop, at the request of the plaintiff or defendant, where a quare impedit is pending, when either party fears that the bishop will admit the other's clerk pending the suit between them.

Neap tide /nīy táyd/. When the moon is in its first and third quarters, the tides do not rise as high, nor fall as low, as on the average; at such times the tides are known as "neap tides." Borax Consolidated v. City of Los Angeles, Cal., 296 U.S. 10, 56 S.Ct. 23, 80 L.Ed. 9.

Near. Proximate; close-by; about; adjacent; contiguous; abutting. The word as applied to space is a relative term without positive or precise meaning, depending for its signification on the subject-matter in relation to which it is used and the circumstances under which it becomes necessary to apply it to surrounding objects. Closely akin or related by blood; as, a near relative. Close to one's interests and affections, etc.; touching or affecting intimately, as one's near affairs, friends. Not far distant in time, place or degree; not remote; adjoining. Zeigenfus v. Snelbaker, 38 N.J.Sup. 304, 118 A.2d 876, 879.

Near money. Liquid assets which are readily convertible into money.

Neat, net. The clear weight or quantity of an article, without the bag, box, keg, or other thing in which it may be enveloped.

Ne baila pas /nə bɛɪlə pə/. L Fr. He did not deliver. A plea in detinue, denying the delivery to the defendant of the thing sued for.

Necation. The act of killing.

Nec curia deficeret /nék kyurɪət dəfɪsɛrɛt in ʃəstɪʃ(ɪ)ə ɛɡzəbɛndə/. Nor should the court be deficient in showing justice.

Necessaries. Article which a party actually needs. State v. Earnest, Mo.App., 162 S.W.2d 338, 341. Things indispensable, or things proper and useful, for the sustenance of human life.

Necessaries consist of food, drink, clothing, medical attention, and a suitable place of residence, and they are regarded as necessaries in the absolute sense of the word. However, liability for necessaries is not limited to articles required to sustain life; it extends to articles which would ordinarily be necessary and suitable, in view of the rank, position, fortune, earning capacity, and mode of living of the individual involved.

Whether attorney's services are to be considered "necessaries" depends on whether there is necessity therefor. Fenn v. Hart Dairy Co., 231 Mo.App. 1005, 83 S.W.2d 120, 124. But such services are usually "necessaries". Leonard v. Alexander, 50 Cal.App.2d 385, 122 P.2d 984, 986.

What constitutes "necessaries" for which an admiralty lien will attach depends upon what is reasonably needed in the ship's business, regard being had to the character of the voyage and the employment in which the vessel is being used. Walker Skageth Food Stores v. The Bavois, D.C.N.Y., 43 F.Supp. 109, 110, 111.

See also Necessary; Necessitous circumstances; Support.

Necessaries, doctrine of. One who sells goods to a wife or child may charge the husband or father if the goods are required for their sustenance or support.

Necessarily included offense. For a lesser offense to be "necessarily included" in offense charged, within lesser included offense rule, it must be such that the greater offense cannot be committed without also committing the lesser. Kelly v. U. S., 125 U.S.App.D.C. 205, 370 F.2d 227, 228. "Lesser offense" is "necessarily included" in a graver offense if the greater of the offenses includes all the legal and factual elements of the lesser. State v. Umfleet, Mo.App., 538 S.W.2d 55, 59. See Fed.R.Crim.P. 31(c). See also Lesser included offense.

Necessarium est quod non potest alter se habere /nēssəsəriəm est ðkwʊd nʊn pɔtɛst ɔlə se hæbɪrɪ/, That is necessary which cannot be otherwise.

Necessarius /nēssəsəriəs/. Lat. Necessary; unavoidable; indispensable; not admitting of choice or the action of the will; needful.

Necessary. This word must be considered in the connection in which it is used, as it is a word susceptible of various meanings. It may import absolute physical necessity or inevitability, or it may import that which is only convenient, useful, appropriate, suitable, proper, or conducive to the end sought. It is an adjective expressing degrees, and may express mere convenience or that which is indispensable or an absolute physical necessity. It may mean something which in the accomplishment of a given object cannot be dispensed with, or it may mean something reasonably useful and proper, and of greater or lesser benefit or convenience, and its force and meaning must be determined with relation to the particular object sought. Kay County Excise Board v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 185 Okl. 327, 91 P.2d 1087, 1088.

In eminent domain proceedings, it means land reasonably requisite and proper for accomplishment of end in view, not absolute necessity of particular location. State v. Whitcomb, 94 Mont. 415, 22 P.2d 823.

With respect to taxation (i.e. deduction of necessary expenses is carrying on trade or business), means appropriate and helpful in furthering the taxpayer's business or income producing activity. I.R.C. §§ 162(a) and 212. See also Ordinary (Ordinary expenses).

As to necessary Damages; Deposit; Domicile; Implication; Intromission; Repair; and Way, see those titles. See also Necessaries; Necessity.

Necessary and proper. Words "necessary and proper" mean appropriate and adapted to carrying into effect given object. Petition of Public Service Coordinated Transport, 103 N.J.Sup. 505, 247 A.2d 888, 891.

Necessary and proper clause. Art. I, § 8, par. 18 of U.S. Constitution, which authorizes Congress to make all laws necessary and proper to carry out the enumerated powers of Congress and all other powers vested in the government of the United States or any department or officer thereof. See Penumbra doctrine.

These words are not limited to such measures as are absolutely and indispensably necessary, without which the powers granted must fail of execution, but they include all appropriate means which are conducive or adapted to the end to be accomplished, and which, in the judgment of Congress will most advantageously effect it.

NECESSARY AND PROPER CLAUSE
NECESSARY AND PROPER CLAUSE

Juilliard v. Greenman, 110 U.S. 421, 440, 4 S.Ct. 122, 28 L.Ed. 204. The “necessary and proper” clause of the federal Constitution is not a grant of power but a declaration that Congress possesses all of the means necessary to carry out its specifically granted powers. Kinsella v. U.S., 361 U.S. 234, 80 S.Ct. 297, 4 L.Ed.2d 268.

Necessary inference. One which is inescapable or unavoidable from the standpoint of reason. Taylor v. Twiner, 193 Miss. 410, 9 So.2d 644, 646.

Necessary parties. In pleading and practice, those persons who must be joined in an action because, inter alia, complete relief cannot be given to those already parties without their joiner. Fed.R.Civ. P. 19(a).

Necessary parties are those who must be included in action either as plaintiffs or defendants, unless there is a valid excuse for their nonjoinder. City of Hutchinson for Human Relations Commission of Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, Kansas Office of Kansas State Employment Service, 213 Kan. 399, 517 P.2d 117, 122. Those persons who have such an interest in controversy that a final judgment or decree cannot be made without either affecting their interests or leaving the controversy in such a condition that its final adjudication may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience. Royal Petroleum Corp. v. Dennis, 160 Tex. 392, 332 S.W.2d 313, 314. A "necessary party" is one whose joiner is required in order to afford the plaintiff the complete relief to which he is entitled against the defendant who is properly suable in that county. Orange Associates, Inc. v. Albright, Tex.Civ.App., 548 S.W.2d 806, 807.

Necessitas /nasésstās/. Lat. Necessity; a force, power, or influence which compels one to act against his will.

Necessitas culpabilis /nasésstās kálpéybalas/. Culpable necessity; unfortunate necessity; necessity which, while it excuses the act done under its compulsion, does not leave the doer entirely free from blame. The necessity which compels a man to kill another in self-defense is thus distinguished from that which requires the killing of a felon.

Necessitas est lex temporis et loci /nasésstās ėst léks témpras ėt lówsay/. Necessity is the law of time and of place.

Necessitas excusat aut extenuat delictum in capitalibus, quod non operatur idem in cívelibus /nasésstās akskýuiwst ŏt akstényuwt dólîktm in káptéybalbas kwód nón oprēyrą ĺydám an savilbás/. Necessity excuses or extenuates a delinquency in capital cases, which has not the same operation in civil cases.

Necessitas facit licitum quod alias non est licitum /nasésstās fęysṭ lísstam kwód ēlylys nón ćst lísstam/. Necessity makes that lawful which otherwise is not lawful.

Necessitas inducit privilegium quod jura privata /nasésstās andyũwsat prvâliyll(y)jom kwôwed jûro prâvěyta/. Necessity gives a privilege with reference to private rights. The necessity involved in this maxim is of three kinds, viz.: (1) Necessity of self-preservation; (2) of obedience; and (3) necessity resulting from the act of God, or of a stranger.

Necessitas non habet legem /nasésstās nôn hêybat lîyjām/. Necessity has no law.

Necessitas publica major est quam privata /nasésstās póblakó méyjår ěst kwâm prâvěyta/. Public necessity is greater than private. "Death," it has been observed, "is the last and furthest point of particular necessity, and the law imposes it upon every subject that he prefer the urgent service of his king and country before the safety of his life."

Necessitas quod cogit, defendit /nasésstās kwód kôwyjst daféndst/. Necessity defends or justifies what it compels. Applied to the acts of a sheriff, or ministerial officer, in the execution of his office.

Necessitas sub lege non continentur, quia quod alias non est licitum necessitas facit licitum /nasésstās sâb lîyjīn nôn kôntânytər, kwâyə kwód ēlylys nôn ćst lísstəm nasésstās fęysət lísstəm/. Necessity is not restrained by law, since what otherwise is not lawful, necessity makes lawful.

Necessitas vincet legem; legum vincula irrident /nasésstās vinsst lîyjâm; lîyjâm vîŋkyla irədət/. Necessity overcomes law; it derides the fetters of laws.

Necessitas vincit legem; legum vincula irrident /nasésstās vinsst lîyjâm; lîyjâm vîŋkyla irədət/. Necessity overcomes law; it derides the fetters of laws.

Necessitas /nasésstās/. Indigent or pressed by poverty. See Indigent.

Necessitous circumstances /nasésstās sárkâstən-sâz/. Needing the necessaries of life, which cover not only primitive physical needs, things absolutely indispensable to human existence and decency, but those things, also, which are in fact necessary to the particular person left without support. In the civil code of Louisiana the words are used relative to the fortune of the deceased and to the condition in which the claimant lived during the marriage. See also Necessaries; Non-support.

Necessitudo /nasésst(y)ũwdw/. Lat. In the civil law, an obligation; a close connection; relationship by blood.

Necessity. Controlling force; irresistible compulsion; a power or impulse so great that it admits no choice of conduct. That which makes the contrary of a thing impossible. The quality or state of being necessary, in its primary sense signifying that which makes an act or event unavoidable. Quality or state of fact of being in difficulties or in need; a condition arising out of circumstances that compels a certain course of action. Bykowski v. Borough of Middletown, D.C.Pa., 401 F.Supp. 1242, 1250. See irresistible impulse.

A person is excused from criminal liability if he acts under a duress of circumstances to protect life or limb or health in a reasonable manner and with no other acceptable choice. See Justification; Self-defense.
The word "necessity", within certificate of public convenience and necessity, is not used in the sense of being essential or absolutely indispensable but merely that certificate is reasonably necessary for public good. Alabama Public Service Commission v. Crow, 247 Ala. 120, 22 So.2d 721, 724. To fulfill requirements for easement of right of way of necessity, the necessity must be actual, real, and reasonable, as distinguished from inconvenience, but it need not be absolute and irresistible necessity. When used in relation to power of eminent domain does not mean absolute necessity, but only reasonable necessity. The "necessity" of and appurtenance for the beneficial use of leased premises, which will entitle the lessee thereto, is not an absolute necessity in the sense that it must be completely indispensable, but is a real necessity and not a mere convenience or advantage.

See also Necessaries; Necessary.

Neck-verse. The Latin sentence, "Miserere mei, Deus," was so called, because the reading of it was made a test for those who claimed benefit of clergy.

Necrophilism /nækrofəlɪzəm/. See Insanity.

Necropsy /nɛkrəʊˈspiː/. An autopsy, or post-mortem examination of a human body.

Nec tempus nec locus occurrit regi /nɛk tɛmˈpas nɛk ləʊˈkəʊs əkˈʃərət rɪˈɒʃər/. Neither time nor place affects the king.

Nec veniam effuso sanguine casus habet /nɛk vəniˈəm əfˈfʌsə səŋˈɡwɪnə ˈkæsəs həˈbeɪt/. Where blood is spilled, the case is unpardonable.

Nec veniam, leseo numine, casus habet /nɛk vəniˈəm, lɛˈsəʊ nəˈmɪnə ˈkæsəs həˈbeɪt/. Where the Divinity is insulted the case is unpardonable.

Ne disturbas pas /nə ˈdɔsrəbə pə/. L. Fr. (Does or did not disturb.) In old English practice, the general issue or general plea in quare impedit.

Ne donas pas, or non dedit /nə dəˈnəs pəs/ˌnʌn dəˈdɪt/. The general issue in a formedon, now abolished. It denied the gift in tail to have been made in manner and form as alleged; and was therefore the proper plea, if the tenant meant to dispute the fact of the gift, but did not apply to any other case.

Nee. The name to which a person was born; this term is sometimes used after a woman’s married name to indicate a maiden family name.

Need. A relative term, the conception of which must, within reasonable limits, vary with the personal situation of the individual employing it. Term means to have an urgent or essential use for (something lacking); to want, require. City of Dayton v. Borchers, 13 Ohio Misc. 273, 232 N.E.2d 437, 440. See Necessaries.

Needless. In a statute against "needless" killing or mutilation of any animal, this term denotes an act done without any useful motive, in a spirit of wanton cruelty, or for the mere pleasure of destruction.

Ne exeat /nɪˈjɛksɪjət/. A writ which forbids the person to whom it is addressed to leave the country, the state, or the jurisdiction of the court. It is the nature of civil bail, the purpose of which is to prevent the frustration of a plaintiff's equitable claims by insuring the continued physical presence of the defendant within the court's jurisdiction. Greedone v. Greedone, D.C.App., 361 A.2d 176, 179. Sometimes a ne exeat writ is issued only to restrain a person from leaving the jurisdiction, and sometimes it is issued against a person who is removing or attempting to remove property beyond the jurisdiction. August v. August, 65 Ga.App. 883, 16 S.E.2d 784, 785.

Ne exeat regno /nɪˈjɛksɪjət ˈrɛɡnəʊ/. Lat. In English practice, a writ which issues to restrain a person from leaving the kingdom. It was formerly used for political purposes, but is now only resorted to in equity when the defendant is about to leave the kingdom; it is only in cases where the intention of the party to leave can be shown that the writ is granted.

Ne exeat republica /nɪˈjɛksɪjət ˌrɛpəˈbləkə/. Lat. In American practice, a writ similar to that of ne exeat regno (q.v.), available to the plaintiff in a civil suit, under some circumstances, when the defendant is about to leave the state.

Nefas /nɪˈfəs/. Lat. That which is against right or the divine law. A wicked or impious thing or act.

Nefastus /nəˈfɛstəs/. Lat. Inauspicious. Applied, in the Roman law, to a day on which it was unlawful to open the courts or administer justice.

Negate. To deny, negative, nullify or render ineffective.

Negatio conclusionis est error in lege /nɛɡəˈʃiəsiːn iz ɛst ˈɛrər ɪn ˈlɛɡə/. A negative averment in some of the pleadings in a case in which a testamentary or general plea in equity when the Negatio desnrustr negationem, et ambae faciunt affirmationem /nɛɡəˈʃiəsiːn iz ˈdɛstrəwst nɛɡəˈʃiəsiːnɛm ət əmˈbeɪ fəˈʃiənt əfˈʃiərnəm/. A negative destroys a negative, and both make an affirmative.

Negatio duplex est affirmatio /nɛɡəˈʃiəsiːn iz ˈdɪfləps əfˈʃiərɪətəʊ/. A double negative is an affirmative.

Negative. A denial; a proposition by which something is denied; a statement in the form of denial. Two negatives do not make a good issue.

As to negative Covenant; Easement; Servitude; Statute; and Testimony, see those titles.

Negative averment. As opposed to the traverse or simple denial of an affirmative allegation, a negative averment is an allegation of some substantive fact, e.g., that premises are not in repair, which, although negative in form, is really affirmative in substance, and the party alleging the fact of non-repair must prove it. An averment in some of the pleadings in a case in which a negative is asserted. U. S. v. Eisenminger, D.C.Del., 16 F.2d 816, 819.
NEGATIVE AVERTMENT

Negative condition. One by which it is stipulated that a given thing shall not happen.

Negative covenant. A provision in an employment agreement or a contract of sale of a business which prohibits the employee or seller from competing in the same area or market. Such restriction must be reasonable in scope and duration.

Negative easement. A right in owner of dominant tenement to restrict owner of servient tenement in exercise of general and natural rights of property. Fort Dodge, D. M. & S. Ry. v. American Community Stores Corp., 256 Iowa 1344, 131 N.W.2d 515, 521. An easement which restrains a landowner from making certain use of his land which he might otherwise have lawfully done but for that restriction and such easements arise principally by express grant or by implication. Huggins v. Castle Estates, Inc., 36 N.Y.2d 427, 369 N.Y.S.2d 80, 330 N.E.2d 48, 51.

Negative evidence. Testimony that an alleged fact did not exist. See Rebuttal evidence.

Negative pregnant. In pleading, a negative implying also an affirmative. Such a form of negative expression as may imply or carry within it an affirmative. A denial in such form as to imply or express an admission of the substantial fact which apparently is controverted; or a denial which, although in the form of a traverse, really admits the important facts contained in the allegations to which it relates. Cramer v. Aiken, 63 App. D.C. 16, 68 F.2d 761, 762. It occurs in responsive pleading where the denial is stated in the very words employed in the complaint and negative pregnant is condemned because it is pregnant with alternative admissions to allegations of the complaint. Prestin v. Baumgartner, 47 Wis.2d 574, 177 N.W.2d 825, 827.

Negligdare. To claim kindred.

Neglect. May mean to omit, fail, or forbear to do a thing that can be done, or that is required to be done, but it may also import an absence of care or attention in the doing or omission of a given act. And it may mean a designed refusal, indifference, or unwillingness to perform one's duty. In re Perkins, 234 Mo.App. 716, 117 S.W.2d 686, 692.

The term is used in the law of bailment as synonymous with "negligence." But the latter word is the closer translation of the Latin "negligentia."

An omission to do or perform some work, duty, or act. Failure to perform or discharge a duty, covering positive official misdoing or official misconduct as well as negligence. See also Excusable neglect; Negligence.

Culpable neglect. Such neglect which exists where the loss can fairly be ascribed to the party's own carelessness, improvidence, or folly. State ex rel. Fulton v. Coburn, 133 Ohio St. 192, 12 N.E.2d 471, 477, 10 O.O. 249.

Willful neglect. The neglect of the husband to provide for his wife the common necessaries of life, he having the ability to do so; or it is the failure to do so by reason of idleness, profligacy, or dissipation. See also Negligence.

Neglected child. A child is "neglected" when his parent or custodian, by reason of cruelty, mental incapacity, immorality or depravity, is unfit properly to care for him, or neglects or refuses to provide necessary physical, affectional, medical, surgical, or institutional or hospital care for him, or he is in such condition of want or suffering, or is under such improper care or control as to endanger his morals or health. In re DuMont, 196 Misc. 16, 17, 92 N.Y.S.2d 805.

Negligence. The omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided by those ordinary considerations which ordinarily regulate human affairs, would do, or the doing of something which a reasonable and prudent man would not do.

Negligence is the failure to use such care as a reasonably prudent and careful person would use under similar circumstances; it is the doing of some act which a person of ordinary prudence would not have done under similar circumstances or failure to do what a person of ordinary prudence would have done under similar circumstances. Amoco Chemical Corp. v. Hill, Del.Super., 318 A.2d 614, 617. Conduct which falls below the standard established by law for the protection of others against unreasonable risk of harm; it is a departure from the conduct expectable of a reasonably prudent person under like circumstances. U. S. v. Ohio Barge Lines, Inc., 607 F.2d 524, 632.

The term refers only to that legal delinquency which results whenever a man fails to exhibit the care which he ought to exhibit, whether it be slight, ordinary, or great. It is characterized chiefly by inadvertence, thoughtlessness, inattention, and the like, while "wan-tonness" or "recklessness" is characterized by willfulness. The law of negligence is founded on reasonable conduct or reasonable care under all circumstances of particular case. Doctrine of negligence rests on duty of every person to exercise due care in his conduct toward others from which injury may result.

Actionable negligence. See Actionable negligence.

Active negligence. See Active negligence.

Collateral negligence. Doctrine which holds that: An employer of an independent contractor, unless he is himself negligent, is not liable for physical harm caused by any negligence of the contractor if (a) the contractor's negligence consists solely in the improper manner in which he does the work, and (b) it creates a risk of such harm which is not inherent in or normal to the work, and (c) the employer had no reason to contemplate the contractor's negligence when the contract was made. Restatement, Second, Torts § 426.

Comparative negligence. See Comparative negligence.

Concurrent negligence. Arises where the same injury is proximately caused by the concurrent wrongful acts or omissions of two or more persons acting independently. See also Concurrent negligence.

Contributory negligence. The act or omission amounting to want of ordinary care on part of complaining party, which, concurring with defendant's negligence, is proximate cause of injury. Honaker v. Crutchfield, 247 Ky. 495, 57 S.W.2d 502. Conduct by a plaintiff which is below the standard to which he is legally required to conform for his own protection and which is a contributing cause which cooperates with the negligence of the defendant in causing the plaintiff's harm. Li v. Yellow Cab Co. of California, 13 Ca1.3d 804, 119 Cal. Rptr. 858, 864, 532 P.2d 1226.

Conduct for which plaintiff is responsible amounting to a breach of duty which law imposes on persons to protect themselves from injury, and which, concurring and cooperating with actionable negligence for which defendant is responsible, contributes to injury complained of as a proximate cause. Cowan v. Dean, 81 S.D. 486, 137 N.W.2d 337, 341.

The defense of contributory negligence has been replaced by the doctrine of comparative negligence (q.v.) in many states. See also Exceptions and limitations, below.

It is an affirmative defense which must be pleaded and proved by defendant. Fed.R.Civil P., Rule 8(c).

Doctrines applicable to one who through his own negligence has contributed to material alteration of a negotiable instrument. U.C.C. § 3–406.

Criminal negligence. Criminal negligence which will render killing a person manslaughter is the omission on the part of the person to do some act which an ordinarily careful and prudent man would do under like circumstances, or the doing of some act which an ordinarily careful, prudent man under like circumstances would not do by reason of which another person is endangered in life or bodily safety; the word "ordinary" being synonymous with "reasonable" in this connection.

Negligence of such a character, or occurring under such circumstances, as to be punishable as a crime by statute; or (at common law) such a flagrant and reckless disregard of the safety of others, or wilful indifference to the injury liable to follow, as to convert an act otherwise lawful into a crime when it results in personal injury or death.

A wanton or reckless disregard for human life; a degree of carelessness amounting to a culpable disregard of rights and safety of others. Ruffin v. State, 10 Md. App. 102, 268 A.2d 494, 497. That species of want of care by which a person may be criminally liable. It varies from jurisdiction to jurisdiction and is called culpable negligence in some. However, it generally refers to conduct which is not intentional and ordinarily not wilful, wanton and reckless.

See Negligent homicide; Negligently; Negligent manslaughter.

Culpable negligence. Failure to exercise that degree of care rendered appropriate by the particular circumstances, and which a man of ordinary prudence in the same situation and with equal experience would not have omitted.

Degrees of negligence. While there are degrees of care, and failure to exercise proper degree of care is "negligence," most courts hold that there are no degrees (e.g. slight, ordinary, gross) of negligence, except in bailment cases or under automobile guest statutes. Murray v. De Luxe Motor Stages of Illinois, Mo.App., 133 S.W.2d 1074, 1078. The prevailing view is that there are no "degrees" of care in negligence, as a matter of law; there are only different amounts of care as a matter of fact. To the extent that the degrees of negligence survive, they are described below.

Exceptions and limitations. The general rule in automobile accident cases that contributory negligence bars recovery for the injuries sustained is subject to various exceptions and limitations. Thus the defense of contributory negligence may be inapplicable where defendant's negligence is of a gross or willful character. Moreover, application of the doctrine of contributory negligence is limited by the last clear chance doctrine or similar doctrines, or by comparative negligence statutes.

Gross negligence. The intentional failure to perform a manifest duty in reckless disregard of the consequences as affecting the life or property of another.

It is materially more want of care than constitutes simple inadvertence. It is an act or omission respecting legal duty of an aggravated character as distinguished from a mere failure to exercise ordinary care. It amounts to indifference to present legal duty and to utter forgetfulness of legal obligations so far as other persons may be affected. It is a heedless and palpable violation of legal duty respecting the rights of others. The element of culpability which characterizes all negligence is in gross negligence magnified to a high degree as compared with that present in ordinary negligence. Gross negligence is a manifestly smaller amount of watchfulness and circumspection than the circumstances require of a person of ordinary prudence. It falls short of being such reckless disregard of probable consequences as is equivalent to a wilful and intentional wrong. Ordinary and gross negligence differ in degree of inattention, while both differ in kind from wilful and intentional conduct which is or ought to be known to have a tendency to injure.

Gross negligence consists of conscious and voluntary act or omission which is likely to result in grave injury when in face of clear and present danger of which alleged tortfeasor is aware. Glaab v. Caudill, Fla.App., 236 So.2d 180, 182, 183, 185. That entire want of care which would raise belief that act or omission complained of was result of conscious indifference to rights and welfare of persons affected by it. Ciaunch v. Bennett, Tex.Civ.App., 385 S.W.2d 719, 724. Indifference to present legal duty and utter forgetfulness of legal obligations, so far as other persons may be affected, and a manifestly smaller amount of watchfulness and circumspection than the circumstances require of a person of ordinary prudence.

Hazardous negligence. Such careless or reckless conduct as exposes one to very great danger of injury or to imminent peril.

Imputed negligence. Refers to doctrine that places upon one person responsibility for the negligence of another; such responsibility or liability is imputed by reason of some special relationship of the parties, such as parent and child, husband and wife, driver and passenger, owner of vehicle and driver, bailor and bailee, master and servant, joint enterprise, and parent and custodian of a child. Schmidt v. Martin, 212 Kan. 373, 510 P.2d 1244, 1246.

Generally the doctrine of imputed negligence, as applied to automobile accidents, visits on one person legal responsibility for the negligent conduct of another. The doctrine applies only in limited classes of cases, as where there is a right to control in the relationship of master and servant, principal and agent, or a joint enterprise. The independent negligence of one person ordinarily is not imputable to another person except where the relation between the persons gives rise to an express or implied agency in the person committing the act of negligence.

See also Respondeat superior; Vicarious liability.

Legal negligence. See Legal negligence.

Ordinary negligence. The omission of that care which a person of common prudence usually takes of his own concerns. Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U.S. 132, 11 S.Ct. 924, 35 L.Ed. 662. Failure to exercise care of an ordinarily prudent person in same situation. A want of that care and prudence that the great majority of mankind exercise under the same or similar circumstances. Wherever distinctions between gross, ordinary and slight negligence are observed, "ordinary negligence" is said to be the want of ordinary care.

Ordinary negligence is based on fact that one ought to have known results of his acts, while "gross negligence" rests on assumption that one knew results of his acts, but was recklessly or wantonly indifferent to results. The distinction between "ordinary negligence" and "gross negligence" is that the former lies in the field of inadvertence and the latter in the field of actual or constructive intent to injure.

Passive negligence. Failure to do something that should have been done. It is negligence which permits defects, obstacles, or pitfalls to exist on premises; that is, negligence which causes dangers arising from physical condition of land. Pachowitz v. Milwaukee & Suburban Transport Corp., 56 Wis.2d 383, 202 N.W.2d 268, 275.

Difference between "active" and "passive" negligence is that one is only passively negligent if he merely fails to act in fulfillment of duty of care which law imposes upon him, while one is actively negligent if he participates in some manner in conduct or omission which caused injury. King v. Timber Structures, Inc. of Cal., 240 Cal.App.2d 178, 49 Cal.Rptr. 414, 417.

Per se negligence. The unexcused violation of a statute which is applicable is per se or automatic negligence in some states. See also Negligence per se.

Slight negligence. A failure to exercise great care. Slight negligence is defined to be only an absence of that degree of care and vigilance which persons of extraordinary prudence and foresight are accustomed to use. Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U.S. 132, 11 S.Ct. 924, 35 L.Ed. 662.

Subsequent negligence. Exists where defendant sees plaintiff in a position of danger and fails to exercise due and proper precaution to prevent injury to plaintiff. Holman v. Brady, 241 Ala. 487, 3 So.2d 30, 33.

Tax negligence. I.R.C. § 6653(a) imposes a penalty on taxpayers who show negligence or intentional disregard of rules and regulations with respect to the underpayment of certain taxes.

Wilful, wanton or reckless negligence. These terms are customarily treated as meaning essentially the same thing. The usual meaning assigned to "wilful," "wanton" or "reckless," according to taste as to the word used, is that the actor has intentionally done an act of an unreasonable character in disregard of a risk known to him or so obvious that he must be taken to have been aware of it, and so great as to make it highly probable that harm would follow. It usually is accompanied by a conscious indifference to the consequences, amounting almost to willingness that they shall follow; and it has been said that this is indispensable. See for example Tyndall v. Rippon, 5 Del.Super. 458, 61 A.2d 422; Wolters v. Venhaus, 350 Ill.App. 322, 112 N.E.2d 747. The result is that "wilful," "wanton" or "reckless" conduct tends to take on the aspect of highly unreasonable conduct, or an extreme departure from ordinary care, in a situation where a high degree of danger is apparent. As a result there is often no clear distinction at all between such conduct and "gross" negligence, and the two have tended to merge and take on the same meaning, of an aggravated form of negligence, differing in quality rather than in degree from ordinary lack of care. It is at least clear, however, that such aggravated negligence must be more than any mere mistake resulting from inexperience, excitement, or confusion, and more than mere thoughtlessness or inadvertence, or simple inattention.

"Wantonness" constituting gross and wanton negligence within automobile guest statute indicates a realization of imminence of danger and a reckless disregard, complete indifference, and unconcern of probable consequences of the wrongful act. Mann v. Good, 202 Kan. 631, 451 P.2d 233, 236.

Negligence, estoppel by. Equitable estoppel can arise when one through culpable negligence induces another to believe certain facts to exist and the other reasonably relies and acts on such belief. Imposition of an estoppel in such setting is designed to assure that the loss is borne by the party who made the injury possible or who could have prevented it. Foley Machinery Co. v. Amland Contractors, Inc., 209 N.J.Super. 70, 506 A.2d 1263.

Negligence in law. "Actionable negligence" or "negligence in law" grows out of nonobservance of a duty prescribed by law. See also Negligence per se.

Negligence per se. A form of ordinary negligence that results from violation of a statute. Seim v. Garavalia, Minn., 306 N.W.2d 806, 810. Conduct, whether of action or omission, which may be declared and treated as negligence without any argument or proof as to the particular surrounding circumstances, either because it is in violation of a specific statute or valid municipal ordinance, or because it is so palpably opposed to the dictates of common prudence that it can be said without hesitation or doubt that no careful person would have been guilty of it. As a general rule, the violation of a public duty, enjoined by law for the protection of person or property, so constitutes. See also Strict liability.

Negligent. See Negligence.

Negligent entrustment. Negligence consisting of entrusting dangerous article to another whom lender knows, or should know, is likely to use it in a manner involving unreasonable risk of harm to others. Teter v. Clemons, 112 Ill.2d 252, 97 Ill. Dec. 467, 469, 492 N.E.2d 1340, 1342.

Negligent homicide. The criminal offense committed by one whose negligence is the direct and proximate cause of another's death. Criminal homicide constitutes negligent homicide when it is committed negligently. Model Penal Code § 210.4(1). Killing of a human being by criminal negligence. La.Rev.St. § 14:32. Although an intentional act is required, it is not necessary, unlike the crime of involuntary manslaughter, that a defendant realize the risk of death involved in his conduct. State v. Fisher, 141 Ariz. 227, 686 P.2d 750, 770. See also Homicide (Vehicular homicide); Negligent manslaughter.

Negligentia /négljáésh(iy)a/./ Lat. In the civil law, carelessness; inattention; the omission of proper care or forethought. The term is not exactly equivalent to our "negligence," inasmuch as it was not any negligentia, but only a high or gross degree of it, that amounted to culpa (actionable or punishable fault).

Negligentia semper habet infortuneum comitem /négljáésh(iy)a sémpr háébt infortyóúñ(i)yam kómátam/./ Negligence always has misfortune for a companion.

Negligently. A person acts negligently with respect to a material element of an offense when he should be aware of a substantial and unjustifiable risk that the material element exists or will result from his conduct. The risk must be of such a nature and degree that the actor's failure to perceive it, considering the nature and purpose of his conduct and the circumstances known to him, involves a gross deviation from the standard of care that a reasonable person would observe in the actor's situation. Model Penal Code, § 2.02. See also Negligence.

Negligently done. The doing of an act where ordinary care required that it should not have been done at all, or that it should have been done in some other way, and where the doing of the act was not consistent with the exercise of ordinary care under the circumstances. See Negligence.

Negligent manslaught. A statutory crime in some jurisdictions consisting of an unlawful and unjustified killing of a person by negligence but without malice. See also Negligent homicide; Vehicular homicide.

Negligent offense. One which ensues from a defective discharge of a duty, which defect could have been avoided by the exercise of that care which is usual, under similar circumstances, with prudent persons of the same class. State v. Weiner, 41 N.J. 21, 194 A.2d 467, 480.

Negligent violation of statute. One occasioned by or accompanied with negligent conduct.

Negoce /negóws/. Fr. Business; trade; management of affairs.

Negotiability /negóws(iy)aabilisity/. Legal character of being negotiable (q.v.). A term referring to a set of circumstances, described by law, under which a transferee of property can acquire rights therein that are better or greater than the rights of the transferor. See also Words of negotiability.

Negotiable /negóws(iy)aabal/. Legally capable of being transferred by endorsement or delivery. Usually said of checks and notes and sometimes of stocks and bearer bonds. See Commercial paper; Negotiable instruments; Non-negotiable.

Negotiable bond. Type of bond which may be transferred by negotiation from original holder to another.

Negotiable certificate of deposit (CD). Security issued by large commercial banks and other depository institutions as a short-term source of funds; it typically specifies a fixed interest rate and has a maturity of one year or less.

Negotiable document of title. A document of title providing by its terms that the goods are to be delivered to bearer or to the order of a named person or, where recognized in overseas trade, that runs to a named person or assigns. U.C.C. § 7–104(1).

Negotiable instruments. A written and signed unconditional promise or order to pay a specified sum of money on demand or at a definite time payable to order or bearer. U.C.C. § 3–104(1). To be negotiable within the meaning of U.C.C. Article 3, an instrument must meet the requirements set out in Section 3–104: (1) it must be a writing signed by the maker or drawer; it must contain an (2) unconditional (3) promise (example: note) or order (example: check) (4) to pay a sum certain in money; (5) it must be payable on demand or at a definite time; (6) it must be payable to the bearer or to order (examples of instruments payable to order are (a) "Pay to the order of Daniel Dealer," and (b) "Pay Daniel Dealer or order"); and (7) it must not contain any other promise, order, obligation, or power given by the maker or drawer except as authorized by Article 3. See also Commercial paper; Negotiation.

Negotiable Order of Withdrawal. See N.O.W. account.

Negotiable words. Words and phrases which impart the character of negotiability to bills, notes, checks, etc., in which they are inserted; for instance, a direction to pay to A. "or order" or "bearer". See Negotiable instruments.

Negotiate. To transact business; to bargain with another respecting a transaction; to conduct communications or conferences with a view to reaching a settlement or agreement. It is that which passes between parties or their agents in the course of or incident to the making of a contract and is also conversation in arranging terms of contract.

To communicate or confer with another so as to arrive at the settlement of some matter. To meet with another so as to arrive through discussion at some kind of agreement or compromise about something. Al Herd, Inc. v. Isaac, 271 Cal.App.2d 749, 76 Cal.Rptr. 697, 699. To discuss or arrange a sale of a bargain; to arrange the preliminaries of a business transaction. Also to sell or discount negotiable paper, or assign or transfer it by indorsement and delivery. To conclude by bargain, treaty, or agreement. See also Negotiation.

Negotiated plea. The effect of plea bargaining in which the criminal defendant agrees to plead guilty to the charge or to a reduced charge in return for a recommendation from the prosecutor of a disposition less severe than possible under the particular statute. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 11(e). See Plea bargaining.

Negotiating bank. A bank that purchases drafts drawn by the beneficiary of a negotiation credit.

Negotiation. The transfer of an instrument in such form that the transferee becomes a holder. If the instrument is payable to order it is negotiated by delivery; if payable to bearer it is negotiated by delivery. U.C.C. § 3-202(1). The act by which a check or promissory note is put into circulation by being passed by one of the original parties to another person. The term also describes the same process with respect to documents of title. See U.C.C. § 7-501.

Negotiation is process of submission and consideration of offers until acceptable offer is made and accepted. Gainey v. Brotherhood of Ry. and S. S. Clerks, Freight Handlers, Exp. & Station Emp., D.C.Pa., 275 F.Supp. 292, 300. The deliberation, discussion, or conference upon the terms of a proposed agreement; the act of settling or arranging the terms and conditions of a bargain, sale, or other business transaction. See also Due negotiation; Negotiate.

Negotiorum gestio. In the civil law, a doing of business or businesses. A species of spontaneous agency, or an interference by one in the affairs of another, in his absence, from benevolence or friendship, and without authority.

Negotiorum gestio /nágwshiyörám jéstór/. Lat. In the civil law, a transactor or manager of business; a person voluntarily constituting himself agent for another; one who, without any mandate or authority, assumes to take charge of an affair or concern for another person, in the latter's absence, but for his interest.

One who spontaneously, and without the knowledge or consent of the owner, intermeddles with his property, as to do work on it, or to carry it to another place, etc. N.E.I. An abbreviation for "non est inventus," he is not found.

Neife, naif, nativus /niyf/nayiyf/nástyuw/av. In old English law, a woman who was born a villein, or a bondwoman.

Neighbor. One who lives in close proximity to another.

Neighborhood. A place near; an adjoining or surrounding district; a more immediate vicinity, vicinage. Connally v. General Const. Co., 269 U.S. 385, 46 S.Ct. 126, 129, 70 L.Ed. 322.

It is not synonymous with territory or district, but is a collective noun, with the suggestion of proximity, and refers to the units which make up its whole, as well as to the region which comprehends those units. A district or locality, especially when considered with relation to its inhabitants or their interests. In ordinary and common usage "locality" is synonymous in meaning with "neighborhood," and neither connote large geographical areas with widely diverse interests. Lukens Steel Co. v. Perkins, 70 App.D.C. 354, 107 F.2d 627, 631.

As used with reference to a person's reputation, "neighborhood" means in general any community or society where person is well known and has established a reputation.

Ne injuste vexes. In old English practice, a prohibitory writ, commanding a lord not to demand from the tenant more services than were justly due by the tenure under which his ancestors held.

Neither party. An abbreviated form of docket entry, meaning that, by agreement, neither of the parties will further appear in court in that suit used as a form of judgment in some states where a case has been settled.

Ne luminibus officiatur. In the civil law, the name of a servitude which restrains the owner of a house from making such erections as obstruct the light of the adjoining house.

Nemine contradicente. In ordinary and common usage "locality" is synonymous in meaning with "neighborhood," and neither connote large geographical areas with widely diverse interests. Lukens Steel Co. v. Perkins, 70 App.D.C. 354, 107 F.2d 627, 631.

/niymow lynm àlákwm pártam réktiy intìlláriy póñat àntakwam tòwmat itarám Ýékwiy itarám pàrliýjärat./
No one is able rightly to understand one part before he has again and again read through the whole.

Nemo est hæres viventis /niymow èst hiriy yazvénstas/.
No one is the heir of a living person. No one can be heir during the life of his ancestor. No person can be the actual complete heir of another till the ancestor is previously dead.

Nemo est supra leges /niymow èst s(y)úwpri liýjiyz/.
No one is above the law.

Nemo ex alterius facto prægravari debet /niymow èks öltàráyé fáktow pìrygrûvéry débót/.
No man ought to be burdened in consequence of another's act.

Nemo ex consilio obligatur /niymow èks kànsniliyow òblásgéytıar/.
No man is bound in consequence of his advice. Mere advice will not create the obligation of a mandate.

Nemo ex proprio dolo consequitur actionem /niymow èks pròrpriyow dòlwów kànskèwstwar àksêhay-ównam/.
No one maintains an action arising out of his own wrong.

Nemo ex suo delicto meliorem suam conditionem facere potest /niymow èks pròrpriyow dòlwów kànskèwstwar àksêhay-ównam/.
No one can make his condition better by his own wrong.

Nemo inauditus condemnari debet si non sit contumax /niymow inòdàstas kòndàmmêráy débôt sày nòñ sit kóntûvmáaks/.
No man ought to be condemned without being heard unless he be contumacious.

Nemo in pròopia causa testis esse debet /niymow in pròrpriyà kožà tèsstas èsîy débôt/.
No one ought to be a witness in his own cause.

Nemo jus sibi dicere potest /niymow jàs sìbì day disàriy pówst/.
No one can declare the law for himself. No one is entitled to take the law into his own hands.

Nemo militans deo implicetur secularibus negotiis /niymow mìlàntan diyow implàsiyàr sèkàylèràbas nàgàlwàyìyas/.
No man who is warring for [in the service of] God should be involved in secular matters. A principle of the old law that men of religion were not bound to go in person with the king to war.

Nemo nascitur artifex /niymow nàssstà àràftéyàs/.
No one is born an artificer.

Nemo patriam in qua natus est exuere, nec ligeantiae debitum ejurare possit /niymow pàtriyàm in kwèy nèòtas èst agy(y)ùwariy, nèk líjlìëshìyìy débatam iyàjrèyìy póñat/.
No man can renounce the country in which he was born, nor abjure the obligation of his allegiance.

Nemo plus commodi hæredi suo relinquit quam ipse habuit /niymow plàs kòmàwdày hàrùydiy s(y)ùwñw ràlikkwàm kwèm èsàyìy hëbyuwàt/.
No one leaves a greater benefit to his heir than he had himself.

Nemo plus juris ad alium transsfeere potest quam ipse habeat /niymow plàs jùrás àè ëlyïyàm tànsfàríy pówstà kwèm èsàyìy hëbybåt/.
No one can transfer more right to another than he has himself.

Nemo potest contra recordum verificare per patriam /niymow pówstà kòntrà ràkòrdàm vèhràfàkèryìy pèr pàtriyàm/.
No one can verify by the country against a record. The issue upon matter of record cannot be to the jury. A maxim of old practice.

Nemo potest esse dominus et hæres /niymow pówstà èsìy dòmàns èt hiriyz/.
No man can be both owner and heir.

Nemo potest esse simul actor et judex /niymow pówstà èsìy sàymol déktar èt jùwèdèks/.
No one can be at once suitor and judge.

Nemo potest esse tenens et dominus /niymow pówstà èsìy tènënz èt dòmàns/.
No man can be both tenant and lord [of the same tenement].

Nemo potest exuere patriam /niymow pówstèr ògz(y)ùwariy pètriyàm/.
No man can renounce his own country.

Nemo potest facere per alium quod se non potest /niymow pówstà fàsàriy pàr àliyàm kwòd pàr sìy nòñ pówst/.
No one can do that indirectly which he cannot do of himself. A rule said to hold in original grants, but not in descents; as where an office descended to a woman, in which case, though she could not exercise the office in person, she might by deputy.

Nemo potest facere per obliquum quod non potest facere per directum /niymow pówstàt fàsàriy pàr àblàykwàm kwòd nòñ pówstàt fàsàriy pàr dàrkèt/.
No man can do that indirectly which he cannot do directly.

Nemo potest mutare consilium suum in alterius injuriarum /niymow pówstàt myùwàrìyìy kànsàlìyìyam s(y)ùwàm in öltàràyàs ànjùriyàm/.
No man can change his purpose to another's injury.

Nemo potest nisi quo de jure potest /niymow pówstàt nàsày kwòd diy jùriy pówst/.
No one is able to do a thing, unless he can do it lawfully.

Nemo potest plus juris ad alium transferrre quam ipse habeat /niymow pówstàt plàs jùrás àè ëlyïyàm tànsfàríy kwèm èsàyìy hëbybåt/.
No one can transfer a greater right to another than he himself has.

Nemo potest sibi debere /niymow pówstàt sìbà dàbìrìy/.
No one can owe to himself.

Nemo præsens nisi intelligat /niymow prìyzànz này-sày àntèlàgàt/.
One is not present unless he understands.
Nemo presumitur alienam posteritatem sua praetulisse /nìymow praz(y)ùwɔmɔtɔr æliiìyɔnym postøratéyɔtɔm s(y)ùwiwi przytɔlɔsiy/. No man is presumed to have preferred another's posterity to his own.

Nemo presumitur donare /nìymow praz(y)ùwɔmɔtɔr dɔnærìy/. No one is presumed to give.

Nemo presumitur esse immemor sure reternre salutis, et maxime in articulo mortis /nìymow praz(y)ùwɔmɔtɔr æsì imɔmɔr s(y)ùwiwi ætɔrnìy sallyùwɔtas, et mæksamìy in ærtikɔlyɔlow mɔrtɔs/. No one is presumed to be forgetful of his own eternal welfare, and particularly at the point of death.

Nemo presumitur ludere in extremis /nìymow praz(y)ùwɔmɔtɔr l(y)ùwdariɔ akstrìyɔmæs/. No one is presumed to trifle at the point of death.

Nemo presumitur malus /nìymow praz(y)ùwɔmɔtɔr mælsɔ/. No one is presumed to be bad.

Nemo prohibetur pluribus negociationes sive artes exercere /nìymow prɔw(h)ɔbìyɔtɔr pl(y)ùryùriɔ nagów-shiìyɔbìyùnìyɔ sàyyìyìtɔr ægɔzɔriyìrì/. No one is prohibited from following several kinds of business or several arts. The common law doth not prohibit any person from using several arts or mysteries at his pleasure.

Nemo prohibetur pluribus defensionibus uti /nìymow prɔw(h)ɔbìyɔtɔr pl(y)ùrabɔs dɛfænsìyùnɔbas yùw-tay/. No one is prohibited from making use of several defenses.

Nemo prudens punit ut præterita revocentur, sed ut futura præveniantur /nìymow prɔwùdɛnɔ pyùwnɔtɔt prætɛhrɔtɔ riìyɔsæntɔ, sed æt f(y)ɔtyùrɔ prɔvli-niɔsæntɔ/. No wise man punishes in order that past things may be recalled, but that future wrongs may be prevented.

Nemo punitur pro alieno delicto /nìymow pyùwnɔtɔ prɔw æliìyiìyɔnì dɔlìktɔw/. No one is punished for another's wrong.

Nemo punitur sine injuria, facto, seu defalcta /nìymow pyùwnɔtɔ sàyyìni ænɔjùrìya, fɛktɔw, sùyù dafoɛltɔ/. No one is punished unless for some wrong, act, or default.

Nemo qui condemnare potest, absolvere non potest /nìymow kwɔy kɔndɔmɔnìriɔ pɔwɔtɔ, æbɔlvɔrìyì nɔn pɔwɔtɔ/. No one who may condemn is unable to acquit.

Nemo sibì esse judex vel suis jus dicere debit /nìymow sìbɔy æsì jùwdɛks vɛl s(y)ùwɔs ɛs ɔdiɔri dɛbɛt/. No man ought to be his own judge, or to administer justice in cases where his relations are concerned.

Nemo sine actione experitur, et hoc non sine breve sive libello conventionali /nìymow sàyyìni ækɔhiìyɔnìyì ækɔpɛrɔtɔ, æt hɔk nɔn sàyyìni briiɔvi sàyyìvi ləbɛlw kɔnvɛnsɔnɔhɛlɔy/. No one goes to law without an action, and no one can bring an action without a writ or bill.

Nemo tenetur ad impossibile /nìymow tɔniìyɔtɔ æd ɔmɔsɔbìlyìy/. No one is bound to an impossibility.

Nemo tenetur armare adversarium contra se /nìymow tɔniìyɔtɔ arɔmɛriɔ ævdɔrɛrɛyum kɔntrɔ sìy/. No one is bound to arm his adversary against himself.

Nemo tenetur divinare /nìymow tɔniìyɔtɔ dìvænɛrìy/. No man is bound to divine, or to have foreknowledge of, a future event.

Nemo tenetur edere instrumenta contra se /nìymow tɔniìyɔtɔ ɛdɛri ɪnstrɛmɛntɔ sìy/. No man is bound to produce writings against himself. A rule of the Roman law, adhered to in criminal prosecutions, but departed from in civil questions.

Nemo tenetur informare qui nescit, sed quisquis scire quod informat /nìymow tɔniìyɔtɔ ɛfɔmɔrətɔr kɔs(y)àm sìy/. No one is bound to give information about things he is ignorant of, but every one is bound to know that which he gives information about.

Nemo tenetur jurare in suam turpitudinem /nìymow tɔniìyɔtɔ jʊrɛriɔ ɪn s(y)ùwɔtɔ sɔrtɔptɔ(y)ùwɔdɔnæm/. No one is bound to swear to the fact of his own criminality; no one can be forced to give his own oath in evidence of his guilt.

Nemo tenetur prodere seipsum /nìymow tɔniìyɔtɔ sɔriɔpsɔm/. No one is bound to betray himself. In other words, no one can be compelled to criminate himself.

Nemo tenetur seipsum accusare /nìymow tɔniìyɔtɔ sɔriɔpsɔm ækɔzyɛrɪyì/. No one is bound to accuse himself.

Nemo tenetur seipsum infortunis et periculis exponere /nìymow tɔniìyɔtɔ sɔriɔpsɔm ænfɔtɔyùnìæs æt pɛrɪkɪɔlæs ɛkspɔwɔnæri/. No one is bound to expose himself to misfortunes and dangers.

Nemo tenetur seipsum prodere /nìymow tɔniìyɔtɔ sɔriɔpsɔm prɔwɔdɔrìyì/. No one is bound to betray himself.

Nemo unquam judicet in se /nìymow ʊŋkwɔm jʊdɪtɔ ɪn sìy/. No one can ever be a judge in his own cause.

Nemo unquam vir magnus fuit, sine aliquo divino affluatu /nìymow ʊŋkwɔm vɪr ˈmægnʊs ˈfɪlwɔt, sàyyìni ælkwɔw daβɔyınɔw əfɛlɛyt(y)uɔw/. No one was ever a great man without some divine inspiration.

Nemo videtur fraudare eos qui sciunt et consentiunt /nìymow ˈvɪdɛtʊr f rədɔtɔr əʊs ˈkwi sκʊnt ət kɛnsəntiʊnt/. No one seems [as supposed] to defraud those who know and assent [to his acts].

Nephew. The son of one's brother or sister, or one's brother-in-law or sister-in-law.

Nepos /nɛpɔs/nìypɔwɔs/. Lat. A grandson.

Nepotism /nɛpɔtizɔm/. Bestowal of patronage by public officers in appointing others to positions by reason of blood or marital relationship to appointing authority.

Neptis /nɛptɔs/. Lat. A granddaughter; sometimes great-granddaughter.

Net estate. Under estate tax statute the term means that which is left of the gross estate after the deduction of proper and lawful items in the course of settlement. United States Trust Co. of New York v. Sears, D.C. Conn., 29 F.Supp. 643, 649. In general, the net estate is the gross estate less the following allowable deductions: (a) funeral expenses; (b) claims against the estate; and (c) unpaid mortgages or indebtedness on property which is included in the gross estate.

Nether house of Parliament. A name given to the English house of commons in the time of Henry VIII.

Net income. Income subject to taxation after allowable deductions and exemptions have been subtracted from gross income. The excess of all revenues and gains for a period over all expenses and losses of the period.

Net income for income tax purposes is what remains out of gross income after subtracting ordinary and necessary expenses incurred in efforts to obtain or to keep it. Walling's Estate v. C. I. R., C.A.Pa., 373 F.2d 190, 193.

See also Distributable net income; Net profits; Taxable income.

Net interest. Pure interest which is theoretical and excludes overhead and risks from cost of capital.

Net investment. The net cash outlay required at the beginning of an investment project.

Net lease. Lease in which provision is made for the lessee to pay, in addition to rent, such additional expenses as the taxes, insurance and maintenance charges. See also Escalator clause; Net rent.

Net level annual premium. An amount which, if exacted from a group of policyholders and increased by interest, will yield a sum sufficient to satisfy all death claims. The result is generally referred to as the "net" or "net level premium" of the policy. Fox v. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 107 F.2d 715, 718.

Net listing. A type of listing contract whereby the broker is only entitled to a commission to the extent that sales price exceeds the given amount. For example, a net listing of $15,000 where the property sold for $18,000 would result in a $3,000 commission. See also Listing; Multiple listing; Net sale contract.

Net national product. In a given period of time, the gross national product less allowance for capital consumption. See also Gross National Product.

Net operating assets. The assets, net of depreciation and bad debts, employed in the ordinary course of business. Hence excludes investments in stocks and bonds owned by a manufacturing company, for example.

Net operating income. Income generated from the operations of a business reduced by operating expenses.
Expenses not considered operating expenses include: interest, depreciation, and income taxes.

Net operating loss. The excess of operating expenses over revenues. Items such as interest expenses and dividends are not considered ordinary business expenses, and, therefore are excluded in calculating the net operating loss. I.R.C. § 172(c).

Net position. In securities and commodity trading, the difference between contracts long and contracts short held by a trader.

Net premium. In life insurance, this term is used to designate that portion of the premium which is intended to meet the cost of the insurance, both current and future. Its amount is calculated upon the basis of the mortality tables and upon the assumption that the company will receive a certain rate of interest upon all its assets; it does not include the entire premium paid by the assured, but does include a certain sum for expenses.

Net present value (NPV). The present value of the stream of net cash flows resulting from a project, discounted at the firm's cost of capital, minus the project's net investment. It is used to evaluate, rank, and select from among various investment projects.

Net price. The lowest price, after deducting all deductions, discounts, etc.

Net proceeds. Gross proceeds, less charges which may be rightly deducted. Pflueger v. United States, 73 App. D.C. 364, 121 F.2d 732, 736.

Net profit margin. A percent arrived at by dividing income after cost of goods sold, operating expenses and taxes by total revenues.

Net profits. Profits after deduction of all expenses; may be classified as net before or after taxes. Deducting the cost of goods sold from sales gives the gross profit. Deducting the operating expenses (overhead) from gross profit gives the operating profit. Deducting income taxes from operating profits gives the net profit. See also Net income.

Net rent. Basic rent charge plus additional monthly charges for taxes, utilities and maintenance. See also Net lease.

Net return. See Net income; Net profits.

Net revenues. See Net income; Net profits.

Net sale contract. One in which the principal agrees to accept a specified net price for property to be sold, and the agent's compensation for negotiating a sale is to be any amount received in excess of the specified figure. Loughlin v. Idora Realty Co., 259 Cal.App.2d 619, 66 Cal.Rptr. 747, 751, 752. See also Net listing.

Net sales. Gross sales minus returns, allowances, rebates, and discounts.

Net settlement. The accounting or bookkeeping balance that results when banks exchange items drawn on each other.

Net single premium. Aggregate of future yearly costs of insurance, severally discounted to age from which computation is made. Magers v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 348 Mo. 96, 152 S.W.2d 148, 152.

Premium which, if exacted from a group of policyholders and immediately invested at the assumed rate of interest, will yield in the aggregate a sum exactly sufficient to pay all death claims as they mature providing the mortality rate is in accord with the table used. Fox v. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co., C.C.A. Mo., 107 F.2d 715, 718.

Net tonnage. The cubic contents of the interior of a vessel, when the spaces occupied by the crew and by propelling machinery are deducted, numbered in tons. Kessig v. San Diego County, 51 Cal.App.2d 47, 124 P.2d 163, 165.

Net value. In insurance, accumulation of balances of past net premiums not absorbed in carrying risk. "Net valuation" portion of life insurance premium is amount of reserve necessary, under proper interest and mortality calculations, to properly fund policy for payment of future claims. North American Life & Cas. Co. v. C.I.R., C.A.8, 533 F.2d 1046, 1049.

Net weight. The weight of an article or collection of articles, after deducting from the gross weight the weight of the boxes, coverings, casks, etc., containing the same. The weight of an animal dressed for sale, after rejecting hide, offal, etc.

Net worth. The amount by which assets exceed liabilities. Remainder after deduction of liabilities from assets. W. H. Miner, Inc. v. Peerless Equipment Co., C.C.A.Ill., 115 F.2d 650, 655. Difference between total assets and liabilities of individual, corporation, etc.

The total assets of a person or business less the total liabilities (amounts due to creditors). In the case of a corporation net worth includes both capital stock and surplus; in the case of a partnership or single proprietorship it is the original investment plus accumulated and reinvested profits.

Net worth of a corporation may be determined by subtracting liabilities from assets or by adding the capital account and surplus account as reflected in the general ledger of a corporation. Eastern Capital Corp. v. Freeman, 10 Misc.2d 412, 168 N.Y.S.2d 834, 838.

See also Book (Book value); Net asset value.

Net worth method. An approach used by the Internal Revenue Service to reconstruct the income of a taxpayer who fails to maintain adequate records. Under this approach, the gross income for the year is the increase in net worth of the taxpayer (i.e., assets in excess of liabilities) with appropriate adjustment for nontaxable receipts and nondeductible expenditures. The net worth method often is used when tax fraud is suspected.

Net yield. The rate of return on an investment after deducting all costs, losses and charges for management.

Ne unques accouple /niyą̊gkwiyiz ská̱pál/. L. Fr. Never married. More fully, ne unques accouple en loiall matrimonie, never joined in lawful marriage. The name of a plea in the action of dower unde nihil habet, by which the tenant denied that the dowress was ever lawfully married to the decedent.

Ne unques executor /niyâŋkwiýiz sngékyatãr/. L. Fr. Never executor. The name of a plea by which the defendant denies that he is an executor, as he is alleged to be; or that the plaintiff is an executor, as he claims to be.

Ne unques seise que dower /niyâŋkwiýiz siiyzi kà dáwãr/. L. Fr. (Never seised of a dowerable estate.) In pleading, the general issue in the action of dower unde nil habet, by which the tenant denies that the demandant's husband was ever seised of an estate of which dower might be had.

Ne unques son receiver /niyâŋkwiýiz sõn ra¿iyâr/. L. Fr. In old pleading, the name of a plea in an action of account-render, by which the defendant denies that he ever was receiver of the plaintiff.

Neurasthenia /niyârsteñiâ y/ - Neurosis manifested chiefly by exhaustion, mental and physical fatigue, irritability and poorly localized symptoms without any underlying physical disorder.

Neurology. Branch of medicine dealing with nervous system and its disorders.

Neutral. Indifferent; unbiased; impartial; not engaged on either side; not taking an active part with either of the contending sides. In an international war, the principal hostile powers are called "belligerents;" those actively co-operating with and assisting them, their "allies;" and those taking no part whatever, " neutrals."

Neutral property. Property which belongs to citizens of neutral powers, and is used, treated, and accompanied by proper insignia as such.

Never indebted, plea of. In common law pleading, a species of traverse which occurs in actions of debt on simple contract, and is resorted to when the defendant means to deny in point of fact the existence of any express contract to the effect alleged in the declaration, or to deny the matters of fact from which such contract would by law be implied.

New. As an element in numerous compound terms and phrases of the law, this word may denote novelty, or the condition of being previously unknown or of recent or fresh origin, but ordinarily it is a purely relative term and is employed in contrasting the date, origin, or character of one thing with the corresponding attributes of another thing of the same kind or class.

In order to be " new", as that word is used in the patent laws, the achievement must be either one that produces an unusual or improved or advanced result, which was unknown to the same prior art at the time of the claimed invention; or the achievement must be one that produces an old result in an unusual and substantially more efficient, or more economical way.

New acquisition. An estate derived from any source other than descent, devise, or gift from father or mother or any relative in the paternal or maternal line. Webb v. Caldwell, 198 Ark. 331, 128 S.W.2d 691, 694.

New and useful. The phrase used in the patent laws to describe the two qualities of an invention or discovery which are essential to make it patentable, viz., novelty, or the condition of having been previously unknown, and practical utility. To accomplish a new and useful result it is not necessary that result before unknown should be brought about, but it is sufficient if an old result is accomplished in a new and more effective way. Hirschy v. Wisconsin-Minnesota Gas & Electric Household Appliances Co., D.C.Minns., 18 F.2d 347, 354. An invention achieves a new result, where a function which had been performed by other means was performed to an efficient degree by an association of means never before combined, though all of them were old, and some of the changes seemed to be only in degree.

New assets. In the law governing the administration of estates, this term denotes assets coming into the hands of an executor or administrator after the expiration of the time when, by statute, claims against the estate are barred so far as regards recourse against the assets with which he was originally charged.
New assignment. Under common law practice, where the declaration in an action is ambiguous, and the defendant pleads facts which are literally an answer to it, but not to the real claim set up by the plaintiff, the plaintiff's course is to reply by way of new assignment; i.e., allege that he brought his action not for the cause supposed by the defendant, but for some other cause to which the plea has no application.

New cause of action. With reference to the amendment of pleadings, this term may refer to a new state of facts out of which liability is claimed to arise, or it may refer to parties who are alleged to be entitled under the same state of facts, or it may embrace both features. Amended and supplemental pleadings are permitted under Fed.R.Civil P. 15.

New for old. In making an adjustment of a partial loss under a policy of marine insurance, the rule is to apply the old materials towards the payment of the new, by deducting the value of them from the gross amount of the expenses for repairs, and to allow the deduction of one-third new for old upon the balance.

New issue. A security being offered to the public for the first time. The distribution of new issues is usually subject to SEC rules. New issues may be initial public offerings by previously private companies or additional securities offered by public companies.

Newly discovered evidence. Evidence of a new and material fact, or new evidence in relation to a fact in issue, discovered by a party to a cause after the rendition of a verdict or judgment therein. Testimony discovered after trial, not discoverable before trial by exercise of due diligence. Kash N'Karry Wholesale Supermarkets, Inc. v. Garcia, Fla.App., 221 So.2d 786, 788.

Newly discovered evidence such as will support motion for new trial or to reopen for amended findings refers to evidence of facts existing at the time of trial of which the aggrieved party was excusably ignorant. Chromalloy Am. Corp. v. Alloy Surfaces Co., D.C.Del., 55 F.R.D. 406, 409. To constitute newly discovered evidence for which new trial may be granted, evidence must pertain to facts in existence at time of trial, and not to facts that have occurred subsequently. U.S. v. DePugh, D.C.Mo., 266 F.Supp. 417, 434.

On motion, the court may relieve a party from a judgment or order because of newly discovered evidence which by due diligence could not have been discovered in time to move for a new trial. Fed.R.Civ.P. 60(b).

Motions for new trial or relief from judgment or order based on newly discovered evidence must generally be made within a specified time period; see e.g. Fed.R.Civil P. 59, 60; Fed.R.Crim.P. 33.

New matter. In pleading, matters of fact not previously alleged by either party in the pleadings, involving, generally, new issues with new facts to be proved. Amended and supplemental pleadings are permitted under Fed.R.Civil P. 15 to add new matter.

In patent law, "new matter" is matter involving a departure from or in addition to the original disclosure. Stearn v. Superior Distributing Company, C.A.Mich., 674 F.2d 539, 544. Such matter may not be introduced into a patent application by way of amendment or continuation application. 35 U.S.C.A. § 132.

New promise. See Promise.

Newsmen's privilege. The alleged constitutional right (freedom of speech and press) of a newsmen to refuse to disclose the sources of his information. See Shield laws.

Newspaper. A publication, usually in sheet form, intended for general circulation, and published regularly at short intervals, containing information and editorials on current events and news of general interest.

Official newspaper. One designated by a state or municipal legislative body, or agents empowered by them, in which the public acts, resolves, advertisements, and notices are required to be published. See also Legal newspaper.

New trial. See Motion for new trial; Plain error rule; Trial; Venire facias de novo.

New York interest. System of computing interest by using the exact number of days in a month and not 30 days uniformly.

New York Stock Exchange. An unincorporated association of member firms which handle the purchase and sale of securities for themselves and customers. It is the oldest and largest stock exchange in the country.

New York Times v. Sullivan. Landmark case in which the U.S. Supreme Court held that the constitutional guarantee of a free press and free speech require a public official who sues for defamation to prove malice on the part of the defendant in the publication of the matter. Malice in this context is the publishing of the material knowing it to be false or with a reckless disregard of its falsity. 376 U.S. 254, 279-280, 84 S.Ct. 710-726, 11 L.Ed.2d 686. See also Libel.

Next friend. One acting for benefit of infant, or other person not sui juris (person unable to look after his or her own interests or manage his or her own lawsuit), without being regularly appointed guardian. In re Shupack's Estate, 158 Misc. 873, 287 N.Y.S. 184, 196.

Next friend. Person to whom remainder is given by will.

Next estate. Estate taking effect upon happening of the event terminating accumulation. In re Shupack's Estate, 158 Misc. 873, 287 N.Y.S. 184, 196.

Next friend. One acting for benefit of infant, or other person not sui juris (person unable to look after his or her own interests or manage his or her own lawsuit), without being regularly appointed guardian. In re Boulware's Will, 144 Misc. 235, 258 N.Y.S. 522. A "next friend" is not a party to an action, but is an officer of the court, especially appearing to look after the interests of the minor or the disabled person whom he represents.
Next of kin. In the law of descent and distribution, this term denotes the persons nearest of kin to the decedent, that is, those who are most nearly related by blood; but it is sometimes construed to mean only those who are entitled to take under the statute of distributions (i.e., statutory distributees). See e.g. N.Y. Estates, Powers & Trusts § 2-1.1.

The term "next of kin" is often used with two meanings; (1) nearest blood relations in law of consanguinity and (2) those entitled to take under statutory distribution of intestate's estates, and term is not necessarily confined to relatives by blood, but may include a relationship existing by reason of marriage, and may well embrace persons who are not in natural sense of word, and in contemplation of Roman law, bear no relationship of kinship at all. In re Kyle's Autopsy, Okl., 309 P.2d 1070, 1073.

Next presentation. In the law of advowson, the right of next presentation is the right to present to the first vacancy of a benefice.

Nexum /néksəm/. Lat. In Roman law, in ancient times the nexum seems to have been a species of formal contract, involving a loan of money, and attended with peculiar consequences, solemnized with the "copper and balance." Later, it appears to have been used as a general term for any contract struck with those ceremonies, and hence to have included the special form of conveyance called "mancipatio." In a general sense it means the obligation or bond between contracting parties.

In Roman law, this word expressed the tie or obligation involved in the old conveyance by mancipatio; and came latterly to be used interchangeably with (but less frequently than) the word "obligatio" itself.

Nexus. A multistate corporation's taxable income can be apportioned to a specific state only if the entity has established a sufficient presence, or nexus, with that state. State law, which often follows the Uniform Division of Income for Tax Purposes Act (UDITPA), specifies various activities that lead to such nexus in various states. See also UDITPA.

NGRI. Not guilty by reason of insanity. See Insanity; M'Naghten Rule.

Nichills /ˈnɪkəlz/. In old English practice, debts due to the exchequer which the sheriff could not levy, and as to which he returned nil. These sums were transcribed once a year by the clerk of the nichills, and sent to the treasurer's remembrancer's office, whence process was issued to recover the "nichill" debts. Both of these offices were abolished in 1833.

Nickname. A short name; one nicked or cut off for the sake of brevity, without conveying an idea of opprobrium, and frequently evincing the strongest affection or the most perfect familiarity.

Niece. The daughter of one's brother or sister, or of one's brother-in-law or sister-in-law.

Niefe /ˈnɪf/. In old English law, a woman born in vassalage; a bondwoman.

Nient /ˈniɛnt/. L. Fr. Nothing; not.

Nient comprise /ˈniɛnt kæmˈprieˌɪz/. Not comprised; not included. An exception taken to a petition because the thing desired is not contained in that deed or proceeding whereon the petition is founded.

Nient culpable /ˈniɛnt kəlˈpæbl/. Not guilty. The name in French law of the general issue in tort or in a criminal action.

Nient dedire /ˈniɛnt dəˈdɪr/. To say nothing; to deny nothing; to suffer judgment by default.

Nient le fait /ˈniɛnt ləˈfɛt/. In pleading, not the deed; not his deed. The same as the plea of non est factum.

Nient seişi /ˈniɛnt səˈziː/. In old pleading, not seised. The general plea in the writ of annuity.

NIFO. See Next-in, first out (NIFO). Compare Last-in, first-out (LIFO), and First-in, first-out (FIFO).

Nighttime. Generally, in absence of statutory provision to contrary, "nighttime," within definition of burglary, is, as was held at common law, that period between sunset and sunrise during which there is not enough daylight to discern a man's face. State v. Dougherty, 186 Kan. 820, 352 P.2d 1031, 1032. The rule is often followed that "nighttime" begins thirty minutes after sunset and ends thirty minutes before sunrise, Model Penal Code, § 221.02; or, that period of time from one hour after sunset to one hour before sunrise, Model v. Lavery, 255 Mass. 327, 333-334, 151 N.E. 466, 468.

The common-law definition is still adhered to in some states (e.g. Calif. Penal Code § 7: "The period between sunset and sunrise.") but in others "night" has been defined by statute (see e.g. Model Penal Code definition above).

Night walkers. In England, described in the statute 5 Edw. III, c. 14, as persons who sleep by day and walk by night. Persons who prowl about at night, and are of a suspicious appearance and behavior. Persons whose habit is to be abroad at night for the purpose of commit-Nihil est enim liberale quod non idem justum /nány(h)ál est łyam liberyly kwó kwón łyam jástam/. For there is nothing generous which is not at the same time just.

Nihil est magis rationi consentaneum quam eodem modo quoque dissolvere quo conflatum est /nány(h)ál est méyjas réshiyównay konsánténiyam kwám iyówdam mówdò wódkwiy dázólvary kwów konfleytam ést/. Nothing is more consonant to reason than that a thing should be dissolved or discharged in the same way in which it was created.

Nihil facit error nominis cum de corpore constat /nány(h)ál féyñay éähr nómanas ká diý kórpyí kónstáte/. An error as to a name is nothing when there is certainty as to the person.

Nihil habet /nány(h)ál hékýbat/. He has nothing. The name of a return made by a sheriff to a scire facias or other writ which he has been unable to serve on the defendant.

Nihil habet forum ex scena /nány(h)ál hékýbat forún éks síyns/. The court has nothing to do with what is not before it.

Nihil infra regnum subditos magis conservat in tranquilitate et concordia quam debita legum administration /nány(h)ál infra régnam súbdatów méyjas kanésárwat in trænkwilététiy ét kankórði(lya) wódk débta lṳygm adınstréshiyow/. Nothing preserves in tranquility and concord those who are subjected to the same government better than a due administration of the laws.

Nihil iniquius quam æquitatem nimis intendere /nány(h)ál aníkwyias ést kwám iykwatéytam nímás anténdary/. Nothing is more unjust than to extend equity too far.

Nihil in lege intolerabilius est [quam] eandem rem diverso jure censeri /nány(h)ál in liyijy intolóbrílyas ést kwám iyénydám rém dàvársw júryi sánśary/. Nothing is more intolerable in law than that the same matter, thing, or case should be subject to different views of law. Applied to the difference of opinion entertained by different courts, as to the law of a particular case.

Nihilist /nŷ(h)alst/nány/”. One advocating doctrine of nihilism. One devoted to the destruction of the present political, religious, and social institutions.

Nihil magis justum est quam quod necessarium est /nány(h)ál méyjas jástam ést kwám kwó kwíd nésáséryam ést/. Nothing is more just than that which is necessary.

Nihil nequam est presumpendum /nány(h)ál nékýwam ést priyzyaméndam/. Nothing wicked is to be presumed.

Nihil perfectum est dum aliquid restat agendum /nány(h)ál perféktyam ést dám álkákw réstat ajéndam/. Nothing is perfect while anything remains to be done.

Nihil peti potest ante id tempus quo per rerum naturam persolvi possit /nány(h)ál pétyay pówtást ántiy íd témpos kwó páw rírem nátyúram persólyv pówst/.
Nihil possumus contra veritatem /náy(h)al pósamos kóntra vērītätam/. We can do nothing against truth.

Nihil præscriptur nisi quod possidetur /náy(h)al præskríbítur nísi quod possídétur/. There is no prescription for that which is not possessed.

Nihil quod est contra rationem est licitum /náy(h)al kwód ́est inkonvíy(i)yáns est lístam/. Nothing that is against reason is lawful.

Nihil quod est inueniens est licitum /náy(h)al kwód ́est inkuñviy(i)yáns est lístam/. Nothing that is inconvenient is lawful. A maxim very frequently quoted by Lord Coke, but to be taken in modern law with some qualification.

Nihil simul inventum est et perfectum /náy(h)al sáýmál snvéntáms ét ét pérféktám/. Nothing is invented and perfected at the same moment.

Nihil tam conveniens est naturali aequitati quam unumquodque dissolvi eo ligam in quo ligatum est /náy(h)al tám kónviy(i)yáns est nátyuíréláy ikvátyétay day kwáum yúwánmkvéiwóy dzólyay iyów lágyéymi ni kwó kwágéyám est ét/. Nothing is so consonant to natural equity as that a thing should be dissolved by the same means by which it was bound.

Nihil tam conveniens est naturali aequitati quam volunatem domini rem suam in aliquam transference ratam habere /náy(h)al tám kónviy(i)yáns est nátyuíréláy ékwátyétay kwáum volántéytáms dónmáy rém s(y)úwám in éy(k)i yáms tánsfráyíy réytámb hábíriy/. Nothing is so consonant to natural equity as to regard the intention of the owner in transferring his own property to another.

Nihil tam naturale est, quam eo genere quidque dissolvere, quo colligatum est; iedio verborum obliquitati pertinet /náy(h)al tám nátyuíréláy ést, kwáum iyów jénaryii dzólyávriy, kwó kwágéyám est; idíyow vóbrórm oblégáy什léy(i)yów várás tólárs; n(y)üwdáy kánséns oblégáy什léy(i)yów kántérré-yow kánséns(y)üw dzólyáv/Á. Nothing is so natural as to dissolve anything in the way in which it was bound together; therefore the obligation of words is taken away by words; the obligation of mere consent is dissolved by the contrary consent.

Nihil tam proprium imperio quam legibus vivere /náy(h)al tám prówpriyém impiríyoy kwáum lýyábas váváyariy/. Nothing is so becoming to authority as to live in accordance with the laws.

Nil agit exemplum item quod lite resolvit /níl éyjat ágzéempl láytaým kwód láytyíy rázólyát/. An example does no good which settles one question by another.

Nil consensui tam contrarium est quam vis atque metus /níl kánsénshuway tám kántérréyám ét kwáum vis étkwíyá miyáts/. Nothing is so opposed to consent as force and fear.

Nil debet /níl débat/. He owes nothing. The form of the general issue in all actions of debt on simple contract.

Nil dicit judgment. Judgment entered against defendant, in proceeding in which he is in court but has not filed an answer, is a “nil dicit judgment”; all error of pleading being waived, court examines petition only to determine if it attempts to state cause of action within court’s jurisdiction. Gonzalez v. Regalado, Tex.Civ.App., 542 S.W.2d 689, 691. See also Nihil dicit.

Nil facit error nominis cum de corpore vel persona constat /níl fýysat éhrár nómans kámm dýy körparyi vél párswóna kónstát/. A mistake in the name does not matter when the body or person is manifest.

Nil habuit in tenementis /níl hábýyusat án ténémántés/. He had nothing [no interest] in the tenements. A plea in debt on a lease indented, by which the defendant sets up that the person claiming to be landlord had no title or interest.

Nil ligatum /níl lágýyám/. Nothing bound; that is, no obligation has been incurred.

Nil sine prudenti facit ratione vetustas /níl sáýniy pruwýdentáy fýysat réshiywóni y vátsástás/. Antiquity did nothing without a good reason.

Nil temere novandum /níl témárly navándájm/. Nothing should be rashly changed.

Nimia certitudinem ipsum destruct /nímiyá sárdátiy(y)üwów sórdátiy(y)üwdáñm ipsum dastruíwt/. Too great certainty destroys certainty itself.

Nimia subtilitas in jure reprobatur /nímiyá sá(b)tiláats in júyí répróbýét/Á. Too much subtlety in law is discountenanced.

Nimium altercando veritas amittitur /nímiyám óltár-kándów véhrétásm ámítárt/. By too much altercation truth is lost.

Nimmer /nímyé/. A thief; a pilferer.

Nineteenth Amendment. Known as the women’s suffrage amendment to the U.S. Const., it provides that the right of citizens of the U.S. to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the U.S. or by any state on account of sex. The 19th Amendment was ratified in 1920. See also Twenty-Sixth Amendment.

Ninety (90) day letter. Statutory notice sent by I.R.S. to taxpayer of tax deficiency. During the 90 day period after the mailing of such notice the taxpayer may either pay the tax and seek a refund or not pay the tax and challenge such alleged deficiency on petition to the Tax Court. I.R.C. §§ 6212, 6213. Notice of Commissioner’s determination of tax liability must, absent jeopardy, precede assessment. Bromberg v. Ingling, C.A.Guam, 300 F.2d 859, 861. See also Thirty-day letter.

Ninth Amendment. This amendment to the U.S. Const. provides that the enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.
Nisi decree. Unless the word is often affixed, as a kind of elliptical expression, to the words "rule," "order," "decree," "judgment," or "confirmation," to indicate that the adjudication spoken of is one which is to stand as valid and operative unless the party affected by it shall appear and show cause against it, or take some other appropriate step to avoid it or procure its revocation. Thus a "decree nisi" is one which will definitely conclude the defendant's rights unless, within the prescribed time, he shows cause to set it aside or successfully appeals. The word, in this sense, is opposed to "absolute." And when a rule nisi is finally confirmed, for the defendant's failure to show cause against it, it is said to be "made absolute." See also Show cause order.

Nisi decree. An interim decree or order which will ripen into a final decree unless something changes, or some event takes place. Conditional device decree. See also Nisi.

Nisi feceris /náysay fíysárás/. The name of a clause commonly occurring in the old manorial writs, commanding that, if the lords failed to do justice, the king's court or officer should do it. By virtue of this clause, the king's court usurped the jurisdiction of the private, manorial, or local courts.

Nisi prius /náysay práyas/. The nisi prius courts are such as are held for the trial of issues of fact before a jury and one presiding judge. In America the phrase was formerly used to denote the forum (whatever may be its statutory name) in which the cause was tried to a jury, as distinguished from the appellate court. In practice, the nisi prius courts are exclusive of their senatorial capacity. Since 1963 no new hereditary ennoblements have been created.

Nisi prius clause /náysay práyas kloz/. In practice, a clause entered on the record in an action at law, authorizing the trial of the cause at nisi prius in the particular county designated. It was first used by way of continuance.

Nisi prius roll /náysay práyas rówl/. In practice, the roll or record containing the pleadings, issue, and jury process of an action, made up for use in the nisi prius court.

NKA. Now known as.

N.L. An abbreviation of "non liquet" (which see).

N.L.R.B. National Labor Relations Board.

No-action clause. Provision commonly found in liability insurance policies to the effect that the insurer is not liable to the insured and that no action may be brought against the insurer by the insured until an action has been brought and the insured has either paid the amount to the third person or until a judgment has been rendered fixing the amount due or until an agreement has been reached.

No-action letter. Letter written by attorney for governmental agency (e.g. S.E.C.) to effect that, if facts are as represented in request for ruling, he will advise agency not to take action because the facts do not warrant prosecution.

No arrival, no sale. Provision in sales contract that if goods do not arrive at destination buyer acquires no property therein and does not become liable for price.

No award. The name of a plea in an action on an award, by which the defendant traverses the allegation that an award was made.

Nobiliores et benigniores presumptiones in dubiis sunt praerende /nobiljoríyóriz et benignjoríyóriz przápm(ishýownzis dz yúwbìyás sìnt prfrezánde/. In cases of doubt, the more generous and more benign presumptions are to be preferred. A civil-law maxim.

Nobilissimus est duplex, superior et inferior /nowbìlatz èst dz(y)úwbìleks, sapíríyär èt infíríyär/. There are two sorts of nobility, the higher and the lower.

Nobility. In English law, a division of the people, comprehending dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons. These had anciently duties annexed to their respective honors. They are created either by writ, i.e., by royal summons to attend the house of peers, or by letters patent, i.e., by royal grant of any dignity and degree of peerage; and they enjoy many privileges, exclusive of their senatorial capacity. Since 1963 no new hereditary ennoblements have been created.

No bill. This phrase, endorsed by a grand jury on the indictment, is equivalent to "not found", "no indictment", or "not a true bill". It means that, in the opinion of the jury, evidence was insufficient to warrant the return of a formal charge. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 6(f). See Indictment.

No bonus clause. In states where applicable, a clause under the eminent domain section of a lease, giving the lessee the right to recover only the value of his physical improvements in the event of a taking, and not the value of his leasehold interest (the difference between the fixed rent of the lease and current market rental value).

No contest clause. Provision in a will to the effect that the legacy or devise is given on condition that no action is taken to contest the will; and if such action is initiated, the legacy or devise is forfeited. See also Non-contestability clause.
Noctanter /nɔktæntə/. By night; an abolished writ which issued out of chancery, and returned to the queen's bench, for the prostration of inclosures, etc.

Noctes and noctem de firma /nɔktiz dɪ fɑrmə /nɔktəm/. Entertainment of meat and drink for so many nights.

Nocumentum /nɔkjuəmɛntəm/. Lat. In old English law, a nuisance. Nocumentum damnosum, a nuisance occasioning loss or damage. Nocumentum injuriosum, an injurious nuisance. For the latter only a remedy was given.

No evidence. Under the rule that the court may render judgment non obstante veredicto if directed verdict would have been proper, the term "no evidence" does not mean literally no evidence at all; "no evidence" comprehends those situations wherein by the application of established principles of law the evidence is deemed legally insufficient to establish an asserted proposition of fact. Fields v. Burlison Packing Co., Tex.Civ.App., 405 S.W.2d 105, 106. "No evidence" points may be sustained only when (1) evidence of a vital fact is completely absent; (2) rules of law or evidence bar court from giving weight to only evidence offered to prove a vital fact; (3) no more than a mere scintilla of evidence is offered to prove a vital fact; and (4) the evidence conclusively establishes the opposite of the vital fact. State v. Vargas, Tex.Civ.App., 419 S.W.2d 926, 927.

No eyewitness rule. The principle by which one who is charged with the burden of showing freedom from contributory negligence is assumed to have acted with due care for his own safety in the absence of eyewitnesses or of any obtainable evidence to the contrary. Froman v. Perrin, Iowa, 213 N.W.2d 684, 686. The "no eyewitness rule" is that where there is no obtainable direct evidence of what decedent did or failed to do immediately before injury, trier of facts may infer that decedent was in exercise of ordinary care for his own safety. Marean v. Petersen, 259 Iowa 557, 144 N.W.2d 906, 913.

No fault. A type of automobile insurance, in force in many states, in which each person's own insurance company pays for injury or damage up to a certain limit regardless of whether its insured was actually at fault. See Insurance.

Also, popular name for a type of divorce in which a marriage can be ended on a mere allegation that it has "irretrievably" broken down or because of "irreconcilable" differences between the spouses. Under such statutory ground for dissolution of marriage, which exists in most all states, fault on the part of either spouse need not be shown or proved. See irretrievable breakdown of marriage.

No fault insurance. See Insurance; No fault.

No funds. Endorsement marked on check when a check is drawn on bank in which the drawer has no funds with which to cover check. See also Fund or funds.

No goods. This is the English equivalent of the Latin term "nulla bona," being the form of the return made by a sheriff or constable, charged with an execution, when he has found no property of the debtor on which to levy.

Nolens volens /nɔˈlɛns vəˈlɛns/. Lat. Whether willing or unwilling; consenting or not.

No limit order. An order to buy or sell securities in which there is no stipulation as to price.

Nolissement /nɔlɪsmɔ̃/. Fr. In French marine law, affreightment.

Nolle prosequi /nɔˈli prɔsəkwɛ/. Lat. A formal entry upon the record, by the plaintiff in a civil suit, or, more commonly, by the prosecuting attorney in a criminal action, by which he declares that he "will no further prosecute" the case, either as to some of the defendants, or altogether. The voluntary withdrawal by the prosecuting attorney of present proceedings on a criminal charge. Brantley v. Com., Pennsylvania Bd. of Probation and Parole, 95 Pa.Cmwlth. 641, 506 A.2d 970, 973. Commonly called "nol pros."

No-load fund. A type of mutual fund which charges little or nothing for administrative and selling expenses in the sale of its shares. See Mutual fund.

Nolo contendere /nɔˈloʊ kəntəndərɪ/. Latin phrase meaning "I will not contest it"; a plea in a criminal case which has a similar legal effect as pleading guilty. Hudson v. U. S., 272 U.S. 451, 455, 47 S.Ct. 127, 129, 71 L.Ed. 347. Type of plea which may be entered with leave of court to a criminal complaint or indictment by which the defendant does not admit or deny the charges, though a fine or sentence may be imposed pursuant to it. Fed.R.Crim.P. 11(a), 12(a). The principal difference between a plea of guilty and a plea of nolo contendere is that the latter may not be used against the defendant in a civil action based upon the same acts. As such, this plea is particularly popular in antitrust actions (e.g. price fixing) where the likelihood of civil actions following in the wake of a successful antitrust prosecution is very great.

A defendant may plead nolo contendere only with the consent of the court. Such a plea shall be accepted by the court only after due consideration of the views of the parties and the interest of the public in the effective administration of justice. Fed.R.Crim.P. 11(b).

Nomen /nɔˈmɑn/. Lat. In the civil law, a name; the name, style, or designation of a person. Properly, the name showing to what gens or tribe he belonged, as distinguished from his own individual name (the praenomen), from his surname or family name (cognomen), and from any name added by way of a descriptive title (agnomen). The name or style of a class or genus of persons or objects. A debt or a debtor.

Nomen collectivum /nɔˈmɑn kəlɛkktɪvʊm/. A collective name or term; a term expressive of a class; a term including several of the same kind; a term expressive of the plural, as well as singular, number.
Nomen generale /nówman jénarélyiy/. A general name; the name of a genus.

Nomen generalissimum /nówman jénaralissiým/. A name of the most general kind; a name or term of the most general meaning. By the name of "land," which is nomen generalissimum, everything terrestrial will pass.

Nomen juris /nówman júras/. A name of the law; a technical legal term.

Nomen non sufficit, si res non sit de jure aut de facto /nówman nón sáfását sáй ríy nón sít diý júry ót diý fékto/. A name is not sufficient if there be not a thing [or subject for it] de jure or de facto.

Nomen transcriptitium /nówman trënskriptishiyam/. See Nomina transcriptitium.

Nominal. Titular; existing in name only; not real or substantial; connected with the transaction or proceeding in name only, not in interest. Park Amusement Co. v. McCaughn, D.C.Pa., 14 F.2d 553, 556. Not real or actual; merely named, stated, or given, without reference to actual conditions; often with the implication that the thing named is so small, slight, or the like, in comparison to what might properly be expected, as scarcely to be entitled to the name; e.g., a nominal price. Lehman v. Tait, C.C.A.Md., 58 F.2d 20, 23.

Nominal account. In accounting, an income statement account which is closed into surplus at the end of the year when the books are balanced.

Nominal capital. Very small or negligible capital, whose use in particular business is incidental. Strayer's Business College v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Md., 35 F.2d 426, 429. Capital in name only and which is not substantial; not real or actual; merely named, stated, or given, without reference to actual conditions. Feeders' Supply Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Mo., 31 F.2d 274, 276.

Nominal consideration. See Consideration.

Nominal damages. See Damages.

Nominal defendant. A person who is joined as defendant in an action, not because he is immediately liable in damages or because any specific relief is demanded as against him, but because his connection with the subject-matter is such that the plaintiff's action would be defective, under the technical rules of practice, if he were not joined. See also Parties.

Nominal interest rate. The rate of interest stated in a security as opposed to the actual interest yield that is based upon the price at which the interest-bearing property is purchased and the length of time to maturity of the obligation.

Nominal partner. A person who appears to be a partner in a firm, or is so represented to persons dealing with the firm, or who allows his name to appear in the style of the firm or to be used in its business, in the character of a partner, but who has no actual interest in the firm or business.

Nominal party. See Nominal defendant; Parties.

Nominal payee rule. Refers to a U.C.C. Article 3 provision, § 3–405(1)(b), which renders effective any person's indorsement of an instrument drawn by a person who intends the payee to have no interest in the instrument.

Nominal trust. A dry or passive trust in which the duties of the trustee are minimal and in which the beneficiary has virtual control.

Nomina mutabilia sunt, res autem immobiles /nómana myúwtbíll(y)ay sánt, sáй ríy ódm smówbólliy/. Names are mutable, but things are immovable [immutable]. A name may be true or false, or may change, but the thing itself always maintains its identity.

Nomina si nescis perit cognitio rerum; et nomina si perdas, certe distinctio rerum perditur /nómana sáй néssas párst kógníshílyow ríram ét nómana sáй párđás sártiý dástíykíshí(y)ow ríram pártár/ . If you know not the names of things, the knowledge of things themselves perishes; and, if you lose the names, the distinction of the things is certainly lost.

Nomina sunt note rerum /nómana sánt nówtiy ríram/. Names are the notes of things.

Nomina sunt symbola rerum /nómana sánt símbóla ríram/. Names are the symbols of things.

Nominate. To name, designate by name, appoint, or propose for election or appointment.

Nominate contracts. In the civil law, contracts having a proper or peculiar name and form, and which were divided into four kinds, expressive of the ways in which they were formed, viz: (1) Real, which arose ex re, from something done; (2) verbal, ex verbis, from something said; (3) literal, ex literis, from something written; and (4) consensual, ex consensus, from something agreed to.

Nominatim /nómanéyťam/. Lat. By name; expressed one by one.

Nominating and reducing. A (now obsolete) mode of obtaining a panel of special jurors in England, from which to select the jury to try a particular action.

Nominatio auctoris /nómanéyśhow októřos/. Lat. In Roman law, a form of plea or defense in an action for the recovery of real estate, by which the defendant, sued as the person apparently in possession, alleges that he holds only in the name or for the benefit of another, whose name he discloses by the plea, in order that the plaintiff may bring his action against such other.

Nomination. An appointment or designation of a person to fill an office or discharge a duty. The act of suggesting or proposing a person by name as a candidate for an office.

Nomination paper. A paper used for selection of candidates by a political body which is not a political party and is not entitled to use a "nomination petition". Commonwealth v. Antico, 146 Pa.Super. 293, 22 A.2d 204, 209.
Nomination to a living. In English ecclesiastical law, the rights of nominating and of presenting to a living are distinct, and may reside in different persons. Presentation is the offering a clerk to the bishop. Nomination is the offering a clerk to the person who has the right of presentation. Also called Advowson.

Nominativus pendens /nómanía péndéns/. Lat. A nominative case grammatically unconnected with the rest of the sentence in which it stands. The opening words in the ordinary form of a deed inter partes, "This indenture," etc., down to "whereas," though an intelligible and convenient part of the deed, are of this kind.

Nomina transcriptitia /nómanía tránskriptišiyə/. In Roman law, obligations contracted by literæ (i.e., literis obligationes) were so called because they arose from a peculiar transfer (transcriptio) from the creditor's daybook (adversaria) into his ledger (codex).

Nomina villarum /nómanía váléram/. In English law, an account of the names of all the villages and the possessors thereof, in each county, drawn up by several sheriffs (9 Edw. II), and returned by them into the exchequer, where it is still preserved.

Nomine /nómaní/. Lat. By name; by the name of; under the name or designation of.

Nominee /nòmani/. One who has been nominated or proposed for an office. One designated to act for another in his or her place.

A form of securities registration widely used by institutional investors to avoid onerous requirements of establishing the right of registration by a fiduciary.

One designated to act for another as his representative in a rather limited sense; e.g. stock held by brokerage firm in street name to facilitate transactions even though customer is actual owner of securities. It is used sometimes to signify an agent or trustee. It has no connotation, however, other than that of acting for another, in representation of another, or as the grantee of another. Schuh Trading Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Ill., 95 F.2d 404, 411.

Nominee trust. An arrangement for holding title to real property under which one or more persons or corporations, pursuant to a written declaration of trust, declare that they will hold any property that they acquire as trustees for the benefit of one or more undisclosed beneficiaries.

Nomine πένε /nόmaní πínyi/. In the name of a penalty.

In the civil law, a legacy was said to be left nomine πένε where it was left for the purpose of coercing the heir to do or not to do something.

The term has also been applied, in English law, to some kinds of covenants, such as a covenant inserted in a lease that the lessee shall forfeit a certain sum on non-payment of rent, or on doing certain things, as plowing up ancient meadow, and the like.

Nomocanon /nówmokéωnan/. (1) A collection of canons and imperial laws relative or conformable thereto. The first nomocanon was made by Johannes Scholasticus in 554. Photius, patriarch of Constantinople, in 883, compiled another nomocanon, or collation of the civil laws with the canons; this is the most celebrated. Balsamon wrote a commentary upon it in 1180. (2) A collection of the ancient canons of the apostles, councils, and fathers, without regard to imperial constitutions.

Nomographer /namógraφə/. One who writes on the subject of laws.

Nomography /namógraфи/. A treatise or description of laws.

Nomotheta /nówmathiəta/. A lawgiver; such as Solon and Lycurgus among the Greeks, and Cæsar, Pompey, and Sylla among the Romans.

Non. Lat. Not. The common prefix of negation.

Non-ability. Want of ability to do an act in law, as to sue. A plea founded upon such cause.

Non-acceptance. A buyer's right under a contract of sale to reject the goods because of non-conformance with the contract. U.C.C. § 2-601(a). Failure or refusal of a drawee to accept a draft or bill. The refusal to accept anything.

Non acceptavit /nón ākseptéютвт/. In common law pleading, the name of a plea to an action of assumpsit brought against the drawee of a bill of exchange by which he denies that he accepted the same.

Non-access. Absence of opportunities for sexual intercourse between husband and wife, or the absence of such intercourse. Defense interposed by alleged father in paternity cases.

Non accipi debent verba in demonstrationem falsam, que competitum in limitationem veram /nón āksep̣ṿ debant vərbə in dəmənstrēšiyəwnəm fəlsəm, kwə limətshishiyəwnəm vərm/. Words ought not to be taken to import a false demonstration which may have effect by way of true limitation.

Non accretit infra sex annos /nón ākriyṿt ifrə sēks ānows/. It did not accrue within six years. The name of a plea by which the defendant sets up the statute of limitations against a cause of action which is barred after six years.

Nonacquiescence. An administrative agency's policy of declining to be bound by judicial precedent which is contrary to the agency's interpretation of its organic statute, until the Supreme Court has ruled on the issue. At its most extreme, it is the policy of disregarding the decisions of federal courts within the circuit in which they sit when those decisions conflict with the Secretary's own policies. Steiberger v. Heckler, D.C.N.Y., 615 F.Supp. 1315, 1321. A more limited version is an agency's refusal to give nationwide effect to the holdings of a particular court of appeals. Lopez v. Heckler, C.C.A. Cal., 725 F.2d 1489, 1503. Sometimes abbreviated as non-acq. or NA. Compare Acquiescence.

Non-admission. The refusal of admission.
Non-age. Lack of requisite legal age. A minor. In general, the legal status of a person who is under eighteen years of age. See Minor.

Non.age. Lagh of requisite legal age. A minor. In general, the legal status of a person who is under eighteen years of age. See Minor.

Nonagium or nonage /nównéyjǐyəm/nównaj/. In old European law, a ninth part of movables which was paid to the clergy on the death of persons in their parish, and claimed on pretense of being distributed to pious uses.

Non alio modo puniarit aliquis quam secundum quod se habet condemnatio /nòn éyliyow mówdow pyùwniyéyta zákakwis kwəm sakândam kwòd siy hýybat kóndemmnéysh(i)yow/. A person may not be punished differently than according to what the sentence enjoins.

Non altir a significacione verborum recediri ought. In old European law, a ninth part of movables which was paid to the clergy on the death of persons in their parish, and claimed on pretense of being distributed to pious uses.

Non ancestrale estate. Realty coming to deceased in any way other than by descent or devise from a now dead ancestor, or by deed of actual gift from a living one, there being no other consideration than that of blood. One acquired by purchase or by act or agreement of the parties, as distinguished from one acquired by descent or by operation of law.

Non-apparent easement. A non-continuous or discontinuous easement. See Easement.

Non-appearance. A failure of appearance; the omission of the defendant to appear within the time limited. See Default.

Non-assessable. This word, placed upon a certificate of stock, does not cancel or impair the obligation to pay the amount due upon the shares created by the acceptance and holding of such certificate. At most its legal effect is a stipulation against liability from further assessment or taxation after the entire subscription of one hundred per cent. shall have been paid. Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U.S. 45, 23 L.Ed. 203.

Non assumpt /nòn åsàm(p)sat/. The general issue in the action of assumpt; being a plea by which the defendant avers that "he did not undertake" or promise as alleged by the plaintiff. See Assumption.

Non assumpt infra sex annos /nòn åsàm(p)sat ínfrə sèks ånow/. He did not undertake within six years.

Non auditur perire volens /nòn ótədər pəraëryi vówlèn/. He who is desirous to perish is not heard. He who confesses himself guilty of a crime, with the view of meeting death, will not be heard. A maxim of the foreign law of evidence.

Non-bailable. Not admitting of bail; not requiring bail.

Non bis in idem /nòn bìs ín áytəm/. Not twice for the same; that is, a man shall not be twice tried for the same crime. This maxim of the civil law expresses the same principle as the familiar rule of our law that a man shall not be twice "put in jeopardy" for the same offense.

Non-cancellable /nòn kénsələbə/. Such provision in insurance policy precludes insurer from cancelling policy after an illness or accident, so long as the premium has been paid. Dudgeon v. Mutual Ben. Health & Accident Ass'n, C.C.A.W.Va., 70 F.2d 49, 52.

Non cepit /nòn sìypət/. He did not take. The general issue in replevin, where the action is for the wrongful taking of the property; putting in issue not only the taking, but the place in which the taking is stated to have been made.

Non-claim. The omission or neglect of person who ought to claim his right within the time limited by law. See Covenant of non-claim. See Covenant.

Non-combatant. A person connected with an army or navy, but for purposes other than fighting; such as the surgeons and chaplains or conscientious objectors. Also a neutral.

Non-commissioned. A non-commissioned officer of the armed services is an officer who holds his rank, not by commission from the executive authority, but by appointment by a superior officer.

Non compus mentis /nòn kómpəs méntəs/. Lat. Not sound of mind; insane. This is a very general term, embracing all varieties of mental infirmity. See Incompetency; Insanity.

Non concedatur. The name of a common law plea denying a grant, which could be made only by a stranger.

Non concedit /nòn kənˈsɛdɪt/. Lat. He did not grant. The name of a common law plea denying a grant, which could be made only by a stranger.

Nonconforming lot. A lot the area, dimension or location of which was lawful prior to the adoption, revision or amendment of a zoning ordinance, but now fails to conform to the requirements of the zoning district in which it is located by reason of such adoption, revision, or amendment.

Nonconforming use. A structure the size, dimension or location of which was lawful prior to the adoption, revision or amendment of a zoning ordinance, but which fails to conform to the requirements of the zoning district in which it is located by reason of such adoption, revision or amendment. A use which does not comply with present zoning provisions but which existed lawfully and was created in good faith prior to the enactment of the zoning ordinance. Camaron Apartments, Inc. v.
Non-continuous easement.

Non consentit qui errat /nón konséntat kwáy éhrst/. He who mistakes does not consent.

Non constat /nón kónstát/. Lat. It does not appear; it is not clear or evident. A phrase used in general to state some conclusion as not necessarily following although it may appear on its face to follow.

Non-contestability clause. Clause in insurance policy that precludes insurer from contesting policy on basis of fraud or mistake after a specified period of time (e.g., two years) when insured has acted thereon to his detriment by payments of premiums and foregoing other insurance. See also Incontestability clause.

Non-continuous easement. "Continuous easement" is one which may be enjoyed without any act by party claiming it, while "noncontinuous easement," such as right of way, is one to enjoyment of which party's act is necessary. A non-apparent or discontinuous easement. See Easement.

Noncontribution clause. A non-apparent or discontinuous easement.

Non-cumulative dividends. Commonly incident to premiums and rules, etc.

Non culpabilis /nón kálpéy查看详情/. Lat. In pleading, not guilty. It is usually abbreviated "non cul."

Noncumulative voting. Also called "straight" voting, such voting rights limit a shareholder to voting no more than the number of shares he owns for a single candidate. In noncumulative voting, a majority shareholder will elect the entire board of directors. Compare Cumulative voting.

Non damnificatus /nón dèmniçosféy查看详情/. Lat. Not injured. A common law plea in an action of debt on an indemnity bond, or bond conditioned "to keep the plaintiff harmless and indemnified," etc. It is in the nature of a plea of performance, being used where the defendant means to allege that the plaintiff has been kept harmless and indemnified, according to the tenor of the condition.

Non dat qui non habet /nón dèt kwáy nón hèybyte/. He who has not does not give.

Non debo melioris conditionis esse, quam auctor meus a quo jus in me transit /nón débiyow mìlìyôrøs kandíshìyôƿnas ésiy kwâm ôktar miyås èy kwow jas in miy trénszt/. I ought not to be in better condition than he to whose rights I succeed.

Non debetur aliis nocere quod inter alios actum esset /nón débåt kòktôrâl lásùri kwôd rîyôw nón pûrmìttåtâ/. A plaintiff ought not to be allowed what is not permitted to a defendant. A rule of the civil law.

Non debet actori licere quod reo non permititur /nón débåt ǎktôrây lásùri kwôd rîyôw nón pûrmìttåtâ/. A plaintiff ought not to be allowed what is not permitted to a defendant. A rule of the civil law.

Non debet adduci exceptio ejus rei cujus petitur dissolutio /nón débåt əddd(y)ûwséy aksésh(y)ow iỳjås rîyây k(i)yùwjas pètåtâr diså(y)uwséy(y)ow/. A plea of the same nature that the dissolution of which is sought [by the action] ought not to be brought forward.

Non debet aliis nocere, quod inter alios actum est /nón débåt èyliyåy nàsrìyï, kwôd ìntår èyliyåwòs ìkåtm èst/. A person ought not to be prejudiced by what has been done between others.

Non debet alteri per alterum iniqua conditio inferri /nón débåt ìlåtårèy pïr ìlåtårn ànàykwå kandíshìy(y)ow înfèhåy/. A burdensome condition ought not to be brought upon one man by the act of another.

Non debet cui plus licet, quod minus est non licere /nón débåt kwùwùwåy plås lìštås, kwôd màýnås èst nón lâsùri/. He to whom the greater is lawful ought not to be debarred from the less as unlawful.

Non debet dici tendere in prejudicium ecclesiasticæ liberatatis quod pro rege et republica necessarium videtur /nón débåt kìyåyåwèy tàndàriyå kìyåwåwåj(y)ùm akliyåyésåsåy lìbär(à)kèyås kwòd pròw rèiyåy èt räpëblìkå nèssèårìyåm vàdíyår/. That which seems necessary for the king and the state ought not to be said to the prejudice of spiritual liberty.

Non decet homines dedere causa non cognita /nón dèzåt hòmìniyåy dùdåriyò kòzå nón kògnìtå/. It is unbecoming to surrender men when no cause is shown.

Non deciendo /nón dèzìmåándow/. See De non deciendo.

Non decipitur qui scit se decipi /nón dâsîpåtår kwây sì tyå dësåpay/. He is not deceived who knows himself to be deceived.

Non dedit /nón diỳdåt/. Lat. In old pleading, he did not grant. The general issue in formemon.

Non definitur in jure quid sit conatus /nón dàfinåtå rìjyåw kwìd sì kànåyåsås/. What an attempt is, is not defined in law. See Attempt.

Non-delivery. Neglect, failure, or refusal to deliver goods, on the part of a carrier, vendor, bailee, etc. Refers to a bailee who refuses to, or is unable to, surrender goods to a person entitled under a document of title covering them.

Non demisit /nón dámiyåzå/. Lat. He did not demise.

Non detinet /nón détánt/. Lat. He does not detain.

The name of the general issue in the action of detinue. The general issue in the action of replevin, where the action is for the wrongful detention only.

Non differunt quae concordant re, tametsi non in verbis iisdem /nón diférunt kwá kankórdánt ri, támetsay nón in várbs iyáysdam/. Those things do not differ which agree in substance, though not in the same words.

Non dimisit /nón dámíz/. L. Lat. He did not demisite. A common law plea resorted to where a plaintiff declared upon a demise without stating the indenture in an action of debt for rent. Also, a plea in bar, in replevin, to an avowry for arrears of rent, that the avowant did not demisite.

Non-direction. Omission on the part of a judge to properly instruct the jury upon a necessary conclusion of law.

Non-disclosure. A failure to reveal facts, which may exist when there is no "concealment." State v. Watson, 145 Kan. 792, 67 P.2d 515, 517. See Fraud; Material fact; Misrepresentation.

Non distringendo /nón distrinjéndow/. A writ not to restrain. The general issue in the action of detinue.

Non dubitatur, etsi specialiter venditor evictionem non promiserit, re evicta, ex empto competere ac­tio /nón dúbitát/. L. Lat. He does not dubitare. We are not bound to an avowry for arrears of rent, that the vendor has not given a special guaranty, re evicted.

Non efficet affectus nisi sequatur effectus /nón efíse t /nón éfass a fíktaas náy say saxwéytar a fíktaas/. The intention amount to nothing unless the effect follow.

Non erit alia lex Rome, alia Athenis; alia nunc, alia posthac; sed et omnes gentes, et omni tempore, una lex, et sempiterna, et immortalis continbit /nón èríst éyliya léks rówmíyí, éyliya áfiyáns, éyliya nágk, éyliya pówsthek; séd ét ómniyí jéntiyí ét ómnay témpaní yúwna léks, ét sêmpámírta ét imórtéyíls, kóntaniyébt/. There will not be one law at Rome, another at Athens; one law now, another hereafter; but one eternal and immortal law shall bind together all nations throughout all time.

None /nówn/. In the Roman calendar, the fifth, and, in March, May, July, and October, the seventh, day of the month. So called because, counting inclusively, they were nine days from the ides.

Non est arctius vinculum inter homines quam jusjurandum /nón èst árkhiyáshy víkít(y)élam íntar hómnayíyí kwáwm jášarándam/. There is no closer [or firmer] bond between men than an oath.

Non est certandum de regulis juris /nón èst sárténdam diy régyálas júras/. There is no disputing about rules of law.

Non est consonum rationi, quod cognitio accessorii in curia christianitatis impediatur, ubi cognitio cause principalis ad forum ecclesiasticum noscitur pertinere /nón èst kónsnam rásíhiyáwná kwód kognishíhyíow àsksóóriýíyí áyn ê kyúriýa krístiýááníyéytas impílydíiyéytar, yúwbay kognishíhyíow kózíi prinspéylas ád fóraam áklyíyíyéståkam nóéztar pórtaníyíyíyí/. It is unreasonable that the cognizance of an accessory matter should be impeded in an ecclesiastical court, when the cognizance of the principal cause is admitted to appertain to an ecclesiastical court.

Non est disputandum contra principia negantem /nón èst dispyé’étand kómó prinsýiyó prinsýipam/. We cannot dispute against a man who denies first principles.

Non est inventus /nón èst ínventas/. Lat. He is not found. The sheriff's return to process requiring him to arrest the body of the defendant, when the latter is not found within his jurisdiction. It is often abbreviated, "n. e. i.," or written, in English, "not found."

Non est justo aliquem antenatum post mortem facere bastardum qui toto tempore více suæ pro legis­mo habebatur /nón èst jástám álákwm óntiýnýéytam pwóst mórtórm féysúrariyí yákmáw témpaní yúwmíwí yúwbay kózíi prínshóów húóbshéyétor/. It is not just to make an elderborn a bastard after his death, who during his lifetime was accounted legitimate.

Non est novum ut priores leges ad posteriores tra­hantur /nón èst nôwam ét préóryéyíyí líýyéyí yád pastíriyíriyíyíyí yáshántar/. It is no new thing that prior statutes should give place to later ones.

Non est recordendum a communi observantia /nón èst ráséddámd em ómuyñýýíw yóózárýnshíyýí/. There should be no departure from a common observance.

Non est regula quin fallet /nón èst régyála kwíín fólst/. There is no rule but what may fail.

Non est reus nisi mens sit rea /nón èst ríyas náyas móez sít réya/. One is not guilty unless his intention be guilty. This maxim is much criticized and is only applicable when the absence of intent reduces the seriousness of the crime. See Actus non facit reum, etc.; Mens rea.

Non est singulis concedendum, quod per magistra­num publice possit fieri, ne occasio sit majoris tum­multus faciendi /nón èst síygýálas kónsédándam kwód páır mákstrayétam pólásísí póóst fáýyaray, níy skéýzhíhyíow sít májóras támáttas fááshiyéyéday/. That is not to be conceded to private persons which can be publicly done by the magistrate, lest it be the occasion of greater tumults.
Non exemplis sed legibus judicandum est /nón azémplos séd lúyajub júwadkéndam ést/. Not by the facts of the case, but by the law must judgment be made.

Non ex opinionibus singulorum, sed ex communi usi, nonmia exaudiri debent /nón éks apíniyónawbas séggyalórom séd éks kamyùwnay yúwà(y)uw nómóma éksóyáray débant/. The names of things ought to be understood, not according to the opinions of individuals, but according to common usage.

Non facias malum, ut inde fiat bonum /nón féyshiyùyès mélam át indiy fáyát bównam/. You are not to do evil, that good may be or result therefrom.

Nonfeasance /nónfíyyzans/. Nonperformance of some act which person is obligated or has responsibility to perform; omission to perform a required duty at all; or, total neglect of duty. Desmarais v. Wachusett Regional School Dist., 360 Mass. 591, 276 N.E.2d 691, 693. As respects public officials, "nonfeasance" is substantial failure to perform a required legal duty, while "misfeasance" is the doing in a wrongful manner that which the law authorizes or requires a public officer to do. Schumacher v. State ex rel. Furlong, 78 Nev. 167, 370 P.2d 209, 211.

There is a distinction between "nonfeasance" and "misfeasance" or "malfeasance"; and this distinction is often of great importance in determining an agent's liability to third persons. "Nonfeasance" means the total omission or failure of an agent to enter upon the performance of some distinct duty or undertaking which he has agreed with his principal to do; "misfeasance" means the improper doing of an act which the agent might lawfully do, or, in other words, it is the performing of his duty to his principal in such a manner as to infringe upon the rights and privileges of third persons; and "malfeasance" is a doing of an act which he ought not to do at all.

Compare Malfeasance; Misfeasance.

Non fecit /nón fíyst/. Lat. He did not make it. A plea in an action of assumpsit on a promissory note.

Non fecit vastum contra prohibitionem /nón fíyst vástam kóntra prów(h)abíshiyównam/. He did not commit waste against the prohibition. A plea to an action founded on a writ of estrepement for waste.

Non-freehold estates. All estates in real property without seisin; hence, all estates except the fee simple, fee tail and life estates are non-freehold.

Non hac in fœdera veni /nón híy垦 in fédéra viñvay/. I did not agree to these terms.

Non impedit clausula derogatoria quo minus ad ea-dem potestate res dissolvantur a qua constituitur /nón impíyáty kló(y)ala dórúgtáríra klów máyñas ád ¡yéyam powtsástétyi rúy dzólvántar éy kwey kán­stít(y)uwántar/. A derogatory clause does not impede things from being dissolved by the same power by which they are created.

Non impedivit /nón impádáyvat/. Lat. He did not impede. The plea of the general issue in quare impedit. The Latin form of the law French "ne disturba pas."

Non implacito: aliquem de libero tenemento sine brevi /nón implásstéándow élakwem díy lìbárow ténàmèntów sàynìy bríyvay/. A writ to prohibit bailiffs, etc., from distraining or impeding any man touching his freehold without the king's writ.

Non infregit conventionem /nón ínfryjìt kànven­shyównm/. Lat. He did not break the contract. The name of a plea sometimes pleaded in the action of covenant, and intended as a general issue, but held to be a bad plea; there being, properly speaking, no general issue in that action.

Non in legendo sed in intelligendo legis consistunt /nón in lájéndow séd in intélajéndow líyjyj kánstìnt/. The laws consist not in being read, but in being understood.

Non-insurable risk. A hazard or risk for which insurance will not be written because not subject to evaluation by actuarial computations; such risk being too uncertain.

Non-intercourse. The refusal of one state or nation to have commercial dealings with another; similar to an embargo (q.v.).

The absence of access, communication, or sexual relations between husband and wife. See Non-access.

Non interfui /nón intár(f)yúwày/. I was not present. A reporter's note.

Non-intervention will. A term sometimes applied to a will which authorizes the executor to settle and distribute the estate without the intervention of the court and without giving bond.

Non intromittant clause /nón intrmómitant kló/. In English law, a clause of a charter of a municipal borough, whereby the borough is exempted from the jurisdiction of the justices of the peace for the county.

Non intromittendo, quando breve precipe in capite subdole impetratur /nón intrmómiténdow, klówndon bríyvî préspáiyi in képátiy sàbdály impréstrýtár/. In old English law, a writ addressed to the justices of the bench, or in eyre, commanding them not to give one, who, under color of entitling the king to land, etc., as holding of him in capite, had deceitfully obtained the writ called "precipe in capite," any benefit thereof, but to put him to his writ of right.
Non-issuable pleas. Those upon which a decision would not determine the action upon the merits, as a plea in abatement.

Non-joinder. See Joinder.

Non-judicial day. Day on which process cannot ordinarily issue or be executed or returned, and upon which courts do not usually sit. Vidal v. Backs, 218 Cal. 99, 21 P.2d 952.

Non juridicus /nón jarídkas/. Not judicial; not legal. Dies non juridicus is a day on which legal proceedings cannot be had.

Non-jurors. In English law, persons who refuse to take the oaths, required by law, to support the government. Originally those who refused to swear allegiance to the successors on the throne of the falsely deposed Stuarts.

Non jus ex regula, sed regula ex jure /nón jís eks regy;)l;) sed regy;)l;) eks juriy I/. The law does not arise from the rule (or maxim), but the rule from the law.

Non-joinder. See Non-joiner.

Non-liquefiable /nón léviyabal/. Not subject to be levied upon. Property exempt from seizure, forfeiture or sale in bankruptcy, attachment, garnishment, etc. Non-leviable assets are assets upon which an execution cannot be levied. See also Exemption; Homestead.

Non licet quod dispendio licet /nón lis;)t kwód despéndiyo lisa/. That which may be [done only] at a loss is not allowed [to be done]. The law does not permit or require the doing of an act which will result only in loss. The law forbids such recoveries whose ends are vain, changeable, and unprofitable.

Non liquet /nón likwat/’láykwat /. Lat. It is not clear.

In the Roman courts, when any of the judges, after the hearing of a cause, were not satisfied that the case was made clear enough for them to pronounce a verdict, they were privileged to signify this opinion by casting a ballot inscribed with the letters "N. L.,” the abbreviated form of the phrase “non liquet.”

Nonliquidating distribution. A payment made by a partnership or corporation to the entity's owner when the entity's legal existence does not cease thereafter. Compare Distribution in liquidation.

Non-mailable. A term applied to all letters and parcels which are by law excluded from transportation in the United States mails, whether on account of the size of the package, the nature of its contents, its obscene character, or for other reasons.

Non merchantizanda victualia /nón merchantizánda viktyuwyél(i)ya/. An ancient writ addressed to justices of assize, to inquire whether the magistrates of a town sold victuals in gross or by retail during the time of their being in office, which was contrary to an obsolete statute; and to punish them if they did.

Non-merchantable title. The title to realty need not be bad in fact to render it "non-merchantable", but it is sufficient, if an ordinarily prudent man with knowledge of facts and aware of legal questions involved would not accept it in ordinary course of business. Ghormley v. Kleeden, 155 Kan. 319, 124 P.2d 467, 470. Compare Merchantable title.

Non molestando /nón mówlastándow/. A writ that lay for a person who was molested contrary to the king's protection granted to him.

Non nasci, et natura morti, paria sunt /nón násay et nýetom móray páriya sýnt/. Not to be born, and to be dead-born, are the same.

Non-navigable. At common law, streams or bodies of water not affected by tide were "non-navigable". Lusch er v. Reynolds, 153 Or. 625, 56 P.2d 1158, 1162. Bodies of water other than navigable waters (q.v.).

Non-negotiable. Not negotiable; not capable of passing title or property by indorsement and delivery. Any document of title that is not a negotiable document. An instrument which may not be transferred by indorsement and delivery or by delivery alone, though it may be assigned. The transferee does not become a holder unless it is negotiated. Compare Negotiable.

Non obligat lex nisi promulgata /nón óblagát léks náy-say prómalýgýta/. A law is not obligatory unless it be promulgated.

Non obstante /nón obstánty/. Lat. Notwithstanding.

Words anciently used in public and private instruments, intended to preclude, in advance, any interpretation contrary to certain declared objects or purposes.

A clause frequent in old English statutes and letters patent (so termed from its initial words), importing a license from the crown to do a thing which otherwise a person would be restrained by act of parliament from doing. A power in the crown to dispense with the laws in any particular case. This was abolished by the bill of rights at the Revolution.

Non obstante veredicto /nón obstántiy véhradiktow/. Notwithstanding the verdict. A judgment entered by order of court for the plaintiff (or defendant) although there has been a verdict for the defendant (or plaintiff). Judgment non obstante veredicto in its broadest sense is a judgment rendered in favor of one party notwithstanding the finding of a verdict in favor of the other party. A motion for a directed verdict is a prerequisite to a subsequent grant of judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Fed.R. Civil P. 50.

Judgment non obstante veredicto originally, at common law, was a judgment entered for plaintiff "notwithstanding the verdict" for defendant; which could be done only, after verdict and before judgment, where it appeared that defendant’s plea confessed the cause of action and set up matters in avoidance which, although verified by the verdict, were insufficient to constitute a defense or bar to the action. But either by statutory enactment or because of relaxation of the early common-law rule, the generally prevailing rule now is that either plaintiff or defendant may have a judgment non obstante veredicto in proper cases.

Non officit conatus nisi sequatur effectus /nón ófıssat kənəktəs nəsəy səkwəytər əfəktəs/. An attempt does not harm unless a consequence follow.

Non omittas /nón amitəs/. A clause usually inserted in writs of execution, in England, directing the sheriff "not to omit" to execute the writ by reason of any liberty, because there are many liberties or districts in which the sheriff has no power to execute process unless he has special authority.

Non omne damnum inducit injuriam /nón əmni kwəd ənjərjəm/. It is not every loss that produces an injury.

Non omne quod licet honestum est /nón əmni kwəd ˈhənstəm əst/. It is not everything which is permitted that is honorable.

Non omnium qua e majoribus nostris constituta sunt ratio reddi potest /nón əmnəm kwər ˈej ˈmədərəbəs nəstər ˈkənəstət(y)əkwətə sənt rədəsh(y)əw rədəsh pətəst/. There cannot be given a reason for all the things which have been established by our ancestors.

Nonpayment. The neglect, failure, or refusal of payment of a debt or evidence of debt when due.

Non-performance. Neglect, failure, or refusal to do or perform an act stipulated or contracted to be done. Failure to keep the terms of a contract or covenant, in respect to acts or doings agreed upon. The failure or neglect to render performance called for in a contract, rendering the non-performer liable in damages or subject to a decree or judgment of specific performance.

Non pertinet ad judicem secularem cognoscere de iis quae sunt mere spiritualia annexa /nón pərtənət əd ˈdʒudəkəm ˈsɛkwələrm ˈkeɪgnəsriː di ˈəɪəs kwə ˈsənt ˈmiəri ˈspɪrətələrm ˈkeɪgnəsriː/. It belongs not to the secular judge to take cognizance of things which are merely spiritual.

Non plevin /nón pəlvən/. In old English law, default in not repleving land in due time, when the same was taken by the king upon a default. The consequence thereof (loss of seisin) was abrogated by St. 9 Edw. III, c. 2.

Non ponendis in assisim et juratis /nón pənənˈdɪs ɪn əsiˈsɪz ət ˈdʒuˈrətɪs/. A writ formerly granted for freeing and discharging persons from serving on assizes and juries.

Non possessori incumbit necessitas probandi possessiones ad se pertinere /nón pəwˈdʒəsɔɹɪə inˈkəmbɪt ˈnɛsəstəs ˈprəbdənət poʊˈzɛshəˈwɒnɪəz əd ˈsiɹ pətərˈtɪnəɹə/. A person in possession is not bound to prove that the possessions belong to him.

Non potest adduci exceptio ejus rei cuius petitur dissolutio /nón pəˈtɛst ədˈdjuːs əkˈsɛptɪə ɪˈjuːs rə ˈkjuːs ˈpɪtɪtʊr dɪsˈsʌlʊʃən/ow. An exception to the same thing whose avoidance is sought cannot be made.

Non potest probari quod probatum non relevat /nón pəˈtɛst prəˈbərəi kwəd prəˈbətəm nən rɛˈlɛvət/. That cannot be proved which, if proved, is immaterial.

Non potest quis sine brevi agere /nón pəˈtɛst kwɪs ˈsaɪnə bəˈvi əˈdʒɛrə/. No one can sue without a writ. A fundamental rule of old practice.

Non potest rex gratiam facere cum injuria et damno aliorum /nón pəˈtɛst rəks ˈɡrætʃiəm ˈfəsəriəm ˈfə ɪnˈdʒuəriə ət ˈdæmənəʊ ələrəʊm/. The king cannot confer a favor on one subject which occasions injury and loss to others.

Non potest rex subditum renitentem onerare impositionibus /nón pəˈtɛst rəks ˈsəbdətəm ˈrɛnɪtəntəm ənərərəm ɪmˈpɔzəʃənɨbəs/. The king cannot load a subject with imposition against his consent.

Non potest videri desisse habere qui nunquam habuit /nón pəˈtɛst ˈvɪdəri ˈdɛsɪsəri ˈhæbərə ki ˈnʌŋkəm ˈhæbət/. He cannot be considered as having ceased to have a thing who never had it.

Non prestat impedimentum quod de jure non sortitur effectum /nón prəˈstæt əmˈpiːdəməntəm ˈkwəd diˈjuː ˈnɔr sɔrtəd əfəktəm/. A thing which has no effect in law is not an impediment.

Non procedendo ad assisam rege inconsulto /nón prəˈkriːdəndəʊ əd əˈsaɪzm reˈdʒi ɪnˈkənˈsʌltəʊ/. A writ to put a stop to the trial of a cause appertaining unto one who is in the king's service, etc., until the king's pleasure respecting the same be known.

Non-profit association. A group organized for purposes other than generating profit, such as a charitable, scientific, or literary organization. See also Non-profit corporation.

Non-profit corporation. A corporation no part of the income of which is distributable to its members, directors or officers. Corporation organized for other than profit-making purposes. Corporations may be organized under the Revised Model Non-Profit Corporation Act (1986) "for any lawful activity unless a more limited purpose is set forth in the articles of incorporation". Id. § 3.01(A).

For purposes of federal income taxation, an organization may be exempt as an "exempt organization" if it is organized and operated exclusively for one or more of the following purposes: (a) religious, (b) charitable, (c) scientific, (d) testing for public safety, (e) literary, (f) educational, (g) prevention of cruelty to children or animals, or (h) to foster national or international sports. See I.R.C. § 501(c) for a list of exempt organizations.
Non pros /nón próːs/. Abbreviation of non prossequitur (q.v.).

Non prossequitur /nón prɒsˌkwɛktər/. Lat. He does not follow up, or pursue. If, in the proceedings in an action at law, the plaintiff neglects to take any of those steps which he ought to take within the time prescribed by the practice of the court for that purpose, the defendant may enter judgment of non pros against him, whereby it is adjudged that the plaintiff does not follow up (non prossequitur) his suit as he ought to do, and therefore the defendant ought to have judgment against him. Under current rules practice, such failure would result in a dismissal of the action or in a default judgment for defendant. Fed.R. Civil P. 41, 55.

Non quieta movere /nón kwəˈɪətaʊərə/. Lat. Not to disturb what is settled. A rule expressing the same principle as that of stare decisis (q.v.).

Non quod dictum est, sed quod factum est inspicitur /nón kwɒd dɪktəm əst sed kwɒd fæktəm əst ɪnˈsɪpɪkztər/. Not what is said, but what is done. See also Recourse; Without recourse; With recourse.

Nonrecourse. Status of person who holds an instrument which gives him no legal right against prior endorsers or the drawer to compel payment if the instrument is dishonored. See also Recourse; Without recourse; With recourse.

Nonrecourse debt. Debt secured by the property that it is used to purchase. The purchaser of the property is not personally liable for the debt upon default. Rather, the creditor’s recourse is to repossess the related property. Nonrecourse debt generally does not increase the purchaser’s at-risk amount.

Nonrecourse loan. Type of security loan which bars the lender from action against other assets of the borrower if the security value of the specified collateral for the loan falls below the amount required to repay the loan. It is used by the U.S. in loans to farmers on surplus crops.

Non refer at quae assensum suum prefert verbis, aut rebus ipsis et factis /nón rɪˈfɜːt ən kwɪs sɛnson s(y)ˈwʌm prɪˈfɜːt vɜːbəs ət rɪˈbəs ɪpˈsəs ət fɒktəs/. It matters not whether a man gives his assent by his words or by his acts and deeds.

Non refer quid ex equipollentibus fiat /nón rɪˈfɜːt kwɪd ekˈkwəpəˈlɛntəbəs fɪət/. It matters not which of [two] equivalents happen.

Non refer quid notum sit judici, si notum non sit in forma judicii /nón rɪˈfɜːt kwɪd nɒtəm sɪt ˈdʒudɪsəˌjɪ diː ˈsiː nɒtəm nɒt ʃɪt ɪn ˈfɔrəm ˈdʒudɪsəˌjɪ/. It matters not what is known to a judge, if it be not known in judicial form.

Non refer verbis an factis fit revocatio /nón rɪˈfɜːt vɜːbəs ən fæktəs fɪt rɪˈvɒkəˌkɛʃ(ɪ)yəʊ/ / nón rɪˈfɜːt vɜːbəs ən fæktəs fɪt rɪˈvɒkəˌkɛʃ(ɪ)yəʊ/. It matters not whether a revocation is made by words or deeds.

Non-residence. Residence beyond the limits of the particular jurisdiction.

In ecclesiastical law, the absence of spiritual persons from their benefits.

Non-resident. One who does not reside within jurisdiction in question; not an inhabitant of the state of the forum. Special rules govern service of process on non-residents; e.g. Fed.R. Civil P. 4(e). See Long arm statutes.

For the distinction between "residence" and "domicile," see Domicile.

Non-resident alien. One who is neither a resident nor a citizen of the United States. Citizenship is determined under the federal immigration and naturalization laws (U.S. Code Title 8).

Non-resident decedent. Decedent domiciled in another jurisdiction at the time of his death. Uniform Probate Code, § 1–201(26).

Non-resident motorist statutes. State laws governing the liability and obligations of non-residents who use the state’s highways.

Non residentio pro clericio regis /nón ˈrɛzədənʃ(ə)ˈjʊəʊ prɒ prɔklɪˈʃɔːr rɪˈdʒɪs/. A writ, addressed to a bishop, charging him not to molest a clerk employed in the royal service, by reason of his nonresidence; in which case he is to be discharged.

Non respondebit minor nisi in causa dotis, et hoc pro favore doti /nón rɪˈsɒndɪdɪbɪt mɪnər nɪsɪ ɪn kɔsə dɒtɪs ət hɒk prɔ fəˈvɔːr oʊ ˈdɒtɪ/ /nón rɪˈsɒndɪdɪbɪt mɪnər nɪsɪ ɪn kɔsə dɒtɪ ət hɒk prɔ fəˈvɔːr oʊ ˈdɒtɪ/. A minor shall not answer unless in a case of dower, and this in favor of dower.

Non sane mentis /nón sɛnə ˈmɛntəs/. Lat. Of unsound mind.

Non-sane. As "sane," when applied to the mind, means whole, sound, in a healthful state; "non-sane" means not whole, not sound, not in a healthful state; that is, broken, impaired, shattered, infirm, weak, diseased, unable, either from nature or accident, to perform the rational functions common to man upon the objects presented to it. See also Insanity.

Non sequitur /nón sɛkwɪˈtɜːr/. Lat. It does not follow. E.g., the concepts of foster care and custody in a natural parent are mutually exclusive. The concept of foster care placement of a child with a natural parent is non sequitur. Matter of Lucinda G., 122 Misc.2d 416, 471 N.Y.S.2d 736, 739.

Non solenque abundant vitiare scripturas /nón sɔˈlənkwənt kwɪˈbɔːdənt vɪˈtɪərəˌskaɪpt(y)əˈraʊs/. Superfluities [things which abound] do not usually vitiate writings.

Non solum quid licet, sed quid est convenientis, est considerandum; quia nihil quod est inconvenientis est licitum /nón sɔˈləm kwɪd lɪˈɛt seɪd kwɪd ɛst kənˈviːtʃən(ɪ)ˈzæn, ɛst kənˌsiːdərəˈdænm, kwɪˈɛs nəˈθɪl kwɪd ɛst ɪnˈkənˈviːtʃən(ɪ)ˈzænˌɛst lɪsˈtæm/. Not only what is lawful, but what is proper or convenient, is to be considered; because nothing that is inconvenient is lawful.

Non solvendo pecuniam ad quam clericus multatur pro non-residentialia /nón sɔˈləndəʊ pɛˈkʊniəm æd kwɔːm klɪˈkrɔks mʌltəˈtɔːr prɔ nɔnˌrɛzərˈdænʃ(ə)lə/ /nón sɔˈləndəʊ pɛˈkʊniəm æd kwɔːm klɪˈkrɔks mʌltəˈtɔːr prɔ nɔnˌrɛzərˌdænʃ(ə)lə/. A writ prohibiting an ordinary to take a pecuniary mulct imposed on a clerk of the sovereign for nonresidence.

Non-stock corporation. Species of corporation in which the members hold no shares of stock as in the case of mutual companies and religious and charitable corporations. Ownership is through the membership charter or agreement rather than through the usual issuance of stock.

Non submitit /nón submitit/. Lat. He did not submit. A plea to an action of debt, on a bond to perform an award, to the effect that the defendant did not submit to the arbitration.

Non sui juris /nón syū juris/. Lat. Not his own master. The opposite of sui juris (q.v.). Lacking legal capacity to act for oneself as in the case of a minor or mentally incompetent person.

Nonsuit. A term broadly applied to a variety of terminations of an action which do not adjudicate issues on the merits. McColgan v. Jones, Hubbard & Donnell, 11 Cal.2d 243, 78 P.2d 1010, 1011. Name of a judgment given against the plaintiff when he is unable to prove a case, or when he refuses or neglects to proceed to trial and leaves the issue undetermined. Type of judgment rendered against party in legal proceeding on his inability to maintain his cause in court, or when he is in default in prosecuting his suit or in complying with orders of court. Jaquith v. Revson, 159 Conn. 427, 270 A.2d 559, 561.

A plaintiff suffers a “nonsuit” when a court order finally terminates the cause without prejudice. Gray v. Chrysler Corp., Mo.App., 715 S.W.2d 282, 285.

Action in form of a judgment taken against a plaintiff who has failed to appear to prosecute his action or failed to prove his case. Under civil rules practice, the applicable term is “dismissal”. Fed.R. Civil P. 41.

See also Default-judgment; Directed verdict; Dismissal.

Judgment of nonsuit (i.e. "dismissal") is of two kinds, voluntary and involuntary. When plaintiff abandons his case, and consents that judgment go against him for costs, it is voluntary. Fed.R. Civil P. 41(a). But when he, being called, neglects to appear, or when he has given no evidence on which a jury could find a verdict, or when his case is put out of court by some adverse ruling precluding a recovery, it is involuntary. Rule 41(b).

A peremptory nonsuit is a compulsory or involuntary nonsuit, ordered by the court upon a total failure of the plaintiff to substantiate his claim by evidence.

Non sum informatus /nón sám informáytas/. Lat. I am not informed; I have not been instructed.

Non-summons, wager of law of. In common law pleading, the mode in which a tenant or defendant in a real action pleaded, when the summons which followed the original was not served within the proper time.

Non sunt longa ubi nihil est quod demere possis /nón sánt longā yúwbay náy(h)al ést kwód démáy póssis/. There is no proximity where there is nothing that can be omitted.

Non-support. The failure or neglect unreasonably to support those to whom an obligation of support is due; e.g. duty of parents to support children; duty to support spouse. Such failure to support is a criminal offense in most states. See e.g. Model Penal Code § 230.5.

Nonsupport of a child is a parent's failure, neglect or refusal without lawful excuse to provide for the support and maintenance of his or her child in necessitous circumstances. Nonsupport of a spouse is an individual's failure without just cause to provide for the support of his or her spouse in necessitous circumstances.

See also Necessitous circumstances; Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act; Support.

Non tenent insimul /nón ténánt insámál/. Lat. In old pleading, a plea to an action in partition, by which the defendant denied that he and the plaintiff were joint tenants of the estate in question.

Non tenuit /nón ténýwat/. Lat. He did not hold. A plea in bar in replevin, by which the plaintiff alleges that he did not hold in manner and form as averred, being given in answer to an avowry for rent in arrear.

Non-tenure. A common law plea in a real action, by which the defendant asserts, either as to the whole or as to some part of the land mentioned in the plaintiff's declaration, that he does not hold it.

Non-term. The vacation between two terms of a court.

Non-terminus /nón tármanas/. The vacation between term and term, formerly called the time of days of the king's peace.

Non-user. Neglect to use. Neglect to use a franchise; neglect to exercise an office. Neglect or omission to use an easement or other right. A right acquired by use may be lost by non-user.

Non usurpavit /nón yúwaspéytv/at/. Lat. He has not usurped. A form of traverse, in an action or proceeding against one alleged to have usurped an office or franchise, denying the usurpation charged.

Not guilty. Plea entered by the accused to criminal charge. If the defendant refuses to plead, the court will enter a plea of not guilty. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 11. Also, the form of the verdict in criminal cases where the jury acquits the defendant; i.e. finds him "not guilty". For defense of not guilty by reason of insanity, see Insanity.

In common law pleadings, a plea of the general issue in the actions of trespass and case.

Not guilty by statute. In old English practice, a plea of the general issue by a defendant in a civil action, when he intends to give special matter in evidence by virtue of some act or acts of parliament, in which case he must add the reference to such act or acts, and state whether such acts are public or otherwise. But, if a defendant so plead, he will not be allowed to plead any other defense, without the leave of the court or a judge.

Notus /nəˈwəʊs/. Lat. In Roman law, a natural child or a person of spurious birth.

Notice. Information; the result of observation, whether by the senses or the mind; knowledge of the existence of a fact or state of affairs; the means of knowledge. Intelligence by whatever means communicated. Koehn v. Central Nat. Ins. Co. of Omaha, Neb., 187 Kan. 192, 354 P.2d 352, 358. Any fact which would put an ordinarily prudent person on inquiry. State ex rel. Gleason v. Rickhoff, Mo.App., 541 S.W.2d 47, 50. That which imparts information to one to be notified. Greene v. Ives, 25 Conn.Sup. 356, 204 A.2d 412, 415.

Notice in its legal sense is information concerning a fact, actually communicated to a person by an authorized person, or actually derived by him from a proper source, and is regarded in law as "actual" when the person sought to be affected by it knows thereby of the existence of the particular fact in question. United States v. Tuteur, C.A.III., 215 F.2d 415. It is knowledge of facts which would naturally lead an honest and prudent person to make inquiry, and does not necessarily mean knowledge of all the facts. Wayne Bldg. & Loan Co. of Wooster v. Yarborough, 11 Ohio St.2d 195, 228 N.E.2d 841, 847, 40 O.O.2d 182. In another sense, "notice" means information, an advice, or written warning, in more or less formal shape, intended to apprise a person of some proceeding in which his interests are involved, or informing him of some fact which it is his right to know and the duty of the notifying party to communicate.

Fed.R. Civil P. 5(a) requires that every written notice be served upon each of the parties.

A person has notice of a fact if he knows the fact, has reason to know it, should know it, or has been given notification of it. Restatement, Second, Agency § 9.

Notice may be either (1) statutory, i.e., made so by legislative enactment; (2) actual, which brings the knowledge of a fact directly home to the party; or (3) constructive. Constructive notice may be subdivided into: (a) Where there exists actual notice of matter, to which equity has added constructive notice of facts, which an inquiry after such matter would have elicited; and (b) where there has been a designed abstinence from inquiry for the very purpose of escaping notice.

See also Adequate notice; Charged; Due notice; Immediate notice; Imputed notice; Judicial notice; Knowledge; Legal notice; Publication; Reasonable notice.

Actual notice. Actual notice has been defined as notice expressly and actually given, and brought home to the party directly. The term "actual notice," however, is generally given a wider meaning as embracing two classes, express and implied; the former includes all knowledge of a degree above that which depends upon collateral inference, or which imposes upon the party the further duty of inquiry; the latter imputes knowledge to the party because he is shown to be conscious of having the means of knowledge. In this sense actual notice is such notice as is positively proved to have been given to a party directly and personally, or such as he is presumed to have received personally because the evidence within his knowledge was sufficient to put him upon inquiry.

Averment of notice. The statement in a pleading that notice has been given.

Commercial law. A person has "notice" of a fact when: (a) he has actual knowledge of it; or (b) he has received a notice or notification of it; or (c) from all the facts and circumstances known to him at the time in question he has reason to know that it exists. A person "knows" or has "knowledge" of a fact when he has actual knowledge of it. "Discover" or "learn" or a word or phrase of similar import refers to knowledge rather than to reason to know. The time and circumstances under which a notice or notification may cease to be effective are not determined by the U.C.C. U.C.C. § 1-201(25).

A person "notifies" or "gives" a notice or notification to another by taking such steps as may be reasonably required to inform the other in ordinary course whether or not such other actually comes to know of it. A person "receives" a notice or notification when: (a) it is duly delivered at the place of business through which the contract was made or at any other place held out by him as the place for receipt of such communications. U.C.C. § 1-201(26).

Under the Uniform Commercial Code, the law on "notice," actual or inferable, is precisely the same whether the instrument is issued to a holder or negotiated to a holder. Eldon's Super Fresh Stores, Inc. v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 296 Minn. 130, 207 N.W.2d 282, 287.

Constructive notice. Constructive notice is information or knowledge of a fact imputed by law to a person (although he may not actually have it), because he could have discovered the fact by proper diligence, and his situation was such as to cast upon him the duty of inquiring into it. Every person who has actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to a particular fact, has constructive notice of the fact itself in all cases in which, by prosecuting such inquiry, he might have learned such fact.

Express notice. Express notice embraces not only knowledge, but also that which is communicated by direct information, either written or oral, from those who are cognizant of the fact communicated. See also Actual notice, above.

Implied notice. Implied notice is one of the varieties of actual notice (not constructive) and is distinguished from "express" actual notice. It is notice inferred or imputed to a party by reason of his knowledge of facts or circumstances collateral to the main fact, of such a character as to put him upon inquiry, and which, if the inquiry were followed up with due diligence, would lead him definitely to the knowledge of the main fact. "Implied notice" is a presumption of fact, relating to what one can learn by reasonable inquiry, and arises from actual notice of circumstances, and not from constructive notice. Or as otherwise defined, implied notice may be said to exist where the fact in question lies open to the knowledge of the party, so that the exercise of reasonable observation and watchfulness would not fail to apprise him of it, although no one has told him of it in so many words.

Personal notice. Communication of notice orally or in writing (according to the circumstances) directly to the person affected or to be charged, as distinguished from constructive or implied notice, and also from notice imputed to him because given to his agent or representative. See Actual notice: Express notice, above.

Public notice. Notice given to the public generally, or to the entire community, or to all whom it may concern. Such must commonly be published in a newspaper of general circulation. See also Publication.

Reasonable notice. Such notice or information of a fact as may fairly and properly be expected or required in the particular circumstances.

Notice of action. See Lis pendens.

Notice of appearance. See Appearance.

Notice of deficiency. See Ninety (90) day letter.

Notice of dishonor. Notice of dishonor may be given to any person who may be liable on the instrument by or on behalf of the holder or any party who has himself received notice, or any other party who can be compelled to pay the instrument. In addition an agent or bank in whose hands the instrument is dishonored may give notice to his principal or customer or to another agent or bank from which the instrument was received. U.C.C. § 3-508(1). See also Dishonor.

Notice of issue. See Notice of trial.

Notice of lis pendens /nówtes av lis péndanz/. See Lis pendens.

Notice of motion. A notice in writing, entitled in a cause, stating that on a certain day designated, a motion will be made to the court for the purpose or object stated. Such notice is required to be served upon all parties. Fed.R.Civ.P. 5(a).

Notice of orders or judgments. Immediately upon the entry of an order or judgment the clerk shall serve notice of the entry by mail upon each party who is not in default for failure to appear, and shall make a note in the docket of the mailing. Fed.R.Civ.P. 77(d). See also Fed.R.Crim.P. 49(c).

Notice of pendency. See Lis pendens.

Notice of protest. See Protest.

Notice of tax deficiency. See Ninety (90) day letter.

Notice of trial. A notice given by one of the parties in an action to the other, after an issue has been reached, that he intends to bring the cause forward for trial at the next term of the court.
Notice race statutes. In some jurisdictions, in recording of documents of title to real estate, the first grantee or mortgagee to record in the chain of title without actual notice of a prior unrecorded deed or mortgage prevails. Also known as Race-Notice Statute. See also Notice recording statutes; Recording acts.

Notice recording statutes. An unrecorded conveyance or other instrument is invalid as against a subsequent bona fide purchaser (creditor or mortgagee if the statute so provides) for value and without notice. Under this type of statute the subsequent bona fide purchaser prevails over the prior interest whether the subsequent purchaser records or not. Insofar as the subsequent purchaser is concerned, there is no premium on his race to the recorder's office. His priority is determined upon his status at the time he acquires his deed or mortgage. See also Recording acts.

Notice to appear. Shorthand expression for the form of summons or order of notice in which the defendant is ordered to appear and show cause why judgment should not be entered against him. Fed.R. Civil P. 4(b). See also Show cause order; Summons.

Notice to creditors. Formal notification in bankruptcy proceeding to creditors of the bankrupt that a meeting will be held, or that proof of claims must be filed on or before a certain date, or that an order for relief has been granted. See Bankruptcy Code, § 342.

Notice to plead. A notice which, in the practice of the federal courts, and most state courts, is prerequisite to the taking judgment by default. It proceeds from the plaintiff, and warns the defendant that he must plead to the declaration or complaint within a prescribed time. Such notice is required in the summons. Fed.R. Civil P. 4(b).

Notice to produce. Document by which party to civil or criminal action requests opposing party to submit specified papers, evidence, etc. needed for preparation of case and use at trial. See e.g. Fed.R.Civ. P. 30(b); Fed.R.Crim.P. 15(a), 26.2. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3500. See Discovery; Inspection of documents.

Notice to quit. A written notice given by a landlord to his tenant, stating that the former desires to repossess himself of the demised premises, and that the latter is required to quit and remove from the same at a time designated, either at the expiration of the term, if the tenant is in under a lease, or immediately, if the tenancy is at will or by sufferance. The term is also sometimes applied to a written notice given by the tenant to the landlord, to the effect that he intends to quit the demised premises and deliver possession of the same on a day named.

Notification. See Notice.

Notify. To give notice to; to inform by words or writing, in person or by message, or by any signs which are understood; to make known. To "notify" one of a fact is to make it known to him; to inform him by notice. Fast v. Scruggs, 164 Okl. 196, 23 P.2d 383. See Notice.

Notio /nówsh(i)yow/ Lat. In the civil law, the power of hearing and trying a matter of fact; the power or authority of a judex; the power of hearing cases and of pronouncing sentence, without any degree of jurisdiction.

Notitia /nówtish(i)yə/ Lat. Knowledge; information; intelligence; notice.

Notitia dicta r a noscendo; et notitia non debet claudi­care /nówtish(i)yə disar ēy nōsēndō ēt nōw­tish(i)yə nōn débat klōdskēriy/. Notice is named from a knowledge being had; and notice ought not to halt (i.e., be imperfect).

Not later than. "Within" or "not beyond" time specified.

Not less than. The words "not less than" signify in the smallest or lowest degree, at the lowest estimate; at least.

Notoriety /nówtārāyadiy/. The state of being notorious or universally well known.

Notorious /nówtōrīyəs/. Generally known and talked of; well or widely known; forming a part of common knowledge, or universally recognized. Mathis v. State, 60 Okl.Cr. 58, 61 P.2d 261, 267. Open; generally or commonly known and spoken of.

Notorious cohabitation. The statutory offense in some jurisdictions committed by two persons who live together openly while not being married to each other. Such laws are seldom enforced.

Notorious insolvency. A condition of insolvency which is generally known throughout the community or known to the general class of persons with whom the insolvent has business relations.

Notorious possession. As a requisite of adverse possession, such possession that is so conspicuous that it is generally known and talked of by the public or the people in the neighborhood. Possession or character of holding in its nature having such elements of notoriety that the owner may be presumed to have notice of it and of its extent. See also Adverse possession.

Not possessed. A special traverse used in an action of trover, alleging that defendant was not possessed, at the time of action brought, of the chattels alleged to have been converted by him.

Not satisfied. A return sometimes made by sheriffs or constables to a writ of execution; but it is not a technical formula, and has been criticized by the courts as ambiguous and insufficient. See Nulla bona.

Not to be performed within one year. The clause "not to be performed within one year" includes any agreement which by a reasonable interpretation in view of all the circumstances does not admit of its performance, according to its language and intention, within one year from the time of its making.

N.O.V. See Non obstante veredicto.

Nova constitutio futuris formam imponere debet non preteritis /nówva kónstat(y)‘uwš(h)i(y)ov fyuwytyūras fôrmam impôwnariy débat nôn prærêtras/. A new state of the law ought to affect the future, not the past.
NOVA CUSTUMA

Nova custuma /nówvə kást(y)əmə/. The name of an imposition or duty. See Antiqua custuma.

Novē narrationes /nówvviə nərəshiyōwniyə/. New counts. The collection called “Novē Narrationes” contains pleadings in actions during the reign of Edward III. It consists principally of declarations, as the title imports; but there are sometimes pleas and subsequent pleadings. The Articuli ad Novē Narrationes is usually subjoined to this little book, and is a small treatise on the method of pleading. It first treats of actions and courts, and then goes through each particular writ, and the declaration upon it, accompanied with directions, and illustrated by precedents.

Nova statuta /nówvə stət(y)əwta/. New statutes. An appellation sometimes given to the statutes which have been passed since the beginning of the reign of Edward III.

Novation. A type of substituted contract that has the effect of adding a party, either as obligor or obligee, who was not a party to the original duty. Substitution of a new contract, debt, or obligation for an existing one, between the same or different parties. The substitution by mutual agreement of one debtor for another or of one creditor for another, whereby the old debt is extinguished. A novation substitutes a new party and discharges one of the original parties to a contract by agreement of all parties. See Restatement of Contracts, Second, § 280.

The requisites of a novation are a previous valid obligation, an agreement of all the parties to a new contract, the extinguishment of the old obligation, and the validity of the new one. Blyther v. Pentagon Federal Credit Union, D.C.Mun.App., 182 A.2d 892, 894.

In the civil law, there are three kinds of novation: where the debtor and creditor remain the same, but a new contract takes the place of the old one; where the debt remains the same, but a new debtor is substituted; where the debt and creditor remain, but a new creditor is substituted. Wheeler v. Wardell, 173 Va. 168, 3 S.E.2d 377, 380.

Novatio non prassumitur /nówvətɪə prəsəmtʊtə/. Novation is not presumed.

Novel assignment. See New assignment.

Novel disseisin. See Assize or assise (Assize of novel disseisin).

Novelle (or novelle constitutiones) /nówvəli (kənstə-t(y)əwshiyōwniyəz)/. New constitutions; generally translated in English, "Novels." The Latin name of those constitutions which were issued by Justinian after the publication of his Code; most of them being originally written in Greek. After his death, a collection of 168 Novels was made, 154 of which had been issued by Justinian, and the rest by his successors. These were afterwards included in the Corpus Juris Civilis (q.v.), and now constitute one of its four principal divisions.

Novelle leonis /nówvəliə liwəwnəs/. The ordinances of the Emperor Leo, which were made from the year 887 till the year 893, are so called. These Novels changed many rules of the Justinian law. This collection contains 113 Novels, written originally in Greek, and afterwards, in 1560, translated into Latin by Agilaeus.

Novels /nóvəlz/. The title given to the New Constitutions (Novellæ Constitutiones) of Justinian and his successors, now forming a part of the Corpus Juris Civilis. See Novellæ.

Novelty. In order that there may be "novelty" so as to sustain a patent, the thing must not have been known to any one before; mere novelty of form being insufficient. Seaver v. Wm. Filene's Sons Co., D.C.Mass., 37 F.Supp. 762, 765. An invention or discovery is new or possesses requisite element of "novelty" if it involves the presence of some element, or the new position of an old element in combination, different from anything found in any prior structure. King–Seeley Thermos Co. v. Refrigerated Dispensers, Inc., C.A.Okl., 354 F.2d 533, 537. Novelty, in respect to design terminology, is present when the average observer takes the new design for a different and not just a modified already existing design. Schnadig Corp. v. Gaines Mfg. Co., Inc., C.A.Tenn., 494 F.2d 383, 389. An objection to a patent or claim for a patent on the ground that the invention is not new or original is called an objection "for want of novelty."

Noverca /nəvərka/. Lat. In the civil law, a stepmother.

Noverint universi per præsentes /nówvərənt yūwən-vərəs pər prəzəntiːz/. Know all men by these presents. Formal words used at the commencement of deeds of release in the Latin forms.

Novigild /nówvəgild/. In Saxon law, a pecuniary satisfaction for an injury, amounting to nine times the value of the thing for which it was paid.

Novi operis nunciatio /nówvɪ ˈəpərɪs ˈnʌnsɪˈkeɪʃ(ə)ʊ/. Lat. Denunciation of, or protest against, a new work. This was a species of remedy in the civil law, available to a person who thought his rights or his property were threatened with injury by the act of his neighbor in erecting or demolishing any structure, which was called a "new work." In such case, he might go upon the ground, while the work was in progress, and publicly protest against or forbid its completion, in the presence of the workmen or of the owner or his representative.

Noviter perversa, or noviter ad notitiam perversa /nówvɪtər (əd nəʊtɪˈtʃiəm ɪəm) pərvəntə/. In ecclesiastical procedure, facts "newly come" to the knowledge of a party to a cause. Leave to plead facts noviter perversa is generally given, in a proper case, even after the pleadings are closed.

Novum judicium non dat novum jus, sed declarat antiquum; quia judicium est juris dictum et per judicium jus est noviter revelatum quod diu fuit velatum /nówvəm dʒʊdɪˈʃiəm nɒn ˈdæt ˈnɒvʊm dʒʊs, ˈsɛd dəklɪrəst əntəˈækwəm; kwəj ˈdʒʊdɪʃiəm ɪəm ˈɛst ˈʃɜːrəs dɪktəm ət pər ˈdʒʊdɪʃiə(ɨ)əm ˈjɛs ˈɛst ˈnɒvʊvətər ɾɛˈvlɛlətəm kwɔd ˈdæjuw f(ɨ)ˈwɔt ˈvælətəmt/ . A new adjudication does not make a new law, but declares the old; because adjudication is the utterance of the law, and by adjudica-ation the law is newly revealed which was for a long time hidden.

Novus homo /nóvwos hówmow/. Lat. A new man. This term is applied to a man who has been pardoned of a crime, and so made, as it were, a “new man.”

Now. At this time, or at the present moment; or at a time contemporaneous with something done. At the present time.

"Now" as used in a statute ordinarily refers to the date of its taking effect, but the word is sometimes used, not with reference to the moment of speaking but to a time contemporaneous with something done, and may mean at the time spoken of or referred to as well as at the time of speaking.

Word "now" used in will normally refers to time of testator’s death; but, in light of context, may apply to date of will.

N.O.W. account. Negotiable Order of Withdrawal account. Form of interest bearing checking account.

Noxa /nóksa/. Lat. In the civil law, any damage or injury done to persons or property by an unlawful act committed by a man’s slave or animal. An action for damages lay against the master or owner, who, however, might escape further responsibility by delivering up the offending agent to the party injured. "Noxa" was also used as the designation of the offense committed, and of its punishment, and sometimes of the slave or animal doing the damage.

Noxalis actio /nokséylas áksk(i)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, an action which lay against the master of a slave, for some offense (as theft or robbery) committed or damage done by the slave, which was called “noxa.” Usually translated "noxious action."

Noxia /nóks(i)yə/. Lat. In the civil law, an offense committed or damage done by a slave.

Noxious. Hurtful; offensive; offensive to the smell. The word “noxious” includes the complex idea both of insalubrity and offensiveness. That which causes or tends to cause injury, especially to health or morals.

N.P. An abbreviation for "notary public.”

N.R. An abbreviation for "New Reports;" also for "not reported," and for "nonresident."

N.S. An abbreviation for "New Series;” also for "New Style."

NSF Check. Banking term meaning that there are "not sufficient funds" to cover check drawn on account. A check that is dishonored on presentment for payment because the drawer does not have sufficient funds in his or her account to cover its payment. See also Overdraft.

N.T.S.B. National Transportation Safety Board.

Nubilis /n(y)úwbalas/. Lat. In the civil law, marriageable; one who is of a proper age to be married.

Nuda pactio obligationem non parit /n(y)úwða pēksh(i)yow oblágéyshiyónam nôn párat/. A naked agreement [i.e., without consideration] does not beget an obligation.

Nuda patientia /n(y)úwða pëshiyéns(i)yow/. Lat. Mere sufferance.

Nuda possessio /n(y)úwða pázésh(i)yow/. Lat. Bare or mere possession.

Nuda ratio et nuda pactio non ligant aliquem debitorum /n(y)úwða rásh(i)yow ét n(y)úwða pëksh(i)yow nôn ligant álkowán débótaúm/. A naked reason and naked promise do not bind any debtor.

Nude. Naked. This word is applied metaphorically to a variety of subjects to indicate that they are lacking in some essential legal requisite.

Nude contract. One made without any consideration; upon which no action will lie, in conformity with the maxim "ex nudo pacto non oritur actio.” 2 Bl.Comm. 445.

Nude matter. A bare allegation of a thing done, unsupported by evidence.

Nude pact. One without consideration; an executory contract without a consideration; a naked promise.

Nudum pactum /n(y)úwðam pëktam/. A voluntary promise, without any other consideration than mere goodwill, or natural affection.

A naked pact; a bare agreement; a promise or undertaking made without any consideration for it.

Roman law. Informal agreements not coming within any of the privileged classes. They could not be sued on. The term was sometimes used with a special and rather different meaning to express the rule that a contract without delivery will not pass property.

Nudum pactum est ubi nulla subest causa prater conventionem; sed ubi subest causa, fit obligatio, et parit actionem /n(y)úwðam pëktam ést yúwby nálo sëbést kózä príytor kanvénshiyónam, sëd yúwby sëbést kózä fit oblágéyshiy(i)yow ét përat ákskíshiyónam/. A naked contract is where there is no consideration except the agreement; but, where there is a consideration, it becomes an obligation and gives a right of action.

Nudum pactum ex quo non oritur actio /n(y)úwðam pëktam éks kwów nôn órår ákskísh(i)yow/. Nudum pactum is that upon which no action arises.

Nugatory /n(y)úwgtiar(i)y/. Futile; ineffectual; invalid; destitute of constraining force or vitality. A legislative act may be “nugatory" because unconstitutional. Averv & Co. v. Sorrell, 157 Ga. 476, 121 S.E. 828, 829.

Nuisance. Nuisance is that activity which arises from unreasonable, unwarranted or unlawful use by a person of his own property, working obstruction or injury to right of another, or to the public, and producing such material annoyance, inconvenience and discomfort that law will presume resulting damage. State ex rel. Herman v. Cardon, 23 Ariz.App. 78, 530 P.2d 1115, 1118. That which annoys and disturbs one in possession of his property, rendering its ordinary use or occupation physically uncomfortable to him; e.g smoke, odors, noise, or nuisance. Patton v. Westwood Country Club Co., 18 Ohio App.2d 137, 247 N.E.2d 761, 763, 47 O.O.2d 247. The term is incapable of exhaustive definition which will fit all cases, as it is very comprehensive and includes everything that endangers life or health, gives offense to senses, violates laws of decency, or obstructs reasonable and comfortable use of property. U.S. v. County Board of Arlington County, D.C.Va., 487 F.Supp. 137, 143. An offensive, annoying, unpleasant, or obnoxious thing or practice; a cause or source of annoyance, especially a continuing or repeated invasion or disturbance of another's right, or anything that works a hurt, inconvenience or damage. Renken v. Harvey Aluminum (Inc.), D.C. Or., 226 F.Supp. 169, 175.

Nuisances are commonly classed as public, private, and mixed. A public nuisance is one which affects an indefinite number of persons, or all the residents of a particular locality, or all people coming within the extent of its range or operation, although the extent of the annoyance or damage inflicted upon individuals may be unequal. Maintaining a public nuisance is by act, or by failure to perform a legal duty, intentionally causing or permitting a condition to exist which injures or endangers the public health, safety or welfare. An invasion of a person's interest in the private use and enjoyment of land by any type of liability-forming conduct is termed a private nuisance. It is a tort against a private person, and actionable by him as such. As distinguished from public nuisance, a private nuisance includes any wrongful act which destroys or deteriorates the property of an individual or of a few persons or interferes with their lawful use or enjoyment thereof, or any act which unlawfully hinders them in the enjoyment of a common or public right and causes them a special injury different from that sustained by the general public. Therefore, although the ground of distinction between public and private nuisances is still the injury to the community at large or, on the other hand, to a single individual, it is evident that the same thing or act may constitute a public nuisance and at the same time a private nuisance. A mixed nuisance is of the kind last described; that is, it is one which is both public and private in its effects—public because it injures many persons or all the community, and private in that it also produces special injuries to private rights. Kelley v. New York, 6 Misc. 516, 27 N.Y.S. 164.

See also Anticipatory nuisance; Attractive nuisance doctrine; Common nuisance; Legalized nuisance; Offensive; Private nuisance; Public nuisance.

Abatement of a nuisance. The removal, stoppage, proscription, or destruction of that which causes a nuisance, whether by breaking or pulling it down, or otherwise removing, destroying, or effacing it. See also Abatable nuisance.

Actionable nuisance. See Actionable.

Assize of nuisance. In old English practice, this was a judicial writ directed to the sheriff of the county in which a nuisance existed, in which it was stated that the party injured complained of some particular fact done ad nocamentum liberi tenementi sui (to the nuisance of his freehold), and commanding the sheriff to summon an assize (that is, a jury) to view the premises, and have them at the next commission of assizes, that justice might be done, etc. 3 Bl.Comm. 221.

Common nuisance. One which affects the public in general, and not merely some particular person; a public nuisance.

Continuing nuisance. An uninterrupted or periodically recurring nuisance; not necessarily a constant or unceasing injury, but a nuisance which occurs so often and is so necessarily an incident of the use of property complained of that it can fairly be said to be continuous.

Maintaining a nuisance. To "maintain" a nuisance means something more than having knowledge of its existence; it means, in addition, preserving and continuing its existence either by some positive act or by acquiescence. People v. Campbell, 45 Misc.2d 201, 256 N.Y. S.2d 467.

Permanent nuisance. A nuisance of such a character that its continuance is necessarily an injury which will continue without change. One that cannot be readily abated at small expense.

Qualified nuisance. As distinguished from an "absolute nuisance," may consist of anything lawfully done or permitted to be done, so as to create a potential and reasonable risk of damage, which in due course results in injury to another. Wayman v. Board of Ed. of Akron City School Dist., 6 Ohio App.2d 94, 216 N.E.2d 637, 638. Compare, Absolute nuisance, above.

Temporary nuisance. A nuisance which can be corrected by the expenditure of labor or money. Pate v. City of Martin, Tenn., 614 S.W.2d 46, 48.

Nuisance at law. See Nuisance per se.

Nuisance in fact. Acts, occupations or structures which are not nuisances per se but may become nuisances by reason of the circumstances of the location and surroundings or manner in which it is performed or operated. Robichaux v. Happunbauer, 258 La. 139, 245 So.2d 385, 389.

Nuisance per accidens /π(γ)ιωςας παρ [έκσαδες]/. See Nuisance in fact.

Nuisance per se /π(γ)ιωςας παρ [ςι]/. An act, occupation, or structure which is a nuisance at all times and under all circumstances, regardless of location or surroundings, Martin by Martin v. State, 129 Mich.App. 100, 341 N.W.2d 239, 243; as, things prejudicial to public morals or dangerous to life or injurious to public rights; distinguished from things declared to be nuisances by statute, and also from things which constitute nuisances only when considered with reference to their particular location or other individual circumstances. The difference between a "nuisance per se" and a "nuisance per accidens" sance per accidens" is that in the former, injury in some form is certain to be inflicted, while in the latter, the injury is uncertain or contingent until it actually occurs. State ex rel. Cunningham v. Feezell, 218 Tenn. 17, 400 S.W.2d 716, 719.

Nul. No; none. A law French negative particle commencing many phrases.

Nul agard /nål agård/. No award. The name of a plea in an action on an arbitration bond, by which the defendant traverses the making of any legal award.

Nul charter, nul vente, ne nul done vault perpetualment, si le donor n'est seise al temps de contracts de deux droits, sc. del droit de possession et del droit de properite. No grant, no sale, no gift, is valid forever unless the donor, at the time of the contract, is seised of two rights, namely, the right of possession, and the right of property.

Nul disseisin /nål desîyzan/. In pleading, means no disseisin. A plea of the general issue in a real action, by which the defendant denies that there was any disseisin.

Nul and void. Naught; of no validity or effect. Usually coupled with the word "void;" as "null and void." The words "null and void," when used in a contract or statute are often construed as meaning "voidable." Burns Mortg. Co. v. Schwartz, C.C.A.N.J., 72 F.2d 991, 992. "Null and void" means that which binds no one or is incapable of giving rise to any rights or obligations under any circumstances, or that which is of no effect. Zogby v. State, 53 Misc.2d 740, 279 N.Y.S.2d 665, 668. See also Void; Voidable.

Nulla bona /nål bönwa/. Lat. No goods. The name of the return made by the sheriff to a writ of execution, which the defendant denies that there was any disseisin.

Nulla curia quæ recordum non habet potest imponere finem neque aliquem mandare carceri; quia ista spectant tantummodo ad curiās de recordo /nål kyúriy kywi rykördnam nóñ hēybat pōw tást impōwnari fāynam nēkwī ālakwam mēndēriy karsīray, kwaśa īsta spēktaŋ tēntamōวด dē kyūriyas dī rykördow/. No court which has not a record can impose a fine or commit any person to prison; because those powers belong only to courts of record.

Nulla empicio sine pretio esse potest /nål empiç(ī)yow sāniy prēsh(i)yow ēsīy pōw tást/. There can be no sale without a price.

Nulla impossibilita aut in honesta sunt presumenda; vera autem et honesta et possibilī /nål īmpōssibīl(i)yow ŏt in(h)onēsta sānt priyz(i)yomēnda, vēra ōtam ēt (h)onēsta ēt pōssibīl(i)yos/. No things that are impossible or dishonorable are to be presumed; but things that are true and honorable and possible.

Nulla pactione effici potest ut dolus præstetur /nål pākshiyōññi ēfāsas pōw tást ēt dōwlas prastīytar/. By no agreement can it be effected that a fraud shall be practiced. Fraud will not be upheld, though it may seem to be authorized by express agreement.

Nulla virtus, nulla scientia, locum suum et dignitatem conservare potest sine modestia /nål vyrtyas, nāla sayenśh(i)yas, lōwkam syūwam ēt dignāteytam kōnsarvēry pōw tást sānyi madēsti(i)yas/. Without modesty, no virtue, no knowledge, can preserve its place and dignity.

Nulle règle sans faute /nyûl réyglas sôn fōwt/. There is no rule without a fault.

Nulle terre sans seigneur /nyûl têr sôn sēnyûrs/. No land without a lord. A maxim of feudal law.

Nulli enim res sua servit jure servitutis /nålāy īynam rīyς s(y)wā sārvāt jūriy sārvat(y)wātς/. No one can have a servitude over his own property.

Nullification. The state or condition of being void; without legal effect or status. Also, the act which produces such effect. See Void.

Nullity. Nothing; no proceeding; an act or proceeding in a cause which the opposite party may treat as though it had not taken place, or which has absolutely no legal force or effect.

Nullity of marriage. The entire invalidity of a supposed, pretended, or attempted marriage, by reason of relationship or incapacity of the parties or other diriment impediments. An action seeking a decree declaring such an assumed marriage to be null and void is called a suit of "nullity of marriage." It differs from an action for divorce, because the latter supposes the existence of a valid and lawful marriage. See Annulment.

Nullius filius /nålāyas fil(i)yos/. Lat. The son of nobody; a bastard. A bastard is considered nullius filius as far as regards his right to inherit. But the rule of nullius filius does not apply in other respects, and has been changed by statute in most states so as to make him the child of his mother, in respect of inheritance. State v. Chavez, 42 N.M. 569, 82 P.2d 900, 902.

Nullius hominis auctoritas apud nos valere debet, ut meliora non sequeremur si quis attulerit /nålāyas hōmnas oktrōtās ēpād nówə valiriy débət, ēt miyliyōɾo non sekswarīyrm sāy kwīs ātäləɾat/. The authority of no man ought to prevail with us, so far as to prevent our following better [opinions] if any one should present them.

Nullius in bonis /nålāyas in bōwnas/. Lat. Among the property of no person.

Nullius juris /nålāyas jūɾas/. Lat. In old English law, of no legal force.

Nulli vendemus, nulli negabimus, aut differemus rectum vel justitiam /nålāy vendǐyaməs, nåləy nagēyəbaməs, ot difäryaməs rēktəm vēl jastǐʃ(i)yəm/. We neither sell nor deny, nor delay, to any person, equity or justice.
Nullus quidem est quod possit episcopo demandare inquisitionem faciendam /nālās ēliyis kwēm réks pōst apīskaw diymandēriy inkwazihiyōwnam fēshiyēndam/. No other than the king can command the bishop to make an inquisition.

Nullus commodum capere potest de inuria sua propria /nālās kōmādām kāpēryi pōwtsat diy anjūriyā sīyūwā prōwprīyā/. No one can obtain an advantage by his own wrong. De Zottell v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 60 S.D. 532, 245 N.W. 58, 59.

Nullus debet agere de dolo, ubi alia actio subest /nālās dēbād ājariy diy dōlōw, yūwbyā ēliyā ākũh(i)yōw sōšběs/. Where another form of action is given, no one ought to sue in the action de dolo.

Nullus dicitur accessorius post feloniam, sed ille qui novit principalem feloniam fecisse, et illum receptavit et confortavit /nālās disťar ēksāsiyōsīy pōwst fālōwniyam, sēd iī kwāy nōwst prinsēpēyālīm fālōnīyam fāshiyēndam/. No one is called an “accessory” after the fact but who he knew the principal to have committed a felony, and received and comforted him.

Nullus dicitur felo principalis nisi actor, aut qui prēsens est, abettans aut auxilians ad feloniam faciendam /nālās disťar fīlōw prinsēpēyālīm nāsas kāktor ŏt kwāy ēkũyany ęst, ēbētān ŏt āglī(i)yany ăd fālōnīyam fāshiyēndam/. No one is considered to act with guile who uses his own right.

Nullus idoneus testis in re sua intelligitur /nālās sōdônwiyas tēstas in riy sīyūwō intalījâtâ/. No person is understood to be a competent witness in his own cause.

Nullus jus alienum forisfacere potest /nālās jās ēkũyīyam rōsafāsəsiri yōwprōtst/. No man can forfeit another’s right.

Nullus recedat e curia cancellaria sine remedio /nālās rēsīyädät iy kūyũyə kāmsẽlēryə sān̓iyn ramẽydi yōw/. No person should depart from the court of chancery without a remedy. No one is considered to act with guile who uses his own right.

Nullus simile est idem nisi quatuor pedibus currit /nālās sīmâlîy ēst ţϕōtuwār pēdās kâhrət/. No like is exactly identical unless it runs on all fours.

Nullus videtur dolo facere qui suo jure utitur /nālās vādītər dōwlo fāsəsir kwāy sīyūwō jūriy yūwətstə/. No one is considered to act with guile who uses his own right.

Nullus Tempus Act /nālās ţêmpås ēkt/. A name given to the statute 3 Geo. III. c. 16, because that act, in contravention of the "Nullum tempus occurrīt regi" (no lapse of time bars the king), limited the crown’s right to sue, etc., to the period of sixty years.

Nullus Tempus aut locus occurrīt regi /nālās ţēmpås ōt lōwkās akāhrət rījiy/. No time or place affects the king.

Nullus Tempus occurrit reipublicæ /nālās ţēmpås akāhrət ryāyîyəsbläsiy/. No time runs [time does not run] against the commonwealth or state. State v. Mudd, 273 Ala. 579, 143 So.2d 171, 174.

Nullus alienus est rex possess episcopo demandare inquisitionem faciendam /nālās ēliyis kwēm réks pōst apīskaw diymandēriy inkwazihiyōwnam fēshiyēndam/. No other than the king can command the bishop to make an inquisition.

Nullus commodum capere potest de inuria sua propria /nālās kōmādām kāpēryi pōwtsat diy anjūriyā sīyūwā prōwprīyā/. No one can obtain an advantage by his own wrong. De Zottell v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 60 S.D. 532, 245 N.W. 58, 59.

Nullus debet agere de dolo, ubi alia actio subest /nālās dēbād ājariy diy dōlōw, yūwbyā ēliyā ākũh(i)yōw sōšběs/. Where another form of action is given, no one ought to sue in the action de dolo.

Nullus dicitur accessorius post feloniam, sed ille qui novit principalem feloniam fecisse, et illum receptavit et confortavit /nālās disťar ēksāsiyōsīy pōwst fālōnīyam, sēd iī kwāy nōwst prinsēpēyālīm fālōnīyam fāshiyēndam/. No one is called an “accessory” after the fact but who he knew the principal to have committed a felony, and received and comforted him.

Nullus dicitur felo principalis nisi actor, aut qui prēsens est, abettans aut auxilians ad feloniam faciendam /nālās disťar fīlōw prinsēpēyālīm nāsas kāktor ŏt kwāy ēkũyany ęst, ēbētān ŏt āglī(i)yany ăd fālōnīyam fāshiyēndam/. No one is considered to act with guile who uses his own right.
Numbers game. "Numbers" or the numbers game is that game wherein the player wagers or plays that on a certain day certain series of digits will appear or are predicted in any one day. U. S. v. Baker, C.A.Pa., 364 F.2d 107, 111. Federal and state laws regulate such activities (see e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1953).

Nul tiel corporation /nûl tîyl kôrparéyshàn/. No such corporation [exists]. The form of a plea denying the existence of an alleged corporation.

Nul tiel record /nûl tîyl rékârd/. No such record. A plea denying the existence of any such record as that alleged by the plaintiff. It is the general plea in an action of debt on a judgment.

No waste. The name of a plea in an action of debt on a judgment.

Nul tort. In pleading, a plea of the general issue to a real action, by which the defendant denies that he committed any wrong.

Nul waste. The name of a plea in an action of debt on a judgment, denying the committing of waste, and forming the general issue.

Numerata pecunia /nûrma'ta pek'yu'nìa/. Lat. In the civil law, money told or counted; money paid by the verbal declaration of the testator, and afterwards reduced to writing. A testamentary document containing a list of personal or real estate, with the names of witnesses, and afterwards reduced to writing. A legal document containing a list of personal or real estate, with the names of witnesses, and afterwards reduced to writing.

Numerical lottery. See Genoese lottery.

Numerata /nûrma'ta/. The price of anything in money, as 12. The price of a thing by computing of pence, and libra of pounds.

Numerata terræ /nûrma'ta têhrèi/. An acre of land.

Nunciatio /nûntsìâ'tshì yow/. Lat. In the civil law, a solemn declaration, usually in prohibition of a thing; a protest.

Nuncio /nûntsì yow/. The permanent official representative of the Pope at a foreign court or seat of government. They are called "ordinary" or "extraordinary," according as they are sent for general purposes or on a special mission.
Nunquam nimis dicitur quod nunquam satis dicitur /nāŋkwəm nīməs dıśtər kwəd nāŋkwəm sēytəs dıśtər/. What is never sufficiently said is never said too much.

Nunquam res humanae prospera succedunt ubi negliguntur divinae /nāŋkwəm rıyz huwkmyńiy próspariy sakśiydant yūwby nēglgāntar dāvānıy/. Human things never prosper where divine things are neglected.

Nuntius /nānshiyəs/. In old English practice, a messenger. One who was sent to make an excuse for a party summoned, or one who explained as for a friend the reason of a party's absence. An officer of a court; a summoner, apparitor, or beadle.

Nuper obiit /n(y)ūwpər ōbiyət/. Lat. In practice, the name of a writ (now abolished) which, in the English law, lay for a sister coheiress dispossessed by her coparcener of lands and tenements whereof their father, brother, or any common ancestor died seised of an estate in fee-simple.
Oath. Any form of attestation by which a person signifies that he is bound in conscience to perform an act faithfully and truthfully, e.g. President's oath on entering office, Art. II, Sec. 1, U.S.Const. Vaughn v. State, 146 Tex.Cr.R. 586, 177 S.W.2d 59, 60. An affirmation of truth of a statement, which renders one willfully asserting untrue statements punishable for perjury. An outward pledge by the person taking it that his attestation or promise is made under an immediate sense of responsibility to God. A solemn appeal to the Supreme Being in attestation of the truth of some statement. An external pledge or asseveration, made in verification of statements made, or to be made, coupled with an appeal to a sacred or venerated object, in evidence of the serious and reverent state of mind of the party, or with an invocation to a supreme being to witness the words of the party, and to visit him with punishment if they be false. In its broadest sense, the term is used to include all forms of attestation by which a party signifies that he is bound in conscience to perform the act faithfully and truly. In a more restricted sense, it excludes all those forms of attestation or promise which are not accompanied by an imprecation.

See also Affirmation; Attestation; False swearing; Jurat; Loyalty oath; Pauper's oath; Verification.

Affirmation in lieu of oath. Fed.R.Civil P. 43 provides that whenever an oath is required under the rules, a solemn affirmation may be accepted in lieu thereof. See also Art. II, Sec. 1, and Art. VI, U.S.Const.

Assertory oath. One relating to a past or present fact or state of facts, as distinguished from a "promissory" oath which relates to future conduct; particularly, any oath required by law other than in judicial proceedings and upon induction to office, such, for example, as an oath to be made at the custom-house relative to goods imported.

Corporal oath. See Corporal oath.

Decisive or decisory oath. In the civil law, where one of the parties to a suit, not being able to prove his charge, offered to refer the decision of the cause to the oath of his adversary, which the adversary was bound to accept, to tender the same proposal back again, otherwise the whole was taken as confessed by him.

Extrajudicial oath. One not taken in any judicial proceeding, or without any authority or requirement of law, though taken formally before a proper person.

False oath. See False swearing; Perjury.

Judicial oath. One taken in some judicial proceeding or in relation to some matter connected with judicial proceedings. One taken before an officer in open court, as distinguished from a "non-judicial" oath, which is taken before an officer ex parte or out of court. See also Witnesses, below.

Loyalty oath. See Oath of allegiance.

Oath of office. Various declarations of promises, made by persons who are about to enter upon the duties of a public office, concerning their performance of that office. An oath of office is required, by federal and state constitutions, and by various statutes, to be made by major and minor officials. See e.g. 28 U.S.C.A. § 544 (U.S. attorneys). See also Oath of allegiance; and Official oath, below.

Official oath. One taken by an officer when he assumes charge of his office, whereby he declares that he will faithfully discharge the duties of the same, or whatever else may be required by statute in the particular case. See Art. VI, U.S. Const. See also Oath of office above.

Poor debtor's oath. See Pauper's oath.

Promissory oaths. Oaths which bind the party to observe a certain course of conduct, or to fulfill certain duties, in the future, or to demean himself thereafter in a stated manner with reference to specified objects or obligations; such, for example, as the oath taken by a high executive officer, a legislator, a judge, a person seeking naturalization, an attorney at law. A solemn appeal to God, or, in a wider sense, to some superior sanction or a sacred or revered person in witness of the inviolability of a promise or undertaking.

Purgatory oath. An oath by which a person purges or clears himself from presumptions, charges or suspicions standing against him, or from a contempt.

Solemn oath. A corporal oath.

Suppletory oath. In the civil and ecclesiastical law, the testimony of a single witness to a fact is called "half-proof," on which no sentence can be founded; in order to supply the other half of proof, the party himself (plaintiff or defendant) is admitted to be examined in his own behalf, and the oath administered to him for that purpose is called the "suppletory oath," because it supplies the necessary quantum of proof on which to found the sentence. This term, although without application in American law in its original sense, is sometimes used as a designation of a party's oath required to be taken in authentication or support of some piece of documentary Oath against bribery. In England, one which could have been administered to a voter at an election for members of parliament. Abolished in 1854.

Oath ex officio. In old English law, the oath by which a clergyman charged with a criminal offense was formerly allowed to swear himself to be innocent; also the oath by which the compurgators swore that they believed in his innocence.

Oath in litem. In the civil law, an oath permitted to be taken by the plaintiff, for the purpose of proving the value of the subject-matter in controversy, when there was no other evidence on that point, or when the defendant fraudulently suppressed evidence which might have been available.

Oath of allegiance or loyalty. An oath by which a person promises and binds himself to bear true allegiance to a particular sovereign or government (e.g., the United States), and to support its Constitution, administered generally to certain public officers or officials, to members of the armed services, to attorneys on being admitted to the bar, to aliens applying for naturalization under the Immigration Act (8 U.S.C.A. § 1448), etc. Such oaths which are not required to declare that he will testify, truthfully, by oath or affirmation administered in a form calculated to awaken his conscience and impress his mind with his duty to do so. Fed. Evid. R. 603. See also Affirmation in lieu of oath, above.

Oath of calumny. In the civil law, an oath, which might have been available.

Oath of common law. An oath which a plaintiff was obliged to take that he was not prompted by malice or trickery in commencing his action, but that he had bona fide a good cause of action.

Oath of continence. On account of contiguity to the offense, i.e., being contaminated by conjunction with something illegal.

Oath of contumacy. On account of connection; by reason of similarity.

Obedience. Compliance with a command, prohibition, or known law and rule of duty prescribed. The performance of what is required or enjoined by authority, or the abstaining from what is prohibited, in compliance with the command or prohibition.

Obedientia. An office, or the administration of it; a kind of rent; submission; obedience.

Objection. In legal proceedings, to object (e.g., to the admission of evidence) is to interpose a declaration to the effect that the particular matter or thing under consideration is not done or admitted with the consent of the party objecting, but is by him considered improper or illegal, and referring the question of its propriety or legality to the court. See also Objection.

Object. End aimed at, the thing sought to be accomplished; the aim or purpose, the thing sought to be attained.
Objection. Act of objecting; that which is, or may be, presented in opposition; an adverse reason or argument; a reason for objecting or opposing; a feeling of disapproval.

The act of a party who objects to some matter or proceeding in the course of a trial, or an argument or reason urged by him in support of his contention that the matter or proceeding objected to is improper or illegal. Used to call the court's attention to improper evidence or procedure. Such objections in open court are important so that such will appear on the record for purposes of appeal. See Fed.Evid.R. 103(a)(1); Fed.R.Civil P. 46, and Fed.R.Crim.P. 51. See also Contemporaneous objection rule; Objection to jury.

Object. See Challenge.

Objective symptoms. Those which a surgeon or physician discovers from an examination of his patient; "subjective symptoms" being those which he learns from what his patient tells him. Schroeder v. Western Union Telegraph Co., Mo.App., 129 S.W.2d 917, 922.

Object of an action. Legal relief to prevent or redress the wrong. The thing sought to be obtained by the action; the remedy demanded or the relief or recovery sought or prayed for; not the same thing as the cause of action or the subject of the action.

Object of a statute. Aim, intent or purpose of its enactment. End or design which it is meant to accomplish, while the "subject" is the matter to which it relates and with which it deals. Matter or thing forming groundwork of statute.

Objects of a power. Those among whom donee is given power to appoint.

Objurgatrix. In old English law, scolds or unquiet women were referred to as objurgatrices and were punished with the cucking-stool (q.v.).

Oblata. Gifts or offerings made to the king by way of oblate or fine for the grant of privileges, or by way of amercement for breach of duty.

Oblate. See Oblati.

Oblate Rolls. Chancery Rolls (1199–1641), called also Fine Rolls, containing records of payments to the king by way of oblate or fine for the grant of privileges, or by way of amercement for breach of duty.

Oblati actio. In the civil law, an action given to a party against another who had offered to him a stolen thing, which was found in his possession.

Oblatio. Lat. In the civil law, a tender of money in payment of a debt made by debtor to creditor. Whatever is offered to the church by the pious.

Oblation. Oblations, or obventions, are offerings or customary payments made, in England, to the minister of a church, including fees on marriages, burials, mortuaries, etc. (q.v.), and Easter offerings. They may be commuted by agreement.

Oblationes dicuntur quaecunque a piis fideliibus christianis offeruntur deo et ecclesiæ, sive res solidæ sive mobiles. Those things are called "oblations" which are offered to God and to the Church by pious and faithful Christians, whether they are movable or immovable.

Obligate. To bind or constrain; to bind to the observance or performance of a duty; to place under an obligation. To bind one's self by an obligation or promise; to assume a duty; to execute a written promise or covenant; to make a writing obligatory.

Obligatio. Lat. In Roman law, a legal bond which obliges the performance of something in accordance with the law of the land. It corresponded nearly to our word contract. The legal relation existing between two certain persons whereby one (the creditor) is authorized to demand of the other (the debtor) a certain performance which has a money value. In this sense obligatio signifies not only the duty of the debtor, but also the right of the creditor. The fact establishing such claim and debt, as also the instrument evidencing it, is termed "obligation."

Obligatio civilis. An obligation enforceable by action, whether it derives its origin from the jus civile, as the obligation engendered by formal contracts or the obligation enforceable by bilaterally penal suits, or from such portion of the jus gentium as had been completely naturalized in the civil law and protected by all its remedies, such as the obligation engendered by formless contracts.

Obligatio ex contractu. An obligation arising from contract, or an antecedent jus in personam. In this there are two stages,—first, a primary or sanctioned personal right antecedent to wrong, and, afterwards, a secondary or sanctioning personal right consequent on a wrong.

Obligatio ex delicto, or obligatio ex maleficio. An obligation founded on wrong or tort, or arising from the invasion of a jus in rem. In this there is the second stage, a secondary or sanctioning personal right consequent on a wrong, but the first stage is not a personal right (jus in personam), but a real right (jus in rem).
whether a primordial right, right of status, or of property.

Obligation. A generic word, derived from the Latin substantive "oblagatio," having many, wide, and varied meanings, according to the context in which it is used. That which a person is bound to do or forbear; any duty imposed by law, promise, contract, relations of society, courtesy, kindness, etc. Helvering v. British-American Tobacco Co., C.C.A., 69 F.2d 528, 530. Law or duty binding parties to perform their agreement. An undertaking to perform. That which constitutes a legal or moral duty and which renders a person liable to coercion and punishment for neglecting it; a word of broad meaning, and the particular meaning intended is to be gained by consideration of its context. An obligation or debt may exist by reason of a judgment as well as an express contract, in either case there being a legal duty on the part of the one bound to comply with the promise. Schwartz v. California Claim Service, 52 Cal.App.2d 47, 125 P.2d 883, 888. Liabilities created by contract or law (i.e. judgments). Rose v. W. B. Worthen Co., 186 Ark. 205, 53 S.W.2d 15, 16. As legal term word originally meant a sealed bond, but it now extends to any certain written promise to pay money or do a specific thing. Lee v. Kenan, C.C.A.Fl., 78 F.2d 425. A formal and binding agreement or acknowledgment of a liability to pay a certain sum or do a certain thing. United States v. One Zumstein Briefmarken Katalog 1938, D.C. Pa., 24 F.Supp. 516, 519. The binding power of a vow, promise, oath, or contract, or of law, civil, political, or moral, independent of a promise; that which constitutes legal or moral duty. See also Contract; Duty; Liability.

Absolute obligation. One which gives no alternative to the obligor, but requires fulfillment according to the engagement.

Conjunctive or alternative obligation. The former is one in which the several objects in it are connected by a copulative, or in any other manner which shows that all of them are severally comprised in the contract. This contract creates as many different obligations as there are different objects; and the debtor, when he wishes to discharge himself, may force the creditor to receive them separately. But where the things which form the object of the contract are separated by a disjunctive, then the obligation is alternative, and the performance of either of such things will discharge the obligor. The choice of performing one of the obligations belongs to the obligor, unless it is expressly agreed that it shall belong to the creditor. A promise to deliver a certain thing or to pay a specified sum of money is an example of an alternative obligation. Civ.Code La. arts. 2063, 2066, 2067.

Contractual obligation. One which arises from a contract or agreement. See Contract; Impairing the obligation of contracts.

Current obligation. See Current obligations.

Determinate or indeterminate obligation. A determinate obligation is one which has for its object a certain thing: as, an obligation to deliver a certain horse named Bucephalus, in which case the obligation can be discharged only by delivering the identical horse. An indeterminate obligation is one where the obligor binds himself to deliver one of a certain species: as, to deliver a horse, where the delivery of any horse will discharge the obligation.

Divisible or indivisible obligation. A divisible obligation is one which, being a unit, may nevertheless be lawfully divided, with or without the consent of the parties. An indivisible obligation is one which is not susceptible of division: as, for example, if I promise to pay you one hundred dollars, you cannot assign one-half of this to another, so as to give him a right of action against me for his share.

Express or implied obligation. Express or conventional obligations are those by which the obligor binds himself in express terms to perform his obligation, while implied obligations are such as are raised by the implication or inference of the law from the nature of the transaction.

Failure to meet obligations. See Failure to meet obligations.

Joint or several obligation. A joint obligation is one by which two or more obligors bind themselves jointly for the performance of the obligation. A several obligation is one where the obligors promise, each for himself, to fulfill the engagement.

Moral obligation. A duty which is valid and binding in conscience and according to natural justice, but is not recognized by the law as adequate to set in motion the machinery of justice; that is, one which rests upon ethical considerations alone, and is not imposed or enforced by positive law. A duty which would be enforceable by law, were it not for some positive rule, which, with a view to general benefit, exempts the party in that particular instance from legal liability. See also Love and affection.

Natural or civil obligation. A natural obligation is one which cannot be enforced by action, but which is binding on the party who makes it in conscience and according to natural justice. As, for instance, when the action is barred by the act of limitation, a natural obligation still subsists, although the civil obligation is extinguished. Ogden v. Saunders, 25 U.S. 213, 337, (12 Wheat.) 6 L.Ed. 606. A civil obligation is a legal tie, which gives the party with whom it is contracted the right of enforcing its performance by law.

Obediential obligation. One incumbent on parties in consequence of the situation or relationship in which they are placed.

Perfect or imperfect obligation. A perfect obligation is one recognized and sanctioned by positive law; one of which the fulfillment can be enforced by the aid of the law. But if the duty created by the obligation operates only on the moral sense, without being enforced by any positive law, it is called an "imperfect obligation," and creates no right of action, nor has it any legal operation. The duty of exercising gratitude, charity, and the other merely moral duties are examples of this kind of obligation. Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U.S. 595, 600, 24 L.Ed. 793.

Personal or heritable obligation. An obligation is heritable when the heirs and assigns of one party may enforce the performance against the heirs of the other. It is personal when the obligor binds himself only, not his heirs or representatives. An obligation is strictly personal when none but the obligee can enforce the performance, or when it can be enforced only against the obligor. An obligation may be personal as to the obligee, and heritable as to the obligor, and it may in like manner be heritable as to the obligee, and personal as to the obligor. For the term personal obligation, as used in a different sense, see the next paragraph.

Personal or real obligation. A personal obligation is one by which the obligor binds himself to perform an act, without directly binding his property for its performance. A real obligation is one by which real estate, and not the person, is liable to the obligee for the performance.

Primary or secondary obligation. An obligation which is the principal object of the contract. For example, the primary obligation of the seller is to deliver the thing sold, and to transfer the title to it. It is distinguished from the accessory or secondary obligation to pay damages for not doing so. The words "primary" and "direct," contrasted with "secondary," when spoken with reference to an obligation, refer to the remedy provided by law for enforcing the obligation, rather than to the character and limits of the obligation itself.

A primary obligation, which in one sense may also be called a principal obligation, is one which is contracted with a design that it should itself be the first fulfilled. A secondary obligation is one which is contracted and is to be performed in case the principal cannot be. For example, if one sells his house, he binds himself to give a title; but if he finds he cannot as when the title is in another, then his secondary obligation is to pay damages for nonperformance of the obligation.

Principal or accessory obligation. A principal obligation is one which arises from the principal object of the engagement of the contracting parties; while an accessory obligation depends upon or is collateral to the principal. For example, in the case of the sale of a house and lot of ground, the principal obligation on the part of the vendor is to make title for it; the accessory obligation is to deliver all the title-papers which the vendor has relating to it, to take care of the estate until it is delivered, and the like. See, further, the title Accessory obligation.

Pure obligation. One which is not suspended by any condition, whether it has been contracted without any condition, or, when thus contracted, the condition has been accomplished. See Simple or conditional obligation, below.

Simple or conditional obligation. Simple obligations are such as are not dependent for their execution on any event provided for by the parties, and which are not agreed to become void on the happening of any such event. Conditional obligations are such as are made to depend on an uncertain event. If the obligation is not to take effect until the event happens, it is a suspensive condition; if the obligation takes effect immediately, but is liable to be defeated when the event happens, it is then a resolutory condition. A simple obligation is also defined as one which is not suspended by any condition, either because it has been contracted without condition, or, having been contracted with one, the condition has been fulfilled; and a conditional obligation is also defined as one the execution of which is suspended by a condition which has not been accomplished, and subject to which it has been contracted.

Single or penal obligation. A penal obligation is one to which is attached a penal clause, which is to be enforced if the principal obligation be not performed. A single obligation is one without any penalty, as where one simply promises to pay another one hundred dollars. This is called a single bill, when it is under seal.

Solidary obligation. In the law of Louisiana, one which binds each of the obligors for the whole debt, as distinguished from a "joint" obligation, which binds the parties each for his separate proportion of the debt. Groves v. Sentell, 153 U.S. 465, 14 S.Ct. 898, 38 L.Ed. 785. See Solidary.

Obligatio naturalis /oblägëshiyöw niyz eks dalikutow/"mälafshiyöw/ /oblägëshiyöw/ /oblägëshiyöw kweyzyay eks kontraktöyöw/. An obligation not immediately enforceable by action; one deriving its validity from the law of nature, or one imposed by that portion of the jus gentium which is only imperfectly recognized by civil law.

Obligationes ex delicto or ex maleficio /oblägëshiyöw niyz eks dalikutow/"mälafshiyöw/. Obligations arising from the commission of a wrongful injury to the person or property of another.

"Delictum" is not exactly synonymous with "tort," for, while it includes most of the wrongs known to the common law as torts, it is also wide enough to cover some offenses (such as theft and robbery) primarily injurious to the individual, but now only punished as crimes. Such acts gave rise to an obligatio, which consisted in the liability to pay damages.

Obligationes ex variis causarum figuris /oblägëshiyöw niyz eks vëriyas kozeram fagûras/ /oblägëshiyöw niyz eks vëriyas kozeram fagûras/. Although Justinian confined the divisions of obligations to four classes, namely obligationes ex contractu, quasi ex contractu, ex maleficio and quasi ex maleficio, there are many species of obligations which cannot properly be reduced within any of these classes. Some authorities, consequently, established a fifth class, to receive the odds and ends which belonged nowhere else, and gave to this class the above designation.

Obligationes quasi ex contractu /oblägëshiyöw niyz kwëzyay eks kontraktöyöw/. Often persons who have not contracted with each other, under a certain state of facts, are regarded by the Roman law as if they had actually concluded a convention between themselves. The legal relation which then takes place between these persons, which has always a similarity to a contract Obligation solidaire /oblāgasyōwn sólīdōr/. This, in French law, corresponds to joint and several liability in English law, but is applied also to the joint and several rights of the creditors and parties to the obligation.

Obligatio Prætorii /oblāgēsh(y)ōw prōtōriyō/. The Romans considered that obligations derived their validity solely from positive law. At first the only ones recognized were those established in special cases in accordance with the forms prescribed by the strict jus civile. In the course of time, however, the prætorian jurisdiction, in mitigation of the primitive rigor of the law, introduced new modes of contracting obligations and provided the means of enforcing them; hence the twofold division made by Justinian of obligationes civiles and obligationes prætoriae.

Obligee /oblājiy/. A promisee. The person in favor of whom some obligation is contracted, whether such obligation be to pay money or to do or not to do something. The party to whom some else is obligated under a contract. Thus, if C loans money to D, C is the obligee and D is the obligor under the loan. The party to whom a bond is given.

Obligor /oblāgōr/. A promisor. The person who has engaged to perform some obligation. Person obligated under a contract or bond.

Obligator solidaire

Obligatio Quasi Ex Contractu

Obligation, is therefore termed obligatio quasi ex contractu. Obligations in the nature of a contract called quasi contract or implied in law contract. See Contract.

Such a relation arises from the conducting of affairs without authority (negotiorum gestio) or unauthorized agency; from the management of property that is in common when the community arose from casualty (communio incidens); from the payment of what was not due (solutio indebiti); from tutorship and curatorship (tutela and cura), resembling the relation of guardian and ward; from taking possession of an inheritance (additio hereditatis and agnitus bonorum possessionis); and in many other cases.

Obligationes quasi ex delicto, or obligationes quasi ex maleficio /oblāgēshiyōwn kwēṣyāz ekō dalik-tow/*mālafish(i)yōw/>. This class embraces all torts not coming under the denomination of delicta and not having a special form of action provided for them by law. They differed widely in character, and at common law would in some cases give rise to an action on the case, in others to an action on an implied contract.

Obligation of a contract. That which the law in force when contract is made obliges parties to do or not to do, and the remedy and legal means to carry it into effect. The "obligation of a contract" is the duty of performance. The term includes everything within the obligatory scope of the contract, and it includes the means of enforcement.

Obligation solidaire /oblāgasyōwn sólīdōr/. This, in French law, corresponds to joint and several liability in English law, but is applied also to the joint and several rights of the creditors and parties to the obligation.

Obligatory writing. See Writing obligatory.

Obligee /oblājiy/. A promisee. The person in favor of whom some obligation is contracted, whether such obligation be to pay money or to do or not to do something. The party to whom some else is obligated under a contract. Thus, if C loans money to D, C is the obligee and D is the obligor under the loan. The party to whom a bond is given.

Obligor /oblāgōr/. A promisor. The person who has engaged to perform some obligation. Person obligated under a contract or bond.

Obliquus /ablāykwās/. Lat. In the old law of descents, oblique; cross; transverse; collateral. The opposite of rectus, right, or upright.

In the law of evidence, indirect; circumstantial.

Obliterated corner. See Corner.

Obliteration. To destroy; wipe or rub out; erase. Erasure or blotting out of written words. A method of revoking a will or a clause therein if accompanied by the required intent to revoke. See also Alteration; Deface; Spoilation.

Oblivion. Act of forgetting, or fact of having forgotten; forgetfulness. Official ignoring of offenses. Amnesty, or general pardon, as, an act of oblivion. State or fact of being forgotten. See Amnesty; Pardon.

Oblivious. Evincing oblivion; forgetful; forgetting. Where thing is extinguished from mind.

Obloquy /oblōkwīy/. Censure and reproach. Blame, reprehension, being under censure, a cause or object of reproach, a disgrace.

Obnoxious. "Obnoxious" and "offensive" in ordinary use are synonymous, and mean highly objectionable, disagreeable, displeasing, and distasteful.

Obreptio /oblēpshiyōw/. Lat. The obtaining a thing by fraud or surprise.

Obreption /oblēpshōn/. Obtaining anything by fraud or surprise. Acquisition of escheats, etc., from the sovereign, by making false representations. See also Subreption.

Obrogare /oblōgàrēy/. Lat. In the civil law, to pass a law contrary to a former law, or to some clause of it; to change a former law in some part of it.

Obrogation. In the civil law, the annulling a law, in whole or in part, by passing a law contrary to it. The alteration of a law. See also Abrogation.

Obscene. Objectionable or offensive to accepted standards of decency. Basic guidelines for trier of fact in determining whether a work which depicts or describes sexual conduct is obscene is whether the average person, applying contemporary community standards would find that the work, taken as a whole, appeals to the prurient interest, whether the work depicts or describes, in a patently offensive way, sexual conduct specifically defined by the applicable state law, and whether the work, taken as a whole, lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value. Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 24, 93 S.Ct. 2607, 2615, 37 L.Ed.2d 419; Pope v. Illinois, 481 U.S. 497, 107 S.Ct. 1918, 95 L.Ed.2d 439. A state may choose to define obscenity offense in terms of "contemporary community standards" without further specification or may choose to define standards in more precise geographic terms. Jenkins v. Georgia, 418 U.S. 153, 94 S.Ct. 2750, 41 L.Ed.2d 642. See also Censor; Censorship; Contemporary community standards; Dominant theme; Lewd; Obscenity; Pornographic; Prurient interest.
Obscene libel. That type of defamation which holds up a person to ridicule, scorn or contempt to a considerable and respectable class in the community by printed words or configurations of a lewd and lascivious nature.

Obscenity. The character or quality of being obscene; conduct tending to corrupt the public morals by its indecency or lewdness.

Material is obscene if, considered as a whole, its predominant appeal is to prurient interest, that is, a shameful or morbid interest, in nudity, sex or excretion, and if in addition it goes substantially beyond customary limits of candor in describing or representing such matters. Predominant appeal shall be judged with reference to audience. Undeveloped photographs, molds, printing plates, and the like, shall be deemed obscene notwithstanding that processing or other acts may be required to make the obscenity patent or to disseminate it. Model Penal Code, § 251.4.

Federal laws prohibit the mailing, transportation for sale or distribution, importation, and broadcasting of obscene matters. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1461 et seq. See also Censor; Censorship; Lewd; Obscene; Pander (Pandering of obscenity); Profanity.

Obscure. When applied to words, statements or meanings, it signifies not perspicuous, not clearly expressed, vague, hard to understand.

Observe. To perform that which has been prescribed by some law or usage. To adhere to or abide by.

Obses /obsýyz/. Lat. In time of war, a hostage. Ob­ sides, hostages.

Obsignare /obsignéry/. Lat. In the civil law, to seal up; as money that had been tendered and refused.

Obsignatory /obsignat(a)ry/. Ratifying and confirming.

Obsolescence. Condition or process of falling into disuse. The diminution in value of property caused by changes in technology, public taste, and new inventions rendering the property less desirable on the market. A decline in market value of an asset caused by improved alternatives becoming available that will be more cost-effective; such decline in market value is unrelated to physical changes in the asset itself. The process whereby property, because of causes other than physical deterioration, loses its economic usefulness to taxpayer. Anaconda Co. v. Property Tax Dept., App., 94 N.M. 202, 608 P.2d 514, 619. See also Economic obsolescence; Functional obsolescence.

Obsolescent. Becoming obsolete; going out of use; not entirely disused, but gradually becoming so. See Obsolescence.

Obsolete. That which is no longer used. Becker v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., C.C.A.Mo., 120 F.2d 403, 416. Disused; neglected; not observed. See also Obsolescence.

The term is applied to statutes which have become inoperative by lapse of time, either because the reason for their enactment has passed away, or their subject-matter no longer exists, or they are not applicable to changed circumstances, or are tacitly disregarded by all men, yet without being expressly abrogated or repealed.

Obstane /obstånti/. Withstanding; hindering. See Non obstante.

Obstinate desertion. "Obstinate" as used of desertion, which is a ground for divorce, means determined, fixed, persistent. Persisted in against the willingness of the injured party to have it concluded.

Obstruction. Obligation; bond.

Obstruct. To hinder or prevent from progress, check, stop, also to retard the progress of, make accomplishment of difficult and slow. Conley v. United States, C.C.A.Minn., 59 F.2d 929, 936. To be or come in the way of or to cut off the sight of an object. To block up; to interpose obstacles; to render impassable; to fill with barriers or impediments, as to obstruct a road or way. To impede; to interpose impediments to the hindrance or frustration of some act or service, as to obstruct an officer in the execution of his duty. As applied to navigable waters, to "obstruct" them is to interpose such impediments in the way of free and open navigation that vessels are thereby prevented from going where ordinarily they have a right to go or where they may find it necessary to go in their maneuvers.

Obstructing justice. Impeding or obstructing those who seek justice in a court, or those who have duties or powers of administering justice therein. The act by which one or more persons attempt to prevent, or do prevent, the execution of lawful process. The term applies also to obstructing the administration of justice in any way—as by hindering witnesses from appearing, assaulting process server, influencing jurors, obstructing court orders or criminal investigations. Any act, conduct, or directing agency pertaining to pending proceedings, intended to play on human frailty and to deflect and deter court from performance of its duty and drive it into compromise with its own unfettered judgment by placing it, through medium of knowingly false assertion, in wrong position before public, constitutes an obstruction to administration of justice. Toledo Newspaper Co. v. U.S., 247 U.S. 402, 38 S.Ct. 560, 564, 62 L.Ed. 1186. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 1501 et seq.; Model Penal Code § 242.1 et seq. See also Misprision of felony; Obstructing process; Withholding of evidence.

Obstructing proceedings of legislature. The term embraces not only things done in the presence of the legislature, but those done in disobedience of a commit­
Obstructing process. In criminal law, the act by which one or more persons attempt to prevent or do prevent the execution of lawful process. Obstructing legal process or official duty is knowingly and willfully obstructing, resisting or opposing any person authorized by law to serve process or order of a court, or in the discharge of any official duty. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1501 et seq. See also Obstructing justice.

Obstruction. A hindrance, obstacle, or barrier. Delay, impeding or hindering. See also Obstruct.

Obstruction to navigation. Any unnecessary interference with the free movements of vessels.

Obtain. To get hold of by effort; to get possession of; to procure; to acquire, in any way. State v. Bowdry, 346 Mo. 1090, 145 S.W.2d 127, 129. See also False pretenses. Obtaining money or property by false pretenses. See False pretenses.

Obtemperandum est consuetudini rationabili tanquam legi. To obey as a law.

Obtulit se. Offered himself. In old English practice, the emphatic words of entry on the record where one party offered himself in court against the other, and the latter did not appear.

Ob turpem causam. For an immoral consideration.

Obventio. Lat. (From obvenire, to fall in.) In the civil law, rent; profits; income; the return from an investment or thing owned; as the earnings of a vessel. Generally used in the plural.

Obtenandum est consuetudinari rationabili tantum legi. To obey as a law.

Occasion. See Obstantia rationabilis. See also Occasion.

Occasionari. In Spanish law, event.

Occasional. In feudal law, a tribute which the lord imposed on his vassals or tenants for his necessity. Hindrance; trouble; vexation by suit.

Occasion, n. That which provides an opportunity for the causal agency to act. Meaning not only particular time but carrying idea of opportunity, necessity, or need, or even cause in a limited sense. Condition of affairs; juncture entailing need; exigency; or juncture affording ground or reason for something.

Occasion, v. To cause or bring about by furnishing the condition or opportunity for the action of some other cause. Smart v. Raymond, Mo.App., 142 S.W.2d 100, 104. To give occasion to, to produce; to cause incidentally or indirectly; bring about or be the means of bringing about or producing.

Occasionary. To be charged or loaded with payments or occasional penalties.

Occupancy. Taking possession of property and use of the same; said e.g. of a tenant's use of leased premises. Period during which person owns, rents, or otherwise occupies real property or premises. Occupancy is a mode of acquiring property by which a thing which belongs to nobody becomes the property of the person who took possession of it with the intention of acquiring a right of ownership in it. The taking possession of things which before belonged to nobody, with an intention of appropriating them to one's own use. To constitute occupancy, there must be a taking of a thing corporeal, belonging to nobody, with an intention to becoming the owner of it. See also Occupant; Occupancy; Possession.

Term also refers to the constitutional concept of "occupancy of the field" when the federal government has so claimed for its jurisdiction a particular sphere that state action is no longer allowed; e.g. sedition and espionage laws. See Preemption.

In international law, the taking possession of a newly discovered or conquered country with the intention of holding and ruling it.

See also Adverse possession; Certificate of occupancy; Occupant; Occupation; Occupy; Possession.

Occupant. Person in possession. Person having possessory rights, who can control what goes on on premises. One who has actual use, possession or control of a thing. Redevelopment Authority of Allegheny County v. Step- anik, 25 Pa.Cmwlth. 180, 360 A.2d 300, 302. One who takes the first possession of a thing of which there is no owner. One who occupies and takes possession. Person who acquires title by occupancy. See also Occupancy; Occupation; Possession.

Common occupant. See General occupant, below.

General occupant. At common law where a man was tenant pur autre vie, or had an estate granted to himself only (without mentioning his heirs) for the life of another man, and died without alienation during the life of cestui que vie, or him by whose life it was helden, he...
OCCUPATING CLAIMANT ACTS that could first enter on the land might lawfully retain the possession, so long as cestui que vie lived, by right of occupancy, and was hence termed a "general" or common "occupant."

Special occupant. A person having a special right to enter upon and occupy lands granted pur autre vie, on the death of the tenant, and during the life of cestui que vie.

Occupantis fiunt derelicta /öky tatsächlich fayont dehraliktz/. Things abandoned become the property of the (first) occupant.

Occupare /ökyapéry/. Lat. In the civil law, to seize or take possession of; to enter upon a vacant possession; to take possession before another.

Occupatile /ökyastah/. That which has been left by the right owner, and is now possessed by another.

Occupation. Possession; control; tenure; use. The act or process by which real property is possessed and enjoyed. Where a person exercises physical control over land.

That which principally takes up one's time, thought, and energies, especially, one's regular business or employment; also, whatever one follows as the means of making a livelihood. Particular business, profession, trade, or calling which engages individual's time and efforts; employment in which one regularly engages or vocation of his life.

Actual occupation. An open, visible occupancy as distinguished from the constructive one which follows the legal title. See also Adverse possession.

Occupational. Of or pertaining to an occupation, trade or work.

Occupational disease. A disease (as black lung disease incurred by miners) resulting from exposure during employment to conditions or substances detrimental to health. Impairment of health not caused by accident but by exposure to conditions incidental to and arising out of or in the course of one's employment. Such disease may be found if there is substantial evidence that either employment conditions specifically affected the employee in a matter resulting in contraction of disease, or employment conditions generally tend, to a reasonable medical probability, to cause a particular disease or condition in a given class of workers. Dealers Transport Co. v. Thompson, Ky.App., 593 S.W.2d 84, 88.

A disease is compensable under workers' compensation statute as being an "occupational" disease where:
(1) the disease is contracted in the course of employment; (2) the disease is peculiar to the claimant's employment by its causes and the characteristics of its manifestation or the conditions of employment result in a hazard which distinguishes the employment in character from employment generally; and (3) the employment creates a risk of contracting the disease in a greater degree and in a different manner than in the public generally. State ex rel. Ohio Bell Tel. Co. v. Krise, 42
Ohio St.2d 247, 327 N.E.2d 756, 758, 71 O.O.2d 226.

Compensation for such is provided by state workers' compensation acts and such federal acts as the Black Lung Benefits Act.

Occupational hazard. A risk of accident or disease which is peculiar to a particular calling or occupation.
See also Injurious exposure.

Occupational Safety and Health Act. Federal law (1970) administered by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration enacted to reduce the incidence of personal injuries, illnesses, and deaths among working men and women in the United States which result from their employment. 29 U.S.C.A. § 651 et seq.

Occupational Safety and Health Administration.
Federal agency, established pursuant to the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970, to develop and promulgate occupational safety and health standards; develop and issue regulations; conduct investigations and inspections to determine the status of compliance with safety and health standards and regulations; and issue citations and propose penalties for noncompliance with safety and health standards and regulations.

Occupational Safety and Health Review Commission. An independent federal adjudicatory agency esblished by the Occupational Safety and Health Act to adjudicate enforcement actions initiated under the Act when they are contested by employers, employees, or

Occupation tax. A tax imposed upon an occupation or the prosecution of a business, trade, or profession; not a tax on property, or even the capital employed in the business, but an excise tax on the business itself; to be distinguished from a "license tax," which is a fee or exaction for the privilege of engaging in the business, not for its prosecution. An occupation tax is form of excise tax imposed upon persons for privilege of carrying on business, trade or occupation.

Occupative. Pertaining to or involving occupation or the right of occupation.

Occupavit /ökyapévyat/. Lat. In old English law, a writ that lay for one who was ejected out of his land or tenement in time of war.

Occupier. An occupant; one who is in the enjoyment of a thing.

Occupy. To take or enter upon possession of; to hold possession of; to hold or keep for use; to possess; to tenant; to do business in; to take or hold possession.
Actual use, possession, and cultivation. See Occupancy;
Occupant; Occupation; Possession.

Occupying claimant. An occupant claiming right under statute to recover for improvements he has placed on the land subsequently found not to be his. See Occupying Claimant Acts.

Occupying Claimant Acts. Statutes providing for the reimbursement of a bona fide occupant and claimant of land, on its recovery by the true owner, to the extent to which lasting improvements made by him have increased the value of the land, and generally giving him a lien therefor.

Occur. To happen; to meet one's eye; to be found or met with; to present itself; to appear; hence, to befall in due course; to take place; to arise.

Occurrence. A coming or happening. Any incident or event, especially one that happens without being designed or expected (from e.g. standpoint of insured). Farmers & Merchants Nat. Bank v. Arrington, Tex.Civ. App., 98 S.W.2d 378, 382. Within meaning of insurance provision requiring notice of a reportable occurrence to insurer as soon as practicable, "occurrence" means incident which was sufficiently serious to lead a person of ordinary intelligence and prudence to believe that it might give rise to a claim for damages covered by policy. Starks v. North East Ins. Co., D.C.App., 408 A.2d 980, 983. See also Accident; Act of God; Event.

Ocean. The main or open sea; the high sea; that portion of the sea which does not lie within the body of any country and is not subject to the territorial jurisdiction or control of any country, but is open, free, and common to the use of all nations. U. S. v. Rodgers, 150 U.S. 249, 14 S.Ct. 109, 37 L.Ed. 1071. Body of salt water that covers over 70% of earth's surface.

Ochlocracy /əˈkloʊkrəsi/ . Government by the multitude. A form of government wherein the populace has the whole power and administration in its own hands. The abuse of a democracy.

Oculo tales /əˈkoʊtəlˈiːz/. Lat. Eight such; eight such men; eight such jurors. The name of a writ, at common law, which issues when upon a trial at bar, eight more jurors are necessary to fill the panel, commanding the sheriff to summon the requisite number.

Octroi /əˈktrɔː/ . Fr. In French law, originally, a toll or duty, which, by the permission of the seigneur, any city was accustomed to collect on liquors and some other goods, brought within its precincts, for the consumption of the inhabitants. Afterwards appropriated to the use of the king.

Odal /əˈdɔːl/. Complete property, as opposed to feudal tenure. Blackstone notes the relation of this word to "allodial".

Odal right /əˈdɔːl ˈraɪt/ . An allodial right.

Odd lot. An amount of stock less than the established 100-share unit or 10-share unit of trading: from 1 to 99 shares for the great majority of issues, 1 to 9 for so-called inactive stocks. Compare Round lot.

Odd lot doctrine. Doctrine which permits finding of total disability where claimant is not altogether incapacitated for any kind of work but is nevertheless so handicapped that he will not be able to obtain regular employment in any well-known branch of the competitive labor market absent superhuman efforts, sympathetic friends or employers, a business boom, or temporary good luck. Vester v. Diamond Lumber Co., 21 Or.App. 587, 535 P.2d 1373, 1376. Under the "odd-lot doctrine", worker's compensation claimant will be considered to be totally disabled if it appears probable that claimant cannot sell his services in a competitive labor market. Hill v. U. S. Plywood-Champion Co., 12 Or.App. 1, 503 P.2d 728, 730.

Odd lot order. Order for less than 100 shares of stock.

Oderunt peccare boni, virtutis amore; oderunt pec­care mali, formidin­e po­ne: o­wdir­ant pakery bównay vart'(y)úwats ámóri; owdirant pakery málay formidán­mly plynī/. Good men hate to sin through love of virtue; bad men, through fear of punishment.

Odio et atia /əwˈdiːəˈja:/ . See De odio et atia.

Odiosa et inhonest­a non sunt in lege præsumenda /əwˈdiːəˈwəsə ət in(h)ânhóˈnɛstə nən ʃɪnt ɪn lɪˈjɪj prɛz(ə)məndə/. Odious and dishonest acts are not presumed in law.

Odiosa non præsumuntur /əwˈdiːəˈwəsə nən prɛz(ə)məntər/. Odious things are not presumed.

Odius /əwˈdiːəs/. Synonymous with infamous; hateful; repugnant.

Odium /əwˈdiːəm/. Condition or fact of being subjected to hatred and dislike. In venue statute, it implies such a general ill-feeling toward a party to an action as will render it uncertain whether the cause can be tried by impartial triers, free from an atmosphere impregnated with malice or corrupting prejudices.

Economicus /ɪˈkaːnɒməkəs/. L. Lat. In old English law, the executor of a last will and testament.

Economus /ɪˈkaːnɒməs/. Lat. In the civil law, a manager or administrator.

Of. A term denoting that from which anything proceeds; indicating origin, source, descent, and the like; as, he is of noble blood. Associated with or connected with, usually in some causal relation, efficient, material, formal, or final. The word has been held equivalent to after; at, or belonging to; in possession of; manufactured by; residing at; from.

Of age. See Legal age; Majority.

Of counsel. A phrase commonly applied in practice to the counsel employed by a party in a cause, and particularly to one employed to assist in the preparation or management of an action, or its presentation on appeal, but who is not the principal attorney of record for the party. United States attorney is "of counsel" to United States in all criminal prosecutions brought within his district, for purposes of mandatory judicial disqualification statute requiring judge to disqualify himself in any case in which he has been of counsel. Barry v. U.S., C.A.Ill., 528 F.2d 1094, 1098.

Term is also used to refer to retired or semi-retired member of a law firm, or outside attorney that only does occasional or special legal work for the firm.

Of course. As a matter of right. Jones v. McGonigle, 327 Mo. 457, 37 S.W.2d 892. Any action or step taken in the course of judicial proceedings which will be allowed by the court upon mere application, without any request or contest, or which may be effectually taken without having to apply to the court for leave to take such action; e.g. Fed.R. Civ.P. 15(a) permits a party to amend his pleadings once as a matter "of course" at any time before a responsive pleading is served.

Off-board. This term may refer to transactions over-the-counter in unlisted securities, or to a transaction involving listed shares which was not executed on a national securities exchange.

Offender. Commonly used in statutes to indicate person implicated in the commission of a crime and includes person guilty of a misdemeanor or traffic offense. State ex rel. Smith v. Jameson, 70 S.D. 503, 19 N.W.2d 505, 508.

Offense. A felony or misdemeanor; a breach of the criminal laws; violation of law for which penalty is prescribed. The word "offense," while sometimes used in various senses, generally implies a felony or a misdemeanor infringing public as distinguished from mere private rights, and punishable under the criminal laws, though it may also include the violation of a criminal statute for which the remedy is merely a civil suit to recover the penalty. An act clearly prohibited by the lawful authority of the state, providing notice through published laws. State v. Sykes, Fla., 434 So.2d 325, 328.

Criminal offenses may be classified into general categories as felonies and misdemeanors and as offenses against the person (e.g. murder, manslaughter), against habituation and occupancy (e.g. burglary, arson), against property (e.g. larceny), against morality and decency (e.g. adultery), against public peace, against government (e.g. treason). See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1. Also, for sentencing purposes, offenses may be classified by letter grades, as e.g. class A, B, C, etc. felonies or misdemeanors. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3559.

See also Anticipatory offense; Civil offense; Continuing offense; Crime; Degrees of crime; Defect; Felony; Graded offense; Included offense; Index offenses; Joint offense; Lesser included offense; Misdemeanor; Multiple offenses; Petty offense; Same offense; Tort.

Continuing offense. A transaction or a series of acts set on foot by a single impulse, and operated by an intermittent force, no matter how long a time it may occupy. Conspiracy is an example of a continuing offense. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3237; 21 U.S.C.A. § 848.

Criminal offense. Includes misdemeanors as well as felonies. It is an offense which subjects the offender to imprisonment, and/or fine. See Crime; Degrees of crime; Felony; Misdemeanor.

Joiner of offenses. See Joinder.

Same offense. As used in a provision against double jeopardy, the term means the same crime, not the same transaction, acts, circumstances, or situation.

Second offense. One committed after conviction for a first offense. It is the previous conviction, and not the indictment, which is the basis of the charge of a second offense. People v. Boardman, 172 App.Div. 733, 159 N.Y.S. 577.

Offensive. In the law relating to nuisances and similar matters, this term means noxious, causing annoyance, discomfort, or painful or disagreeable sensations. In ordinary use, the term is synonymous with "obnoxious" and means objectionable, disagreeable, displeasing and distasteful.

Offensive and defensive league. In international law, a league binding the contracting powers not only to aid each other in case of aggression upon either of them by a third power, but also to support and aid each other in active and aggressive measures against a power with which either of them may engage in war.

Offensive language. Language adapted to give offense; displeasing or annoying language. See Defamation; Libel; Slander.

Offensive weapon. As occasionally used in criminal law and statutes, a weapon primarily meant and adapted for attack and the infliction of injury, but practically the term includes anything that would come within the description of a "deadly" or "dangerous" weapon (q.v.).

Offer. To bring to or before; to present for acceptance or rejection; to hold out or proffer; to make a proposal to; to exhibit something that may be taken or received or not. To attempt or endeavor; to make an effort to effect some object, as, to offer to bribe; in this sense used principally in criminal law.

In trial practice, to "offer" evidence is to state its nature and purport, or to recite what is expected to be proved by a given witness or document, and demand its admission. See Offer of proof.

Offer, n. A proposal to do a thing or pay an amount, usually accompanied by an expected acceptance, counter-offer, return promise or act. A manifestation of willingness to enter into a bargain, so made as to justify another person in understanding that his assent to that bargain is invited and will conclude it. Restatement, Second, Contracts, § 24. A promise; a commitment to do or refrain from doing some specified thing in the future. An act on the part of one person whereby that person gives to another the legal power of creating the obligation called contract. McCarthy v. Verson Allsteel Press Co., 44 Ill. Dec. 570, 576, 89 Ill.App.3d 498, 411 N.E.2d 936, 942. The offer creates a power of acceptance permitting the offeree by accepting the offer to transform the offeror's promise into a contractual obligation. See also Offer and acceptance.

An attempt; endeavor.

With respect to securities, the price at which a person is ready to sell. Opposed to bid, the price at which one is ready to buy. See also Offering.

See also Bid; Counteroffer; Firm offer; Issue; Offer and acceptance; Offer of proof; Promise; Proposal; Tender; Utter.

Irrevocable offer. One which may not be withdrawn after it has been communicated without the consent of the offeree.

Public exchange offer. A technique by which an aggressor corporation seeks to obtain control over a target corporation by offering to exchange a package of its securities for the target corporation’s voting shares. Usually, a specified number of target corporation shares must be presented for exchange before the exchange will take place.

Offer and acceptance. In a bilateral contract, the two elements which constitute mutual assent, a requirement of the contract. In a unilateral contract, the acceptance is generally the act or performance of the offeree, though, in most jurisdictions, a promise to perform is inferred if the offeree commences the undertaking and the offeror attempts to revoke before the offeree has had an opportunity to complete the act. See also Offer; Parol evidence rule.

Offeree. In contracts, the person to whom an offer is made by the offeror.

Offering. An issue of securities offered for sale to the public or private group. Securities offerings are generally of two types: primary (proceeds going to the company for some lawful purpose) and secondary (where the funds go to a person other than the company; i.e., selling stockholders). Primary offerings are also termed “new issues” as they involve the issuance of securities not previously offered and sold. See also Issue; Letter of comment; Prospectus; Red herring; Registration statement; Secondary distribution; Secondary offering; Tombstone ad; Underwrite.

Interstate offerings. A public securities offering made or which may be made to residents of more than one state. Such offerings are regulated by federal securities laws and regulations.

Intrastate offerings. A restricted public securities offering which is made by an issuer organized under the laws of a state, doing its principal business in such state, and offered solely to bona fide residents of such state with substantially all of the proceeds of the offering remaining in the state.

Private offerings. An offering made to a limited number of persons, who are so well-informed concerning the affairs of a company, through the possession of information which would be found in a registration statement, that they do not require the protection afforded by the disclosure provisions of the Securities Act of 1933. Sale of unregistered stock which is exempt from securities laws. U. S. v. Custer Channel Wing Corp., D.C. Md., 247 F.Supp. 481, 487. See also Private offering.

Public offerings. The offering of securities at random and in general to anyone who will buy, and whether solicited or unsolicited. Sale of stock to the public in contrast to a “private” offering or placement. Public offerings are generally regulated by federal and state laws and regulations. See also Underwrite.

Undigested offering. Newly issued shares and bonds that remain undistributed because there is insufficient public demand at the offer price. See also Underwrite.

Offering circular. An offering circular is required to be filed with the S.E.C. and distributed with any securities offerings. The content of such is similar to the prospectus (q.v.) and is governed by S.E.C. rules and regulations. See also Prospectus.

Offering price. Per share price at which new or secondary offering of stock is sold.

Offerings. In English ecclesiastical law, personal tithes, payable by custom to the parson or vicar of a parish, either occasionally, as at sacraments, marriages, churching of women, burials, etc., or at constant times, as at Easter, Christmas, etc. See Oblation; Obventio.

Offering statement. See Offering circular.

Offer of compromise. An offer to settle a dispute or difference amicably for the purpose of avoiding a lawsuit and without admitting liability. A tender or offer to settle or compromise a claim. The fact that such offer has been made is generally not admissible at the trial of the action as an admission of liability. See Fed.Evid. Rule 408.

Offer of judgment. See Judgment.

Offer of proof. At a trial or hearing, when an objection to a question has been sustained, the party aggrieved by the ruling may indicate for the record (out of the presence of the jury) the answer which would have been given if the question had not been excluded. The appellate court is then in a position to determine from the record the correctness of the ruling and the prejudice in its exclusion, if any. See Fed.Evid.Rule 103(a)(2).

Offeror. In contracts, the party who makes the offer and looks for acceptance from the offeree.

Offertorium /ɒfərtɔːrɪəm/. In English ecclesiastical law, the offerings of the faithful, or the place where they are made or kept; the service at the time of the Communion.

Office. A right, and correspondent duty, to exercise a public trust. A public charge or employment. An employment on behalf of the government in any station or public trust, not merely transient, occasional, or incidental. The most frequent occasions to use the word arise with reference to a duty and power conferred on an individual by the government; and, when this is the connection, “public office” is a usual and more discriminating expression. But a power and duty may exist without immediate grant from government, and may be properly called an “office;” as the office of executor. Here the individual acts towards legatees in performance of a duty, and in exercise of a power not derived from their consent, but devolved on him by an authority which quoad hoc is superior.

An "assigned duty" or "function." Synonyms are "post", "appointment", "situation", "place", "position", and "office" commonly suggests a position of (especially public) trust or authority. Also right to exercise a public function or employment, and to take the fees and emoluments belonging to it. A public charge or employment, and he who performs the duties of the office is an officer. Although an office is an employment, it does not follow that every employment is an office. A man may be employed under a contract, express or implied, to do an act, or to perform a service, without becoming an officer. But, if the duty be a continuing one, which is defined by rule prescribed by the government, which an individual is appointed by the government to perform, who enters upon the duties appertain to his status, without any contract defining them, it seems very difficult to distinguish such a charge or employment from an office, or the person who performs the duty from an officer. In the constitutional sense, the term implies an authority to exercise some portion of the sovereign power, either in making, executing, or administering the laws.

A place for the regular transaction of business or performance of a particular service.

As to various particular offices, see Home office; Land offices; Public office, etc.

County office. Public office filled by the electorate of the entire county.

Judicial office. See Judicial.

Lucrative office. See Lucrative.

Ministerial office. One which gives the officer little or no discretion as to the matter to be done, and requires him to obey mandates of a superior. It is a general rule that a judicial office cannot be exercised by a deputy, while a ministerial office may. See Ministerial.

Office audit. An audit by the Internal Revenue Service of a taxpayer's return which is conducted in the agent's office. It may be distinguished from a correspondence audit or a field audit. See also Audit.

Office copy. A copy or transcript of a deed or record or any filed document, made by the officer having it in custody or under his sanction, and by him sealed or certified.

Office grant. A designation of a conveyance made by some officer of the law to effect certain purposes, where the owner is either unwilling or unable to execute the requisite deeds to pass the title; such, for example, as a tax-deed.

Office hours. That portion of the day during which offices are usually open for the transaction of business.

Office of honor. See Honor.

Office of judge. In old English law, a criminal suit in an ecclesiastical court, not being directed to the reparation of a private injury, was regarded as a proceeding emanating from the office of the judge, and could be instituted by the mere motion of the judge. But, in practice, these suits were instituted by private individuals, with the permission of the judge or his surrogate; and the private prosecutor in any such case was, accordingly, said to "promote the office of the judge."

Principal office. The principal office of a corporation is its headquarters, or the place where the chief or principal affairs and business of the corporation are transacted. Usually it is the office where the company's books are kept, where its meetings of stockholders are held, and where the directors, trustees, or managers assemble to discuss and transact the important general business of the company; but no one of these circumstances is a controlling test. Synonymous with "principal place of business," being the place where the principal affairs of a corporation are transacted.

The office (in or out of the state of incorporation) so designated in the annual report where the principal executive offices of a domestic or foreign corporation are located. Rev.Model Bus.Corp.Act, § 1.40.

Public office. The right, authority, and duty created and conferred by law, by which for a given period, either fixed by law or enduring at the pleasure of the creating power, an individual is invested with some portion of the sovereign functions of government for the benefit of the public. An agency for the state, the duties of which involve in their performance the exercise of some portion of the sovereign power, either great or small.

State office. Public offices to be filled by the electorate of the entire state.

Office-block ballot. A form of ballot in which the names of candidates, with or without party designations, are grouped under the offices for which they are contesting; also called "Massachusetts" ballot.

Office of Personnel Management. Created in 1978, the Office of Personnel Management is responsible for the nationwide recruiting and examining of applicants for positions in the Federal civil service. The OPM also administers the Qualifications Review Board examining process for career Senior Executive Service appointments and examines for administrative law judges. Personnel investigations are used in support of the selection and appointment processes.

Office of Thrift Supervision. An office in the Treasury Department charged with providing for the examination, safe and sound operation, and regulation of savings associations.

Officer. Person holding office of trust, command or authority in corporation, government, armed services, or other institution or organization.

In corporations, a person charged with important functions of management such as president, vice president, treasurer, etc.

In determining whether one is an "officer" or "employee," important tests are the tenure by which a position is held, whether its duration is defined by the statute or ordinance creating it, or whether it is temporary or transient or for a time fixed only by agreement; whether it is created by an appointment or election, or merely by a contract of employment by which the rights of the parties are regulated; whether the compensation is by a salary or fees fixed by law, or by a sum agreed upon by the contract of hiring.

For definitions of the various classes and kinds of officers, see the titles Commissioned office; Constitutional; Corporate; Executive; Fiscal; Judicial; Legislative; Ministerial; Municipal; Naval; Non-commissioned; Peace; Public; State; Subordinate.
Civil officer. The word "civil," as regards civil officers, is commonly used to distinguish those officers who are in public service but not of the military. Hence, any officer of the United States who holds his appointment under the national government, whether his duties are executive or judicial, in the highest or the lowest departments of the government, with the exception of officers of the armed services.

Military officer. Commissioned officer in armed services. Officer who has command in armed forces.

Officer de facto. As distinguished from an officer de jure; this is the designation of one who is in the actual possession and administration of the office, under some colorable or apparent authority, although his title to the same, whether by election or appointment, is in reality invalid or at least formally questioned. Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U.S. 425, 6 S.Ct. 1121, 30 L.Ed. 178. One who actually assumes and exercises duties of public office under color of known and authorized appointment or election, but who has failed to comply with all requirements of law prescribed as precedent to performance of duties of the office. State v. Whelan, 103 Idaho 651, 651 P.2d 916, 920.

Officer de jure. One who is in all respects legally appointed and qualified to exercise the office. One who is clothed with the full legal right and title to the office; he is one who has been legally elected or appointed to an office, and who has qualified himself to exercise the duties thereof according to the mode prescribed by law. Trost v. Tynatishon, 12 Ill.App.3d 406, 299 N.E.2d 14, 17.

Officer of justice. A general name applicable to all persons connected with the administration of the judicial department of government, but commonly used only of the class of officers whose duty is to serve the process of the courts, such as sheriffs, constables, bailiffs, marshals, sequestrators, etc.

Officer of the United States. An officer nominated by the President and confirmed by the senate or one who is appointed under an act of congress, by the President alone, a court of law, or a head of a department. U. S. v. Mouat, 124 U.S. 303, 8 S.Ct. 505, 31 L.Ed. 463. See also United States officer.

Public officer. An officer of a public corporation; that is, one holding office under the government of a municipality, state, or nation. One occupying a public office created by law. One of necessary characteristics of "public officer" is that he performs public function for public benefit and in so doing he be vested with exercise of some sovereign power of state.

Warrant officer. Officer of armed forces, with rank between commissioned and non-commissioned officer, holding rank by virtue of warrant.

Officia judiciaia non concedantur antequam vacant /əˈʃɛʃɪə/yə jədɪʃiˈɛəliə nən kɔnˈsɛdəntər əntəkˈwɔm vɛˈːsænt/. Judicial offices should not be granted before they are vacant.

Official, n. An officer; a person invested with the authority of an office. See also Officer.

In Canon law, a person to whom a bishop commits the charge of his spiritual jurisdiction.

In Civil law, the minister or appraiser of a magistrate or judge.

Official, adj. Pertaining to an office; invested with the character of an officer; proceeding from, sanctioned by, or done by, an officer. Authorized act.

As to official Bond; Liquidator; Log Book; Newspaper; Oath; Use, see those titles.

Demi-official. Partly official or authorized. Having color of official right.

Official act. One done by an officer in his official capacity under color and by virtue of his office. Authorized act.

Official misconduct. Any unlawful behavior by a public officer in relation to the duties of his office, willful in its character, including any willful or corrupt failure, refusal, or neglect of an officer to perform any duty enjoined on him by law. See Malfeasance; Misfeasance.

Official bond. Type of fidelity bond required to be posted by certain public officials to indemnify the government, municipality or court in the event of defalcation by the officer.

Official Gazette. Weekly publication of U.S. Patent and Trademark Office containing patent and trademark notices and applications, as well as mark registrations.

Official immunity doctrine. Doctrine of "official immunity" provides that government officials enjoy an absolute privilege from civil liability should the activity in question fall within the scope of their authority and if the action undertaken requires the exercise of discretion, and this rule of immunity is not limited to the highest executive officers of the government. Watson v. Barker, D.C.Pa., 428 F.Supp. 590, 592. See Sovereign immunity.

Official map. In zoning and land use, the authorized map for the determination of proper land use in the city or town, showing the zones and areas and their authorized uses.

Fed.Evid.R. 803(8) provides, without regard to availability of the declarant, a hearsay exception for: "Records, reports, statements, or data compilations, in any form, of public offices or agencies . . . ." Proof of official records at trial is governed by Fed.R.Civil P. 44 and Fed.Evid.R. 1005. Admissibility of official records at administrative proceedings is governed by the Official Records Act (q.v.).

Official Records Act. Federal statute applicable to cases in which the Federal Rules of Evidence do not apply (i.e. administrative proceedings) providing that books and records of account and minutes of any department or agency of the U.S. shall be admissible to prove the act or transaction as a memorandum of which it was made or kept. Properly authenticated copies are equally admissible with the originals. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1733(a).

Official reports or reporters. Publication of court decisions as directed by statute; e.g., United States Supreme Court Reports. 28 U.S.C.A. § 411. See Reports or reporters.

Officina justitiae /ˈɒfɪsə(ə)n ˈjɑːstɪʃiə/ /ˈæʃən jəstəsi/. The workshop or office of justice. The chancery was formerly so called. 3 Bl.Comm. 273.

Officio, ex, oath /ˈowθ ɛks ˈʃɪʃɪərɪəʊ/. An oath whereby a person may be obliged to make any presentment of any criminal matter or thing whereby he may be liable to any censure, penalty, or punishment. 3 Bl.Comm. 447.

Officious will /ˈʃɪʃɪəs wɪl/. A testament by which a testator leaves his property to his family. Inofficious testament.

Officit conatus si effectus sequatur /ˈɒfɪs tɛnˈkətʊs səˈfɪktəs sɛkˈwətər/. The attempt becomes of consequence, if the effect follows.

Of force. In force; extant; not obsolete; existing as a binding or obligatory power.

Offset. A deduction; a counterclaim; a contrary claim or demand by which a given claim may be lessened or canceled. A claim that serves to counterbalance or to compensate for another claim. Steinmeyer v. Warner Consolidated Corp., 42 Cal.App.3d 515, 116 Cal.Rptr. 57. See also Counterclaim; Recoupment; Set-off.

Type of entry in bookkeeping which counters the effect of a prior entry. See Offset account.

Offset account. In bookkeeping, a ledger account which has a corresponding account to be washed against it when the books are closed.

Offshore transactions. Refers to transactions in locations outside the United States, e.g. 31 CFR § 540.401.

Offspring. Children; issue.

Of grace. This phrase had its origin in an age when kings dispensed their royal favors at the hands of chancellor. A term applied to any permission or license granted to a party in the course of a judicial proceeding which is not claimable as a matter of course or of right, but is allowed by the favor or indulgence of the court. See Act of grace.

Of record. Recorded; entered on the records; existing and remaining in or upon the appropriate records; e.g. a mortgage to be "of record" must normally be recorded in the county in which it is properly and legally recordable for purpose of constructive notice. Riley v. Commonwealth, 275 Ky. 370, 121 S.W.2d 921. See also Attorney (Attorney of record); Court (Court of record); Record.

Of right. As a matter of course. See Of course; Right.

Of the blood. A technical legal phrase meaning to be descended from the person referred to or from the same common stock and from a common ancestor. In re Easter's Estate, 24 Cal.2d 191, 148 P.2d 601. See Descend; Next of kin.

Oil and gas lease. Grant of right to extract oil and/or gas from land.

O.K. A conventional symbol often used in commercial practice and occasionally in inndorsements on legal documents, signifying "correct," "approved," "accepted," "satisfactory," or "assented to."

Okay. The colloquial expression means correct, all right, to approve, and is of such common usage that it immediately conveys to the mind of person to whom it is addressed that a proposition submitted is agreed to. Muegler v. Crosthwait, 239 Mo.App. 801, 179 S.W.2d 761, 763. See also O. K.

Old Age, Survivors' and Disability Insurance. A system established under the Federal Social Security Act providing for retirement, disability, widows', widowers', and dependent benefits. Such program is funded by employer, employee and self-employed contributions. See Social Security Administration.

Old natura brevium /ˈɔld ˈnætiərə ˈbriːviəm/. The title of a treatise written in the reign of Edward III, containing the writs which were then most in use, annexing to each a short comment concerning their nature and the application of them, with their various properties and effects.

Old tenures. A treatise, so called to distinguish it from Littleton's book on the same subject, which gives an account of the various tenures by which land was held, the nature of estates, and some other incidents to landed property in the reign of Edward III. It is a very scanty tract, but has the merit of having led the way to Littleton's famous work.

Oleron, Laws of /ˈɔlərn ˈlɔːv ˈɔvlərɒn/. A code of maritime laws published at the island of Oleron in the twelfth century by Eleanor of Guienne. They were adopted in England successively under Richard I, Henry III, and Edward III, and are often cited before the admiralty courts.

Oligarchy /ˈɔlɪgərəki/. A form of government wherein the administration of affairs is lodged in the hands of a few persons.
Oligopoly /ōlagópoli/. Economic condition where only a few companies sell substantially similar or standardized products. U.S. v. E.I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co., D.C.Del., 118 F.Supp. 41, 49. Oligopoly markets often exhibit the lack of competition, high prices and low output of monopoly markets. Harkins Amusement Enterprises, Inc. v. General Cinema Corp., C.A.Ariz., 850 F.2d 477, 490. See also Conscientious parallelism; Monopoly.

Omnis innovatio plus novitiae perturbat quam utilitatem prodest /ōmnas invēsh(y)ow plās nōvwatētyī partārīb ṭwēm yuwtīlētyī prōwdest/. Every innovation occasions more harm by its novelty than benefit by its utility.

Omnis interpretatio si fieri potest ita fienda est in instrumentis, ut omnes contrarietates amoveatur /ōmnas aΝtāprātēsh(y)ow, sāy ēfāyāray pōwṭast āyta fayēndā ēst ēn īnstrāmēntās, āt ōmnis kantrēryātyētyīz amōwvyiayntar/. Every interpretation, if it can be done, is to be so made in instruments that all contradictions may be removed.

Omnis interpretatio vel declarat, vel extendit, vel restringit /ōmnas aΝtāprātēsh(y)ow vēl dāklērēst, vēl aksēndāst, vēl rāstrinjst/. Every interpretation either declares, extends, or restrains.

Omnis nova constituto futuris formam imponere debet, non præteritis /ōmnas nōwā kōnstitut(y)ūwzh(y)ow fāstýyūrs fōrmām ĭmpōnāriy ēdēst, nōn prēṭēhrastās/. Every new statute ought to prescribe a form to future, not to past, acts.
Omnis persona est homo, sed non vicissim /ómnas porsówna ét hówmow séd nón vásim/. Every person is a man, but not every man a person.

Omnis privatio presupponit habitum /ómnas prsvéy-sh(i)yow priysówpwnt hëbstam/. Every privation presupposes a former enjoyment. A "rule of philosophie" quoted by Lord Coke, and applied to the discontinuance of an estate.

Omnis querela et omnis actio injuriarum limita est infra certa tempora /ómnas kwérela et ómnas inyiréyam limita ét infra sárta témpora/. Every plaint and every action for injuries is limited within certain times.

Omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur et mandato priori /ómnas ratihabitio rétrôtrahitur et mandato priori/. Every ratification relates back and is equivalent to a prior author­-

Omnis regulæ suas patitur exceptione /ómnas régula réypal er exceptione/. Every rule is liable to its own exceptions.

Omnium /ómnium/. In mercantile law, a term used to express the aggregate value of the different stock in trade of an estate.

Once a mortgage, always a mortgage. This rule or maxim signifies that an instrument originally intended as a mortgage, and not a deed, cannot be converted into anything else than a mortgage by any subsequent clause or agreement.

On account. There is no legal difference between an obligation payable "when demanded" or "on demand" and one payable "on call" or "at any time called for." In each case the debt is payable on demand. See On call.

On account of whom it may concern. In case of default; upon failure of stipulated action or performance; upon the occurrence of a failure, omission, or neglect of duty.

One person, one vote. A principle of the law of general average.
also means based upon, supported by, or relating to a good and valuable consideration, i.e., one which imposes a burden or charge in return for the benefit conferred.

Onerous contract. See Contract.

Onerous gift. A gift made subject to certain charges imposed by the donor on the donee.

Onerous title. A title acquired by the giving of a valuable consideration, as the payment of money or renditions of services or the performance of conditions or assumption or discharge of liens or charges.

One sided. See Unconscionability.

One year. A calendar year, regardless of whether it be a leap year or otherwise. Douglas v. Acacia Mut. Life Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 118 S.W.2d 643.

On file. Filed; entered or placed upon the files; existing and remaining upon or among the proper files.

O.Ni. In old English practice it was the course of the exchequer, as soon as the sheriff entered into and made up his account for issues, amerciaments, etc., to mark upon each head "O. Ni.," which denoted oneratur, nisi habeat sufficientem exonationem, and presently he became the king's debtor, and a debet was set upon his head; whereupon the parties paruvalle became debtors to the sheriff, and were discharged against the king, etc.

Only. Solely; merely; for no other purpose; at no other time; in no otherwise; along; or by itself; without anything more; exclusive; nothing else or more.

Onomastic./ˈɒnəmæstɪk/. A term applied to the signature of an instrument, the body of which is in a different handwriting from that of the signature.

On or about. A phrase used in reciting the date of an occurrence or conveyance, or the location of it to escape the necessity of being bound by the statement of an exact date, or place; approximately; about; without substantial variance from; near. For purpose of pleading, term "on or about," with respect to specified date, means generally in time around date specified. Fortner v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., Tex.App. 5 Dist., 687 S.W.2d 8, 11.

On or about the person. As used in statutes making it an offense to carry a weapon "on or about" the person, it is generally held that the word "on" means connected with or attached to, and that "about" is a comprehensive term having a broader meaning than "on," and conveying the idea of being nearby, in close proximity, within immediate reach, or conveniently accessible.

On or before. These words, inserted in a stipulation to do an act or pay money, entitle the party stipulating to perform at any time before the day; and upon performance, or tender and refusal, he is immediately vested with all the rights which would have attached if performance were made on the day.

On sale. In context of patent law, an invention may be placed "on sale" in two ways: first, it may be placed on sale by an actual and completed transaction and, alternatively, an invention is placed "on sale" whenever its inventor or his company engages in any activity to sell the invention, including making an offer for sale; under the first situation, an inventor must construct a physical specimen of his invention and deliver it to a third party who accepts it. General Motors Corp. v. Toyota Motor Co., Ltd., D.C.Ohio, 467 F.Supp. 1142, 1165.

Onset date. A term of art used by the Social Security Administration that marks the commencement of a period of disability for purposes of disability payments. Michalak v. Weinberger, D.C.Tex., 416 F.Supp. 1213, 1214.

On the brief. Phrase which refers to the names of all persons who participated in writing the brief, whether or not such persons are attorneys of record.

On the merits. See Merits; Judgment (Merits, judgment on).

On the person. In common parlance, when it is said that someone has an article on his person, it means that it is either in contact with his person or is carried in his clothing. See also On or about.

Onus /ˈɒnəs/. Lat. A burden or load; a weight. Burden of responsibility or proof. The lading, burden, or cargo of a vessel. A charge; an incumbrance. Cum onere (q.v.), with the incumbrance.

Onus episcopale /ˈɒnəs ɪpəsˈkoʊpəli/. Ancient customary payments from the clergy to their diocesan bishop, of synodals, pentecostals, etc.

Onus probandi /ˈɒnəs prəˈbændi/. Burden of proving; the burden of proof. The strict meaning of the term "onus probandi" is that, if no evidence is adduced by the party on whom the burden is cast, the issue must be found against him.

OPEC. Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Ope consilio /ˈɔpi kənˈsɪliəʊ/ Lat. By aid and counsel. A civil law term applied to accessories, similar in import to the "aiding and abetting" of the common law. Often written "ope et consilio."

Open, v. To render accessible, visible, or available; to submit or subject to examination, inquiry, or review, by the removal of restrictions or impediments.

Open a case. In practice, to open a case is to begin it; to make an initiatory explanation (i.e. opening statement) of its features to the court, jury, referee, etc., by outlining the nature of the occurrence or transaction on which it is founded, the questions involved, and the character and general course of the evidence to be adduced. See also Opening statement of counsel.

Open a commission. To enter upon the duties under a commission, or commence to act under a commission. Thus, in England the judges of assize and nisi prius derived their authority to act under or by virtue of commissions directed to them for that purpose; and, when they commenced acting under the powers so committed to them, they were said to open the commissions; and the day on which they so commenced their proceed-Openings was as such termed the "commission day of the assizes".

Open a court. To open a court is to make a formal announcement, usually by the crier or bailiff, that its session has now begun and that the business before the court will be proceeded with.

Open a judgment. To lift or relax the bar of finality and conclusiveness which it imposes so as to permit a re-examination of the merits of the action in which it was rendered. This is done at the instance of a party showing good cause why the execution of the judgment would be inequitable. It so far annuls the judgment as to prevent its enforcement until the final determination upon it. Fed.R.Civ. P. 60 governs relief from judgment because of mistakes, inadvertence, excusable neglect, newly discovered evidence, fraud, etc.

Open a rule. To restore or recall a rule which has been made absolute to its conditional state, as a rule nisi, so as to readmit of cause being shown against the rule. Thus, when a rule to show cause has been made absolute under a mistaken impression that no counsel had been instructed to show cause against it, it is usual for the party at whose instance the rule was obtained to consent to have the rule opened, by which all the proceedings subsequent to the day when cause ought to have been shown against it are in effect nullified, and the rule is then argued in the ordinary way.

Open a street or highway. To establish it by law and make it passable and available for public travel.

Open the door. If one party to litigation puts in evidence part of document or correspondence or conversation which is detrimental to the opposing party, the latter may introduce balance of document, correspondence or conversation in order to explain or rebut adverse inferences which might arise from the fragmentary or incomplete character of evidence introduced by his adversary. This is known as Rule of Completeness. U. S. v. Corrigan, C.C.A.N.Y., 168 F.2d 641, 645. See also Fed.Evid. R. 106.

Open, adj. Patent; visible; apparent; notorious; exposed to public view; not clandestine; not closed, settled, fixed, or terminated.

As an element of adverse possession, see Open and notorious.

As to open Corporation; Entry; Insolvency; Lewdness; Policy; Possession; Verdict, see those titles.

Open account. An unpaid or unsettled account; an account with a balance which has not been ascertained, which is kept open in anticipation of future transactions. Kugler v. Northwest Aviation, Inc., App., 108 Idaho 884, 702 P.2d 922, 925. Type of credit extended by a seller to buyer which permits buyer to make purchases without a note or security and it is based on an evaluation of the buyer's credit. A contractual obligation which may be modified by subsequent agreement of the parties, either by expressed assent or implied from the conduct of the parties, provided the agreement changing the contractual obligation is based upon independent consideration. Bloch v. Fedak, 210 Kan. 63, 499 P.2d 1052, 1054. See also Open credit; Open-end credit plan.

Open and notorious. Acts on the land of another sufficient to alert the owner of a claim to his land which may ripen into title under adverse possession. See also Adverse possession; Notorious possession.

Behavior which is "open and notorious" for purposes of statute prohibiting adultery is behavior which is prominent, conspicuous and generally known and recognized by the public. The prohibition of open and notorious adultery is meant to protect the public from conduct which disturbs the peace, tends to promote breaches of the peace, and openly flouts accepted standards of morality in the community. People v. Cessna, 1 Ill.Dec. 433, 42 Ill.App.3d 746, 356 N.E.2d 621, 623.

Open bid. An offer to perform a contract, generally of a construction nature, in which the bidder reserves the right to reduce his bid to compete with a lower bid.

Open bulk. In the mass; exposed to view; not tied or sealed up.

Open court. Common law requires a trial in open court; "open court" means a court to which the public have a right to be admitted. People v. Rose, 82 Misc.2d 429, 368 N.Y.S.2d 387, 390. This term may mean either a court which has been formally convened and declared open for the transaction of its proper judicial business, or a court which is freely open to spectators. For accused's right to an open/public trial, see Public trial.

Open credit. Line of credit extended up to a certain amount by a merchant, bank or supplier so as to permit borrowings or purchases to such amount without posting security or reestablishing credit limit. See also Open account; Open-end credit plan.

Open-end contract. Contract which permits buyer to make purchases over a period of time without change in the price or terms by the seller.

Open-end credit plan. Credit extended pursuant to a plan providing for and contemplating continuing or repetitive transactions on credit. Town & Country Co-op v. Lang, N.D., 286 N.W.2d 482, 487. For purposes of Truth in Lending Act, "open end credit plan" is one in which credit terms are initially established with the opening of the account, but no fixed amount of debt is incurred at that time with purchases made from time to time instead being added to the outstanding balance in the account; each new purchase represents an additional extension of credit. Goldman v. First Nat. Bank of Chicago, C.A.III., 532 F.2d 10, 17. Examples are credit cards and "revolving charges" where one can pay a part of what he owes each month on several different purchases.

Open-end investment company. A mutual fund which will buy back its shares at net asset value and which is continuously offering to sell new shares to the public. See Mutual fund.
Open-end investment trust. Type of trust in which the trustees are permitted to make on-going investments for its portfolio.

Open-end lease. Lease with no fixed termination date. BNO Leasing Corp. v. Hollins & Hollins, Inc., et al., La.App., 448 So.2d 1329, 1333.

Open-end mortgage. A mortgage that allows the borrowing of additional sums, usually providing that at least the stated ratio of assets to the debt must be maintained. A mortgage which provides for future advances on the given mortgage and increases the amount of the existing mortgage.

Open-end transaction. Generic term to describe a loose transaction in which the parties may add to or amend the original bargain or agreement. It may include an open-end mortgage or open-end credit arrangement.

Open fields doctrine. This doctrine permits police officers to enter and search a field without a warrant. The term "open fields" may include any unoccupied or undeveloped area outside of the curtilage. Oliver v. U.S., 466 U.S. 170, 104 S.Ct. 1735, 80 L.Ed.2d 214. See also Dow Chemical Co. v. U.S., 476 U.S. 227, 106 S.Ct. 1819, 90 L.Ed.2d 226, U.S. v. Dunn, 480 U.S. 294, 107 S.Ct. 1134, 94 L.Ed.2d 326.

Opening statement of counsel. Outline or summary of nature of case and of anticipated proof presented by attorney to jury at start of trial, before any evidence is submitted. Speer v. Shipley, 149 Kan. 15, 85 P.2d 999, 1001. Its purpose is to advise the jury of facts relied upon and of issues involved, and to give jury a general picture of the facts and the situations so that jury will be able to understand the evidence. State v. Erwin, 101 Utah 365, 120 P.2d 285, 313. Opening statement in criminal case is outline of facts which prosecution in good faith expects to prove. People v. Roberts, 100 Ill.App.3d 469, 55 Ill.Dec. 779, 426 N.E.2d 1104, 1109.

Open letter of credit. An unrestricted letter of credit which will be paid on a simple draft without the need of documentary title. See also Letter of credit.

Open listing. A type of real estate listing contract whereby any agent who has a right to participate in the open listing is entitled to a commission if he produces the sale. See also Listing.

Open mortgage clause. See Union mortgage clause.

Open order. An order to buy securities or commodities at or below or above a certain price and such order remains viable until canceled by the customer.

Open price term. The parties if they so intend can conclude a contract for sale even though the price is not settled. In such a case the price is a reasonable price at the time for delivery if: (a) nothing is said as to price; or (b) the price is left to be agreed by the parties and they fail to agree; or (c) the price is to be fixed in terms of some agreed market or other standard as set or recorded by a third person or agency and it is not so set or recorded. U.C.C. § 2–305.

Open sea. The expanse and mass of any great body of water, as distinguished from its margin or coast, its harbors, bays, creeks, inlets.

Open possession. See Notorious possession; Open and notorious.

Open season. That portion of the year wherein the laws for the preservation of game and fish permit the killing of a particular species of game or the taking of a particular variety of fish.

Open shop. A business in which union and non-union workers are employed indiscriminately. Business in which union membership is not a condition of securing or maintaining employment. See Right to work laws. Contrast Closed shop.

Open space. Any parcel or area of land or water essentially unimproved and set aside, dedicated, designated or reserved for public or private use or enjoyment or for the use and enjoyment of owners and occupants of land adjoining or neighboring such open spaces.

Common open space. An open space area within or related to a site designated as a development and designed and intended for the use or enjoyment of residents and owners of the development. Common open space may contain such complementary structures and improvements as are necessary and appropriate for the use or enjoyment of residents and owners of the development.

Open trial. See Public trial.

Open union. A labor union without restrictive membership provisions. See also Open shop.

Operarii /əˈpærəriː//. Such tenants, under feudal tenures, as held some little portions of land by the duty of performing bodily labor and servile works for their lord.

Operate. To perform a function, or operation, or produce an effect. See Operation.

Operating budget. A collection of individual budgets that combine to form a part of a firm's integrated business plan, usually for the next year. It is normally composed of a sales budget and a production budget.

Operating expenses. Those expenses required to keep the business running, e.g. rent, electricity, heat. Expenses incurred in the course of ordinary activities of an entity.

Operating lease. A lease agreement, usually cancellable, which provides the lessee with the use of an asset for a period of time which is considerably shorter than the useful life of the asset. Unlike a capital lease, the lessee in an operating lease does not assume the economic risks of ownership, and the lessor generally provides all of the maintenance and services on the leased asset.

Operating margin. Net operating income divided by sales for the period.

Operating profit. Deducting the cost of goods sold from sales gives gross profit. Deducting the operating expense (overhead) from the gross profit gives the operating profit.
Operatio /ɒpərˈeɪʃ(ə)n/. One day's work performed by a tenant for his lord.

Operation. Exertion of power; the process of operating or mode of action; an effect brought about in accordance with a definite plan; action; activity. In surgical practice, the term may be defined as an act or succession of acts performed upon the body of a patient, for his relief or restoration to normal conditions, by the use of surgical instruments as distinguished from therapeutic treatment by the administration of drugs or other remedial agencies.

Operation of law. This term expresses the manner in which rights, and sometimes liabilities, devolve upon a person by the mere application to the particular transaction of the established rules of law, without the act or co-operation of the party himself.

Operative. A workman; a laboring man; an artisan; particularly one employed in factories. Secret agent or detective.

Operative part. That part of a conveyance, or of any instrument intended for the creation or transference of rights, by which the main object of the instrument is carried into effect. It is distinguished from introductory matter, recitals, formal conclusion, etc.

Operative words. In a deed or lease, such are the words which effect the transaction intended to be consummated by the instrument.

Operis novi nuntiatio /ɒpərɪs ˈnʌvɪ nʌntɪˈeɪʃ(ə)n/. In the civil law, a protest or warning against [of] a new work.

Opetide /ɔʊpɪˈtɪd/. The ancient time of marriage, from Epiphany to Ash-Wednesday.

Ophthalmologist /oʊθəlˈmələdʒ/. One who is skilled in, or practices, ophthalmology. Practice of "oculists" and "ophthalmologists" has relation to practice of medicine and surgery in treatment of diseases of eye, while practice of "optometry" relates to measurement of powers of vision and adaptation of lenses for aid thereof. See Oculist.

Opiate. Any substance having an addiction-forming or addiction-sustaining liability similar to morphine or being capable of conversion into a drug having addiction-forming or addiction-sustaining liability.

OPIC. Overseas Private Investment Corporation.

Opinio est duplex, scilicet, opinio vulgaris, orta inter graves et discretos, et quaerit veritatis habet; et opinio tantum orta inter leves et vulgarres homines, abscque specie veritatis /ɔpɪˈnɪəʊ ɪst ˈdʌplɪks, skɪlɪsɛt, ɔpɪˈnɪəʊ ˈvʊɡələris, ɔrta ɪntər greɪvz ət dɪsərɪtəʊs, ət kweɪrɪt ˈvɜːtɪtəs ˈhæbɛt; ət ɔpɪˈnɪəʊ ˈtæntʌm ɔrta ɪntər lɪˈviːrɪz ët vɔɡʊərəz ˈhəʊmɪniz, abskkw ˈspɛkjə vrɪˈtætɪs/. Opinion is of two kinds, namely, common opinion, which springs up among grave and discreet men, and which has the appearance of truth, and opinion which springs up only among light and foolish men, without the semblance of truth.

Opinion. A document prepared by an attorney for his client, embodying his understanding of the law as applicable to a state of facts submitted to him for that purpose; e.g. an opinion of an attorney as to the market-ability of a land title as determined from a review of the abstract of title and other public records.

The statement by a judge or court of the decision reached in regard to a cause tried or argued before them, expounding the law as applied to the case, and detailing the reasons upon which the judgment is based.

An expression of the reasons why a certain decision (the judgment) was reached in a case. A majority opinion is usually written by one judge and represents the principles of law which a majority of his colleagues on the court deem operative in a given decision; it has more precedential value than any of the following. A separate opinion may be written by one or more judges in which he or they concur in or dissent from the majority opinion. A concurring opinion agrees with the result reached by the majority, but disagrees with the precise reasoning leading to that result. A dissenting or minority opinion disagrees with the result reached by the majority and thus disagrees with the reasoning and/or the principles of law used by the majority in deciding the case. A plurality opinion is agreed to by less than a majority as to the reasoning of the decision, but is agreed to by a majority as to the result. A per curiam opinion is an opinion "by the court" which expresses its decision in the case but whose author is not identified. A memorandum opinion is a holding of the whole court in which the opinion is very concise.

In accounting, a document prepared by a certified public accountant regarding the audited financial statements of an entity. There are four types of opinions:

Unqualified: The financial statements are presented fairly in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles (GAAP) and are presented in a manner consistent with the prior year. An unqualified opinion is considered a clean opinion.

Qualified: The financial statements are presented fairly in accordance with GAAP applied on a basis consistent with the prior year, "except for" a particular transaction, or "subject to" a certain event.

Disclaimer: The CPA is unable to render an opinion on the financial statements due to insufficient competent evidential matter.

Adverse: The financial statements are not presented fairly in conformity with GAAP, or do not present fairly the financial position, results of operation, and changes in the financial position of the entity. An adverse opinion is uncommon and generally results when the CPA is unable to convince the client to present the financial statements fairly and in conformity with GAAP. See also Adverse opinion.

See also Audit (Audit opinion).

See also Advisory opinion; Letter ruling; Majority opinion; Opinion evidence or testimony; Plurality; Slip opinion; Title opinion; Unqualified opinion.
Opinion evidence or testimony. Evidence of what the witness thinks, believes, or infers in regard to facts in dispute, as distinguished from his personal knowledge of the facts themselves. The rules of evidence ordinarily do not permit witnesses to testify as to opinions or conclusions. An exception to this rule exists as to "expert witnesses". Witnesses who, by education and experience, have become expert in some art, science, profession, or calling, may state their opinions as to relevant and material matter, in which they profess to be expert, and may also state their reasons for the opinion.

By expert witness. If scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion or otherwise. Fed.Evid. Rule 702. See also Expert testimony; Expert witness.

By lay witness. If the witness is not testifying as an expert, his testimony in the form of opinions or inferences is limited to those opinions or inferences which are (a) rationally based on the perception of the witness and (b) helpful to a clear understanding of his testimony or the determination of a fact in issue. Fed.Evid. Rule 701.

Opinio que favet testamento est tenenda. The opinion which favors a will is to be followed.

Opium. Drug consisting of inspissated juice of opium poppy.

Oportet quod certæ personas, terræ, et certi status comprehendantur in declaratione usuum. It is necessary that given persons, lands, and estates should be comprehended in a declaration of uses.

Oportet quod certa res deducatur in donationem. A thing certain must be brought to judgment.

Oportet quod certa res deducatur in judicium. A thing certain must be brought to judgment.

Oppignare. Lat. In the civil law, to pledge.

Opposer. An officer formerly belonging to the green-wax in the exchequer.

Opposite. An old word for "opponent."

Opposite party. Within statutes providing that opposite party shall be incompetent to testify as to matters equally within knowledge of deceased is one whose personal and financial interests, either immediate or remote, are antagonistic to like interests of protected party.

Opposition. Act of opposing or resisting; antagonism; state of being opposite or opposed; antithesis. Also, a position confronting another or placing in contrast; that which is or furnishes an obstacle to some result. Political party opposed to ministry or administration; or might be construed to include peaceful and orderly opposition to government.

Oppression. The misdemeanor committed by a public officer, who under color of his office, wrongfully inflicts upon any person any bodily harm, imprisonment, or other injury. An act of cruelty, severity, unlawful exaction, or excessive use of authority. An act of subjecting to cruel and unjust hardship; an act of domination.

Oppression which justifies award of punitive damages means act of cruelty, severity, unlawful exaction, or excessive use of authority and results from acts done in manner which violates right of another person with unnecessary harshness or severity as by misuse or abuse of authority or power. Dunfee v. Baskin-Robbins, Inc., 221 Mont. 447, 720 P.2d 1148, 1155.

See Coercion; Cruelty; Threat.

Oppressor. A public officer who unlawfully uses his authority by way of oppression.

Opprobrium. In the civil law, ignominy; infamy; shame.

Optimacy. Nobility; men of the highest rank.

Optima est legis interpres consuetudo. Custom is the best interpreter of the law.

Optima legis est minima relinquit arbitrio judiciis; optimus judex qui minimum sibi. That law is the best which leaves the least discretion to the judge; that judge is the best who leaves least to his own. That system of law is best which confines as little as possible to the discretion of the judge; that judge the best who relies as little as possible on his own opinion.

Optimum esse legem, quæ minimum relinquit arbitrio judiciis; id quod certitudo ejus præstāt. That law is the best which leaves the least discretion to the judge; and this is an advantage which results from its certainty.

Optima statuti interpretatrix est (omnibus particulis ejusdem inspectis) ipsum statutum. The best interpreter of a statute is (all its parts being considered) the statute itself.
Optimus interpres rerum usus /óptamas antárpríyz írim mųywâs/. Use or usage is the best interpreter of things.

Optimus interpretandi modus est sic leges interpretari ut leges legibus concordant /óptamas intárprátãnday mówdas est sik liyjyz intárprátãray ât liyjyz liyjabs kaqkórdant/. The best mode of interpretation is so to interpret laws that they may accord with each other.

Optimus judex, qui minimum sibi tari. He is the best judge who relies as little as possible on his own discretion.

Optimus legum interpres consuetudo /óptamas liygam antárpríyz kónswây yúwdow/. Custom is the best interpreter of the laws.

Option. Right of election to exercise a privilege. Contract made for consideration to keep an offer open for a prescribed period. A right, which acts as a continuing offer, given for consideration, to purchase or lease property at an agreed upon price and terms, within a specified time. An option is an agreement which gives the optionee the power to accept an offer for a limited time. Kelman v. Bohi, 27 Ariz.App. 24, 550 P.2d 671, 675. An option to purchase or to sell is not a contract to purchase or sell, as optionee has the right to accept or to reject the offer, in accordance with its terms, and is not bound. Catmull v. Johnson, Utah, 541 P.2d 793, 795.

An option contract is a promise which meets the requirements for the formation of a contract and limits the promisor's power to revoke an offer. Restatement, Second, Contracts, § 25.

A privilege existing in one person, for which he has paid money, which gives him the right to buy certain commodities or certain specified securities from another person, if he chooses, at any time within an agreed period, at a fixed price, or to sell such commodities or securities to such other person at an agreed price and time. If the option gives the choice of buying or not buying, it is denominated a "call." If it gives the choice of selling or not, it is called a "put." If it is a combination of both these, and gives the privilege of either buying or selling or not, it is called a "straddle" or a "spread eagle."

The sale or exchange of an option to buy or sell property results in capital gain or loss if the property is a capital asset. See also Call; Cash value option; Local option; Option to purchase; Put.

Commodity futures option. The right—but not the obligation—to buy or sell a futures contract at a specified price within a fixed period, say, three, six, nine months or longer. The option buyer pays a premium to the dealer for this right, plus the usual commission and nothing else. The option buyer does not have to be concerned about margin calls. All he can lose is the premium paid and commission.

Commodity option. A right that is purchased by the option holder entitling him either to buy ("call option") from or to sell ("put option") at a stated price and within a stated time an underlying physical commodity (such as a specific quantity of gold, a train carload of coffee, etc.), or a commodity futures contract relating to that commodity. The price paid for the option right is referred to as the "premium," and the price at which the option purchaser is entitled to buy or sell the underlying commodity for futures contract is referred to as the "striking price." "Exercise" is the decision of an option holder to require performance by the grantor of his obligation with respect to the underlying commodity or futures contract. The period during which an option may be exercised is specified in the contract. The "exercise date" or "expiration date" is the final day on which the option holder may exercise the option.

Index option. A type of security in which the holder has the right to buy or sell, for a specified price at a specified future date, a theoretical interest in stocks making up the index. The option is exercised in cash, in an amount equal to the difference between the closing level of the index on the exercise date and the exercise price of the option, multiplied by the index "multiplier." Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc. v. Yang, C.A. Cal. 679 F.Supp. 981, 983.

Naked options. Options sold by investors granting others the right to buy stock from them even though they own no stock to back up those commitments.

Option premium. The consideration paid to keep a contractual offer to buy or sell open for a specified period of time.

Stock option. The right to buy stock in the future at a price fixed in advance. See also Stock.

Incentive stock option. See Qualified stock option, below.

Non-qualified stock option. Stock option which does not meet the qualifications of a restricted stock option. See Restricted stock option, below.

Qualified stock option. An option to purchase shares provided to an employee of the corporation under terms that qualify the option for special tax treatment under the Internal Revenue Code. I.R.C. § 421 et seq.

Restricted stock option. A right granted to an employee prior to 1964 which allows such an employee to buy stock at a fixed price established in advance. The options are restricted with respect to the option price, time of exercise, amount owned by the optionee, non-transferability, and minimum holding period. Restricted stock options were replaced by Qualified Stock Options in 1964, and Incentive Stock Options in 1981. I.R.C. § 424.

Optional writ. In old English practice, that species of original writ, otherwise called a "praecipe," which was framed in the alternative, commanding the defendant to do the thing required, or show the reason wherefore he had not done it.

Optionee. One who receives an option.

Option spread. In securities trading, the difference between the option price and the fair market value of

Option to purchase. A bilateral contract in which one party is given the right to buy the property within a period of time for a consideration paid to the seller. A right acquired by contract to accept or reject a present offer within a limited or reasonable time and is simply a contract by which the owner of property agrees with another person that he shall have the right to buy his property at a fixed price within a certain time. Crockett v. Lowther, Wyo., 549 P.2d 303, 308. See also Option.

Opus /öwpas/. Lat. Work; labor; the product of work or labor.

Opus locatum /öwpas lówkéytam/. The product of work let for use to another; or the hiring out of work or labor to be done upon a thing.

Opus manificum /öwpas mánafish(y)am/. In old English law, labor done by the hands; manual labor; such as making a hedge, digging a ditch.

Opus novum /öwpas nówvam/. In the civil law, a new work. By this term was meant something newly built upon land, or taken from a work already erected. He was said opus novum facere (to make a new work) who, either by building or by taking anything away, changed the former appearance of a work.

Or, n. A term used in heraldry, and signifying gold; called "sol" by some heralds when it occurs in the arms of princes, and "topaz" or "carbuncle" when borne by peers. Engravers represent it by an indefinite number of small points.

Or, conj. A disjunctive particle used to express an alternative or to give a choice of one among two or more things. It is also used to clarify what has already been said, and in such cases, means "in other words," "to wit," or "that is to say." The word "or" is to be used as a function word to indicate an alternative between different or unlike things. City of Toledo v. Lucas County Budget Commission, 33 Ohio St.2d 62, 294 N.E.2d 661, 663. In some usages, the word "or" creates a multiple rather than an alternative obligation; where necessary in interpreting an instrument, "or" may be construed to mean "and." Atchison v. City of Englewood, Colo., 568 P.2d 13, 18.

Oraculum /örákylam/. In the civil law, the name of a kind of response or sentence given by the Roman emperors.

Oral. Uttered by the mouth or in words; spoken, not written.

Oral argument. Presentation of reasons for affirmation, reversal, modification, etc. by appellee and appellant before appellate court; generally limited in time by court rule; e.g. Fed.R.App.P. 34.

Statement before court in support of, or in objection to, motion or other legal relief sought.

Oral confession. Statement given orally by defendant in which he admits the commission of the crime. Its admissibility in evidence is dependent upon its voluntariness, the condition of the defendant at the time of the confession, the length of time during which the defendant was held by the police before being brought before a magistrate and other factors. Federal courts generally hold that the burden of establishing the constitutional admissibility of a confession rests upon the prosecution. Pea v. United States, 130 U.S.App.D.C. 66, 397 F.2d 627. See also Confession; Miranda Rule; Self-incrimination.

Oral contract. One which is partly in writing and partly depends on spoken words, or none of which is in writing; one which, so far as it has been reduced to writing, is incomplete or expresses only a part of what is intended, but is completed by spoken words; or one which, originally written, has afterwards been changed orally. See also Contract (Parol contract).

Oral evidence. Evidence given by word of mouth; the oral testimony of a witness. See Parol evidence.

Oral pleading. Pleading by word of mouth, in the actual presence of the court. This was the ancient mode of pleading in England, and continued to the reign of Edward III.

Oral trust. The transfer of property in trust informally through an oral declaration in contrast to a formal trust which is in writing. Real estate trusts may not be created orally. See Frauds, Statute of.

Oral will. See Nuncupative will.

Orando pro rege et regno /orándow prów rifly jē rēgnow/. An ancient writ which issued, while there was no standing collect for a sitting parliament, to pray for the peace and good government of the realm.

Orator. The plaintiff in a cause or matter in chancery, when addressing or petitioning the court, used to style himself "orator," and, when a woman, "oratrix." But these terms have long gone into disuse, and the customary phrases now are "plaintiff" or "petitioner."

In Roman law, the term denoted an advocate.

Oratrix /orétryaks/. A female petitioner; a female plaintiff in a bill of chancery was formerly so called. This term is obsolete.

Orbation /orbéyshan/. Deprivation of one's parents or children, or privation in general.

Orcinus libertus /ôrénéus labörtes/. Lat. In Roman law, a freedman who obtained his liberty by the direct operation of the will or testament of his deceased master was so called, being the freedman of the deceased (orcinus), not of the hares.

Ordain. To institute or establish; to make an ordinance; to enact a constitution or law. To confer on a person the holy orders of priest or deacon.

Ordeal. The most ancient species of trial, in Saxon and old English law, being peculiarly distinguished by the appellation of "judicium Dei," or "judgment of God," it being supposed that supernatural intervention would rescue an innocent person from the danger of physical harm to which he was exposed in this species of trial.

Orum /ôrums/. Lat. Work; labor; the product of work or labor.
The ordeal was of two sorts,—either fire ordeal or water ordeal; the former being confined to persons of higher rank, the latter to the common people.

Fire ordeal. The ordeal by fire or red-hot iron, which was performed either by taking up in the hand a piece of red-hot iron, of one, two, or three pounds weight, or by walking barefoot and blindfolded over nine red-hot plowshares, laid lengthwise at unequal distances.

Water ordeal. In Saxon and old English law, the ordeal or trial by water. The hot-water ordeal was performed by plunging the bare arm up to the elbow in boiling water, and escaping unhurt thereby. The cold-water ordeal was performed by casting the person suspected into a river or pond of cold water, when, if he floated therein, without any action of swimming it was deemed an evidence of his guilt; but, if he sunk, he was acquitted. 4 Bl.Comm. 343.

Ordeffe, or ordelfe /ör'delf/. A liberty whereby a man claims the ore found in his own land; also, the ore lying under land.

Ordels /ôrdîlz/. In old English law, the right of administering oaths and adjudging trials by ordeal within a precinct or liberty.

Order. A mandate; precept; command or direction authoritatively given; rule or regulation. Brady v. Interstate Commerce Commission, D.C.W.Va., 43 F.2d 847, 850. Direction of a court or judge made or entered in writing, and not included in a judgment, which determines some point or directs some step in the proceedings. An application for an order is a motion.

In commercial law, a designation of the person to whom a bill of exchange or negotiable promissory note is to be paid. An "order" is a direction to pay and must be more than an authorization or request. It must identify the person to pay with reasonable certainty. It may be addressed to one or more such persons jointly or in the alternative but not in succession. V.C.C. § 3-102(1)(b).

Money. See Money.

Market order. An order from a customer to a broker to buy or to sell a security at the market price then prevailing and hence the order must be executed promptly.

Stop order. Order to stockbroker to wait until the market price of the particular security reaches a specified figure, and then to "stop" the transaction by either selling or buying, as the case may be, as well as possible.

Order bill of lading. A negotiable bill of lading directing that the goods be delivered to the person named or his order upon indorsement.
Order document. A document of title that runs to a named person, either because the document was so issued or because the document was specially indorsed, which can therefore be negotiated only by the named person indorsing it. See U.C.C. § 7-501(1)-(3).

Order instrument. A negotiable instrument that is payable to order either because the instrument was so issued, or because the instrument was specially indorsed. See U.C.C. §§ 3–110 (when instruments originally payable to order); 3–204(1).

Order nisi. A provisional or conditional order, allowing a certain time within which to do some required act, on failure of which the order will be made absolute.

Order of Coif. See Coif.

Order of filiation. An order made by a court or judge having jurisdiction, fixing the paternity of a child born out of wedlock upon a given man, and requiring him to provide for its support.

Order paper. A negotiable instrument which is payable to a specific payee or to any person the payee, by his or her indorsement, designates. See U.C.C. § 3–104(1)(d); § 3–110. See also Order document; Order instrument.

Orders. The directions as to the course and purpose of a voyage given by the owner of the vessel to the captain or master. For other meanings, see Order.

Order to show cause. See Show cause order.

Ordinance. A rule established by authority; a permanent rule of action; a law or statute. In its most common meaning, the term is used to designate the enactments of the legislative body of a municipal corporation. It designates a local law of a municipal corporation, duly enacted by the proper authorities, prescribing general, uniform, and permanent rules of conduct relating to the corporate affairs of the municipality. Morris v. Town of Newington, 36 Conn.Sup. 74, 411 A.2d 939, 943. An ordinance is the equivalent of a municipal statute, passed by the city council, or equivalent body, and governing matters not already covered by federal or state law. Ordinances commonly govern zoning, building, safety, etc. matters of municipality.

The name has also been given to certain enactments, more general in their character than ordinary statutes, and serving as organic laws, yet not exactly to be called "constitutions." Such was the "Ordinance for the government of the North-West Territory," enacted by congress in 1787.

See also Municipal ordinance. Compare Resolution.

Ordinance of 1647. A law passed by the Colony of Massachusetts, still in force, in a modified form, where-by the state owns the great ponds within its confines, which are held in trust for public uses. Watuppa Reservoir Co. v. Fall River, 147 Mass. 548, 18 N.E. 465.

Ordinance of 1787. A statute for the government of the Northwest Territory. Religious and legal freedom, encouragement of education, just treatment of the Indians, the future division into States, and the exclusion of slavery were ordained.

Ordinandi lex /órdanánday léks/. Lat. The law of procedure, as distinguished from the substantial part of the law.

Ordinarius ita dicitur quia habet ordinariam jurisdictionem, in jure proprio, et non propter deputationem /órdanériyás áyta disstar kwáya hérobt órdanériyám júrádikshiywónam in júriy pówpréiyow ét nón próprt dépéstéyshiywónam/. The ordinary is so called because he has an ordinary jurisdiction in his own right, and not a deputed one.

Ordinary, n. At common law, one who had exempt and immediate jurisdiction in causes ecclesiastical. Also a bishop; and an archbishop is the ordinary of the whole province, to visit and receive appeals from inferior jurisdictions. Also a commissary or official of a bishop or other ecclesiastical judge having judicial power; an archdeacon; officer of the royal household.

In American law, a judicial officer, in several of the states, clothed by statute with powers in regard to wills, probate, administration, guardianship, etc. See also Court of Ordinary.

Former term for a public house where food and lodging were furnished to the traveler and his beast, at fixed rates, open to whoever may apply for accommodation, and where intoxicating liquor was sold at retail.

In the civil law, a judge who has authority to take cognizance of causes in his own right, and not by deputation.

Ordinary, adj. Regular; usual; normal; common; often recurring; according to established order; settled; customary; reasonable; not characterized by peculiar or unusual circumstances; belonging to, exercised by, or characteristic of, the normal or average individual.

As to ordinary Care; Diligence; Negligence, see those titles.

Ordinary and necessary expenses. The phrase "ordinary and necessary expenses", as found in business deduction section of Internal Revenue Code, implies that the expenses are reasonable and bear proximate relation to management of property held for production of income. National Can Corp. v. U.S., D.C.III., 520 F.Supp. 567, 579. "Ordinary" means normal and expected and "necessary" means appropriate and helpful. McCabe v. C.I.R., C.A.2, 688 F.2d 102, 105. For an item to qualify as an "ordinary and necessary expense" deductible under Internal Revenue Code section, five requirements must be met: item must be paid or incurred during taxable year, must be for carrying on any trade or business, must be an expense, must be necessary, and must be ordinary. Iowa–Dee Moines Nat. Bank v. C.I.R., C.A.8, 592 F.2d 433, 435. See also Necessary; and Ordinary expenses, below.

Ordinary calling. Those things which are repeated daily or weekly in the course of business.

Ordinary care. That degree of care which ordinarily prudent and competent person engaged in same line of business or endeavor should exercise under similar circumstances, and in law means same as "due care" and "reasonable care." Warner v. Kiowa County Hospital Authority, Okl.App., 551 P.2d 1179, 1188. That care which reasonably prudent persons exercise in the management of their own affairs, in order to avoid injury to themselves or their property, or the persons or property of others. Ordinary care is not an absolute term, but a relative one. Thus, in deciding whether ordinary care was exercised in a given case, the conduct in question must be viewed in the light of all the surrounding circumstances, as shown by the evidence in the case. See also Care.

Ordinary course of business. The transaction of business according to the common usages and customs of the commercial world generally or of the particular community or (in some cases) of the particular individual whose acts are under consideration. Term used in connection with sales made by a merchant as part of his regular business and in contrast with a sale in bulk which is regulated by statute, e.g., U.C.C. § 6-102(1). In general, any matter which transpires as a matter of normal and incidental customs and practices in business.

Ordinary dangers incident to employment. Those commonly and usually pertaining to and incident to it, which a reasonably prudent person might anticipate, and do not include danger by acts of negligence, unless habitual and known to the servant.

Ordinary expenses. Common and accepted in the general business in which the taxpayer is engaged. It comprises one of the tests for the deductibility of normal and expected expenses incurred or paid in connection with a trade or business; for the production or collection of income; for the management, conservation, or maintenance of property held for the production of income; or in connection with the determination, collection, or refund of any tax. I.R.C. § 162(a). See also Necessary, and Ordinary and necessary expenses, above.

Ordinary income. As tax term used in connection with a business, means earnings from the normal operations or activities of a business. In terms of an individual, ordinary income is income from such sources as wages, commissions, interest, etc.

Ordinary loss. A loss on the sale or exchange of an item used in a trade or business which is not considered a capital asset. In taxation, ordinary losses reduce ordinary income such as, salaries, interest, etc., while capital losses serve to reduce capital gains and those in excess of capital gains may reduce ordinary income up to a certain amount.

Ordinary negligence. The failure to use that degree of care which the ordinary or reasonably prudent person would have used under the circumstances and for which the negligent person is liable. Term is used in contrast to gross negligence which is more serious and a more flagrant lack of care. See also Negligence, and Ordinary care, above.

Ordinary persons. Men of ordinary care and diligence in relation to any particular thing.

Ordinary proceeding. Such a proceeding as was known to the common law and was formerly conducted in accordance with the proceedings of the common-law courts, and as is generally known under the current Rules of Civil Procedure and Codes to be such a proceeding as is started by the issuance of a summons, and results in a judgment enforceable by execution.

Ordinary repairs. Such as are necessary to make good the usual wear and tear or natural and unavoidable decay and keep the property in good condition. Compare Improvements.

Ordinary risks. Those incident to the business, and do not imply the result of the employer's negligence. The expression "extraordinary risks" is generally used to describe risks arising from the negligence of the employer, and they are generally held not to be assumed unless known or obvious.

Ordinary seaman. A sailor who is capable of performing the ordinary or routine duties of a seaman, but who is not yet so proficient in the knowledge and practice of all the various duties of a sailor at sea as to be rated as an "able" seaman.

Ordinary services of administrators include all the services incident to the closing and distribution of an estate, and not merely the receiving and disbursing of the funds and to justify an allowance of further compensation the administrator must have rendered services of an extraordinary character necessary to the protection of the estate, and, if he employs another to perform services which he is required to perform under the law, he cannot charge such services as an expense of administration.

Ordinary skill in an art. That degree of skill which men engaged in that particular art usually employ; not that which belongs to a few men only, of extraordinary endowments and capacities.

Ordinary written law. Law made, within constitutional restrictions, by the Legislature; i.e. statutes.

Ordination. Ceremony by which a bishop confers on a person the privileges and powers necessary for the execution of sacerdotal functions in the church.

Ordinatum est /ɔr'dɔnɛytam ɛst/. In old practice, it is ordered. The initial words of rules of court when entered in Latin.

Ordine placitandi servato, servatur et jus /ɔr'dɔnɪ plɛs'tɑndɛ servɛ'tɔw, servɛ'ytɔr et jɔs/. When the order of pleading is observed, the law also is observed.

Ordines /ɔr'dɔniyz/. A general chapter or other solemn convention of the religious of a particular order.

Ordinis beneficium /ɔr'dɔnis bɛnə'ʃi(ə)lom/. Lat. In the civil law, the benefit or privilege of order, the privilege which a surety for a debtor had of requiring that his principal should be discussed, or thoroughly prosecuted, before the creditor could resort to him.

Ordo attachiamentorum /ɔrdɔw ɔtʃɪ'ʃɪmɛntɔrʊm/. In old English practice, the order of attachments.
Organic Act. An act of Congress conferring powers of government upon a territory. in re Lane, 135 U.S. 443, 10 S.Ct. 760, 34 L.Ed. 219.

A statute by which a municipal corporation is organized and created is its "organic act" and the limit of its power, so that all acts beyond the scope of the powers there granted are void.

Organic law. The fundamental law, or constitution, of a state or nation, written or unwritten. That law or system of laws or principles which defines and establishes the organization of its government.

Organization. As term is used in commercial law, includes a corporation, government or governmental subdivision or agency, business trust, estate, trust, partnership or association, two or more persons having a joint or common interest, or any other legal or commercial entity. U.C.C. § 1-201(28). See also Charitable organizations.

Organize. To establish or furnish with organs; to systematize; to put into working order; to arrange in order for the normal exercise of its appropriate functions. City of Beaumont v. City of Beaumont Independent School Dist., Tex.Civ.App., 164 S.W.2d 753, 756.

Organized county. A county which has its lawful officers, legal machinery, and means for carrying out the powers and performing the duties pertaining to it as a quasi municipal corporation. City of Beaumont v. City of Beaumont Independent School Dist., Tex.Civ.App., 164 S.W.2d 753, 757.

Ostendit vobis /oʊʃəndət ˈvoʊbəs/. Lat. In old pleading, "shows to you." Formal words with which a demandant began his count.

Ostensible agency. An implied or presumptive agency, which exists where one, either intentionally or from want of ordinary care, induces another to believe that a third person is his agent, though he never in fact employed him. It is, strictly speaking, no agency at all, but is in reality based entirely upon estoppel.

Ostensible authority. Such authority as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe that the agent possesses. National Cash Register Co. v. Wichita Frozen Food Lockers, Tex.Civ.App., 172 S.W.2d 781, 787.

Ostensible ownership. Apparent ownership derived from conduct or words. Theory of "ostensible ownership" estops an owner of property who clothes another with apparent title from later asserting his title against an innocent third party who has been induced to deal with apparent owner. Domarad v. Fisher & Burke, Inc., 270 Cal.App.2d 543, 76 Cal.Rptr. 529, 535.
Ostensible partner. One whose name appears to the world as such, though he has no interest in the firm.

Ostensio /ɒstɛnʃ(ə)riɔ/. A tax anciently paid by merchants, etc., for leave to show or expose their goods for sale in markets.

Osteopath /ˈəʊstiəpæθ/. One who practices osteopathy.

Osteopathy /ˌəʊstɪˈɒpəθi/. A system of complete medical practice based on the maintenance of proper relationships among the various parts of the body. Osteopathic physicians, licensed in all 50 states, employ manipulative therapy, drugs, surgery, x-ray, and all other accepted therapeutic methods in the treatment of disease and injury.

Osteopathic medicine focuses special attention on the biological mechanisms by which the musculoskeletal system, through the nervous and circulatory systems, interacts with all body organs and systems in both health and disease. D.O.S., or Doctors of Osteopathy, diagnose and treat disorders of the musculoskeletal system through palpation and appropriately applied manipulative procedures. See Holt v. College of Osteopathic Physicians and Surgeons, 61 Cal.2d 750, 40 Cal.Rptr. 244, 394 P.2d 932.

OTB. Off-track betting.

Outbuilding. Something used in connection with a main building. A small building appurtenant to a main building, and generally separated from it; e.g. outhouse; storage shed. See also Outhouse.

Outcome test. In a diversity of citizenship action in the federal court, the result should be the same as if the action had been commenced in the state court. Guaranty Trust Co. of N. Y. v. York, 326 U.S. 99, 109, 65 S.Ct. 1464, 1470, 89 S.Ed. 2079.

Outer bar. Refers to those barristers in the English court system who sit in the "outer" or "utter" bar; called junior barristers as distinguished from the King’s counsel.

Outer continental shelf. All lands lying submerged seaward and not including lands beneath navigable waters. The subsoil and sea bed of such lands are subject to the jurisdiction and control of the United States. 43 U.S.C.A. § 1331.

Outer door. In connection with the rule, statutory or otherwise, forbidding an officer to break open the outer door to serve civil process, this term designates the door of each separate apartment, where there are different apartments having a common outer door.

Outfarghef /ˈɔwtfæŋɡəf/. A liberty or privilege in the ancient common law, whereby a lord was enabled to call any man dwelling in his manor, and taken for felony in another place out of his fee, to judgment in his own court. See Infarghef.

Outgo. Expenditures.

Outhouse. A building subservient to, yet distinct from, the principal dwelling, located either within or without the curtilage. A smaller or subordinate building connected with a dwelling, usually detached from it and standing at a little distance from it, not intended for persons to live in, but to serve some purpose of convenience or necessity; as a barn, outside privy, a dairy, a toolhouse, and the like. Under statutes, such a building... may be subservient to and adjoin a business building as well as a dwelling house. See also Outbuilding.

Outland. The Saxon thanes divided their hereditary lands into inland, such as lay nearest their dwelling, which they kept to their own use, and outland, which lay beyond the demesnes, and was granted out to tenants, at the will of the lord, like copyhold estates. This outland they subdivided into two parts. One part they disposed among those who attended their husbandmen, or churls; the other part they allotted to their husbandmen, or churls.

Outlaw. In English law, one who is put out of the protection or aid of the law. 3 Bl.Comm. 283, 284. Popularly, a person violating the law; a fugitive.

Outlawry. In old English law, a process by which a defendant or person in contempt on a civil or criminal process was declared an outlaw. If for treason or felony, it amounted to conviction and attainder.

In the United States, the process of outlawry seems to be unknown, at least in civil cases. Hall v. Lanning, 91 U.S. 160, 23 L.Ed. 271.

Outline. The line which marks the outer limits of an object or figure; an exterior line or edge; contour.

Outlot. In early American land law (particularly in Missouri), a lot or parcel of land lying outside the corporate limits of a town or village but subject to its municipal jurisdiction or control. Term now generally refers to an area of land on a plat which is to be used for a purpose other than a building site.

Out of benefit. A term descriptive of insurance policyholders who have been suspended for nonpayment of premiums.

Out-of-court settlement. The phrase is used with reference to agreements and transactions in regard to a pending suit which are arranged or take place between parties or their counsel privately and without being referred to the judge or court for authorization or approval. Thus, a case which is compromised, settled, and withdrawn by private agreement of the parties, after its institution, is said to be settled "out of court." See Settlement (Structured settlement).

Out-of-pocket loss. As measure of damages, is the difference between the value of what the purchaser parted with (i.e., the purchase price paid by him) and the value of what he has received (i.e., the actual market value of the goods). Otte v. Ron Tonkin Chevrolet Co., 264 Or. 265, 503 P.2d 716, 720. Also called "out-of-pocket loss rule."

Out of term. At a time when no term of the court is being held; in the vacation or interval which elapses between terms of the court.

Out of the state. In reference to rights, liabilities, or jurisdictions arising out of the common law, this phrase is equivalent to "beyond sea" (q.v.). In other connections, it means physically beyond the territorial limits of the particular state in question, or constructively so, as in the case of a foreign corporation. But a foreign corporation maintaining an agent within the state is not deemed to be "out of the state," within various statutes dealing with jurisdiction over foreign corporations "doing business" within state.

Out of time. A mercantile phrase applied to a ship or vessel that has been so long at sea as to justify the belief of her total loss. In another sense, a vessel is said to be out of time when, computed from her known day of sailing, the time that has elapsed exceeds the average duration of similar voyages at the same season of the year. The phrase is identical with "missing ship."

Outpayers /əutˈpɑːtərz/. Stealers of cattle. A spurious form for "outputters."

Output contract. See Contract; Entire output contract.

Outrage. A grave injury; injurious violence. The tort of "outrage" (intentional infliction of serious mental distress) requires that defendant engage in outrageous and extreme conduct which results in intentionally or recklessly inflicted severe emotional distress. Spencer v. King County, 39 Wash.App. 201, 692 P.2d 874, 880.

Outriders. In old English law, bailiffs-errant employed by sheriffs or their deputies to ride to the extremities of their counties or hundreds to summon men to the county or hundred court.

Outright. Free from reserve or restraint; direct; positive; down-right; altogether; entirely; openly.

Outroper /əутˈrɔːpər/. A person to whom the business of selling by auction was confined by statute.

Outs. In banking parlance, are conditions or warranties, failure to comply with which by the prospect give the banker a right to escape from a contract and to terminate negotiations. Cray, McFawn & Co. v. Hegarty, Conroy & Co., D.C.N.Y., 27 F.Supp. 93, 100.

Outside. To the exterior of; without; outward from.

Outside director. A member of a corporate board of directors who is not an employee or company officer and does not participate in the corporation's day-to-day management. Outside directors, however, may include investment bankers, attorneys, or others who provide advice or services to incumbent management and thus have financial ties with management.

Outside salesmen. An outside salesman is one who solicits business away from the employer's place of business on a full-time basis. If an employee qualifies as an outside salesman, all employment related expenses are deductible.

Outstanding. Remaining undischarged; unpaid; uncollected; as an outstanding debt. Constituting an effective obligation. When said of stock, the shares issued less treasury stock. When said of checks, it means a check issued but not yet presented for payment; a check that did not clear the drawer's bank prior to the bank statement date.

Existing as an adverse claim or pretension; not united with, or merged in, the title or claim of the party; as an outstanding title.

Outstanding and open account. In legal and commercial transactions it is an unsettled debt arising from items of work and labor, goods sold and delivered, and other open transactions, not reduced to writing, and subject to future settlement and adjustment and usually disclosed by account books of the owner of the demand and does not include express contracts or obligations which have been reduced to writing such as bonds, bills of exchange, or notes. Lee v. De Forest, 22 Cal.App.2d 351, 71 P.2d 285, 291.

Outstanding balance. Current amount owed on debt.

Outstroke. To mine by outstroke is to take out mineral from adjoining property through the tunnels and shafts of the demised premises.

Ouverture des successions /nowervytur dey sakse-syawn/. In French law, the right of succession which arises to one upon the death, whether natural or civil, of another.

Ovell /ow(v)el/. L. Fr. Equal.

Ovelty /ow(v)elity/. In old English law, equality.

Over. Above; overhead; more than; in excess of.

Continued;—sometimes written on one page or sheet to indicate a continuation of matter on a separate page or sheet.

In conveyancing, the word is used to denote a contingent limitation intended to take effect upon the failure of a prior estate. Thus, in what is commonly called the "name and arms clause" in a will or settlement there is generally a proviso that if the devisee fails to comply with the condition the estate is to go to some one else. This is a limitation or gift over.

Overawe /ow(v)er/. To subjugate or restrain by awe, or profound reverence.

Overbreadth doctrine. This doctrine, which derives from First Amendment, serves to invalidate legislation so sweeping that, along with its allowable proscriptions, it also restricts constitutionally protected rights of free speech, press or assembly. McCravy v. State, Ala.Cr.App., 429 So.2d 1121, 1123. The doctrine requires that a statute be invalid if it is fairly capable of being applied to punish people for constitutionally protected speech or conduct. A law is void on its face if it "does not aim specifically at evils within the allowable area of [governmental] control, but . . . sweeps within its ambit other activities that constitute an exercise" of protected expressive or associational rights. Thomhill v. Alabama, 310 U.S. 88, 97, 60 S.Ct. 296, 84 L.Ed. 460. A plausible challenge to a law as void for overbreadth can be made only when (1) the protected activity is a significant part of the law's target, and (2) there exists no satisfactory way of severing the law's constitutional from its unconstitutional applications so as to excise the latter clearly in a single step from the law's reach.

Overcharge. With respect to public carriers or public utilities, a charge collected above a lawful tariff rate; a charge of more than is permitted by law. As regards interest rates, see Usury.

Overcome. As used in a statute providing that a presumption may be overcome by other evidence, this term is not synonymous with overbalance or outweigh, but requires merely that such evidence counterbalance the presumption, where the party relying on it has the burden of proof.

Overcyted, or overcyhsed. Proved guilty or convicted.

Overdraft. A check written on a checking account containing less funds than the amount of the check. Term may also refer to the condition which exists when vouchers or purchase orders are drawn in amounts in excess of budgeted or appropriated amount. See also Kiting; NSF check.

Overdraw. To draw upon a person or a bank in an amount in excess of the funds remaining to the drawer's credit with the drawee, or to an amount greater than what is due. See also Overdraft.

Overdue. Due and more than due; delayed or unpaid. Bliss v. California Co-op Producers, Cal.App., 156 P.2d 259, 260. The circumstance of an instrument that has not been paid despite arrival of the time for paying it, as by arrival of a date specified for payment or by acceleration or demand. A negotiable instrument or other evidence of debt is overdue when the day of its maturity is past and it remains unpaid.

A vessel is said to be overdue when she has not reached her destination at the time when she might ordinarily have been expected to arrive.

Overflowed lands. Those that are covered by nonnavigable waters (not including lands between high and low water mark of navigable streams or bodies of water, nor lands covered and uncovered by ordinary daily ebb and flow of normal tides of navigable waters).

Overhaul. To inquire into; to review; to disturb. To examine thoroughly, as machinery, with a view to repairs.

Overhead. All administrative or executive costs incident to the management, supervision, or conduct of the capital outlay, or business; distinguished from "operating charges," or those items that are inseparably connected with the productive end and may be seen as the work progresses, and are the subject of knowledge from observation. Continuous expenses of a business; the expenses and obligations incurred in connection with operation; expenses necessarily incurred in organization, office expenses, engineering, inspection, supervision, and management during construction; and general expenditures in financial or industrial enterprise which cannot be attributed to any one department or product, excluding cost of materials, labor, and selling. Guillot v.
State Highway Commission of Montana, 102 Mont. 149, 56 P.2d 1072, 1075.

Any cost not specifically or directly associated with the production of identifiable goods and services. Sometimes called "burden" or "indirect costs" and, in Britain, "oncosts." Frequently limited to manufacturing overhead.

Overhernissa /ôværhär'nissa/. In Saxon law, contumacy or contempt of court.

Over-insurance. See Double insurance.

Overissue. To issue in excess of quantity; to issue in excess of fixed legal limits. Thus, "overissued stock" of a corporation is capital stock issued in excess of the amount limited and prescribed by the charter or certificate of incorporation. U.C.C. § 8–104(2). See also Over-subscription.

Overload. To cause to bear too heavy a burden; to load too heavily.

Overlying right. Right of owner of land to take water from ground underneath for use on his land within basin or watershed. Right is based on ownership of land and is appurtenant thereto. City of Pasadena v. City of Alhambra, 33 Cal.2d 908, 207 P.2d 17, 28.

Overplus. What is left beyond a certain amount; the residue; the surplus; the remainder of a thing.

Overrate. In its strictest signification, a rating by way of excess and not one which ought not to have been made at all.

Overreaching. In connection with commercial and consumer transactions, is that which results from an inequality of bargaining power or other circumstances in which there is an absence of meaningful choice on the part of one of the parties. Leprino v. Intermountain Brick Co., Colo. 759 P.2d 835, 836; Hertz Corp. v. Attorney General of New York, 136 Misc.2d 420, 518 N.Y.S.2d 704, 708. See also Adhesion contract; Unconscionability.

Overreaching clause. In a resettlement, a clause which saves the powers of sale and leasing annexed to the estate for life created by the original settlement, when it is desired to give the tenant for life the same estate and powers under the resettlement. The clause is so called because it provides that the resettlement shall be overreached by the exercise of the old powers. If the resettlement were executed without a provision to this effect, the estate of the tenant for life and the annexed powers would be subject to any charges for portions, etc., created under the original settlement.

Override. An estate carved out of working interest under an oil or gas lease. Commissions paid to managers on sales made by subordinates. Provision in real estate brokers listing agreement giving him right to certain commission for a reasonable period of time after expiration of listing in event owner sells to purchaser with whom broker negotiated during term of listing.

Overriding royalty. As applied to an existing oil and gas lease is a given percentage of the gross production payable to some person other than the lessor or persons claiming under him. Royalty interest carved out of working interest created by oil and gas lease, and is interest in oil and gas produced at surface free of expense of production and its outstanding characteristic is that its duration is limited by duration of lease under which it is created. Cline v. Angle, 216 Kan. 328, 532 P.2d 1093, 1097.

Overrule. To supersede; annul; reverse; make void; reject by subsequent action or decision. A judicial decision is said to be overruled when a later decision, rendered by the same court or by a superior court in the same system, expresses a judgment upon the same question of law directly opposite to that which was before given, thereby depriving the earlier opinion of all authority as a precedent. The term is not properly applied to conflicting decisions on the same point by co-ordinate or independent tribunals. It also signifies that a majority of the judges of a court have decided against the opinion of the minority, in which case the minority judges are said to be overruled. See Reverse; Vacate.

To refuse to sustain, or recognize as sufficient, an objection made in the course of a trial, as to the introduction of particular evidence, etc.

Overs. In the meat packing business, the increase in the weight of meat resulting from salt put on it.

Oversamessa. In old English law, a forfeiture for contempt or neglect in not pursuing a malefactor.

Over sea. Beyond the sea; outside the limits of the state or country. See Beyond the seas.

Overseer /ôvôrsi(ə)r/ôvôrsi(yə)r/. A superintendent or supervisor; a public officer whose duties involve general superintendence of routine affairs. Member of a University board. See also Regent.

Overseers of highways. The name given, in some of the states, to a board of officers of a city, township, or county, whose special function is the construction and repair of the public roads or highways.

Oversubscription. Condition which exists when there are more orders or subscriptions for corporate stock than can be issued. See also Overissue.

Overt. Open; manifest; public; issuing in action, as distinguished from that which rests merely in intention or design.

Market overt. See Market.

Overt act. An open, manifest act from which criminality may be implied. An outward act done in pursuance and manifestation of an intent or design. An open act, which must be manifestly proved.

An overt act essential to establish an attempt to commit a crime is an act done to carry out the intention, and it must be such as would naturally effect that result unless prevented by some extraneous cause. It must be something done that directly moves toward the crime, and brings the accused nearer to its commission than mere acts of preparation or of planning, and will apparently result, in the usual and natural course of events, if not hindered by extraneous causes, in the commission of the crime itself.

In reference to the crime of treason, and the provision of the federal Constitution that a person shall not be convicted thereof unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same "overt act," the term means a step, motion, or action really taken in the execution of a treasonable purpose, as distinguished from mere words, and also from a treasonable sentiment, design, or purpose not issuing in action. It is an act in furtherance of the crime. One which manifests the intention of the traitor to commit treason.

An overt act which will justify the exercise of the right of self-defense is such as would manifest to the mind of a reasonable person a present intention to kill him or do him great bodily harm.

An overt act which completes crime of conspiracy to violate federal law is something apart from conspiracy and is an act to effect the object of the conspiracy, and need be neither a criminal act, nor crime that is object of conspiracy, but must accompany or follow agreement and must be done in furtherance of object of agreement. Marino v. United States, C.C.A.Cal., 91 F.2d 691, 694, 695.

Overtake. To come or catch up with in a course of motion. Ringwald v. Beene, 170 Tenn. 116, 92 S.W.2d 411, 413. To catch up with and pass.

Over-the-counter market. Refers to the broad securities market consisting of brokers who purchase or sell securities by computer hook-up or telephone rather than through the facilities of a securities exchange. At one time completely unorganized, the over-the-counter market is now relatively organized with computerized quotation and transaction reporting services. See NASD; NASDAQ.

Overtime. After regular working hours; beyond the regular fixed hours.

Overtime wage. Portion of wages paid employee for services rendered beyond regularly fixed working hours.

Overture. An opening; a proposal.

Overt word. An open, plain word, not to be misunderstood.

Owe. To be bound to do or omit something, especially to pay a debt. May also refer to a moral or social obligation.

Owely /ˈəʊlɪti/. Equality; an equalization charge.

This word is used in law in several compound phrases, as follows:

Owely of exchange. A sum of money given, when two persons have exchanged lands, by the owner of the less valuable estate to the owner of the more valuable, to equalize the exchange.

Owely of partition. A sum of money paid by one of two coparceners or co-tenants to the other, when a partition has been effected between them, but, the land not being susceptible of division into exactly equal shares, such payment is required to make the portions respectively assigned to them of equal value. The power to grant owely has been exercised by the courts of equity from time immemorial.

Owely of services. In the feudal law, the condition obtaining when there is lord, mesne, and tenant, and the tenant holds the mesne by the same service that the mesne holds over the lord above him.

Owing. Unpaid. A debt, for example, is owing while it is unpaid, and whether it be due or not.

Owling /ˈəʊlɪŋ/. In English law, the offense of transporting wool or sheep out of the kingdom; so called from its being usually carried on in the night. 4 Bl.Comm. 154.

Own. To have a good legal title; to hold as property; to have a legal or rightful title to; to have; to possess.

Owner. The person in whom is vested the ownership, dominion, or title of property; proprietor. He who has dominion of a thing, real or personal, corporeal or incorporeal, which he has a right to enjoy and do with as he pleases, even to spoil or destroy it, as far as the law permits, unless he be prevented by some agreement or covenant which restrains his right.

The term is, however, a nomen generalissimum, and its meaning is to be gathered from the connection in which it is used, and from the subject-matter to which it is applied. The primary meaning of the word as applied to land is one who owns the fee and who has the right to dispose of the property, but the term also includes one having a possessory right to land or the person occupying or cultivating it.

The term "owner" is used to indicate a person in whom one or more interests are vested for his own benefit. The person in whom the interests are vested has "title" to the interests whether he holds them for his own benefit or for the benefit of another. Thus the term "title," unlike "ownership," is a colorless word; to say without more that a person has title to certain property does not indicate whether he holds such property for his own benefit or as trustee. Restatement, Second, Trusts, § 2, Comment (d); Restatement of Property, § 10.

See also Ownership.

Beneficial owner. See Beneficial owner; also Equitable owner, below.

Equitable owner. One who is recognized in equity as the owner of property, because the real and beneficial use and title belong to him, although the bare legal title is vested in another, e.g., a trustee for his benefit. One who has a present title in land which will ripen into legal ownership upon the performance of conditions subsequent. There may therefore be two "owners" in respect of the same property, one the nominal or legal owner, the other the beneficial or equitable owner. See also Beneficial owner.

General and beneficial owner. The person whose interest is primarily one of possession and enjoyment in contemplation of an ultimate absolute ownership;—not the person whose interest is primarily in the enforcement of a collateral pecuniary claim, and does not contemplate the use or enjoyment of the property as such. See also Beneficial owner.

General owner. He who has the primary or residuary title to it; as distinguished from a special owner, who has a special interest in the same thing, amounting to a qualified ownership, such, for example, as a bailee’s lien. One who has both the right of property and of possession.

Joint owners. Two or more persons who jointly own and hold title to property, e.g., joint tenants, and also partners and tenants in common. In its most comprehensive sense, the term embraces all cases where the property in question is owned by two or more persons regardless of the special nature of their relationship or how it came into being. An estate by entirety is a “joint ownership” of a husband and wife as at common law notwithstanding legislative enactments touching joint tenancy. Cullum v. Rice, 236 Mo.App. 1113, 162 S.W.2d 342, 344. See also Joint estate; Tenancy.

Legal owner. One who is recognized and held responsible by the law as the owner of property. In a more particular sense, one in whom the legal title to real estate is vested, but who holds it in trust for the benefit of another, the latter being called the “equitable” owner.

Part owners. Joint owners; co-owners; those who have shares of ownership in the same thing. See Joint owners, above.

Record owner. This term, particularly used in statutes requiring notice of tax delinquency or sale, means the owner of record, not the owner described in the tax roll; the owner of the title at time of notice.

Reputed owner. One who has to all appearances the title to, and possession of, property; one who, from all appearances, or from supposition, is the owner of a thing. He who has the general credit or reputation of being the owner or proprietor of goods.

Riparian owner. See Riparian.

Sole and unconditional owner. An expression commonly used in fire insurance policies, in which the word “sole” means that no one else has any interest in the property as owner, and “unconditional” means that the quality of the estate is not limited or affected by any condition. To be “unconditional and sole,” the interest or ownership of the insured must be completely vested, not contingent or conditional, nor in common or jointly with others, but of such nature that the insured must alone sustain the entire loss if the property is destroyed; and this is so whether the title is legal or equitable. It is sufficient to satisfy the requirements of “sole and unconditional ownership” that the insured is the sole equitable owner and has the full equitable title. It is enough that the insured is equitably entitled to immediate and absolute legal ownership. The term contempo-plates beneficial and practical proprietorship and not necessarily technical title.

Special owner. One who has a special interest in an article of property, amounting to a qualified ownership of it, such, for example, as a bailee’s lien; as distinguished from the general owner, who has the primary or residuary title to the same thing. Some person holding property with the consent of, and as representative of, the actual owner.

Ownership. Collection of rights to use and enjoy property, including right to transmit it to others. Trustees of Phillips Exeter Academy v. Exeter, 92 N.H. 473, 33 A.2d 665, 673. The complete dominion, title, or proprietary right in a thing or claim. The entirety of the powers of use and disposal allowed by law.

Ownership of property is either absolute or qualified. The ownership of property is absolute when a single person has the absolute dominion over it, and may use it or dispose of it according to his pleasure, subject only to general laws. The ownership is qualified when it is shared with one or more persons, when the time of enjoyment is deferred or limited, or when the use is restricted. Calif.Civil Code, §§ 678–680.

There may be ownership of all inanimate things which are capable of appropriation or of manual delivery; of all domestic animals; of all obligations; of such products of labor or skill as the composition of an author, the goodwill of a business, trademarks and signs, and of rights created or granted by statute. Calif.Civil Code, § 655.

In connection with burglary, “ownership” means any possession which is rightful as against the burglar. See also Equitable ownership; Exclusive ownership; Hold; Incident of ownership; Interest; Interval ownership; Ostensible ownership; Owner; Possession; Title.

Oxfild / ˈɒksfild /. In old English law, a restitution anciently made by a hundred or county for any wrong done by one that was within the same.

Oxgang. In old English law, as much land as an ox could till. A measure of land of uncertain quantity. In the north of England a division of a carucate. According to some, fifteen acres.

Oyer /ˈoɪər/. In old English practice, hearing; the hearing a deed read, which a party sued on a bond, etc., might pray or demand, and it was then read to him by the other party; the entry on the record being, “et ei legitur in haco verba” (and it is read to him in these words). 3 Bl.Com. 299.

A copy of a bond or specialty sued upon, given to the opposite party, in lieu of the old practice of reading it.

Oyer and terminer /ˈoɪər ən tærˈmənər /. A half French phrase applied in England to the assizes, which are so called from the commission of oyer and terminer directed to the judges, empowering them to "inquire, hear, and determine" all treasons, felonies, and misdemeanors. This commission is now issued regularly, but was formerly used only on particular occasions, as upon sudden outrage or insurrection in any place. In the United States, certain higher criminal courts were called "courts of oyer and terminer."

Oyer de record /ˈoʊr dɪ rɪˈkɜrd/. A petition made in court that the judges, for better proof's sake, will hear or look upon any record.

Oyez /ˈoɪeɪz/ (t)s/. Hear ye. A word used in courts by the public crier to command attention when a proclamation is about to be made. Usually pronounced "O yes." 4 Bl.Comm. 340.
P.A. Professional Association.

Page /pěyaj/ In old English law, a toll for passage through another's land. The same as "pedage."

PAC. Political Action Committee. Committees, clubs, associations or other groups of persons formed to receive contributions for use in election campaigns. The organization, registration, reporting, and other activities of such organizations is regulated by federal and state laws. See e.g., 2 U.S.C.A. § 431 et seq.

Pacare /pækərɪ/ L. Lat. To pay.

Pacatio /pækətʃ(ɪ)əʊ/ Payment.

Pace. A measure of length containing two feet and a half, being the ordinary length of a step. The geometrical pace is five feet long, being the length of two steps, or the whole space passed over by the same foot from one step to another.

Paceatur /pɛsiyɛtər/. Lat. Let him be freed or discharged.

Pacification. The act of making peace between two hostile or belligerent states; reestablishment of public tranquility.

Pacifist. One who seeks to maintain peace and to abolish war. One who refuses or is unwilling for any purpose to bear arms because of conscientious considerations, and who is disposed to encourage others in such refusal. U. S. v. Schwimmer, Ill., 279 U.S. 644, 49 S.Ct. 448, 451, 73 L.Ed. 889. A conscientious objector.

Paci sunt maxime contraria vis et injuria /pɛsɛɪ sɛnt mɛksɛmiɛ kɔnthɛrɪʃə vɪs ɛt ɪŋˌdʒʊriə/. Violence and injury are the things chiefly hostile to peace.

Pack. To decide by false appearances; to counterfeit; to delude; to put together in sorts with a fraudulent design. To pack a jury is to use unlawful, improper, or deceitful means to have the jury made up of persons favorably disposed to the party so contriving, or who have been or can be improperly influenced to give the verdict he seeks. The term imports the improper and corrupt selection of a jury sworn and impaneled for the trial of a cause.

Package. A bundle put up for transportation or commercial handling; a thing in form to become, as such, an article of merchandise or delivery from hand to hand. A parcel is a small package; "parcel" being the diminutive of "package." Each of the words denotes a thing in form suitable for transportation or handling, or sale from hand to hand. As ordinarily understood in the commercial world, it means a shipping package. See also Parcel.

Original package. See Original.

Packed parcels. The name for a consignment of goods, consisting of one large parcel made up of several small ones (each bearing a different address), collected from different persons by the immediate consignor (a carrier), who unites them into one for his own profit, at the expense of the railway by which they are sent, since the railway company would have been paid more for the carriage of the parcels singly than together.

Packing list. Document which contains the contents, weight and other information concerning the package to be shipped. It accompanies the package and is available for inspection.

Pact. A bargain; compact; agreement. An agreement between two or more nations or states usually less elaborate than a treaty but nearly equivalent thereto. See also Compact; Pactum; Treaty.

Nude pact. A translation of the Latin "nudum pactum," a bare or naked pact, that is, a promise or agreement made without any consideration on the other side, which is therefore not enforceable.

Obligatory pact. In civil law, an informal obligatory declaration of consensus, which the Roman law refused to acknowledge.

Pact de non alienando /pɛkt dɪ nɒn ə’lɪdʒænəndəʊ/. An agreement not to alienate incumbered (particularly mortgaged) property. This stipulation, sometimes found in mortgages made in Louisiana, and derived from the Spanish law, binds the mortgagor not to sell or incumber the mortgaged premises to the prejudice of the mortgagee; it does not avoid a sale made to a third person, but enables the mortgagee to proceed directly against the mortgaged property in a proceeding against the mortgagor alone and without notice to the purchaser.

PAIRING-OFF

Pairing-off. In the practice of legislative bodies, a species of negative proxies, by which two members, who belong to opposite parties or are on opposite sides with regard to a given question, mutually agree that they will both be absent from voting, either for a specified period or when a division is had on the particular question. By this mutual agreement a vote is neutralized on each side of the question, and the relative numbers on the division are precisely the same as if both members were present. It is said to have originated in the house of commons in Cromwell's time.

Pais, pays /pəys/ Fr. The country; the neighborhood.
An assurance by matter in pais is an assurance transferred between two or more private persons "in the country," that is, upon the very spot to be transferred.
Matter in pais signifies matter of fact, probably because matters of fact are triable by the country; i.e., by jury.

Estoppels in pais are estoppels by conduct, as distinguished from estoppels by deed or by record.
Conveyances in pais are ordinary conveyances between two or more persons in the country; i.e., upon the land to be transferred.
See also in pais; Matter in pais.

Palace court. See Court of the Steward and Marshal.

Palam /pələm/. Lat. In the civil law, openly; in the presence of many.

Palimony. Term has meaning similar to "alimony" except that award, settlement or agreement arises out of nonmarital relationship of parties (i.e., nonmarital partners). It has been held that courts should enforce express contracts between nonmarital partners except to the extent the contract is explicitly founded on the consideration of meretricious sexual services, despite agreement of partnership or joint venture, or some other tacit understanding between the parties to determine whether that contract demonstrates implied contract, agreement of partnership or joint venture, or some other remedies such as constructive or resulting trust, when the hand. Also, a trick with the hand.

Palm prints. The impression made by a person's palm on a smooth surface. They may be used for purpose of identification in criminal cases.

Palmarium /pəlməriəm/. In civil law, a conditional fee for professional services in addition to the lawful charge.

Palmer Act. A name given to the English statute 19 & 20 Vict., c. 16, enabling a person accused of a crime committed out of the jurisdiction of the central criminal court, to be tried in that court.

Palmistry /pəməstriə/. The practice of telling fortunes by a feigned interpretation of the lines and marks on the hand. Also, a trick with the hand.

Palm off. Refers to the conduct of selling goods as the goods of another or doing business as the business of another such that the public is misled by the conduct and believes it is purchasing the goods of another or doing business with someone other than the actual seller. Laser Industries, Ltd. v. Eder Instrument Co., Inc., D.C.Ill., 573 F.Supp. 987, 991.

Palm prints. The impression made by a person's palm on a smooth surface. They may be used for purpose of identification in criminal cases.

Palpable. Easily perceptible, plain, obvious, readily visible, noticeable, patent, distinct, manifest. People v. Hughey, 382 Ill. 136, 47 N.E.2d 77, 80.

Palsgraf Rule. The rule derived from the case of Palsgraf v. Long Island R. Co., 248 N.Y. 339, 162 N.E. 99, to the effect that one who is negligent is liable only for the harm or injury which is within the orbit of foreseeability and not for every injury which follows from his negligence. See also Foreseeability.

Pandects /pændekts/. A compilation of Roman law, consisting of selected passages from the writings of the most authoritative of the older jurists, methodically arranged, prepared by Tribonian with the assistance of sixteen associates, under a commission from the emperor orJustinian. This work, which is otherwise called the "Digest," because in his compilation the writings of the jurists were reduced to order and condensed quasi digeste, comprises fifty books, and is one of the four great works composing the Corpus Juris Civilis. It was first published in A.D. 533, when Justinian gave to it the force of law.

Pander, n. One who caters to the lust of others; a male bawd, a pimp, or procurer.

Pander, v. To pimp; to cater to the gratification of the lust of another. To entice or procure a female, by promises, threats, fraud, or artifice, to enter any place in which prostitution is practiced, for the purpose of prostitution. Pandering is established when evidence shows that accused has succeeded in inducing his victim to become engaged in prostitution. People v. Charles, 218 Cal.App.2d 812, 32 Cal.Rptr. 653, 658.

Pandering of obscenity. Business of purveying textual, pictorial or graphic matter openly advertised to appeal to prurient interest of customers, or potential customers, by either blatant and explicit advertising or subtle and sophisticated advertising. U.S. v. Baranov, 418 F.2d 1051, 1053. Such conduct is not protected by the First

P & L. See Profit (Profit and loss); Profit and loss statement.

Panel. A list of jurors summoned to serve in a particular court, or for the trial of a particular action. Group of judges (smaller than the entire court) which decides a case; e.g. a nine member appellate court might be divided into three, three member panels with each panel hearing and deciding cases. May also refer to members of a commission.

Prepaid legal services. “Open panel” legal services is a plan in which legal services are paid for in advance (usually by a type of insurance) and members can choose their own lawyer. Under a “closed panel”, however, all legal services are performed by a group of attorneys previously selected by the insurer, union, etc. See Prepaid legal services.

Pannellation /pənˌnɛləˈneɪʃən/. The act of impaneling a jury.

Papal supremacy. The supremacy which the Pope claimed not only over the Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire, but over all other Christian princes. The theory was that they stood to the Pope as feudal vassals to a supreme lord; as such, the Pope claimed the right to enforce the duties due to him from his feudal subordinates through an ascending scale of penalties culminating in the absolution of the prince’s subjects from the bonds of allegiance, and in the disposition of the sovereign himself. The papal supremacy was overthrown in England by acts of the Parliament which met in 1529 and was dissolved in 1536, ending in the Act of Supremacy which substituted the King for the Pope.

Paper. A written or printed document or instrument. A document filed or introduced in evidence in a suit at law; as, in the phrase “papers in the case” and in “papers on appeal.” Any writing or printed document, including letters, memoranda, legal or business documents, and books of account, as in the constitutional provision which protects the people from unreasonable searches and seizures in respect to their “papers” as well as their houses and persons. A written or printed evidence of debt, particularly a promissory note or a bill of exchange, as in the phrases “accommodation paper” and “commercial paper” (q.v.). See also Bearer paper; Chattel paper; Commercial paper; Document; Instrument.

Paper money. Bills drawn by a government against its own credit, engaging to pay money, but which do not profess to be immediately convertible into specie, and which are put into compulsory circulation as a substitute for coined money. See Federal reserve notes; Legal tender.

Paper patent. Term used derisively to refer to a discovery or invention which has never been put to commercial use nor recognized in the trade. Coltman v. Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Co., C.C.A.Ind., 104 F.2d 508.

Paper profit (or loss). An unrealized profit (or loss) on a security or other investment still held. Paper profits (or losses) become realized profits (or losses) only upon the sale of the security.

Paper standard. A money system based on pure paper which is not convertible into gold or other metal of intrinsic value.

Papian poppetan law. See Lex Papa Poppæa.

Par. In commercial law, equal; equality. An equality subsisting between the nominal or face value of a bill of exchange, share of stock, etc., and its actual selling value. When the values are thus equal, the instrument or share is said to be “at par”; if it can be sold for more than its nominal worth, it is “above par”; if for less, it is “below par.” See also Par of exchange; Par value.

Any standard or norm of conduct which is expected of people.

Parachronism /pərəˈkranɪzəm/. Error in the computation of time.

Paracium /pərəˈʃjuːm/. In old English law, the tenure between parceners, viz., that which the youngest owes to the eldest without homage or service.

Parage /pəˈræj/ or paragium /pərəˈdʒjum/. In old English law, an equality of blood or dignity, but more especially of land, in the partition of an inheritance between co-heirs. More properly, however, an equality of condition among nobles, or persons holding by a noble tenure. Thus, when a fief is divided among brothers, the younger hold their part of the elder by parage; i.e., without any homage or service. Term from which “disparagement”, meaning inequality, is derived. Also the portion which a woman may obtain on her marriage.

Paragraph. A distinct part of a discourse or writing; any section or subdivision of writing or chapter which relates to particular point, whether consisting of one or many sentences.

A part or section of a statute, pleading, affidavit, will, trust, etc., which contains one article, the sense of which is complete.

Fed.R.Civ.P. 10(b) provides that: “All averments of claim or defense shall be made in numbered paragraphs, the contents of each of which shall be limited as far as practicable to a statement or of a single set of circumstances; and a paragraph may be referred to by number in all succeeding pleadings . . . .”

Paralegal. A person with legal skills, but who is not an attorney, and who works under the supervision of a lawyer in performing various tasks relating to the practice of law or who is otherwise authorized by law to use those legal skills. Paralegal courses leading to degrees in such specialty are now afforded by many schools.

Parallel citation. A citation reference to the same case printed in two or more different reports. See e.g. the case citation to U.S. Supreme Court decisions in this Dictionary.
PARAMOUNT

Paramount. Above; upwards. Higher; superior; preeminent; of the highest rank or nature.

Paramount equity. An equitable right or claim which is prior, superior, or preferable to that with which it is compared.

Paramount title. In the law of real property, properly one which is superior to the title with which it is compared, in the sense that the former is the source or origin of the latter. It is, however, frequently used to denote a title which is simply better or stronger than another, or will prevail over it. But this use is scarcely correct, unless the superiority consists in the seniority of the title spoken of as "paramount."

Paramour. In general, a lover; but term is used commonly in connection with a person of either sex in an adulterous alliance.

Paranoia /pərəˈnɔɪə/. See Insanity.

Paraph. A flourish at the end of a signature. In the Middle Ages this was a sort of rude safeguard against forgery. Also, in Louisiana, the signature itself, such as the official signature of a notary.

Parapherna /pərəˈfɜrnərə/. In the civil law, goods brought by wife to husband over and above her dowry (dos).

Paraphernalia /pərəˈfɜrnəliə/. The separate property of a married woman, other than that which is included in her dowry, or dos. Those goods which a woman is allowed to have, after the death of her husband, besides her dower, consisting of her apparel and ornaments, suitable to her rank and degree. Those goods which a wife could bequeath by her testament.

In the civil law, the separate property of the wife is divided into dotal and extradotal. Dotal property is that which the wife brings to the husband to assist him in bearing the expenses of the marriage establishment. Extradotal property, otherwise called "paraphernal property," is that which forms no part of the dowry. It is property brought to the marriage by one of the spouses.

Paraphernal property /pərəˈfɜrnəl prəˈpərdiə/. See Paraphernalia.

Paraprofessional. One who assists a professional person though not a member of the profession himself; e.g., a paralegal (q.v.) who assists a lawyer.

Parasyneksis /pərəˈsɛnɛksəs/. In the civil law, a convenicle, or unlawful meeting.

Paratitla /pərəˈtɪtlə/. In the civil law, notes or abbreviations prefixed to titles of law, giving a summary of their contents. An abbreviated explanation of some titles or books of the Code or Digest.

Paratum habeo /pərəˈtəm həˈbiːəʊ/. Lat. I have him in readiness. The return by the sheriff to a capias ad respondendum, signifying that he has the defendant in readiness to be brought into court. This was a fiction, where the defendant was at large. Afterwards he was required, by statute, to take bail from the defendant, and he returned ceji corpus and bailbond. But still he might be ruled to bring in the body.

Paratus est verificare /pərəˈtəs ɛst vərəˈfɪkəriə/. Lat. He is ready to verify. The Latin form for concluding a pleading with a verification (q.v.).

Paravail /pərəˈvɛil/pərəˈvɛil/. Inferior; subordinate. In old English law, tenant paravail signified the lowest tenant of land, being the tenant of a mesne lord. He was so called because he was supposed to make "avail" or profit of the land for another.

Parcel, v. To divide an estate.

Parcel, n. A small package or bundle. See Package.

Parcella terra /pərəˈsɛlə tɛˈriə/. A parcel of land.

Parcel makers /pərəˈsɛl mɛˈkɑːrz/. In old English law, two officers in the exchequer who formerly made the parcels or items of the escheators' accounts, wherein they charged them with everything they had levied for the king during the term of their office.

Parcels. A description of property, formally set forth in a conveyance, together with the boundaries thereof, in order to provide for easy identification.

Parcels, bill of. An account of the items composing a parcel or package of goods, transmitted with them to the purchaser. See, Bill of parcels under Bill.

Parcenary /pərəˈsɛnəri/. The state or condition of holding title to lands jointly by parencers, before the common inheritance has been divided.

Parcener /pərəˈsɛnər/. A joint heir; one who, with others, holds an estate in co-parcenary (q.v.). Gibson v. Johnson, 331 Mo. 1198, 56 S.W.2d 783.

Parchment. Sheep-skins dressed for writing, so called from Pergamus, Asia Minor, where they were invented. Used for deeds, and used for writs of summons in England previous to the Judicature Act of 1875. The skin of a lamb, sheep, goat, young calf, or other animal, prepared for writing on; also, any of various papers made in imitation thereof.

Parco fracto /pərˈkɔr frɛktəʊ/. Pound-breach; also the name of an old English writ against one who violently breaks a pound and takes beasts which, for some trespass done, or some other just cause, were lawfully impounded.

Par delictum /pər dəˈliktəm/. (In pari delicto.) Equal guilt.
Pardon. An executive action that mitigates or sets aside punishment for a crime. An act of grace from governing power which mitigates the punishment the law demands for the offense and restores the rights and privileges forfeited on account of the offense. Verneco, Inc. v. Fidelity & Cas. Co. of New York, 253 La. 721, 219 So. 2d 508, 511. A pardon releases offender from entire punishment prescribed for offense and from disabilities consequent on his conviction; it reinstates his civil liberties. State ex rel. Herman v. Powell, 139 Mont. 583, 367 P. 2d 553, 556.

The power to pardon for non-federal crimes is generally invested in state governors, while the President has the power to pardon for federal offenses (Art. II, Sec. 2, U.S. Const.).

See also Amnesty; Board of pardons; Clemency; Commutation; Condonation; Parole; Reprieve.

Distinguished from amnesty. The distinction between amnesty and pardon is one rather of philological interest than of legal importance. Knote v. U. S., 95 U.S. 149, 153, 24 L.Ed. 442, 443. This is so as to their ultimate effect, but there are incidental differences of importance. They are of different character and have different purposes. The one overlooks offense; the other remits punishment. The first is usually addressed to crimes against the sovereignty of the state, to political offenses, forgiveness being deemed more expedient for the public welfare than prosecution and punishment. The second condones infractions of the peace of the state. Amnesty is usually general, addressed to classes or even communities—a legislative act, or under legislation, constitutional or statutory—the act of the supreme magistrate. There may or may not be distinct acts of acceptance. If other rights are dependent upon it and are asserted, there is affirmative evidence of acceptance. Burdick v. U. S., 236 U.S. 79, 35 S.Ct. 267, 59 L.Ed. 476. "Pardon" applies only to the individual, releases him from the punishment fixed by law for his specific offense, but does not affect the criminality of the same or similar acts when performed by other persons or repeated by the same person.

Distinguished from commutation. A pardon, to be effective, must be accepted, Burdick v. U. S., 236 U.S. 79, 35 S.Ct. 267, 268, 59 L.Ed. 476; but a commutation is merely a cessation of the exercise of sovereign authority, and does not obliterate guilt nor restore civil rights, and need not be accepted by the convict to be operative. A commutation is simply a remission of a part of the punishment, a substitution of a less penalty for the one originally imposed; while a "pardon" avoids or terminates punishment for crime. U. S. v. Commissioner of Immigration at Port of New York, C.C.A.N.Y., 5 F.2d 162, 165.

Distinguished from parole. A "pardon" releases the offender from the entire punishment prescribed for the offense, and from all the disabilities consequent on his conviction, while a "parole" a convict is merely released before the expiration of his term, to remain subject during the remainder thereof to supervision by the public authority, and to return to imprisonment on violation of the condition of the parole.

Types of Pardons

Absolute or unconditional pardon. One which frees the criminal without any condition whatever. That which reaches both the punishment prescribed for the offense and the guilt of the offender. It obliterates in legal contemplation the offense itself. It goes no further than to restore the accused to his civil rights and remit the penalty imposed for the particular offense of which he was convicted in so far as it remains unpaid. State v. Cullen, 14 Wash. 2d 105, 127 P.2d 257, 259.

Conditional pardon. One to which a condition is annexed, performance of which is necessary to the validity of the pardon. A pardon which does not become operative until the grantee has performed some specific act, or where it becomes void when some specific event transpires. One granted on the condition that it shall only endure until the voluntary doing of some act by the person pardoned, or that it shall be revoked by a subsequent act on his part, as that he shall leave the state and never return.

Executive pardon. See Executive pardon.

Full pardon. One freely and unconditionally absolving party from all legal consequences, direct and collateral, of crime and conviction. Warren v. State, 127 Tex. Cr. R. 71, 74 S.W.2d 1006, 1008.

General pardon. One granted to all the persons participating in a given criminal or treasonable offense (generally political), or to all offenders of a given class or against a certain statute or within certain limits of time. But "amnesty" is the more appropriate term for this. It may be express, as when a general declaration is made that all offenders of a certain class shall be pardoned, or implied, as in case of the repeal of a penal statute. See Amnesty.

Partial pardon. That which remits only portion of punishment or absolves from only portion of legal consequences of crime. Warren v. State, 127 Tex. Cr. R. 71, 74 S.W.2d 1006, 1008.

Unconditional pardon. Pardon that frees a prisoner without any conditions attached. A full pardon.

Pardon attorney. Official of Justice Department who considers applications for federal pardons and makes recommendations for the exercise of Presidential clemency.

Pardoners /pär'danərz/. In Old English law, persons who carried about the pope's indulgences, and sold them to any who would buy them.

Parens /pärɛnz/ pɛrˈɛnz/. Lat. In Roman law, a parent; originally and properly only the father or mother of the person spoken of; but also, by an extension of its meaning, any relative, male or female, in the line of direct ascent.

"Parens" est nomen generale ad omne genus cognationis /pärɛnz ɛst nɔwn ˈɛn ˈɛm ɡɛnɛl ˈɛn ɡɛnus kɔɡnəˈʃiːnɪs/.
"Parent" is a name general for every kind of relationship.

Parent. In the United States, the comfort and welfare of the people, interstate water guardianship of persons with legal disabilities such as infants, State of W.Va. v. Chas. Pfizer & Co., C.A. N.Y., 440 F.2d 1079, 1089, and in child custody determinations, when acting on behalf of the state to protect the interests of the child. It is the principle that the state must care for those who cannot take care of themselves, such as minors who lack proper care and custody from their parents. It is a concept of standing utilized to protect those quasi-sovereign interests such as health, comfort and welfare of the people, interstate water rights, general economy of the state, etc. Gibbs v. Titelman, D.C.Pa., 369 F.Supp. 38, 54. See also Adoption; Loco parentis; Parens patriae; Surrogate parent.

Parentage. Kindred in the direct ascending line. The state or condition of being a parent.

Parental consent. Consent required of minor from parent to marry or undertake other legal obligations.

Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act. Federal law which imposes a duty on the states to enforce a child custody determination entered by a court of a sister state if the determination is consistent with provisions of the Act. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1738A.

Parental liability. By statute in certain states, the parents may be held liable up to a specified amount for damages caused to property of others by their children if such damage is found to have resulted from negligent control of parent over acts of child.

Parental rights. The sum total of the rights of the parent or parents in and to the child as well as the rights of the child in and to the parent or parents. Anguis v. Superior Court In and For Maricopa County, 6 Ariz.App. 68, 429 P.2d 702, 705. The following are "parental rights" protected to varying degrees by constitution: physical possession of child, which, in case of custodial parent, includes day-to-day care and companionship of child; right to discipline child, which includes right to inculcate in child parent's moral and ethical standards; right to control and manage minor child's earnings; right to control and manage minor child's property; right to be supported by adult child; right to have child bear parent's name; and right to prevent adoption of child without parents' consent. L.A.M. v. State, Alaska, 547 P.2d 827, 835.

Parent-child immunity. In some jurisdictions a parent is immune from liability for negligence in an action brought by his or her child, though the trend has been to abolish or restrict such immunity.

Parent company or corporation. Company owning more than 50 percent of the voting shares, or otherwise a controlling interest, of another company, called the subsidiary. Compare Holding company.

Parentela /pèrantiyä/ /prerëntiylä/. The sum of those persons who trace descent from one ancestor.

In old English law, parentela, or de parentella se tollere, signified a renunciation of one's kindred and family. This was, according to ancient custom, done in open court, before the judge, and in the presence of twelve men, who made oath that they believed it was done for a just cause. After such abjuration, the person was incapable of inheriting anything from any of his relations, etc.
Parenticide /paréntasây/ . One who murders a parent; also the crime so committed.

Parentum est liberos alere etiam nothos /paréntam ést libarows alirły yshiyam nówðows/. It is the duty of parents to support their children even when illegitimate.

Pares /pâriyz/péř/. Lat. In old English law, a person's peers or equals, as the jury for the trial of causes, who were originally the vassals or tenants of the lord, being the equals or peers of the parties litigant; and, as the lord's vassals judged each other in the lord's courts, so the sovereign's vassals, or the lords themselves, judged each other in the sovereign's courts.

Pares curiæ /pâriyz kyúriyiy/. In old English law, peers of the court. Vassals who were bound to attend the lord's court.

Paresis /pariýsas/pérasas/. Progressive general paralysis, involving or leading to the form of insanity known as "dementia paralytica." Popularly, but not very correctly, called "softening of the brain." See Insanity.

Paria copulantur paribus /pâriýya kópyyaléntar pérasbo/. Like things unite with like.

Paribus sententiis reus absolvitur /pérasbo senténsiyiysis riýas abzólvystar/. Where the opinions are equal [where the court is equally divided], the defendant is acquitted.

Pari causa /pâray kóza/. Lat. With equal right; upon an equal footing; equivalent in rights or claims.

Pari delicto /pâray daliyitko/. Lat. In equal fault; in a similar offense or crime; equal in guilt or in legal fault. "Pari delicto" doctrine rests on rule that courts will not enforce an invalid contract and that no party can recover in any action where it is necessary for him to prove an illegal contract in order to make out his case. Neal v. Pennsylvania Life Ins. Co., Okl., 480 P.2d 923, 925. Under this doctrine transgressor will not be allowed to profit from his own wrongdoing and party is barred from recovering damages if his losses are substantially caused by activities which the law forbade him to engage in. Recchion on Behalf of Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. Kirby, D.C.Pa., 637 F.Supp. 1309, 1316. See in pari delicto.

Paries communis /pâriiyz kamyúnwes/. A common wall; a party-wall.

Pari materia /pâray matiriya/. Lat. Of the same matter, on the same subject; as, laws pari materia must be construed with reference to each other.

Pari-mutuel betting /pâriy myútwytuwal bêtiy/. A form of wagering, generally on the outcome of horse or dog races, whereby all bets made on a particular race are pooled and then paid, less a management fee, to holders of winning tickets. Cramer v. New York State Racing Ass'n, 136 A.D.2d 104, 525 N.Y.S.2d 938, 940. Such betting is allowed in most states, though it is heavily regulated. Cf. New York McKinney's Racing, Pari-mutuel Wagering and Breeding Law, § 101 et seq.

Par in parem imperium non habet /páray in péray ampiyira non héybást/. An equal has no dominion over an equal.

Pari passu /pâray pâs(y)uw/péray pêys(y)uw/. Lat. By an equal progress; equably; ratably; without preference. Used especially of creditors who, in marshalling assets, are entitled to receive out of the same fund without any precedence over each other.

Pari ratione /pâray râshiyýoyny/. Lat. For the like reason; by like mode of reasoning.

Paris, declaration of /dekýlrayshuân av péras/. See Declaration.

Parish. In English ecclesiastical law a circuit of ground, committed to the charge of one parson or vicar, or other minister having cure of souls therein. 1 Bl.Comm. 111. The precinct of a parish church, and the particular charge of a secular priest. An ecclesiastical division of a town, city or district, subject to the ministry of one pastor.

In Louisiana, a territorial governmental division of the state corresponding to what is elsewhere called a "county."

Parish apprentice. In old English law, the children of parents unable to maintain them could, by law, be apprenticed, by the guardians or overseers of their parish, to such persons as may be willing to receive them as apprentices. Such children were called "parish apprentices."

Parish church. This expression has various significations. It is applied sometimes to a select body of Christians, forming a local spiritual association, and sometimes to the building in which the public worship of the inhabitants of a parish is celebrated; but the true legal notion of a parochial church is a consecrated place, having attached to it the rights of burial and the administration of the sacraments.

Parish court. The name of a court established in each parish in Louisiana, and corresponding to the county courts or common pleas courts in the other states. It has a limited civil jurisdiction, besides general probate powers.

Parishioners. Members of a parish. In England, for many purposes they form a body politic.

Par items. Items which a drawee bank will remit to another bank without charge.

Parity. Equality in amount or value. Equivalence of prices of farm products in relation to those existing at some former date (base period) or to the general cost of living. Parity prices are important in establishing government price support programs for farmers.

Equivalence of prices of goods or services in two different markets.
The relationship between two currencies such that they are exchangeable for each other at the par or official rate of exchange. See Exchange rate.

Parity ratio. A relationship developed between the index of prices received by farmers for their crops and the index of costs of the farmers for the items which they buy.

Parium eadem est ratio, idem jus /périyam ijeýdam èst réysh(y)ow, áydam jás/. Of things equal, the reason is the same, and the same is the law.

Parium judicium /périyam jadishiýam/. The judgment of peers; trial by a jury of one's peers or equals.

Park, n. An inclosed pleasure-ground in or near a city, set apart for the recreation of the public.

Park, v. Term "park" as used in statutes or ordinances regulating parking, does not comprehend or include merely temporary or momentary stoppage but rather connotes a stoppage with intent of permitting vehicle to remain standing for an appreciable length of time. Ford v. Stevens, 280 Minn. 16, 157 N.W.2d 510, 513.

Parliament. The supreme legislative assembly of Great Britain and Ireland, consisting of the king or queen and the three estates of the realm, viz., the lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and the commons.

High Court of Parliament. In English law, the English parliament, as composed of the house of peers and house of commons; or the house of lords sitting in its judicial capacity.

Parliamentary. Relating or belonging to, connected with, enacted by or proceeding from, or characteristic of, the English parliament in particular, or any legislative body in general.

Parliamentary agents. In England, persons who act as solicitors in promoting and carrying private bills through parliament. They are usually attorneys or solicitors, but they do not usually confine their practice to this particular department. No member or officer of either house may act as an agent.

Parliamentary committee. A committee of members of the house of peers or of the house of commons, appointed by either house for the purpose of making inquiries, by the examination of witnesses or otherwise, into matters which could not be conveniently inquired into by the whole house.

Parliamentary law. The general body of enacted rules (e.g., Roberts Rules of Order) and recognized usages which governs the procedure of legislative assemblies and other deliberative bodies such as meetings of stockholders and directors of corporations, town meetings, boards, clubs, and the like.

Parliamentary taxes. See Tax.

Parliamentum /pàrl(i)améntəm/. L. Lat. A legislative body in general or the English parliament in particular.

Parliamentum religiosorum /pàrl(i)améntəm ralj-iyowsórom/. In most convents there has been a common room into which the brethren withdrew for conversation; conferences there being termed "parliamentum."

Likewise, the societies of the two temples, or inns of court, call that assembly of the benchers or governors wherein they confer upon the common affairs of their several houses a "parliament."

Parochial. Relating or belonging to a parish.

Par of exchange. The precise equality or equivalency of any given sum or quantity of money of one country, and the like sum or quantity of money of any other foreign country into which it is to be exchanged. The par of the currencies of any two countries means the equivalence of a certain amount of the currency of the one in the currency of the other. See Exchange rate.

Parol. A word; speech; hence, oral or verbal. Expressed or evidenced by speech only; as opposed to by writing or by sealed instrument.

As to parol Agreement; Arrest; Demurrer; Lease; and Promise; see those titles.

Parol contract. An oral contract as distinguished from a written or formal contract. See also Oral contract.

Parole /paról/. Release from jail, prison or other confinement after actually serving part of sentence. State v. Ludwig, 218 Or. 483, 344 P.2d 764, 766. Conditional release from imprisonment which entitles parolee to serve remainder of his term outside confines of an institution, if he satisfactorily complies with all terms and conditions provided in parole order. Thomas v. Arizona State Bd. of Pardons and Paroles, 115 Ariz. 128, 564 P.2d 79, 81.

"Parolee" gains his conditional freedom as result of exercise of discretion by parole board which may grant parole when it is of opinion there is reasonable probability that prisoner will live and remain at liberty without violating laws. Birch v. Anderson, C.A.D.C., 358 F.2d 520, 524, 123 U.S.App.D.C. 153.

The granting, denying, revocation, and supervision of parole for federal prisoners rests in the U.S. Parole Commission. Most states have similar boards or commissions. See Parole board or commission.

In military law, a promise given by a prisoner of war, when he has leave to depart from custody, that he will return at the time appointed, unless discharged. An engagement by a prisoner of war, upon being set at liberty, that he will not again take up arms against the government by whose forces he was captured, either for a limited period or while hostilities continue.

Compare Amnesty; Pardon.

Probation distinguished. "Probation" relates to judicial action taken before the prison door is closed, whereas "parole" relates to executive action taken after the door has closed on a convict. State v. Hewett, 270 N.C. 348, 154 S.E.2d 476, 479.

Revocation hearing. Parole revocation hearing is in the nature of an administrative proceeding for the purpose of determining whether a parolee has violated the conditions of his parole. State ex rel. McNeil v. New York State Bd. of Parole, 87 Misc.2d 497, 385 N.Y.S.2d 731, 734.

Parole board or commission. The state and federal administrative bodies empowered to decide whether inmates shall be conditionally released from prison before completion of their sentences. Called "Correctional Boards" in some states.

The U.S. Parole Commission consists of nine members, appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. It has sole authority to grant, modify, or revoke paroles of all U.S. prisoners. It is responsible for the supervision of parolees and prisoners released upon the expiration of their sentences with allowances for statutory good time. U.S. probation officers supervise parolees and mandatory releases.

The former federal Board of Parole was abolished in 1976 with its functions transferred to the U.S. Parole Commission. With implementation of the 1987 federal Sentencing Guidelines, the federal parole system will be phased out and replaced by release under the supervision of the judge who imposed the sentence—rather than by a parole board.

Parolee. Ex-prisoner who has been placed on parole.

Parole officers. Parole system is administered by parole officers whose duties include supervision of parolees. Normally, parolees must periodically report to such officers.

Parol evidence. Oral or verbal evidence; that which is given by word of mouth; the ordinary kind of evidence given by witnesses in court. In a particular sense, and with reference to contracts, deeds, wills, and other writings, parol evidence is the same as extraneous evidence or evidence aliunde. See also Aliunde; Extraneous evidence; Oral evidence.

Parol evidence rule. This evidence rule seeks to preserve integrity of written agreements by refusing to permit contracting parties to attempt to alter import of their contract through use of contemporaneous oral declarations. Rose v. Food Fair Stores, Inc., 437 Pa. 117, 262 A.2d 851. Under this rule when the parties to a contract embody their agreement in writing and intend the writing to be the final expression of their agreement, the terms of the writing may not be varied or contradictory by evidence of any prior written or oral agreement in the absence of fraud, duress, or mutual mistake. Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. First Mortgage Investors, 76 Wis.2d 151, 250 N.W.2d 746, 749. But rule does not forbid a resort to parol evidence not inconsistent with the matters stated in the writing. Elkins v. Super-Cold Southwest Co., Tex.Civ.App., 157 S.W.2d 946, 947. Also, as regards sales of goods, such written agreement may be explained or supplemented by course of dealing or usage of trade or by course of conduct, and by evidence of consistent additional terms unless the court finds the writing to have been intended also as a complete and exclusive statement of the terms of the agreement. U.C.C. § 2–202.

This rule is also applicable to wills and trusts.
PARTES FINIS NIHIL HABUERUNT

tōwtam/. An integral part being taken away, the whole is taken away.

Partes finis nihil habuerunt /pārtyīyz fāynas nāy(h)al ḥābīywīrānt/. In old pleading, the parties to the fine had nothing; that is, had no estate which could be conveyed by it. A plea to a fine which had been levied by a stranger.

Partial. Relating to or constituting a part; not complete; not entire or universal; not general or total. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Baker, Tex.Civ. App., 65 S.W.2d 344, 346.

Partial account. An account of an executor, administrator, guardian, etc., not exhibiting his entire dealings with the estate or fund from his appointment to final settlement, but covering only a portion of the time of or of the estate.

Partial average. Another name for particular average. See Average.

Partial dependency. Test as to existence of such dependency for purpose of worker’s compensation is whether contributions were relied on by claimants to aid and maintain them in present position in life and whether they were to substantial degree depending on support or aid of employee at time of death. Federal Underwriters Exchange v. Hinkle, Tex.Civ.App., 187 S.W.2d 122, 124.

Partial eviction. That which takes place when the possessor is deprived of only a portion of his rights in the premises. Such may result in constructive eviction.

Partial evidence. That which goes to establish a detached fact, in a series tending to the fact in dispute. It may be received, subject to be rejected as incompetent, unless connected with the fact in dispute by proof of other facts; for example, on an issue of title to real property, evidence of the continued possession of a remote occupant is partial, for it is of a detached fact, which may or may not be afterwards connected with the fact in dispute.

Partial incapacity. Such occurs when injury disables a workman to perform part of the usual tasks of his job, though such disablement does not prevent him from procuring and retaining employment reasonably suitable to his physical condition and ability to work, or when because of his injury he is only able to perform labor of a less remunerative class than he performed before the injury, and as a consequence he suffers a depression or reduction in his earning capacity. Commercial Ins. Co. of Newark, New Jersey v. Puente, Tex.Civ.App., 535 S.W.2d 948, 957.

Partial limitation. Provision found in some insurance policies in which the insurer agrees to pay a total loss if the actual loss exceeds a certain amount.

Partial loss. A loss of a part of a thing or of its value, or any damage not amounting (actually or constructively) to its entire destruction; as contrasted with total loss. Partial loss is one in which the damage done to the thing insured is not so complete as to amount to a total loss, either actual or constructive. In every such case the underwriter is liable to pay such proportion of the sum which would be payable on total loss as the damage sustained by the subject of insurance bears to the whole value at the time of insurance. Partial loss implies a damage sustained by the ship or cargo, which falls upon the respective owners of the property so damaged; and, when happening from any peril insured against by the policy, the owners are to be indemnified by the underwriters, unless in cases excepted by the express terms of the policy.

Partial payment. See Payment.

Partial release. Clause in blanket mortgage directing mortgagee to release specified parcels from lien upon payment of certain sum.

Partial taking. See Eminent domain.

Partial verdict. See Verdict.

Partiarius /pārshiyēriyas/. Lat. In Roman law, a legatee who was entitled, by the directions of the will, to receive a share or portion of the inheritance left to the heir.

Partible lands. Lands which might be divided; lands held in gavelkind.

Particeps /pārtṣēps/. Lat. A participant; a sharer; anciently, a part owner, or parcener.

Particeps criminis /pārtṣēps krimionas/. A participant in a crime; an accomplice. One who shares or co-operates in a criminal offense, tort or fraud. See Accomplice.

Participate /pārtispēyt/. To receive or have a part or share of; to partake of; experience in common with others; to have or enjoy a part or share in common with others. To partake, as to "participate" in a discussion, or in a pension or profit sharing plan. To take equal shares and proportions; to share or divide, as to participate in an estate. To take as tenants in common.

Participation. Provision in insurance policies by which the insured shares or participates in each loss incurred and covered by the policy on a specified percentage basis. Sometimes loosely referred to as coinsurance but latter term is not strictly applicable.

To prove "participation" in a criminal enterprise, for purpose of convicting for aiding and abetting, there must be evidence to establish that defendant engaged in some affirmative conduct, that is, that defendant committed an overt act designed to aid in success of the venture; proof of mere negative acquiescence will not suffice. U.S. v. Cowart, C.A.Ga., 595 F.2d 1023, 1035.

Participation loan. As a loan risk safeguard, and because of statutory and regulatory limitations on the amount which a single bank may lend to a single borrower, two or more banks will join in larger loans with each bank lending a portion of the amount to the borrower. Such loans are usually arranged for and serviced by a "lead" bank-lender.
Participation mortgage. Type of mortgage where lender participates in profits of venture beyond or in addition to normal interest rate.

Participes plures sunt quasi unum corpus in eo quod unum jus habent, et oportet quod corpus sit integrum, et quod in nulla parte sit defectus /partisapżeyz plûríyz sànt kwéyaz yúwnam kérfàs in iyow kwód yúwnam jás héybang, ét spórtat kwód kórpsas sid íntàgràm ét kwód in nála pàrtyi sit dáfèktás/. Many partners are as one body, inasmuch as they have one right, and it is necessary that the body be perfect, and that there be a defect in no part.

Particula /partikyals/. A small piece of land.

Particular. Relating to a part or portion of anything; separate; sole; single; individual; specific; local; comprising a part only; partial in extent; not universal. Opposed to general. State v. Patterson, 60 Idaho 67, 88 P.2d 493, 497. Of, or pertaining to, a single person, class or thing. Albin v. Hughes, Tex.Civ.App., 304 S.W.2d 371, 372.

As to particular Average; Customs; Estate; Malice; and Partnership; see those titles.

Particularity. In a pleading, affidavit, or the like, is the detailed statement of particulars.

Particular lien. A particular lien is a right to retain a thing for some charge or claim growing out of, or connected with, the identical thing. Right to retain property of another on account of labor employed or money expended on that specific property, and such lien may arise by implication of law, usages of a trade, or by express contract.

Particulars. The details of a claim, or the separate items of an account. When these are stated in an orderly form, for the information of a defendant, the statement is called a "bill of particulars". See Particulars of criminal charges.

Particulars, bill of. See Particulars of criminal charges.

Particulars of breaches and objections. In an action brought, in England, for the infringement of letters patent, the plaintiff is bound to deliver with his declaration (now with his statement of claim) particulars (i.e., details) of the breaches which he complains of.

Particulars of criminal charges. A prosecutor, when a charge is general, is frequently ordered to give the defendant a statement of the specific acts charged (bill of particulars). Fed.R.Crim.P. 7. See Bill (Bill of particulars).

Particulars of sale. When property such as land, houses, shares, reversions, etc., is to be sold by auction, it is usually described in a document called the "particulars," copies of which are distributed among intending bidders. They should fairly and accurately describe the property.

Particular tenant. The tenant of a particular estate. See Estate.

Parties. The persons who take part in the performance of any act, or who are directly interested in any affair, contract, or conveyance, or who are actively concerned in the prosecution and defense of any legal proceeding. Green v. Bogue, 158 U.S. 478, 15 S.Ct. 975, 39 L.Ed. 1061. See also Party.

In the Roman civil law, the parties were designated as "actor" and "reus". In civil actions they are called "plaintiff" and "defendant"; in equity, "complainant", or "plaintiff", and "defendant"; in admiralty practice, "libelant" and "respondent" or "libellee"; in appeals, "appellant" and "respondent" or "appellee", or sometimes, "plaintiff in error" and "defendant in error"; in criminal proceedings, "State of _____", or "United States of America", and "defendant".

See also Coparties; Identity of parties; Indispensable parties; Interpleader; Intervention; Joinder; Necessary parties; Party; Proper party; Real party in interest; Substitution of parties; Third-party practice.

Indispensable parties. See Joinder.

Joinder of parties. See Joinder.

Necessary parties. See Joinder.

Parties to crime. See Accessory; Accomplice; Principal.

Proper parties. See Joinder.

Real party in interest. See Party.

Parties and privies. Parties to a deed or contract are those with whom the deed or contract is actually made or entered into. By the term "privies," as applied to contracts, is frequently meant those between whom the contract is mutually binding, although not literally parties to such contract. Thus, in the case of a lease, the lessor and lessee are both parties and privies, the contract being literally made between the two, and also being mutually binding; but, if the lessee assign his interest to a third party, then a privity arises between the assignee and the original lessor, although such assignee is not literally a party to the original lease.

Parties in interest. See Party (Real party in interest).

Partisan. An adherent to a particular party or cause as opposed to the public interest at large.

Partitio /partis(i)yəʊ/. Lat. In the civil law, partition; division. This word did not always signify dimidium, a dividing into halves.

Partitio legata /partis(i)yə lagéyta/. In the civil law, a testamentary partition. This took place where the testator, in his will, directed the heir to divide the inheritance and deliver a designated portion thereof to a named legatee.

Partition. The dividing of lands held by joint tenants, coparceners, or tenants in common. Gibson v. Gibson, 264 Ark. 420, 572 S.W.2d 148, 149. And, in a less technical sense, any division of real or personal property between co-owners, resulting in individual ownership of the interests of each. Division between several persons of property which belongs to them as co-owners; it may be compulsory (judicial) or voluntary. O'Brien v.

Commonly, the court will order the property sold and the proceeds divided instead of ordering a physical partition of the property.

Owelt and partition. See Owelty.

Partition, deed of. In conveyancing, a species of primary or original conveyance between two or more joint tenants, coparceners, or tenants in common, by which they divide the lands so held among them in severalty, each taking a distinct part.

Partition of a succession. The partition of a succession is the division of the effects of which the succession is composed, among all the co-heirs, according to their respective rights. Partition is voluntary or judicial. It is voluntary when it is made among all the co-heirs present and of age, and by their mutual consent. It is judicial when it is made by the authority of the court, and according to the formalities prescribed by law. Every partition is either definitive or provisional. Definitive partition is that which is made in a permanent and irrevocable manner. Provisional partition is that which is made provisionally, either of certain things before the rest can be divided, or even of everything that is to be divided, when the parties are not in a situation to make an irrevocable partition.

Partner. A member of partnership or firm; one who has united with others to form a partnership in business. See also General partner; Partnership.

Dormant partners. Those whose names are not known or do not appear as partners, but who nevertheless are silent partners, and partake of the profits, and thereby become partners, either absolutely to all intents and purposes, or at all events in respect to third parties. Dormant partners, in strictness of language, mean those who are merely passive in the firm, whether known or unknown, in contradistinction to those who are active and conduct the business of the firm, as principals. See also Silent partner.

Full or general partner. A partner who participates fully in the profits, losses and management of the partnership and who is personally liable for its debts.

Junior partner. A partner whose participation in the firm is limited as to both profits and management. See also Limited partner, below.

Limited partner. A partner whose participation in the profits is limited by an agreement and who is not liable for the debts of the partnership beyond his capital contribution. See also Partnership (Limited partnership).

Liquidating partner. The partner who, upon the dissolution or insolvency of the firm, is appointed to settle its accounts, collect assets, adjust claims, and pay debts.

Nominal partner. One whose name appears in connection with the business as a member of the firm, but who has no real interest in it.

Ostensible partner. One whose name appears to the world as such, or who is held out to all persons having dealings with the firm in the character of a partner, whether or not he has any real interest in the firm.

Quasi partner. One who has joined with others in a business which appears to be a partnership but who is not actually a partner, e.g. joint adventurer.

Secret partner. See Dormant partners, above.

Silent partner. See Dormant partners, above.

Special partner. A member of a limited partnership, who furnishes certain funds, and whose liability extends no further than the fund furnished. A partner whose responsibility is restricted to the amount of his investment.

Surviving partner. The partner who, on the dissolution of the firm by the death of his copartner, occupies the position of a trustee to settle up its affairs.

Partnership. A business owned by two or more persons that is not organized as a corporation. A voluntary contract between two or more competent persons to place their money, effects, labor, and skill, or some or all of them, in lawful commerce or business, with the understanding that there shall be a proportional sharing of the profits and losses between them. Burr v. Green- land, Tex.Civ.App., 356 S.W.2d 370, 376. An association of two or more persons to carry on, as co-owners, a business for profit. Uniform Partnership Act, § 6(1). Nearly all states have adopted the Uniform Partnership Act.

For income tax purposes, a partnership includes a syndicate, group, pool, or joint venture, as well as ordinary partnerships. In an ordinary partnership, two or more parties combine capital and/or services to carry on a business for profit as co-owners. I.R.C. § 7701(a)(2). See also Limited partnership and Tiered partnership, below.

Partnerships are treated as a conduit and are, therefore, not subject to taxation. The various items of partnership income, gains and losses, etc. flow through to the individual partners and are reported on their personal income tax returns.

Articles of partnership. See that title.

Collapsible partnership. See that title.

Commercial partnership. See Trading partnership.

Family partnership. One which family members control by being partners. Children may be partners but for tax purposes they should be given complete control over their interests; otherwise, the entire profits will be considered income of the active adult partners. See also Family partnership.

General partnership. A partnership in which the parties carry on all their trade and business, whatever it may be, for the joint benefit and profit of all the parties concerned, whether the capital stock be limited or not, or the contributions thereto be equal or unequal. One in which all the partners share the profits and losses as well as the management equally, though their capital contributions may vary.

Implied partnership. One which is not a real partnership but which is recognized by the court as such because of the conduct of the parties; in effect, the parties are estopped from denying the existence of a partnership.

Limited partnership. A partnership consisting of one or more general partners, jointly and severally responsible as ordinary partners, and by whom the business is conducted, and one or more special partners, contributing in cash payments a specific sum as capital to the common stock, and who are not liable for the debts of the partnership beyond the fund so contributed. See also Limited partnership.

Mining partnership. See that title.

Particular partnership. One existing where the parties have united to share the benefits of a single individual transaction or enterprise.

Partnership assets. Property of any kind belonging to the firm as such (not the separate property of the individual partners) and available to the recourse of the creditors of the firm in the first instance.

Partnership at will. One designed to continue for no fixed period of time, but only during the pleasure of the parties, and which may be dissolved by any partner without previous notice.

Partnership by estoppel. Two or more persons who hold themselves out as partners to a third person, when in fact they are not partners, are barred from claiming they are not partners.

Partnership debt. One due from the partnership or firm as such and not (primarily) from one of the individual partners.

Partnership in commendam. A partnership formed by a contract by which one person or partnership agrees to furnish another person or partnership a certain amount, either in property or money, to be employed by the person or partnership to whom it is furnished, in his or their own name or firm, on condition of receiving a share in the profits, in the proportion determined by the contract, and of being liable to losses and expenses to the amount furnished and no more.

Secret partnership. One where the existence of certain persons as partners is not avowed to the public by any of the partners. See Partner (Dormant partners).

Special partnership. At common law, one formed for the prosecution of a special branch of business, as distinguished from the general business of the parties, or for one particular venture or subject. A joint adventure under state statutes; such are usually considered "limited partnerships".

Statutory partnership association. A statutory creation in some states (e.g., Michigan, New Jersey, Ohio) which resembles a corporation more than a partnership, but which has many attributes of the limited partnership.

Subpartnership. One formed where one partner in a firm makes a stranger a partner with him in his share of the profits of that firm. It is not a partnership but an arrangement in which the subpartner shares in the profits and losses of a partner.

Tiered partnership. An ownership arrangement wherein in one partnership (the parent or first tier) is a partner in one or more partnerships (the subsidiary/subsidiaries or second tier). Frequently, the first tier is a holding partnership and the second tier is an operating partnership.

Trading partnership. See that title.

Universal partnership. One in which the partners jointly agree to contribute to the common fund of the partnership the whole of their property, of whatever character, and future, as well as present.

Partnership agreement. The document embodying the terms and conditions of a partnership and sometimes referred to as the articles of partnership.

Partnership articles. See Articles of partnership.

Partnership association. Type of business association which resembles in part a partnership and a joint stock company. Its salient feature is the limited liability of the members and is seldom used today.

Partnership certificate. A document evidencing the participation of the partners in a partnership and commonly furnished to financial institutions when the partnership borrows money.

Partnership insurance. See insurance.

Part performance. A plaintiff who renders partial performance of a contract relying on the promised performance of the other party may successfully resist the defense of the statute of frauds under certain conditions. In order to establish part performance taking an oral contract for the sale of realty out of the statute of frauds, the acts relied upon as part performance must be of such a character that they can reasonably be naturally accounted for in no other way than that they were performed in pursuance of the contract, and they must be in conformity with its provisions. Camerota v. Wisniewski, 21 Conn.Sup. 88, 145 A.2d 139, 141. See U.C.C. § 2–201(3). See also Performance.

Partus /pártas/. Lat. Child; offspring; the child just before it is born, or immediately after its birth.

Partus ex legitimo thro non certius noscit matrem quam genitorem suum /pártas éks lajitamow òtoròw non sársh(y)òs nòsòt méytròm kwém jénatordòm s(y)ùwam/. The offspring of a legitimate bed knows not his mother more certainly than his father.

Partus sequitur ventrem /pártas sèkwitòw vèntròm/. The offspring follows the mother; the brood of an animal belongs to the owner of the dam; the offspring of a slave belongs to the owner of the mother, or follows the condition of the mother. A maxim of the civil law, which has been adopted in the law of England in regard to animals, though never allowed in the case of human beings.

Party, n. A person concerned or having or taking part in any affair, matter, transaction, or proceeding, considered individually. A "party" to an action is a person whose name is designated on record as plaintiff or defendant. M & A Elec. Power Co-op. v. True, Mo.App., 480 S.W.2d 310, 314. Term, in general, means one having right to control proceedings, to make defense, to adduce and cross-examine witnesses, and to appeal from judgment. City of Chattanooga v. Swift, 223 Tenn. 46, 442 S.W.2d 257, 258.

"Party" is a technical word having a precise meaning in legal parlance; it refers to those by or against whom a legal suit is brought, whether in law or in equity, the party plaintiff or defendant, whether composed of one or more individuals and whether natural or legal persons; all others who may be affected by the suit, indirectly or consequently, are persons interested but not parties. Golatte v. Mathews, D.C. Ala., 394 F.Supp. 1203, 1207.

See also Nominal defendant; Parties; Prevailing party.

For indispensable parties, joinder of parties, necessary parties, proper parties, see Joinder.

Party aggrieved. Under statutes permitting any party aggrieved to appeal, is one whose right has been directly and injuriously affected by action of court. Singer v. Allied Factors, 216 Minn. 443, 13 N.W.2d 378, 380. One whose pecuniary interest in subject matter of an action is directly and injuriously affected or whose right of property is either established or divested by complained of decision. Whitman v. Whitman, Okl., 397 P.2d 664, 667.

To be "party aggrieved" by judgment, appellant's interest must be immediate, pecuniary and substantial and not nominal or remote consequence of judgment. Leoke v. San Bernardino County, 249 C.A.2d 767, 57 Cal.Rptr. 770, 772, 773. See also Aggrieved party.

Party in interest. Primary meaning ascribed the term "party in interest" in bankruptcy cases is one whose pecuniary interest is directly affected by the bankruptcy proceeding. In re Kutner, Bkrtcy. Tex., 3 B.R. 422, 425.

Party to be charged. A phrase used in the statute of frauds, meaning the party against whom the contract is sought to be enforced. The party to be charged in the action—that is, the defendant.

Political party. A body of voters organized for the purpose of influencing or controlling the policies and conduct of government through the nomination and election of its candidates to office. See also Political party.

Real party in interest. Fed.R. Civil P. 17(a) provides that every action shall be prosecuted by the "real party in interest." The adoption of this rule was intended to change the common law rule which permitted suit to be brought only in the name of the person having the legal title to the right of action, and thus precluded suit by persons who had only equitable or beneficial interests. Under the rule the "real party in interest" is the party who, by the substantive law, possesses the right sought to be enforced, and not necessarily the person who will ultimately benefit from the recovery. This is illustrated by the further language of the rule stating that executors, administrators, and other named representatives may sue in their own name without joining with them the party for whose benefit the action is brought.

Third parties. A term used to include all persons who are not parties to the contract, agreement, or instrument of writing by which their interest in the thing conveyed is sought to be affected. See also Beneficiary.

In civil actions, a defendant, as a third-party plaintiff, may cause a summons and complaint to be served upon a person not a party to the action who is or may be liable to him for all or part of the plaintiffs' claim against him. A similar right is afforded to the plaintiff when a counterclaim is asserted against him. Fed.R. Civil P. 14. See Third party complaint; Third-party practice.

Party wall. A wall erected on a property boundary as a common support to structures on both sides, which are under different ownerships. A wall built partly on the land of one owner, and partly on the land of another, for the common benefit of both in supporting the construction of contiguous buildings. A division wall between two adjacent properties belonging to different persons and used for mutual benefit of both parties, but it is not necessary that the wall should stand part upon each of two adjoining lots, and it may stand wholly upon one lot. Soma Realty Co. v. Romeo, 31 Misc.2d 20, 220 N.Y.S.2d 752, 755.

In the primary and most ordinary meaning of the term, a party-wall is (1) a wall of which the two adjoining owners are tenants in common. But it may also mean (2) a wall divided longitudinally into two strips, one belonging to each of the neighboring owners; (3) a wall which belongs entirely to one of the adjoining owners, but is subject to an easement or right in the other to have it maintained as a dividing wall between the two tenements (the term is so used in some of the English building acts); or (4) a wall divided longitudinally into two moieties, each moiety being subject to a cross-easement in favor of the owner of the other moiety.

Parum /párum/. Lat. Little; but little.

Parum cavisse videtur /párum kavísiy vadiyta/. Lat. Roman law. He seems to have taken too little care; he seems to have been incautious, or not sufficiently upon his guard. A form of expression used by the judge or magistrate in pronouncing sentence of death upon a criminal.

Parum differunt quae re concordant /párum difaránt kwíy ríy kankórdánt/. Things which agree in substance differ but little.

Parum est latam esse sententiam nisi mandetur executioni /párum ést léytam ésiy santéns(h)ýam náysay mendéytar éksakyúwshiyóóñy/. It is little [or to little Par value. The face or stated value of a share of stock or bond. With reference to mortgages or trust deeds, the value of the mortgage based on the balance owing, without discount.

In the case of a common share, par means an arbitrary or nominal dollar amount assigned to the share by the issuing company. Par value may also be used to compute the dollar amount of the common shares on the balance sheet. Par value has little significance so far as market value of common stock is concerned. Many companies today issue no-par stock but give a stated par value on the balance sheet. In the case of preferred shares and bonds, however, par is important. It often signifies the dollar value upon which dividends on preferred stocks, and interest on bonds, are figured. In the case of bonds and stock, the face value appearing on the certificate is the par value. Those stocks not containing such a statement have no par value.

Bonds are issued at or very near par value, and subsequently trade at either a discount or a premium to this figure, based on the direction of interest rates. Bonds mature at par.

Par value or stated value. The Revised Model Business Corporation Act and the statutes of many states have eliminated the concept of par value.

Parva serjeantia /párva sərˈdʒiəntə/ Prairie, Petia serjeanty (q.v.).

Parvum cape /pərvəm kɛp(ə)y/. See Petit cape.

Pas /pá/. In French. Precedence; right of going foremost.

Pass, v. To utter or pronounce, as when the court passes sentence upon a prisoner. Also to proceed; to be rendered or given, as when judgment is said to pass for the plaintiff in a suit.

In legislative parlance, a bill or resolution is said to pass when it is agreed to or enacted by the house, or when the body has sanctioned its adoption by the requisite majority of votes; in the same circumstances, the body is said to pass the bill or motion. See also Passage.

When an auditor appointed to examine into any accounts certifies to their correctness, he is said to pass them; i.e., they pass through the examination without being detained or sent back for inaccuracy or imperfection.

The term also means to examine into anything and then authoritatively determine the disputed questions which it involves. In this sense a jury is said to pass upon the rights or issues in litigation before them.

In the language of conveyancing, the term means to move from one person to another; i.e. to be transferred or conveyed from one owner to another.

To publish; utter; transfer; circulate; impose fraudulently. This is the meaning of the word when the offense of passing counterfeit money or a forged paper is spoken of.

"Pass," "utter," "publish," and "sell" are in some respects convertible terms, and, in a given case, "pass" may include utter, publish, and sell. The words "uttering" and "passing," used of notes, do not necessarily import that they are transferred as genuine. The words include any delivery of a note to another for value, with intent that it shall be put into circulation as money.

When used in connection with negotiable instrument means to deliver, to circulate, to hand from one person to another. State v. Beaver, 266 N.C. 115, 145 S.E.2d 330, 331. See Delivery; Negotiation; Transfer; Utter.

Pass, n. Permission to pass; a license to go or come; a certificate, emanating from authority, wherein it is declared that a designated person is permitted to go beyond certain boundaries which, without such authority, he could not lawfully pass. Also a ticket issued by a railroad or other transportation company, authorizing a designated person to travel free on its lines, between certain points or for a limited time.

Passage. Act of passing; transit; transition. A way over water or land or through the air. An easement giving the right to pass over a piece of private water. Travel by sea; a voyage over water; the carriage of passengers by water; price paid for such carriage.

Enactment; the act of carrying a bill or resolution through a legislative or deliberative body in accordance with the prescribed forms and requisites. The emergence of the bill in the form of a law, or the motion in the form of a resolution. Passage may mean when bill has passed either or both houses of legislature or when it is signed by President or Governor.

Passaggio /pəsəˈdʒiˌoʊ/. An ancient writ addressed to the keepers of the ports to permit a man who had the king's leave to pass over sea.

Passator /paˈsɛtɔr/. In old English law, he who has the interest or command of the passage of a river; or a lord to whom a duty is paid for passage.

Passbook. Document issued by a bank in which the customer's transactions (i.e. savings deposits and withdrawals) are recorded.

Passenger. In general, a person who gives compensation to another for transportation. Shapiro v. Bookspan, 155 Cal.App.2d 353, 318 P.2d 123, 126. The word passenger has however various meanings, depending upon the circumstances under which and the context in which the word is used; sometimes it is construed in a restricted legal sense as referring to one who is being carried by another for hire; on other occasions, the word is interpreted as meaning any occupant of a vehicle other than the person operating it.
The essential elements of "passenger" as opposed to "guest" under guest statute are that driver must receive some benefit sufficiently real, tangible, and substantial to serve as the inducing cause of the transportation so as to completely overshadow mere hospitality or friendship; it may be easier to find compensation where the trip has commercial or business flavor. Friedhoff v. Engberg, 82 S.D. 522, 149 N.W.2d 759, 761, 762, 763.

A person whom a common carrier has contracted to carry from one place to another, and has, in the course of the performance of that contract, received under his care either upon the means of conveyance, or at the point of departure of that means of conveyance.

Passenger mile. In statistics of transportation, a unit of measure equal to the transport of one passenger over one mile of route.

Passim / pásm/. Lat. Everywhere. Often used to indicate a very general reference to a book or legal authority.

Passion. In the definition of manslaughter as homicide without premeditation but under the influence of sudden "passion" or "heat of passion", this term means any of the emotions of the mind known as rage, anger, hatred, furious resentment, or terror, rendering the mind incapable of cool reflection. See also Heat of passion.

Passive. As used in law, this term means inactive; permissive, consisting in endurance or submission, rather than action; and in some connections it carries the implication of being subjected to a burden or charge.

To passive Debt; Negligence; Title; Trust; and Use; see those titles.

Passive income. Income earned in an activity in which an individual does not materially participate. An example of "passive income" includes: income from an interest in a limited partnership in contrast to "active income" which is salaries and wages, or earnings from a trade or business. Rental income is always considered passive regardless of material participation. See also Passive loss.

Passive investment income. As defined in I.R.C. § 1362(d)(3)(D), passive investment income means gross receipts from royalties, certain rents, dividends, interest, annuities, and gains from the sale or exchange of stock and securities.

Passive loss. In tax law, any loss from (1) activities in which the taxpayer does not materially participate, (2) rental activities (with certain exceptions for individuals who actively participate in rental activities), or (3) tax shelter activities. The deductibility of passive losses are limited based upon when the activity was acquired, as well as the type of activity involved. Any passive losses which are limited in the year incurred are fully deductible in the year the investment activity is disposed. Passive loss limitations were phased in beginning in 1987. See also Passive income; Portfolio income.

Passport. A document identifying a citizen, in effect requesting foreign powers to allow the bearer to enter and to pass freely and safely, recognizing the right of the citizen to travel to foreign countries and to return to land of his allegiance, as well as request to foreign powers that such citizen be allowed to pass freely and safely. Worthy v. U.S., C.A.Fla., 328 F.2d 386, 391. See also Visa.

Any travel document issued by competent authority showing the bearer's origin, identity, and nationality if any, which is valid for the entry of the bearer into a foreign country. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1101.

In international law. A license or safe-conduct, issued during the progress of a war, authorizing a person to remove himself or his effects from the territory of one of the belligerent nations to another country, or to travel from country to country without arrest or detention on account of the war.

Maritime. A document issued to a neutral merchant vessel, by her own government, during the progress of a war, to be carried on the voyage, to evidence her nationality and protect her against the cruisers of the belligerent powers. This paper is otherwise called a "pass," "sea-pass," "sea-letter," "sea-brief." It usually contains the captain's or master's name and residence, the name, property, description, tonnage, and destination of the ship, the nature and quantity of the cargo, the place from whence it comes, and its destination, with such other matters as the practice of the place requires.

Past consideration. In contracts, a detriment suffered by a contracting party at a time antecedent to the formation of a contract and hence, except in unusual cases, is not legally sufficient consideration to support a contract. In law of negotiable instruments, past consideration is sufficient to support a note or other negotiable instrument.

Past recollection recorded. A memorandum or record concerning a matter about which a witness once had knowledge but now has insufficient recollection to enable him to testify fully and accurately, shown to have been made or adopted by the witness when the matter was fresh in his memory and to reflect that knowledge correctly, is not excluded by the hearsay rule, even though the declarant is available as a witness. If admitted, the memorandum or record may be read into evidence but may not itself be received as an exhibit unless offered by an adverse party. Fed.Evid.R. 803(5).

Under the "past recollection recorded" doctrine, written report is properly admissible into evidence if witness has testified that on examination of the report he had no independent recollection of the matters contained therein. Lawson v. Belt Ry. Co. of Chicago, 34 Ill.
Patent, or patent universis per presentes. In feudal law, the procurement or provision which tenants were bound to make for their lords at certain times, or as often as they made a progress to their lands. It was often converted into money.

Patent, adj. Open; manifest; evident; unsealed. Used in this sense in such phrases as “patent ambiguity,” “patent writ,” “letters patent.”

Letters patent. Open letters, as distinguished from letters close. An instrument proceeding from the government, and conveying a right, authority, or grant to an individual, as a patent for a tract of land, or for the exclusive right to make and sell a new invention. See Letters patent; Patent and Trademark Office.

Patent, n. A grant of some privilege, property, or authority, made by the government or sovereign of a country to one or more individuals.

The instrument by which a state or government grants public lands to an individual.

A grant of right to exclude others from making, using or selling one's invention and includes right to license others to make, use or sell it. Valmont Industries, Inc. v. Yuma Mfg. Co., D.Colo., 296 F.Supp. 1291, 1294. A grant from the government conveying and securing for an inventor the exclusive right to make, use, and sell an invention for seventeen years. 35 U.S.C.A. § 154. See Board of Patent Appeals and Interferences; Patent and copyright clause; Patent and Trademark Office.

See also Assignor estoppel; Basic or pioneer patent; Combination patent; File wrapper estoppel; Identity; Invention; Invention; Lapse patent; Letters patent; License; Official Gazette; On sale; Paper patent; Process patent; Prosecution history estoppel; Public use; Scope of a patent; Shop right rule; Useful; Utility.

Design patent. The unique appearance or design of an article of manufacture may be protected against duplication by a design patent if it is original, non-obvious and ornamental. Design patents may be issued for both surface ornamentation or the overall configuration of an object. Such patents last for a term of 14 years. Material that is eligible for design patent protection may also be copyrightable. 35 U.S.C.A. § 171.

Land patent. A muniment of title issued by a government or state for the conveyance of some portion of the public domain.

Mining claims. The instrument by which title to mining claims is conveyed by the federal government subject to any existing liens and any vested and accrued water rights and in conformity with conditions imposed by state statutes. Roberts v. Morton, D.Colo., 389 F.Supp. 87, 91.

Patent pending. Designation (often abbreviated “Pat. Pend.”) describing the legal status of patent application, after patent application has been filed and while patent examination is being conducted by U.S. Patent and Trademark Office to determine whether the claimed invention is in fact new, useful and non-obvious.

Patent-right. A right secured by patent; usually meaning a right to the exclusive manufacture, use and sale of an invention or patented article.

Patent-right dealer. Any one whose business it is to sell, or offer for sale, patent-rights.

Patent suit. A suit with issues affecting the validity, enforcement or infringement of a patent.

Pioneer patent. A patent for an invention covering a function never before performed, or a wholly novel device, or one of such novelty and importance as to mark a distinct step in the progress of the art, as distinguished from a mere improvement or perfecting of what has gone before. Westinghouse v. Boyden Power-Brake Co., 170 U.S. 537, 18 S.Ct. 707, 42 L.Ed. 1136; Sealed Air Corp. v. U.S. Intern. Trade Commn., 645 F.2d 976.

Plant patent. A patent granted to person who invents or discovers and assexually reproduces any distinct and new variety of plant, including cultivated sports, mutants, hybrids, and newly found seedlings, other than a tuber propagated plant or a plant found in an uncultivated state. 35 U.S.C.A. § 161.

Reissued patent. A patent may be reissued whenever it is, through error without any deceptive intention, deemed wholly or partly inoperative or invalid, by reason of a defective specification or drawing, or by reason of the patentee claiming more or less than he had a right to claim in the patent. 35 U.S.C.A. § 252.

Tax treatment. A patent is an identifiable intangible asset which may be amortized over the remaining life of the patent. The sale of a patent usually results in capital gain treatment. I.R.C. § 1235. If developed internally by a company, the development costs are expensed as incurred under generally accepted accounting principles.

Utility patent. The customary type of patent issued to any novel, non-obvious, and useful machine, article of manufacture, composition of matter or process. This is one of three types of patents provided for by the statute, the others being design and plant patents. See also Utility.

Patentable. Suitable to be patented; entitled by law to be protected by the issuance of a patent. And to be patentable, a device must embody some new idea or principle not before known, and it must be a discovery as distinguished from mere mechanical skill or knowledge. In re Herthel, Cust. & Pat.App., 104 F.2d 824, 826.
Patent ambiguity. An ambiguity apparent on face of instrument and arising by reason of any inconsistency or inherent uncertainty of language used so that effect is either to convey no definite meaning or confused meaning. Ohio Cas. Group of Ins. Companies v. Gray, C.A.Ind., 746 F.2d 381, 383. See also Ambiguity. Compare Latent ambiguity.

Patent and copyright clause. Art. I, Sec. 8, cl. 8, U.S. Constitution, which provides for promoting the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries.

Patent and Trademark Office. Federal agency in the Department of Commerce headed by the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks. In addition to the examination of patent and trademark applications, issuance of patents, and registration of trademarks, the Patent and Trademark Office (PTO) sells printed copies of issued documents; records and indexes documents transferring ownership; maintains a scientific library and search files containing over 20 million documents, including U.S. and foreign patents and U.S. trademarks; provides search rooms for the public to research their applications; hears and decides appeals from prospective inventors and trademark applicants; participates in legal proceedings involving the issue of patents or trademark registrations; helps represent the United States in international efforts to cooperate on patent and trademark policy; compiles the Official Gazettes—a weekly list of all patents and trademarks issued by the PTO; and maintains a roster of agents and attorneys qualified to practice before the PTO.

Patent defect. In sales of personal property, one which is plainly visible or which can be discovered by such an inspection as would be made in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence. U.C.C. § 2–605(1).

A patent defect in a legal description is one which cannot be corrected on its face, and a new description must be used. Compare Latent defect.

Patentee. He to whom a patent has been granted. The term is usually applied to one who has obtained letters patent for a new invention.

Patent pooling. An arrangement in which a number of manufacturers agree to an interchange of patent licenses among the members of the pooling group.

Pater /pé'tar/. Lat. A father; the father. In the civil law, this word sometimes included avus (grandfather).

Paterfamilias /pé'tar familiás/. The father of a family.

In Roman law, the head or master of a family. This word is sometimes employed, in a wide sense, as equivalent to sui juris. A person sui juris is called "paterfamilias" even when under the age of puberty. In the narrower and more common use, a paterfamilias is any one invested with potestas over any person. It is thus as applicable to a grandfather as to a father.

Pater is est quem nuptiae demonstrant /pé'tar is ést kwém nápshiyiyi dámonstránt/. The father is he whom the marriage points out.

Paternal. That which belongs to the father or comes from him.

Paternal line. A line of descent or relationship between two persons which is traced through the father.

Paternal power. The authority lawfully exercised by parents over their children. This phrase is also used to translate the Latin "patricia potestas" (q.v.).

Paternal property. That which descends or comes to one from his father, grandfather, or other ascendant or collateral on the paternal side of the house.

Paternity. The state or condition of a father; the relationship of a father.

Paternity suit or action. A court action to determine whether a person is the father of a child born out of wedlock for the purpose, commonly, of enforcing support obligations. See also HLA test; Multiple access.

Pater patris /pé'tar pátriíyiy/. Father of the country. See Pares patriae.

Pathologist. One trained in the scientific study of disease, its causes, development and consequences.

Pathology. The science or doctrine of diseases. That which belongs to the father or comes from him.

Pathogens /páté'zhénz/. Lat. One who suffers or permits; one to whom an act is done; the passive party in a transaction.

Patient. Person under medical or psychiatric treatment and care. Person may be "patient" and physician-patient privilege may apply, where physician attends person for purpose of giving professional aid, even though person attended is unconscious or unaware of physician's presence and does not consent, or actually objects to being treated. State v. Pitchford, 10 Kan.App.2d 293, 697 P.2d 896, 900.

Patient-physician privilege. The right of one who is a patient to refuse to divulge, or have divulged by his physician, the communications made between he and his physician. This privilege is provided for by statute in most states, and, where recognized, it belongs to the patient and not to the physician and hence, it may be waived by the patient.

Patient's bill of rights. A general statement of patient rights voluntarily adopted by most health care providers, covering matters such as access to care, patient dignity and confidentiality, personal safety, consent to treatment and explanation of charges. Similar rights have been statutorily adopted in several states (cf. Minn. Stat. § 144.651) and by the federal government (cf. Developmentally Disabled Assistance and Bill of Rights Act of 1975, 42 U.S.C.A. § 6010).

Pat. Pend. See Patent (Patent pending).

Patria /pátría/péytrióy/. Lat. The country, neighborhood, or vicinage; the men of the neighborhood; a jury of the vicinage. Synonymous, in this sense, with "páis."

Patria laboribus et expensis non debet fatigari /pátríyá labórbás É káskpénás nón débót fátágéray/. A jury ought not to be harassed by labors and expenses.

Patria potestas /pátría potéstès/. Lat. In Roman law, paternal authority; the paternal power. This term denotes the aggregate of those peculiar powers and rights which, by the civil law of Rome, belonged to the head of a family in respect to his wife, children (natural or adopted), and any more remote descendants who sprang from him through males only. Anciently, it was of very extensive reach, embracing even the power of life and death, but was gradually curtailed, until finally it amounted to little more than a right in the patrías to hold as his own any property or acquisitions of one under his power.

Patria potestas in pietae debet, non in atrociate, consistere /pátría potéstès in páyetétyi débést, nón in ástrósétyi kánsístary/. Paternal power should consist [or be exercised] in affection, not in atrocity.

Patricide /pátrésiyéd/. One who has killed his or her father. The act of killing one's father.

Patrimonial /pátroním(i)yál/. Pertaining to a patrimony; inherited from ancestors, but strictly from the direct male ancestors.

Patrimonium /pátronímiyam/. In civil law, that which is capable of being inherited. The private and exclusive ownership or dominion of an individual. Things capable of being possessed by a single person to the exclusion of all others (or which are actually so possessed) are said to be in patrimonio; if not capable of being so possessed (or not actually so possessed), they are said to be extra patrimonium.

Patrimony /pátroníniy/. Such estate as has descended in the same family. Estates which have descended or been devised in a direct line from the father, and, by extension, from the mother or other ancestor. It has been held that the word is not necessarily restricted to property inherited directly from the father.

Patrimony is the total mass of existing or potential rights and liabilities attached to a person for the satisfaction of his economic needs and patrimony is always attached to a natural or juridical person. Creech v. Capitol Mack, Inc., La., 287 So.2d 497, 503.

Patrimony of a debtor is totality of assets and liabilities susceptible of pecuniary evaluation; as practical matter, debtor's patrimony consists of assets which are subject to execution for benefit of creditor. Hastings v. Dinning, La.App., 314 So.2d 744, 746.

Patrociniunum /pátrósininiyam/. In Roman law, patronage; protection; defense. The business or duty of a patron or advocate.

Patrolman. A policeman assigned to duty in patrolling a certain beat or district; also the designation of a grade or rank in the organized police force of large cities, a patrolman being generally a private in the ranks, as distinguished from sergeants, lieutenants, etc. See also Police officer.

Patron. In ordinary usage one who protects, countenances, or supports some person or thing. One who habitually extends material assistance; a regular customer; a protector or benefactor.

Patronage /pátronaj/péytr/. Collective term to describe the customers of a business. Also, the practice of a public official in making appointments to public (non-civil service) offices and to confer honors. The right of appointing to office, considered as a perquisite, or personal right; not in the aspect of a public trust.

Patronize /pátronayz/péytro/. To act as a patron, extend patronage, countenance, encourage, favor.

Patronum faciunt dos, adificatio, fundus /pátronom (i)yam/. Patrons make a patron. The work, foundation, or fund of a patron.

Patrocinium /pátrósmiyn/. In Roman law, patronage; protection; defense. The business or duty of a patron or advocate.

Patruus major /pátrús major/. A great-grandfather; a great-grandfather's father's side. PATRUS /pátrwás/. Lat. An uncle by the father's side; the son or daughter of a father's brother.

Patruus maximus /pátrwás máksamás/. A great-grandfather's brother; granduncle.

Patruus major /pátrwás méyjár/. A great-grandfather's brother.

Patruus magnus /pátrwás mágnás/. A grandfather's brother; granduncle.

Pattern. A reliable sample of traits, acts or other observable features characterizing an individual. Richerson v. Superior Court In and For Sacramento County, App., 70 Cal.Rptr. 350, 352.

The words "pattern or practice" within the Civil Rights Act provision which permits the Attorney General to seek relief when there is a pattern or practice of resistance to the Act is more than isolated or accidental instance of conduct in violation of the Act; it means an intentional, regular or repeated violation of the right granted by the Act. U. S. v. Hunter, C.A.Md., 459 F.2d 205, 217.

Pattern of racketeering activity. As used in the racketeering statute (RICO), 18 U.S.C.A. § 1962, a "pattern of racketeering activity,” includes two or more related criminal acts that amount to, or threaten the likelihood of, continued criminal activity. H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 109 S.Ct. 2893, 106 L.Ed.2d 195. A single illegal scheme can constitute a “pattern of racketeering activity,” so long as the racketeering acts meet the “continuity plus relationship” requirement. A combination of specific factors, such as the number of unlawful acts, the length of time over which the acts were committed, the similarity of the acts, the number of victims, the number of perpetrators, and the character of the unlawful activity can be considered in determining whether a pattern existed. Barticheck v. Fidelity Union Bank, C.A.N.J., 832 F.2d 36, 39. See also RICO laws.

Pauper /pəˈpær/. A person so poor that he must be supported at public expense. A suitor who, on account of poverty, is allowed to sue or defend without being chargeable with costs; also, an indigent criminal defendant who has a right to assigned defense counsel. Fed. R.Crim.P. 44; Fed.R.App.P. 24; 18 U.S.C.A. § 3006A; 28 U.S.C.A. § 1915. See Counsel, right to; Indigent; In forma pauperis; Pauper’s oath.

Dispauper. To deprive one of the status of a pauper and of any benefits incidental thereto: particularly, to take away the right to sue in forma pauperis because the person so suing, during the progress of the suit, has acquired money or property which would enable him to sustain the costs of the action.

Pauperies /pəˈpərɪz/. Lat. In Roman law, damage or injury done by an irrational animal, without active fault on the part of the owner, but for which the latter was bound to make compensation.

Pauper’s oath. Affidavit, verification, or oath by person seeking public assistance, appointment of counsel, waiver of court fees, or other free services or benefits, that he or she is in fact impoverished and as such unable to pay for such. See e.g. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1915. See also Poverty affidavit.

Pawn, v. To deliver personal property to another in pledge, or as security for a debt or sum borrowed.

Pawn, n. A bailment of goods to a creditor, as security for some debt or engagement; a pledge; a deposit of personal property made to a pawnbroker as security for a loan. That sort of bailment when goods or chattels are delivered to another as security to him for money borrowed of him by the bailor.

Also the specific chattel delivered to the creditor as a pledge. See also Bailment; Pledge.

Pawnbroker. A person whose business is to lend money, usually in small sums, on security of personal property deposited with him or left in pawn.

Pawnee. The person receiving a pawn, or to whom a pawn is made; the person to whom goods are delivered by another in pledge.

Pawnor. The person pawning goods or delivering goods to another in pledge.

Pax regis /pæks rɪˈdʒəs/. Lat. The peace of the king; that is, the peace, good order, and security for life and property which it is one of the objects of government to maintain, and which the king, as the personification of the power of the state, is supposed to guaranty to all persons within the protection of the law.

This name was also given, in ancient times, to a certain privileged district or sanctuary. The pax regis, or verge of the court, as it was afterwards called, extended from the palace-gate to the distance of three miles, three furlongs, three acres, nine feet, nine palms, and nine barleycorns.

Pay, n. Compensation; wages; salary; commissions; fees. The act or fact of paying or being paid. See also Discharge; Payment.

Pay, v. To discharge a debt by tender of payment due; to deliver to a creditor the value of a debt, either in money or in goods, for his acceptance. U.C.C. §§ 2–511, 3–604. To compensate for goods, services or labor. See also Discharge; Payment.

Payable. Capable of being paid; suitable to be paid; admitting or demanding payment; justly due; legally enforceable. A sum of money is said to be payable when a person is under an obligation to pay it. Payable may therefore signify an obligation to pay at a future time, but, when used without qualification, term normally means that the debt is payable at once, as opposed to “owing.”

Payable after sight. Means that instrument is payable after acceptance of bill or protest for nonacceptance.

Payable on demand. Instruments payable on demand include those payable at sight or on presentation and those in which no time for payment is stated. U.C.C. § 3–108.

Payables. See Account (Account payable).

Payable to bearer. A negotiable instrument is payable to bearer when by its terms it is payable to (a) bearer or the order of bearer; or (b) a specified person or bearer; or (c) "cash" or the order of "cash", or any other indication which does not purport to designate a specific payee. U.C.C. § 3–111. See also Negotiation.

Payable to order. A negotiable instrument is payable to order when by its terms it is payable to the order or assigns of any person therein specified with reasonable certainty, or to him or his order, or when it is conspicuously designated on its face as "exchange" or the like and names a payee. U.C.C. § 3–110. See also Negotiation.

Pay any bank. After an item has been indorsed with the words “pay any bank” or the like, only a bank may acquire the rights of a holder: (a) until the item has been returned to the customer initiating collection; or (b) until the item has been specially indorsed by a bank to a person who is not a bank. U.C.C. § 4–201(2).

Paydown. Repayment of loan but in an amount less than entire principal of loan. See also Payment (Part payment).
Paying quantities.

Payee. The person in whose favor a bill of exchange, promissory note, or check is made or drawn; the person to whom or to whose order a bill, note, or check is made payable; the person to whom an instrument is payable upon issuance. The entity to whom a cash payment is made or who will receive the stated amount of money on a check. One to whom money is paid or is to be paid. See Draft; Fictitious payee.

Payer, or payor. One who pays, or who is to make a payment; particularly the person who is to make payment of a check, bill or note. Correlative to "payee."

Payment. The fulfilment of a promise, or the performance of an agreement. A discharge of an obligation or debt, and part payment, if accepted, is a discharge pro tanto.

In a more restricted legal sense payment is the performance of a duty, promise, or obligation, or discharge of a debt or liability, by the delivery of money or other value by a debtor to a creditor, where the money or other valuable thing is tendered and accepted as extinguishing debt or obligation in whole or in part. Also the money or other thing so delivered. U.C.C. §§ 2-511, 3-604.

Payment is a delivery of money or its equivalent in either specific property or services by one person from whom it is due to another person to whom it is due. Sizemore v. E. T. Barwick Industries, Inc., 225 Tenn. 226, 465 S.W.2d 873, 875. A discharge in money or its equivalent of an obligation or debt owing by one person to another, and is made by debtor's delivery to creditor of money or some other valuable thing, and creditor's receipt thereof, for purpose of extinguishing debt. Allmon v. Allmon, Mo.App., 306 S.W.2d 651, 655.

Under Internal Revenue Code provision allowing deduction for charitable contribution of which payment is made within taxable year, "payment" need not be in money, but subject matter must have been placed beyond dominion and control of donor. Pauley v. U. S., C.A.CaL, 459 F.2d 624, 626.

The execution and delivery of negotiable papers is not payment unless it is accepted by the parties in that sense. U.C.C. § 3-410.

See also Compulsory payment; Conditional payment; Constructive payment; Down payment; Final payment; Guaranty of payment; Installment credit; Installment loan; Installment sale; Involuntary payment; Liquidation; Lump-sum payment; Pay.

Affirmative defense. Payment is an affirmative defense which must be pleaded under Fed.R. Civil P. 8(c).

Balloon payment. See Balloon payment.

Part payment. The reduction of any debt or demand by the payment of a sum less than the whole amount originally due.

The rule of partial payments is to apply the payment, in the first place, to the discharge of the interest then due. If the payment exceeds the interest, the surplus goes toward discharging the principal, and the subsequent interest is to be computed on the balance of principal remaining due. If the payment be less than the interest, the surplus of the interest must not be taken to augment the principal; but interest continues on the former principal until the period of time when the payments, taken together, exceed the interest then due, to discharge which they are applied, and the surplus, if any, is to be applied towards the discharge of the principal, and the interest is to be computed on the balance as aforesaid, and this process continues until final settlement.

Payment into court. The act of a defendant in depositing the amount which he admits to be due, with the proper officer of the court, for the benefit of the plaintiff and in answer to his claim. Fed.R. Civil P. 67.

Voluntary payment. A payment made by a debtor of his own will and choice, as distinguished from one exacted from him by process of execution or other compulsion.

Payment bond. See Miller Act; Performance bond.

Payment guaranteed. "Payment guaranteed" or equivalent words added to a signature mean that the signer engages that if the instrument is not paid when due he will pay it according to its tenor without resort by the holder to any other party. U.C.C. § 4-416.

Payment in due course. With respect to negotiable instruments, means payment at or after the instrument's maturity date to the holder in good faith and without notice that the title is defective. Under the Negotiable Instruments Law, a negotiable instrument could be discharged by payment in due course by or on behalf of the principle debtor; see e.g. Bourg v. Wiley, La., 398 So.2d 13, 15. The Uniform Commercial Code § 3-603 eliminates any reference to payment in due course. It is now covered by § 3-601(3).

Payment into court. The deposit of funds or other things capable of delivery with the court during the pendency of a lawsuit. Fed.R.Civil P. 67.

Payor. The person by whom a bill or note has been or should have been paid.

Payor bank. A bank by which an item is payable as drawn or accepted, U.C.C. § 4-105(b), which includes the drawee of a check. Term includes drawee bank and also bank at which item is payable if item constitutes order on bank to pay. Phelan v. University Nat. Bank, 85 Ill.App.2d 56, 229 N.E.2d 374, 377.

Payroll tax. A tax on an employees' salary or on the income of a self-employed individual. Federal and state income taxes are paid by the employee or the self-employed individual; social security taxes are paid both by the employer and employee and paid solely by the self-employed individual. Unemployment taxes are paid by the employer.

PBGC. See Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation.

Peace. For purposes of breach of the peace statute, peace is that state and sense of safety which is necessary to the comfort and happiness of every citizen, and which government is instituted to secure. State v. Boles, 5 Conn.Cir. 22, 240 A.2d 920, 927. Term, within law of breach of the peace, means tranquility enjoyed by citizens of the municipality or community where good order reigns among its members. State v. Edwards, 239 S.C. 339, 123 S.E.2d 247, 249.

The tranquility enjoyed by a political society internally, by the good order which reigns among its members, and externally by the good understanding it has with all other nations. Applied to the internal regulations of a nation, peace imports, in a technical sense, not merely a state of repose and security as opposed to one of violence or warfare, but likewise a state of public order and decorum. Catlette v. U. S., C.C.A.W.Va., 132 F.2d 902, 906.

Articles of the peace. See Articles.

Bill of peace. See Bill.

Breach of peace. See Breach.

Conservator of the peace. See Conservator.

Justice of the peace. See that title.

Peace and quietitude. Public tranquility and obedience to law, and that public order and security which is commanded by the laws of a particular sovereign.

Peace officers. This term is variously defined by statute in the different states; but generally it includes sheriffs and their deputies, constables, marshals, members of the police force of cities, and other officers whose duty is to enforce the local government laws and ordinances and preserve the public peace. In general, any person who has been given general authority to make arrests. Generally a "peace officer" is a person designated by public authority to keep the peace and arrest persons guilty or suspected of crime and he is a conservator of the peace, which term is synonymous with the term "peace officer". Vanden v. Manning, 215 Ga. 874, 114 S.E.2d 121, 124. See also Police officer.

Peace of God and the church. In old English law, that rest and cessation which the king's subjects had from trouble and suit of law between the terms and on Sundays and holidays.

Public peace. The peace or tranquility of the community in general; the good order and repose of the people composing a state or municipality. That invisible sense of security which every man feels so necessary to his comfort, and for which all governments are instituted.

Public peace and quiet. Peace, tranquility, and order and freedom from agitation or disturbance; the security, good order, and decorum guaranteed by civil society and by the law.

Peaceable. Free from the character of force, violence, or trespass; as, a "peaceable entry" on lands. Peaceable possession of real estate is such as is acquiesced in by all other persons, including rival claimants, and not disturbed by any forcible attempt at ouster nor by adverse suits to recover the possession or the estate. Stanley v. Schwalby, 147 U.S. 508, 13 S.Ct. 418, 37 L.Ed. 259. Compare Adverse possession.

Peace bond. Type of surety bond required by a judge or magistrate of one who has threatened to breach the peace or has a history of such misconduct.

Peace officer. See Police officer.

Peccata contra naturam sunt gravissima /pokáčta koŋtra nat(y)urām sānt grāviːsimā/. Crimes against nature are the most heinous.

Peccatum peccato addit qui culpe quam facit patrocinia defensionis adjungit /pokáctam pokáctōm ēdōt kwāy kūlpī kwām fēysat pētrasni(i)ya dafēnshiyōmna ajānāt/. He adds fault to fault who sets up a defense of a wrong committed by him.

Peck. A measure of two gallons; a dry measure.

Peculation. The unlawful appropriation, by a depositary of public funds, of the property of the government intrusted to his care, to his own use, or that of others. The fraudulent misappropriation by one to his own use of money or goods intrusted to his care.

Peculatus /pěkylətəs/. Lat. In the civil law, the offense of stealing or embezzling the public money.

Peculiar, adj. /pokỳul(i)yor/. Particular or special. Wolf v. Mallinckrodt Chemical Works, 336 Mo. 746, 81 S.W.2d 323, 330.

Peculum /pokỳul(i)yaːm/. Lat. In Roman law, such private property as might be held by a slave, wife, or son who was under the patria potestas, separate from the property of the father or master, and in the personal disposal of the owner.

Pecunia /pokỳu̯ni(ː)yaː/. In old English law, goods and chattels.

In the civil law, property in general, real or personal; anything that is actually the subject of private property. In a narrower sense, personal property; fungible things. In the strictest sense, money. This has become the prevalent, and almost the exclusive, meaning of the word.

Pecunia constituta /pokỳu̯ni(ː)ya kǒnstat(ː)yiːwtaː/. In Roman law, money owing (even upon a moral obligation) upon a day being fixed (constituta) for its payment, became recoverable upon the implied promise to pay on that day, in an action called "de pecunia constituta," the Pecunia numerata. Money numbered or counted out; i.e., given in payment of a debt.

Pecunia non numerata. In the civil law, money not paid. The subject of an exception or plea in certain cases.

Pecuniary bequest. A bequest of money to an heir by a decedent. Also known as a monetary bequest. See Bequest.

Pecuniary causes. In English ecclesiastical practice, causes arising from the withholding of ecclesiastical dues, or the doing or neglecting some act relating to the church whereby some damage accrues to the plaintiff. See also Marital deduction.

Pecuniary condition. Within statute relative to obtaining goods by false pretenses, comprehends, not only money in hand, but property and all other assets of value constituting an existing fact that go to make up financial responsibility as a basis of credit.

Pecuniary consideration. See Consideration.

Pecuniary damages. See Damages; Pecuniary loss.

Pecuniary formulas. In federal estate taxation, a gift to a surviving spouse of an amount equal to the maximum marital deduction to which the estate is entitled, less the value of any other interests passing to the surviving spouse that qualify for the marital deduction. See also Marital deduction.

Pecuniary injury. Within meaning of wrongful death statute providing that damages may be awarded "taking into consideration the pecuniary injury or injuries resulting from such death to the surviving party or parties entitled to the judgment," term "pecuniary injury" means a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the continued life of the deceased. See also Hawker.

Pecuniary interest. A direct interest related to money in an action or case as would, for example, require a judge to disqualify himself from sitting on a case if he owned stock in corporate party.

Pecuniary legacy. See Legacy.

Pecuniary loss. A loss of money, or of something by which money or something of money value may be acquired. As applied to a dependent's loss from death pecuniary loss means the reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the continued life of the deceased: such includes loss of services, training, nurture, education, guidance, and society. See also Hawker.

Pedag /pedˈdæg/. In Old English law, a toll or tax paid by travelers for the privilege of passing, on foot or mounted, through a forest or other protected place.

Pedalia /pedəˈlaɪə/. (Lat.) Pedal. See also Pedal instruments.

Pedal /pedəl/. In Old English law, a toll or tax paid by travelers for the privilege of passing, on foot or mounted, through a forest or other protected place.

Pedestrian /ˈpɛdɪstriən/. In criminal law, the unnatural carnal copulation of male with male, particularly of a man with a boy; a form of sodomy (q.v.). include persons standing upon the highway as well as those traversing it. See v. Willett, 58 Wash.2d 39, 360 P.2d 592, 593. Person on foot does not cease to be "pedestrian" within policy covering injuries sustained while a pedestrian merely because he is not in motion. Peterson v. Continental Cas. Co., 25 Utah 2d 408, 483 P.2d 445, 446.

Pedigree /pɛdʒəri/. Lineage, descent, and succession of families; line of ancestors from which a person descends; genealogy. An account or register of a line of ancestors. Family relationship.

Evidence. The "pedigree exception" to hearsay rule allows consideration of hearsay evidence regarding a person's family relationship as proof of existence of the relationship. Smith v. Givens, 223 Va. 455, 290 S.E.2d 844, 846. Statements of fact concerning genealogy are not excluded by the hearsay rule, even though the declarant is available as a witness. Fed.Evid.R. 803.

Pedis abscessio /piydɪs ˈæbʃɪʃ(ə)ʊ/. Lat. In ancient criminal law, the cutting off a foot; a punishment of families; line of ancestors from which a person descends; genealogy. An account or register of a line of ancestors.

Pedis possessio /piydɪs ˈpɒzɪʃ(ə)ʊ/. Lat. A foothold; an actual possession. To constitute adverse possession there must be pedis possessio, or a substantial inclosure.

Doctrine which normally only governs rights prior to discovery of valuable minerals while party is still prospecting; it protects prospector from intervention by another prospector, but only so long as he remains in actual possession of the claim and is diligently searching for minerals. Goldfield Mines, Inc. v. Hand, App., 147 Ariz. 498, 711 P.2d 637, 644.

Peeping tom. As used in reference to, e.g., "Peeping Tom" statute, has commonly understood meaning as one who sneaks up to windows and peeps in for purpose of spying on and invading privacy of inhabitants. Matter of Banks, 295 N.C. 236, 244 S.E.2d 386, 389.

Peerage /ˈpɪrɪdʒ/. The rank or dignity of a peer or nobleman. Also the body of nobles taken collectively in his court as judges of their co-vassals, and were called "peers," as being each other's equals, or of the same condition. The nobility of Great Britain, being the lords temporal having seats in parliament, and including dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons.

Peers /ˈpɪərz/. In feudal law, the vassals of a lord who sat in his court as judges of their co-vassals, and were called "peers," as being each other's equals, or of the same condition. The nobility of Great Britain, being the lords temporal having seats in parliament, and including dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons.

Peine fort et dure /ˈpeɪn ˈfɔrt ˈdyʊr/. L. Fr. In old English law, a special form of punishment for those who, being arraigned for felony, obstinately "stood mute," that is, refused to plead or to put themselves upon trial. It is described as a combination of solitary confinement, slow starvation, and crushing the naked body with a great load of iron. This atrocious punishment was vulgarly called "pressing to death."

Peg. To fix the price of something, as the government may stabilize the price of gold by offering to buy all the gold offered at a stated price. Speculators in stocks may peg the price of securities by frequent buying and selling at the pegged price, though today such manipulation is illegal.

Penal. Punishable; inflicting a punishment; containing a penalty, or relating to a penalty.

Penal action. In its broadest context, it refers to criminal prosecution. More particularly, it refers to a civil action in which a wrongdoer is subject to a fine or penalty payable to the aggrieved party (e.g. punitive damages).

The word "penal" is inherently a much broader term than "criminal" since it pertains to any punishment or penalty and relates to acts which are not necessarily delineated as criminal. State v. Lowry, 95 N.J.Super. 307, 230 A.2d 907, 913. Action is essentially "penal" if

An action upon a penal statute; an action for the recovery of a penalty given by statute. Smith Engineering Works v. Custer, 194 Okl. 318, 151 P.2d 404, 407, 408. In a broad sense, the term has been made to include all actions in which there may be a recovery of exemplary or vindictive damages, as suits for libel and slander, or in which special, double, or treble damages are given by statute, such as actions to recover money paid as usury or for violation of antitrust laws. But in a more particular sense it means (1) an action on a statute which gives a certain penalty to be recovered by any person who will sue for it, or (2) an action in which the judgment against the defendant is in the nature of a fine or is intended as a punishment, actions in which the recovery is to be compensatory in its purpose and effect not being penal actions but civil suits, though they may carry special damages by statute. See Damages (Exemplary or punitive damages, Treble damages).

Penal bill. An instrument formerly in use, by which a party bound himself to pay a certain sum or sums of money, or to do certain acts, or, in default thereof, to pay a certain specified sum by way of penalty; thence termed a "penal sum." These instruments have been superseded by the use of a bond in a penal sum, with conditions. See Penal bond.

Penal bond. A promise to pay a named sum of money, the penalty, in the event of nonperformance, with a condition underwritten that, if a stipulated collateral thing, other than the payment of money, be done or forborne, the obligation shall be void. Maryland Casualty Co. v. Kansas City, Mo., C.C.A.Mo., 128 F.2d 998, 1004. Bond conditioned upon forfeiture of penalty for its breach. See Penalty.

Penal clause. A secondary obligation entered into for purpose of enforcing performance of a primary obligation, and nature of penalty is by way of compensation for damages and not as punishment for failure to perform obligation. Also a clause in a statute declaring a penalty for a violation of the preceding clauses. See Penalty clause.

Penal code. Bringing together and codification of substantive criminal laws of state or federal government; e.g. California Penal Code; Title 18 of U.S. Code. Several state Penal or Criminal Codes are patterned on the A.L.I. Model Penal Code.

Penal institutions. Generic term to describe all places of confinement for those convicted of crime such as jails, prisons, workhouses, houses of correction, and other correctional institutions.

Penal laws. Term, in general, refers to state and federal statutes that define criminal offenses and specify corresponding fines and punishment. Statutes imposing a penalty, fine, or punishment for certain offenses of a public nature or wrongs committed against the state.

Strictly speaking, statutes giving a private action against a wrongdoer are not penal in their nature, neither the liability imposed nor the remedy given being penal. If the wrong done is to the individual, the law giving him a right of action is remedial, rather than penal, though the sum to be recovered may be called a “penalty” or may consist in double or treble damages. Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U.S. 657, 13 S.Ct. 224, 36 L.Ed. 1123.

Where a statute is both penal and remedial, as where it is penal in one part and remedial in the other, it should be considered as a "penal statute" when it is sought to enforce the penalty, and as a "remedial statute" when it is sought to enforce the remedy. Collins v. Kidd, D.C.Tex., 38 F.Supp. 634, 637. See also Penal code.

Penal servitude. In English criminal law, is a punishment which consists in keeping an offender in confinement, and compelling him to labor.

Penal statutes. See Penal code; Penal laws.

Penal sum. A sum agreed upon in a bond, to be forfeited if the condition of the bond is not fulfilled. See also Penal bond; Penalty.

Penalty. An elastic term with many different shades of meaning; it involves idea of punishment, corporeal or pecuniary, or civil or criminal, although its meaning is generally confined to pecuniary punishment. Allied v. Graves, 261 N.C. 31, 134 S.E.2d 186, 192.

The sum of money which the obligor of a bond undertakes to pay in the event of his omitting to perform or carry out the terms imposed upon him by the conditions of the bond. A penalty is a sum inserted in a contract, not as a measure of compensation for its breach, but rather as punishment for default, or by way of security for actual damages which might be sustained by reason of nonperformance. Stein v. Bruce, Mo.App., 366 S.W.2d 732, 735. The sum a party agrees to pay in the event of a contract breach, but which is fixed, not as a pre-estimate of probable actual damages, but as a punishment, the threat of which is designed to prevent the breach. Westmount Country Club v. Kameny, 82 N.J. Super. 200, 197 A.2d 379, 382.

A penalty provision operates to compel performance of act and usually becomes effective only in event of default on which a forfeiture is compelled without regard to actual damages sustained by party aggrieved by breach. Garret v. Coast and Southern Federal Sav. and Loan Ass'n, 9 C3d 731, 108 Cal.Rptr. 845, 850. See Penalty clause.

A penalty is a sum of money which the law exacts payment of by way of punishment for doing some act which is prohibited or for not doing some act which is required to be done. Hidden Hollow Ranch v. Collins, 146 Mont. 321, 406 P.2d 365, 368. A statutory liability imposed on wrongdoer in amount which is not limited to damages suffered by party wronged. Missouri-Kansas-Texas R. Co. v. Standard Industries, Inc., 192 Kan. 381, 388 P.2d 632, 634.
PENALTY

See also Fine; Forfeiture; Penal action; Statutory penalty.

Penalty clause. Provision in contract, loan agreement, savings instrument or the like providing penalties for default, late or missed payments, early withdrawals, etc. Such clauses are generally not enforceable by the courts. A provision for liquidated damages, however, will be enforced by the courts but the liquidated damages must be a reasonable estimate at the time of contracting of the likely damages from breach. Whether a provision for damages is a penalty clause or a liquidated damages clause is a question of law. Lake River Corporation v. Carborundum Co., C.A.III., 769 F.2d 1284, 1288-92.

Penance. An ecclesiastical punishment inflicted by an ecclesiastical court for some spiritual offense.

Pendency. Suspect; the state of being pending or undecided; the state of an action, etc., after it has been begun, and before the final disposition of it.

Pendens /ˈpɛndənz/. Lat. Pending; as lis pendens, a pending suit.

Pendente lite /ˈpɛndɛntɪə ləɪti/. Lat. Pending the lawsuit; during the actual progress of a suit; during litigation. Matters "pendente lite" are contingent on outcome of litigation.

Pendente lite nihil innovetur /ˈpɛndɛntɪə ləɪti nəˈhɪl ɪnˌvaɪnɪtər/. During a litigation nothing new should be introduced.

Pendent jurisdiction. A principle applied in federal courts that allows state created causes of action arising out of the same transaction to be joined with a federal cause of action even if diversity of citizenship is not present. Pendent jurisdiction is discretionary matter whereby federal court may allow assertion of nonfederal claim for which no independent jurisdictional ground exists along with recognized federal claim between same parties who are properly before the court, provided there exists along with recognized federal claim between same parties who are properly before the court, provided relationship between federal court and state claim permits conclusion that entire action before court comprises but one constitutional case. Schwab v. Erie Lackawanna R. Co., D.C.Pa., 303 F.Supp. 1398, 1399. The doctrine permits federal court under some circumstances to determine state cause of action which otherwise would have to serve out the term of their sentence.

Pennsylvania Rule. Under the "Pennsylvania Rule," when one party has committed a statutory violation that is claimed to have caused a collision, the rule requires the alleged violator to show, if he is to be freed from fault, that the violation could not have been a cause of the collision. Crown, Zellerbach Corp. v. Willamette-Western Corp., C.A.Or., 519 F.2d 1327, 1329.

Penny stocks. Low-priced stock issues often highly speculative, selling at less than $1 a share.

Pennyweight. A Troy weight, equal to twenty-four grains, or one-twentieth part of an ounce.

Penology. The science of prison management and rehabilitation of criminals.

Pen register. A mechanical device that records the numbers dialed on a telephone by monitoring the electrical impulses caused when the dial on the telephone is released. It does not overhear oral communications and does not indicate whether calls are actually completed; thus, there is no recording or monitoring of the conversation. For regulation of use of pen registers, see 18 U.S.C.A. § 3121 et seq. See also Wiretapping.

Pensam /ˈpɛnsəm/. The full weight of twenty ounces.

Pensio /ˈpɛnsh(i)əʊ/. Lat. In the civil law, a payment, properly, for the use of a thing. A rent; a payment for the use and occupation of another's house.

Pension. Retirement benefit paid regularly (normally, monthly), with the amount of such based generally on length of employment and amount of wages or salary of pensioner. Deferred compensation for services rendered. Waite v. Waite, 6 C3d 461, 99 Cal.Rptr. 325, 330, 492 P.2d 13. See also Pension plan; Vested pension.

Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation. Federal agency established by Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA), to guarantee payment of insured benefits if covered employee retirement plans Awaiting an occurrence or conclusion of action, period of continuance or indeterminacy. Thus, an action or suit is "pending" from its inception until the rendition of final judgment.

An action is "pending" after it is commenced by either filing a complaint with the court or by the service of a summons. Johnson v. McCaughan, Carter & Scharrer, Colo.App., 672 P.2d 221, 222. See also Pendente lite.

Penetration. A term used in criminal law, and denoting (in cases of alleged rape) the insertion of the male part into the female parts to however slight an extent; and by which insertion the offense is complete without proof of emission.

Penitentiary. A prison, correctional institution, or other place of confinement where convicted felons are sent to serve out the term of their sentence.

Pennoyer Rule. A rule to the effect that a court which has no personal jurisdiction over a defendant may not issue an in personam judgment or decree against him. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714, 24 L.Ed. 565.

Pennsylvania Rule. Under the "Pennsylvania Rule," when one party has committed a statutory violation that is claimed to have caused a collision, the rule requires the alleged violator to show, if he is to be freed from fault, that the violation could not have been a cause of the collision. Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation. Federal agency established by Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA), to guarantee payment of insured benefits if covered employee retirement plans terminate without sufficient assets to pay such benefits. 29 U.S.C.A. § 1302.

Pensioner. Recipient or beneficiary of a pension plan.

Pension fund. Fund established by corporations, unions, governmental bodies, etc. to pay pension benefits to its retired workers. See Pension plan.

Pension plan. A plan established and maintained by an employer primarily to provide systematically for the payment of definitely determinable benefits to his employees, or their beneficiaries, over a period of years (usually for life) after retirement. Retirement benefits are measured by, and based on, such factors as years of service and compensation received by the employees. The Employees Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) governs plan qualification, operation, and administration, and specifically such matters as participation requirements, funding, vesting and filing and reporting with the Internal Revenue Service and Labor Department. Pension benefits under qualified plans are guaranteed by the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation.

A stated allowance out of the public treasury granted by government to an individual, or to his representatives, for his valuable services to the country, or in compensation for loss or damage sustained by him in the public service. Frisbie v. U. S., 157 U.S. 160, 15 S.Ct. 586, 39 L.Ed. 657.

See also Individual retirement account; Keogh Plan; Money-purchase plan; Pension trust.

Contributory pension plan. A plan funded with both employer and employee contributions.

Defined-contribution plan. Pension plan that provides benefits as determined by the accumulated contributions and the return on the fund's investment performance; the contributions are specified, but the benefits are not.

Defined pension plan. A pension plan where the employer promises specific benefits to each employee. The employer's cash contributions and pension expense are adjusted in relation to investment performance of the pension fund. Sometimes called a "fixed-benefit" pension plan.

Funded pension plan. See Funded.

Noncontributory plan. A pension plan where only the employer makes payments to fund the plan. Compare Contributory pension plan, above.

Qualified pension plan. An employer-sponsored plan that meets the requirements of I.R.C. § 401. If these requirements are met, none of the employer's contributions to the plan are taxable to the employee until distributed to him or her [§ 402]. The employer will be allowed a deduction in the year the contributions are made [§ 404].

Pension trust. Type of funded pension plan in which the employer transfers to trustees an amount sufficient to cover cost of pensions to employees who are the beneficiaries of the trust.

Peonage /pɪənɪdʒ/. A condition of servitude (prohibited by 13th Amendment) compelling persons to perform labor in order to pay off a debt.

People. A state; as the people of the state of New York. A nation in its collective and political capacity. The aggregate or mass of the individuals who constitute the state. Loi Hoa v. Nagle, C.C.A.Cal., 13 F.2d 80, 81. In a more restricted sense, and as generally used in constitutional law, the entire body of those citizens of a state or nation who are invested with political power for political purposes. See also Citizen, Person.

Peppercorn. A dried berry of the black pepper. In English law, the reservation of a merely nominal rent, on a lease, was sometimes expressed by a stipulation for the payment of a peppercorn.

Per /pɜːr/. Lat. By, through, or by means of.

Perambulation /pərəmˈbʌləʃən/. The act or custom of walking over the boundaries of a district or piece of land, either for the purpose of determining them or of preserving evidence of them. Thus, in many parishes in England, it is the custom for the parishioners to perambulate the boundaries of the parish in rotation week in every year. Such a custom entitles them to enter any man's land and abate nuisances in their way. The custom has now largely fallen into disuse.

Perambulatione facienda, writ de /rɪt dɪˈrɛmˌbʌləˈʃən/. In old English law, the name of a writ which was sued by consent of both parties when they were in doubt as to the bounds of their respective estates. It was directed to the sheriff to make perambulation, and to set the bounds and limits between them in certainty.

Per and post /pɜːr ɔnd pəʊst/. In old English law, to come in in the per is to claim by or through the person last entitled to an estate; as the heirs or assigns of the grantee. To come in in the post is to claim by a paramount and prior title; as the lord by escheat.

Per annum /pɜːr ˈænəm/. By the year; annually; yearly.

Per autre vie /pɜːr əˈtwɛr vje/ˈvɪː/. L. Fr. For or during another's life; for such period as another person shall live.

Per aversionem /pɜːr əˈvɜːrznəm/. Lat. In the civil law, by turning away. A term applied to that kind of sale where the goods are taken in bulk, and not by weight or measure, and for a single price; or where a piece of land is sold as containing in gross, by estimation, a certain number of acres. So called because the buyer acts without particular examination or discrimination, turning his face, as it were, away.

Per bouche /pɜːr ˈboʊʃ/. L. Fr. By the mouth; orally.
PERCA /párka/. A perch of land; sixteen and one-half feet. See Perch.

Per capita /pár kápá/. Lat. By the heads or polls; according to the number of individuals; share and share alike. This term, derived from the civil law, is much used in the law of descent and distribution, and denotes that method of dividing an intestate estate by which an equal share is given to each of a number of persons, all of whom stand in equal degree to the decedent, without reference to their stocks or the right of representation. It is the antithesis of per stirpes (q.v.). Buxton v. Noble, 146 Kan. 671, 73 P.2d 43, 47; MacGregor v. Roux, 198 Ga. 520, 32 S.E.2d 289, 291. A division "per capita" means by a number of individuals equally or share and share alike. Gilbert v. Wenzel, 247 Iowa 1279, 78 N.W.2d 793, 794.

Per cent. An abbreviation of the Latin "per centum," meaning by the hundred, or so many parts in the hundred, or so many hundredths.

Percentage depletion. See Depletion.

Percentage lease. A lease, usually on a retail business property, using a percentage of the gross or net sales to determine the rent. There is usually a minimum or "base" rental, in the event of poor sales.

Percentage of completion method. A method of reporting income or loss on certain long-term contracts. Under this method of accounting, revenue is recognized gradually throughout the construction period. See also Completed contract method.

Percentage order. A market or limited price order to buy (or sell) a stated amount of a certain stock after a fixed number of shares of such stock have traded.

Perception. Taking into possession. Thus, perception of crops or of profits is reducing them to possession. As used with respect to money, it means the counting out and payment of a debt. Seeing, noticing or otherwise comprehending.

Perch. A measure of land containing five yards and a half, or sixteen feet and a half in length; otherwise called a "rod" or "pole."

Percolate /párkaleyt/. As used in the cases relating to the right of land-owners to use water on their premises, designates any flowage of sub-surface water other than that of a running stream, open, visible, clearly to be traced.

Percolating waters /párkaleýtît wótartz/. See Water.

Percolation test. The test to determine the capability of the soil to absorb and drain water, both for construction and septic systems.

Per consequens /pár kónskwanz/. Lat. By consequence; consequently.

Per considerationem curiae /pár kansidárêshiyówn-am kyúriyiy/. Lat. In old practice, by the consideration (judgment) of the court.

Per curiam /pár kyúriyam/. Lat. By the court. A phrase used to distinguish an opinion of the whole court from an opinion written by any one judge. Sometimes it denotes an opinion written by the chief justice or presiding judge, or to a brief announcement of the disposition of a case by court not accompanied by a written opinion.

Per diem /pár diáym/ /diyam/. By the day; an allowance or amount of so much per day. For example, state legislators are often given a per diem allowance to cover expenses while attending legislature sessions. Generally, as used in connection with compensation, wages or salary, means pay for a day's service.

Perdonatio utlagarize /párdanélêsh(i)yow átlagériyiy/. L. A pardon for a man who, for contempt in not yielding obedience to the process of a court, is outlawed, and afterwards of his own accord surrenders.

Perduellio /pár(y)uwél(i)yow/. Lat. In Roman law, hostility or enmity towards the Roman republic; traitorous conduct on the part of a citizen, subversive of the authority of the laws or tending to overthrow the government.

Perdurable /pár(y)úršabal/párjárshal/. In old English law, as applied to an estate, perdurable signifies lasting long or forever. Thus, a disseisor or tenant in fee upon condition has as high and great an estate as the rightful owner or tenant in fee-simple absolute, but not so perdurable. The term is chiefly used with reference to the extinguishment of rights by unity of seisin, which does not take place unless both the right and the land out of which it issues are held for equally high and perdurable estates.

Perempt /párém(p)t/. In old ecclesiastical procedure, to waive or bar an appeal by one's own act so as partially to comply with or acquiesce in a sentence of a court.

Peremption /párém(p)shän/. A nonsuit; also a quashing or killing.

Peremptorius /párém(p)tóriyæs/. Lat. In the civil law, that which takes away or destroys forever; hence, exce­tio peremptoria, a plea which is a perpetual bar.

Peremptory /párém(p)tariy/. Imperative; final; decisive; absolute; conclusive; positive; not admitting of question, delay, reconsideration or of any alternative. Self-determined; arbitrary; not requiring any cause to be shown. Wolfe v. State, 147 Tex.Cr.R. 62, 178 S.W.2d 274, 279.

As to peremptory Defense; Jury instructions; Mandamus; Nonsuit; Plea; and Writ, see those titles.

Peremptory challenge. The right to challenge a juror without assigning, or being required to assign, a reason for the challenge. In most jurisdictions each party to an action, both civil and criminal, has a specified number of such challenges and after using all his peremptory challenges he is required to furnish a reason for subsequent challenges. Fed.R.Crim.P. 24; 28 U.S.C.A. § 1870 (civil cases). See also Challenge; Jury challenge.
Peremptory day. A day assigned for trial or hearing in court, absolutely and without further opportunity for postponement.

Peremptory exceptions. In the civil law, any defense which denies entirely the ground of action. Those exceptions which tend to the dismissal of the action.

Peremptory instruction. See Jury instruction.

Peremptory rule. In practice, an absolute rule; a rule without any condition or alternative of showing cause. Ruling made by a trial judge or hearing magistrate. See also Rule of court.

Peremptory undertaking. In English law, an undertaking by a plaintiff to bring on a cause for trial at the next sittings or assizes.

Per eundem /pər iˈʌndəm/. Lat. By the same. This phrase is commonly used to express "by, or from the mouth of, the same judge." So "per eundem in eadem" means "by the same judge in the same case."

Perfect or perfected. Complete; finished; executed; enforceable; without defect; merchantable; marketable. Brought to a state of perfection.

As to perfect Equity; Obligation; Ownership; Title; and Usufruct, see those titles.

Perfect attestation clause. One that asserts performance of all acts required to be done to make valid testamentary disposition.

Perfected. See Perfect or perfected; Perfection of security interest.

Perfecting bail. Term describing certain qualifications of a property character being required of persons who tender themselves as bail, when such persons have justified, i.e., established their sufficiency by satisfying the court that they possess the requisite qualifications; a rule or order of court is made for their allowance, and the bail is then said to be perfected, i.e., the process of giving bail is finished or completed.

Perfect instrument. An instrument such as a deed or mortgage is said to become perfect or perfected when recorded (or registered) or filed for record, because it then becomes good as to all the world.

Perfection of security interest. In secured transactions law, the process whereby a security interest is protected, as far as the law permits, against competing claims to the collateral, which usually requires the secured party to give public notice of the interest as by filing in a government office (e.g. in office of Secretary of State). Perfection of a security interest deals with those steps legally required to give a secured party an interest in subject property against debtor's creditors. Bramble Transp., Inc. v. Sam Senter Sales, Inc., Del.Super., 294 A.2d 97, 102.

The minimum meaning of this term in connection with a security interest is that the secured party has done whatever is necessary in the way of giving notice to make his security interest effective at least against lien creditors of the debtor. Depending upon the type of collateral and the method of perfection, it may mean more; e.g. it may mean that the interest is good even against all purchasers. The methods for attaining perfection are stated in U.C.C. Sections 9-302 through 9-306. In most cases the secured party may obtain perfection either by filing (i.e. with Secretary of State) or by taking possession of the collateral. When the collateral is held by a bailee who has not issued a negotiable document of title, perfection by notification is possible; e.g. the secured party may obtain perfection by notifying the bailee of the secured party's interest. For a few special situations the Code provides that a security interest is perfected without any of the above actions on the part of the secured party. Such perfection is called automatic perfection, or perfection by attachment.

Perfect trust. An executed trust (q.v.).

Perfectum est cui nihil deest secundum suae perfectionis vel naturae modum /pərfɛktəm ɛst ˈkiː ðiˈwʌdi ˈnætəri ˈmoʊdəm/. That is perfect to which nothing is wanting, according to the measure of its perfection or nature.

Perfidy /pərˈfədi/. The act of one who has engaged his faith to do a thing, and does not do it, but does the contrary. Faithlessness, treachery, violation of a promise or vow or a trust reposed.

Perform. To perform an obligation or contract is to execute, fulfill, or accomplish it according to its terms. This may consist either in action on the part of the person bound by the contract or in omission to act, according to the nature of the subject-matter; but the term is usually applied to any action in discharge of a contract other than payment. See Performance.

In copyright law, to "perform" a work means to recite, render, play, dance, or act it, either directly or by means of any device or process or, in the case of a motion picture or other audiovisual work, to show its images in any sequence or to make the sounds accompanying it audible. Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C.A. § 101.

Per formam doni /pər fɔrˈmæm dənˈwi/. L. Lat. In English law, by the form of the gift; by the designation of the giver, and not by the operation of law.

Performance. The fulfillment or accomplishment of a promise, contract, or other obligation according to its terms, relieving such person of all further obligation or liability thereunder. See also Execute; Execution; Part performance; Payment; Substantial performance doctrine. Non performance. See Commercial frustration; Default; Impossibility.

Part performance. The doing some portion, yet not the whole, of what either party to a contract has agreed to do.

Part performance of an obligation, either before or after a breach thereof, when expressly accepted by the creditor in writing, in satisfaction, or rendered in pursuance of an agreement in writing for that purpose, though without any new consideration, extinguishes the obligation.
As regards the sale of goods, the statute of frauds requirement is dispensed with by partial performance for the goods which have been accepted or for which payment has been made and accepted. U.C.C. § 2–201(3). See also Part performance.

Specific performance. The remedy of requiring exact performance of a contract in the specific form in which it was made, or according to the precise terms agreed upon. The actual accomplishment of a contract by a party bound to fulfill it. The doctrine of specific performance is that, where money damages would be an inadequate compensation for the breach of an agreement, the contractor or vendor will be compelled to perform specifically what he has agreed to do; e.g. ordered to execute a specific conveyance of land. See Fed.R. Civil P. 70.

With respect to sale of goods, specific performance may be decreed where the goods are unique or in other proper circumstances. The decree for specific performance may include such terms and conditions as to payment of the price, damages, or other relief as the court may deem just. U.C.C. §§ 2–711(2)(b), 2–716.

As the exact fulfillment of an agreement is not always practicable, the phrase may mean, in a given case, not literal, but substantial performance.

Performance bond. Surety bond which guarantees that contractor will fully perform contract and guarantees against breach of contract. Isaac v. Reliance Ins. Co., 201 Kan. 288, 440 P.2d 600, 605. Proceeds of bond are used to complete contract or compensate for loss in the event of nonperformance. See also Bond; Bid bond; Miller Act.

Per fraudem. Lat. By fraud. In common law pleading, where a plea alleges matter of discharge, and the replication avers that the discharge was fraudulently obtained and is therefore invalid, it is called a "replication per fraudem."

Periculum existimatum quod bonorum virorum non comprobatur exemplo. Lat. In old English law, by human industry. A term applied to the reclaiming or taming of wild animals by art, industry, and education.

Periculosum. Lat. In the civil law, peril; hazard; risk.

Period. Any point, space, or division of time.

Periodic. Recurring at fixed intervals; to be made or done, or to happen, at successive periods separated by determined intervals of time, as periodic payments of interest on a bond, or periodic alimony payments.

Perils of the lakes. As applied to navigation of the Great Lakes, this term has the same meaning as "perils of the sea (q.v.)."

Perils of the sea. In maritime and insurance law, natural accidents peculiar to the sea, which do not happen by the intervention of man, nor are to be prevented by human prudence. Hence to recover on marine policy insuring against loss by perils of sea, vessel must be seaworthy when it is sent to sea. Perils of the sea are from (1) storms and waves; (2) rocks, shoals, and rapids; (3) other obstacles, though of human origin; (4) changes of climate; (5) the confinement necessary at sea; (6) animals peculiar to the sea; (7) all other dangers peculiar to the sea. All losses caused by the action of wind and water acting on the property insured under extraordinary circumstances, either directly or mediate­ly, without the intervention of other independent active external causes, are losses by "perils of the sea or other perils and dangers," within the meaning of the usual clause in a policy of marine insurance. In an enlarged sense, all losses which occur from maritime adventure may be said to arise from the perils of the sea; but underwriters are not bound to this extent. They insure against losses from extraordinary occurrences only; such as stress of weather, winds and waves, lightning, tempests, etc. These are understood to be meant by the phrase "the perils of the sea," in a marine policy, and not those ordinary perils which every vessel must encounter.

Peril of the sea within a marine policy envisions extraordinary and unusual perils which vessel may not reasonably expect to encounter; circumstances which are ordinarily encountered such as predictable winds, tides, wave actions and conditions of the water do not fall within such classification. Vining v. Security Ins. Co. of New Haven, La.App., 252 So.2d 754, 757. Under Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, "perils of the sea" are understood to mean those perils which are peculiar to sea and which are of extraordinary nature or arise from irresistible force or overwhelming power, and which cannot be guarded against by ordinary exertions of human skill and prudence. New Rotterdam Ins. Co. v. S. S. Loppersum, D.C.N.Y., 215 F.Supp. 563, 566, 567.

Per incuriam. Lat. Through inadvertence.

Per industriam hominis. Lat. In ordinary English law, by human industry. A term applied to the reclaiming or taming of wild animals by art, industry, and education.

Per infortunium. Lat. By misadventure. In criminal law, homicide per infortunium is committed where a man, doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another. See Homicide.
alimony and the corresponding ability of the other spouse to pay. Cann v. Cann, Fla.App., 334 So.2d 325, 328. This is also known in jurisdictions as permanent alimony. Maxcy v. Estate of Maxcy, 485 So.2d 1077, 1078. State statutes which provide for alimony payments only from husbands, and not wives, have been held unconstitutional. Orr v. Orr, 99 S.Ct. 1102. See also Alimony; Permanent alimony.

Periodic tenancy. Generic term descriptive of a tenancy from week to week, month to month, or year to year.

Periodic tenancy is one continuing tenancy subject to termination at various rental periods rather than a series of individual and new tenancies. Rossow Oil Co., Inc. v. Heiman, 72 Wis.2d 696, 242 N.W.2d 176, 180. An estate that continues for successive periods unless terminated at end of a period by notice. State v. Fin & Feather Club, Me., 316 A.2d 351, 357.

Peripheral rights. Those rights which surround or spring from other rights.

Periphrasis. Circumlocution; use of many words to express the sense of one.

Perish. To come to an end; to cease to be; to die.

Perishable. Subject to speedy and natural decay (e.g., fruits, vegetables, dairy products, meat). But, where the time contemplated is necessarily long, the term may embrace property liable merely to material depreciation in value from other causes than such decay.

Perishable commodity. A relative term used to describe a product, like fruit or fresh vegetables, which quickly deteriorates in quality and value. In re Rosenbaum Grain Corporation, C.C.A.Ill., 83 F.2d 391, 393.

Perishable goods. Goods which quickly decay and lose their value if not put to their intended use within a short period of time.

Perjuri sunt qui servatis verbis juramenti decipiunt aures eorum qui accipiunt. They are perjured, who, preserving the words of an oath, deceive the ears of those who receive it.

Perjury. In criminal law, the willful assertion as to a matter of fact, opinion, belief, or knowledge, made by a witness in a judicial proceeding as part of his evidence, either upon oath or in any form allowed by law to be substituted for an oath, whether such evidence is given in open court, or in an affidavit, or otherwise, such assertion being material to the issue or point of inquiry and known to such witness to be false. A false statement knowingly made in a proceeding in a court of competent jurisdiction or concerning a matter wherein an affiant is required by law to be sworn as to some matter material to the issue or point in question. Henry v. Deen, 310 N.C. 75, 310 S.E.2d 326, 335.

A person is guilty of perjury if in any official proceeding he makes a false statement under oath or equivalent affirmation, or swears or affirms the truth of a statement previously made, when the statement is material and he does not believe it to be true. Model Penal Code, § 241.1. See also 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1621, 1623.

Suboration of perjury is procuring another to commit perjury. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 1622.

For unsworn declarations under penalty of perjury, see 28 U.S.C.A. § 1746. See also False swearing; Two witness rule.

Perks. See Perquisites.

Per legem terrae. Lat. By the law of the land; by due process of law.

Permanent. Continuing or enduring in the same state, status, place, or the like, without fundamental or marked change, not subject to fluctuation, or alteration, fixed or intended to be fixed; lasting; abiding; stable; not temporary or transient. Hiatt v. Department of Labor and Industries, 48 Wash.2d 843, 297 P.2d 244, 246. Generally opposed in law to "temporary," but not always meaning "perpetual."

As to permanent Injunction; Nuisance, and Trespass; see those titles.

Permanent abode. A domicile or fixed home, which the party may leave as his interest or whim may dictate, but which he has no present intention of abandoning. See also Domicile; Residence.

Permanent alimony. An allowance for the support and maintenance of a spouse during his or her lifetime, and the corresponding ability of the other to provide it. Cann v. Cann, Fla.App., 334 So.2d 325, 329. See also Alimony; Periodic alimony.

Within insurance policies does not mean that disability must continue throughout life of insured, but it connotes idea that disability must be something more than temporary, and at least presumably permanent. See also Disability; Permanent injury.

Permanent employment. As provided for by contract, means only that employment is to continue indefinitely and until either party wishes to sever relation for some good reason. Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters of Pacific, Cal.App., 158 P.2d 426, 429.

Permanent financing. Long term loan which replaces bridge or interim financing; e.g., mortgage loan used to repay construction loan.

Permanent injury. One where situation has stabilized and permanent damage is reasonably certain. Haugen Trust v. Warner, 204 Mont. 508, 665 P.2d 1132, 1135. Physical or mental impairment or disability which will last throughout life, or injury reasonably certain to be followed by permanent impairment of earning capacity or one producing permanent irremediable pain. Driver v. Anheuser, Mo.App., 397 S.W.2d 11, 16. See also Permanent disability.

Permanent law. An act which continues in force for an indefinite time.

Permissive counterclaim. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 13(b) grants defendant unqualified right to interpose "permissive counterclaim"; one that does not arise out of same transaction or occurrence furnishing subject matter of plaintiff's claim, and court possesses no discretion to reject it. U. S. for Use and Benefit of Kashulines v. Thermo Contracting Corp., D.C.N.J., 437 F.Supp. 195, 198. See also Authority; Certificate; License; Permit.

Permission. A license to do a thing; an authority to do an act which, without such authority, would have been unlawful. An act of permitting, formal consent, authorization, leave, license or liberty granted, and it has a flexible meaning depending upon the sense in which it is used. Winterton v. Van Zandt, Mo., 351 S.W.2d 696, 700. See also Authority; Certificate; License; Permit.

Permissions. Negations of law, arising either from the law's silence or its express declaration.

Permissive. Allowed; allowable; that which may be done. Lenient; tolerant.

Permissive counterclaim. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 13(b) grants defendant unqualified right to interpose "permissive counterclaim"; one that does not arise out of same transaction or occurrence furnishing subject matter of plaintiff's claim, and court possesses no discretion to reject it. U. S. for Use and Benefit of Kashulines v. Thermo Contracting Corp., D.C.N.J., 437 F.Supp. 195, 198. See also Counterclaim.

Permissive use. See Use.

Permissive waste. See Waste.

Permit. n. To suffer, allow, consent, let; to give leave or license; to acquiesce, by failure to prevent, or to expressly assent or agree to the doing of an act.

Permit. n. In general, any document which grants a person the right to do something. A license or grant of authority to do a thing. Matter of Building Permit and Zoning, 29 N.C.App. 749, 225 S.E.2d 647, 649. A written license or warrant, issued by a person in authority, empowering the grantee to do some act not forbidden by law, but not allowable without such authority.

A license or instrument granted by the officers of excise (or customs), certifying that the duties on certain goods have been paid, or secured, and permitting their removal from some specified place to another. See also Building permit; Certificate; License; Special use permit.

Permit card. A document given by a union to a non-union member which allows an employer to hire him for a job for which the union is unable to supply sufficient members.

Per mitter le droit /për mîtr la drôy/. L. Fr. By passing the right. One of the modes by which releases at common law were said to inure was "per mitter le droit," as where a person who had been disseised released to the disseisor or his heir or feoffee. In such case, by the release, the right which was in the releasor was added to the possession of the releasee, and the two combined perfected the estate.

Per mitter l'estate /për mitîr lastîy/. L. Fr. By passing the estate. At common law, if two or more are seised, either by deed, devise, or descent, as joint tenants or coparceners of the same estate, and one of them releases to the other, this is said to inure by way of "per mitter l'estate."

Permutatio /përmystêysh(i)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, exchange; barter.

Permutation /përmystêyshon/. The exchange of one movable subject for another; barter.

Per my et per tout /për mîy eî për tüw(t)/. L. Fr. By the half and by the whole. A phrase descriptive of the mode in which joint tenants hold the joint estate, the effect of which, technically considered, is that for purposes of tenure and survivorship each is the holder of the whole, but for purposes of alienation each has only his own share, which is presumed in law to be equal.

Pernancy. Taking; a taking or receiving; as of the profits of an estate. Actual pernancy of the profits of an estate is the taking, perception, or receipt of the rents and other advantages arising therefrom.

Pernor of profits /përnor av prófâta/. He who receives the profits of lands, etc.; he who has the actual pernancy of the profits.

Pernour /përnor/. L. Fr. A taker. Le pernour ou le detenour, the taker or the detainer.

Per pais, trial /tráy(s)/ për pëy(s)/. Trial by the country; i.e., by jury.

Perpars /përpârz/. L. Lat. A purpart; a part of the inheritance.

Perpetration. The act of one committing a crime either with his own hands, or by some means or instrument or through some innocent agent.

Perpetrator /përpétréytâr/. Generally, this term denotes the person who actually commits a crime or delict, or by whose immediate agency it occurs.

Perpetual /përpétyuws/. Never ceasing; continuous; enduring; lasting; unlimited in respect of time; continuing without intermission or interval.

As to perpetual Injunction; Lease; and Statute, see those titles.

Perpetual edict. In Roman law, originally the term "perpetual" was merely opposed to "occasional" and was used to distinguish the general edicts of the prators from the special edicts or orders which they issued in their judicial capacity. But under Hadrian the edict was revised by the jurist Julianus, and was republished as a permanent act of legislation. It was then styled "perpetual," in the sense of being calculated to endure in perpetuum, or until abrogated by competent authority.

Perpetua lex est nullam legem humanam ac positivam perpetuam esse, et clausula que abrogationem excludit ab initio non valet. Perpetuity, rule against. Perpetuities, rule against perpetuities. Perpetuity of the king. Per procuration, hold property without the necessity of perpetual conveyances, for the purpose of transmitting it. By reason of this quality, this ideal and artificial person remains, in its legal entity and personality, the same, though frequent changes may be made of its members.

Perpetuating testimony. Means or procedure permitted by federal and state discovery rules for preserving for future use the testimony of witness, which might otherwise be lost or unavailable before the trial in which it is intended to be used. Fed.R. Civil P. 27(a) (depositions before trial).

Perpetuities, rule against. See Perpetuity; Rule (Rule against perpetuities).

Perpetuity. Continuing forever. Legally, pertaining to real property, any condition extending the inalienability or property beyond the time of a life or lives in being plus twenty one years. A perpetuity is a limitation which takes the subject-matter of the perpetuity out of commerce for a period greater than a life or lives in being and 21 years thereafter, plus ordinary period of gestation. Zahn v. National Bank of Commerce of Dallas, Tex.Civ.App., 328 S.W.2d 783, 789. See also Rule (Rule against perpetuities).

Perpetuity of the king. That fiction of the English law which for certain political purposes ascribes to the king in his political capacity the attribute of immortality; for, though the reigning monarch may die, yet by this fiction the king never dies, i.e., the office is supposed to be reoccupied for all political purposes immediately on his death.

Per pro curation. By proxy; by one acting as an agent with special powers, as under a letter of attorney. These words give notice to all persons that the agent is acting under a special and limited authority. The phrase is commonly abbreviated to "per proc.," or "p.p.," and is more used in the civil law and in England than in American law. A proxy or signature of a principal executed by an agent who discloses his role as agent on the document.

Per quae servitium. Lat. In old English law, a real action by which the grantee of a seigniory could compel the tenants of the grantor to attend to himself. It was abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 27, § 35.

PER QUOD SERVITIUM AMISIT

Perquisites. Emoluments, privileges, fringe benefits, or other incidental profits or benefits attaching to an office or employment position in addition to regular salary or wages. Shortened term "Perks" is used with reference to such extraordinary benefits afforded to business executives (e.g., free cars, club memberships, insurance, etc.). See also Fringe benefits.

Perqustitio. Purchase. Acquisition by one's own act or agreement, and not by descent.

Per quod. Whereby. When the declaration in an action of tort, after stating the acts complained of, goes on to allege the consequences of those acts as a ground of special damage to the plaintiff, the recital of such consequences is prefaced by these words, "per quod," whereby; and sometimes the phrase is used as the name of that clause of the declaration or complaint.

At the common law, "per quod" acquired two meanings in the law of defamation: when used in the frame of reference of slander it meant proof of special damages was required and when used in the frame of reference of libel it meant that proof of extrinsic circumstances was required. General Motors Corp. v. Piskor, 27 Md.App. 95, 340 A.2d 767, 783. See also Libelous per quod.

Words "actionable per quod" are those not actionable per se upon their face, but are only actionable in consequence of extrinsic facts showing circumstances under which they were said or the damages resulting to slandered party therefrom.

See also Actionable per quod.

Per quod consortium amisit. Lat. In old pleading, whereby he lost the company [of his wife]. A phrase used in the old declarations in actions of trespass by a husband for beating or ill using his wife, descriptive of the special damage he had sustained. Crocker v. Crocker, C.C.Mass., 98 F. 702, 703. See Consortium.

Per quod servitium amisit. Lat. In old pleading, whereby he lost the service [of his servant]. A phrase used in the old declarations in actions of trespass by a master, for beating or ill using his servant, descriptive of the special damage he had himself sustained. This action was commonly brought by the father for the seduction of his daughter, in which case very slight evidence of the relation of master and servant was necessary; but still some loss of service, or some expense, had to be shown.

Per rationes pervenitur ad legitimam rationem. Lat. In old pleading, whereby he lost the service [of his servant]. A phrase used in the old declarations in actions of trespass by a master, for beating or ill using his servant, descriptive of the special damage he had himself sustained. This action was commonly brought by the father for the seduction of his daughter, in which case very slight evidence of the relation of master and servant was necessary; but still some loss of service, or some expense, had to be shown.

Per rerum naturam factum negantis nulla probatio est. Lat. By reasoning we come to true reason.
bêyshïy/ow est/. It is in the nature of things that he who denies a fact is not bound to give proof.

Per saltum /pår sûrâl/. Lat. By a leap or bound; by a sudden movement; passing over certain proceedings.

Per se /pår sëp/. By itself; in itself; taken alone; by means of itself; through itself; inherently; in isolation; unconnected with other matters; simply as such; in its own nature without reference to its relation.

In law of defamation, certain words and phrases that are actionable as slander or libel in and of themselves without proof of special damages, e.g. accusation of crime. Used in contrast to defamation per quod which requires proof of special damage. See Actionable per se; Libelous per se; Slanderous per se.

See also Negligence per se; Per se doctrine; Per se violations.

Persecutio /pår'skâyúwshïy/ow/. Lat. In the civil law, a following after; a pursuing at law; a suit or prosecution. Properly that kind of judicial proceeding before the prætor which was called "extraordinary." In a general sense, any judicial proceeding, including not only "actions" (actiones), properly so called, but other proceedings also.

Per se doctrine. Under the "*per se doctrine," if an activity is blatant in its intent and pernicious in its effect, a court need not inquire into the reasonableness of the same before determining that it is a violation of the antitrust laws. Connecticut Ass'n of Clinical Laboratories v. Connecticut Blue Cross, Inc., 31 Conn.Sup.10, 324 A.2d 288, 291. See Per se violations.

Persequi /pår'skwây/. Lat. In the civil law, to follow to; to pursue or claim in form of law. An action is called a "*jus persequendi."

Per se violations. In anti-trust law, term that implies that certain types of business agreements, such as price-fixing, are considered inherently anti-competitive and injurious to the public without any need to determine if the agreement has actually injured market competition. See Per se doctrine; Rule (Rule of reason).

Person. In general usage, a human being (i.e. natural person), though by statute term may include labor organizations, partnerships, associations, corporations, legal representatives, trustees, trustees in bankruptcy, or receivers. See e.g. National Labor Relations Act, § 2(1), 29 U.S.C.A. § 152; Uniform Partnership Act, § 2.

Scope and delineation of term is necessary for determining those to whom Fourteenth Amendment of Constitution affords protection since this Amendment expressly applies to "person."

Aliens. Aliens are "persons" within meaning of Fourteenth Amendment and are thus protected by equal protection clause against discriminatory state action. Foley v. Connellee, D.C.N.Y., 419 F.Supp. 889, 891.

Bankruptcy Code. "Person" includes individual, partnership, and corporation, but not governmental unit. 11 U.S.C.A. § 101.

Commercial law. An individual or organization. U.C.C. § 1–201(30).

Foreign government. Foreign governments otherwise eligible to sue in U.S. courts are "persons" entitled to bring treble-damage suit for alleged antitrust violations under Clayton Act, Section 4. Pfizer, Inc. v. Government of India, C.A.Min., 550 F.2d 396.

Interested person. Includes heirs, devisees, children, spouses, creditors, beneficiaries and any others having a property right in or claim against a trust estate or the estate of a decedent, ward or protected person which may be affected by the proceeding. It also includes persons having priority for appointment as personal representative, and other fiduciaries representing interested persons. The meaning as it relates to particular persons may vary from time to time and must be determined according to the particular purposes of, and matter involved in, any proceeding. Uniform Probate Code, § 1–201(20).

Labor unions. Labor unions are "persons" under the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act, Casey v. F.T.C., C.A.Wash., 578 F.2d 793, 797, and also under Bankruptcy Code, Highway and City Freight Drivers, Dockmen and Helpers, Local Union No. 600 v. Gordon Transports, Inc., C.A.Mo., 576 F.2d 1285, 1287.

Minors. Minors are "persons" under the United States Constitution, possessed of rights that governments must respect. In re Scott K., 24 C.3d 395, 155 Cal.Rptr. 671, 674, 595 P.2d 105.

Municipalities. Municipalities and other government units are "persons" within meaning of 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. Local government officials sued in their official capacities are "persons" for purposes of Section 1983 in those cases in which a local government would be suiable in its own name. Monell v. N. Y. City Department of Social Services, 436 U.S. 658, 98 S.Ct. 2018, 2035, 56 L.Ed.2d 611. See Color of law.
Definition of "person" or "persons" covered by antitrust laws includes cities, whether as municipal utility operators suing as plaintiffs seeking damages for antitrust violations or as operators being sued as defendants. City of Lafayette, La. v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., La., 435 U.S. 389, 98 S.Ct. 1123, 1128, 55 L.Ed.2d 364.

Protected person. One for whom a conservator has been appointed or other protective order has been made. Uniform Probate Code, § 5–103(18).

Resident alien. A resident alien is a "person" within the meaning of the due process and equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment. C. D. R. Enterprises, Ltd. v. Board of Ed. of City of New York, D.C. N.Y., 412 F.Supp. 1164, 1168.

Unborn child. Word "person" as used in the Fourteenth Amendment does not include the unborn. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 93 S.Ct. 705, 729, 35 L.Ed.2d 147. Unborn child is a "person" for purpose of remedies given for personal injuries, and child may sue after his birth. Weaks v. Mounter, 88 Nev. 118, 493 P.2d 1307, 1309. In some jurisdictions a viable fetus is considered a person within the meaning of the state's wrongful death statute, e.g. Summerfield v. Superior Court, 144 Ariz. 467, 698 P.2d 712, and within the meaning of the state's vehicular homicide statute, e.g. Comm. v. Cass, 392 Mass. 799, 467 N.E.2d 1324. See also Child; Children (Rights of unborn child); Unborn child; Viable child.

PERSONAL EFFECTS

Personal. Appertaining to the person; belonging to an individual; limited to the person; having the nature or partaking of the qualities of human beings, or of movable property. In re Steimes' Estate, 150 Misc. 1309. In some jurisdictions a viable fetus is considered a person within the meaning of the state's wrongful death statute, e.g. Summerfield v. Superior Court, 144 Ariz. 467, 698 P.2d 712, and within the meaning of the state's vehicular homicide statute, e.g. Comm. v. Cass, 392 Mass. 799, 467 N.E.2d 1324. See also Child; Children (Rights of unborn child); Unborn child; Viable child.

PERSONAL EFFECTS

Aggrieved. To have standing as a "person aggrieved" under equal employment opportunities provisions of Civil Rights Act, or to assert rights under any federal regulatory statute, a plaintiff must show (1) that he has actually suffered an injury, and (2) that the interest sought to be protected by the complainant is arguably within the zone of interests to be protected or regulated by the statute in question. Foust v. Transamerica Corp., D.C.Cal., 391 F.Supp. 312, 314.

As contemplated by federal rule governing standing to object to alleged illegal search and seizure is one who is the victim of the search and seizure, as distinguished from one who claims prejudice only through the use of evidence gathered in a search directed at someone else. Cochran v. U.S., C.A.Colo., 389 F.2d 326, 327.

Test of whether a petitioner is a "person aggrieved" and thereby entitled to seek review of an order of referee in bankruptcy is whether his property may be diminished, his burden increased or his rights detrimentally affected by order sought to be reviewed. In re Capitano, D.C.La., 315 F.Supp. 105, 107, 108.

See also Aggrieved party; Standing to sue doctrine.

PERSONAL EFFECTS

Personal belongings. In probate law, term is a broad classification and in absence of restriction may include most or all of the testator's personal property. Goggans v. Simmons, Tex.Civ.App., 319 S.W.2d 442, 445. See also Personal effects.

Personal defenses. In commercial law, term usually refers to defenses that cannot be asserted against a holder in due course in enforcing an instrument. Also refers to defenses of a principal debtor against a creditor that cannot be asserted derivatively by a surety.

Personal effects. Articles associated with person, as property having more or less intimate relation to person of possessor; "effects" meaning movable or chattel property of any kind. Usual reference is to such items as clothing, furniture, jewelry, stamp and coin collections, silverware, china, crystal, cooking utensils, books, cars, televisions, radios, etc.

Term "personal effects" when employed in a will enjoys no settled technical meaning and, when used in its primary sense, without any qualifying words, ordinarily embraces such tangible property as is worn or carried about the person, or tangible property having some intimate relation to the person of the testator or testatrix; where it is required by the context within which the term appears, it may enjoy a broader meaning. In re Stengel's Estate, Mo.App., 557 S.W.2d 255, 260.
Personal holding company. Type of corporation subject to special Personal Holding Company Tax (I.R.C. § 541 et seq.) on undistributed income so as to preclude use of such organization by individuals in high tax brackets to avoid taxes. Typically, such corporations have a limited number of shareholders and the major sources of revenue are from passive income such as dividends, interest, annuities, royalties, rent, and the like.

Personal holding company income. Income as defined by I.R.C. § 543. Such income includes interest, dividends, certain rents and royalties, income from the use of corporate property by certain shareholders, income from certain personal service contracts, and distributions from estates and trusts. Such income is relevant in determining whether a corporation is a personal holding company and is therefore subject to the penalty tax on personal holding companies.

Personal holding company tax. Federal tax imposed on personal holding companies and designed to force the distribution of corporate earnings through the threat of a penalty tax on the corporation. I.R.C. § 541.

Personal injury. See Injury.

Personal judgment. See Judgment (Personal judgment).

Personalis actio /parsmeyl(i)yow/. Lat. A personal action; an action against the person (in personam).

Per stirpes /pær stærpiyz/. Lat. By roots or stocks; by representation. This term, derived from the civil law, is much used in the law of descents and distribution, and denotes that method of dividing an intestate estate where a class or group of distributees take the share which their deceased would have been entitled to, had he or she lived, taking thus by their right of representing such ancestor, and not as so many individuals. It is the antithesis of per capita (q.v.). Buxton v. Noble, 146 Kan. 671, 73 P.2d 43, 47.

Persuade. To induce one by argument, entreaty, or expostulation into a determination, decision, conclusion, belief, or the like; to win over by an appeal to one’s reason and feelings, as into doing or believing something; to bring oneself or another to belief, certainty or conviction; to argue into an opinion or procedure. La Page v. U. S., C.C.A.Minn., 146 F.2d 536, 538.

Persuasion. The act of persuading; the act of influencing the mind by arguments or reasons offered, or by anything that moves the mind or passions, or inclines the will to a determination. For Fair persuasion, see that title.

Pertain. To belong or relate to, whether by nature, appointment, or custom.

Pertenencia /pérténensía/. In Spanish law, the claim or right which one has to the property in anything; the territory which belongs to any one by way of jurisdiction or property; that which is accessory or consequent to a principal thing, and goes with the ownership of it.

Perticata terre /pòrdakéyta téhriy/. The fourth part of an acre.

Pertinent /pártnant/. Applicable; relevant. Evidence is called "pertinent" when it is directed to the issue or matters in dispute, and legitimately tends to prove the allegations of the party offering it; otherwise it is called "impertinent." A pertinent hypothesis is one which, if sustained, would logically influence the issue. Vaughn v. State, 136 Tex.Cr.R. 455, 125 S.W.2d 568, 570. See Material; Relevant.

Per totam curiam /pár tòwтом kyúriyam/. L. Lat. By the whole court. A common phrase in the old law reports.

Per tout et non per my /pár tòw(t) ey nón pár miy/. L. Fr. By the whole, and not by the moiety. Where an estate in fee is given to a man and his wife, they cannot take the estate by moieties, but both are seised of the entirety, per tout et non per my.

Perturbation /pártaRBéyshän/. In old English ecclesiastical courts, a "suit for perturbation of seat" is the technical name for an action growing out of a disturbance or infringement of one's right to a pew or seat in a church.

Perturbatrix /pártaRBéytrak/. A woman who breaks the peace.

Per universitatem /pár yúwnávárstéytam/. Lat. In the civil law, by an aggregate or whole; as an entirety. The term described the acquisition of an entire estate by one act or fact, as distinguished from the acquisition of single or detached things.

Per varios actus legem experientia facit /pár vériyow źkta liyj amph kspirýésh(i)ya fásst/. By various acts experience frames the law.

Per verba de futuro /pár várba dij fystyúrow/. Lat. By words of the future [tense]. A phrase applied to contracts of marriage.

Per verba de presenti /pár várba dij prazéntay/. Lat. By words of the present [tense]. A phrase applied to contracts of marriage.

Perverse verdict. A verdict whereby the jury refuses to follow the direction of the judge on a point of law.

Per vivam vocem /pár váyvam wóysam/. Lat. In old English law, by the living voice; the same with viva voce.

Per year. In a contract, is equivalent to the word "annually." See Annual.

Pesa /piyza/. A weight of two hundred and fifty-six pounds.

Pessimi exempli /pězsmay azzémplay/. Lat. Of the worst example.

Petens /pětanz/. Lat. In old English law, a demandant; the plaintiff in a real action.

Peter-pence. An ancient levy or tax of a penny on each house throughout England, paid to the Pope. It was called "Peter-pence," because collected on the day of St. Peter, ad vincula; by the Saxons it was called "Rome-feoh," "Romescot," and "Rome-pennyng," because collected and sent to Rome; and, lastly, it was called "hearth money," because every dwelling-house was liable to it, and every religious house, the abbey of St. Albans alone excepted.

Petit /pětìi/pitìy(t)/. Fr. Small; minor; inconsiderable. Used in several compounds, and sometimes written "petty." As to petit Jury; Larceny; Sergeanty; and Treason, see those titles.

Petit cape /pětìi kéyp(i)y/. A judicial writ, issued in the old actions for the recovery of land, requiring the sheriff to take possession of the estate, where the tenant, after having appeared in answer to the summons, made default in a subsequent stage of the proceedings.

Petite assise /pátyyt ázáy/pétiy/. Used in contradistinction from the grand assize, which was a jury to decide on questions of property. Petite assise, a jury to decide on questions of possession.

Petitio /pátsith(i)yow/. Lat. Civil law. The plaintiff's statement of his cause of action in an action in rem.

Old English law. Petition or demand; the count in a real action; the form of words in which a title to land was stated by the demandant, and which commenced with the word "peto."

Petition. A written address, embodying an application or prayer from the person or persons preferring it, to the power, body, or person to whom it is presented, for the exercise of his or their authority in the redress of some wrong, or the grant of some favor, privilege, or license. A formal written request addressed to some governmental authority. The right of the people to petition for redress of grievances is guaranteed by the First Amendment, U.S. Constitution.

A written request to a board for action on some matter therein laid before it. McKillop v. County Bd. of Ed. of Sanborn County, 78 S.D. 587, 105 N.W.2d 671, 675. For example, a formal paper filed with the N.L. R.B. seeking a secret ballot election among a certain group of employees (bargaining unit).

A formal written application to a court requesting judicial action on a certain matter. A recital of facts which give rise to a cause of action. Matthews v. Simmons, Tex.Civ.App., 589 S.W.2d 156, 159. An application made to a court ex parte, or where there are no parties in opposition, praying for the exercise of the judicial powers of the court in relation to some matter which is not the subject for a suit or action, or for authority to do some act which requires the sanction of the court; as for the appointment of a guardian, for leave to sell trust property, etc. Formerly, in equity practice the original pleading was denominated a petition or bill. Today, in almost all jurisdictions, whether in law or equity, the initial pleading is a complaint.

Written request to the court for an order after notice. Uniform Probate Code, §§ 1–201(31), 5–103(15).

Petition de droit /petiʃaˈn da ˈdroi/. L. Fr. In old English practice, a petition of right; a form of proceeding to obtain restitution from the crown of either real or personal property, being of use where the crown is in possession of any hereditaments or chattels, and the petitioner suggests such a right as controverts the title of the crown, grounded on facts disclosed in the petition itself. 3 Bl.Comm. 256.

Petitioner. One who presents a petition to a court, officer, or legislative body. The one who starts an equity proceeding or the one who takes an appeal from a judgment. In legal proceedings commenced by petition, the person against whom action or relief is prayed, or who opposes the prayer of the petition, is called the “respondent.” See also Plaintiff.

Petition in bankruptcy. A document filed in a court of bankruptcy, or with the clerk, by a debtor seeking the relief provided under the various chapters of the Bankruptcy Code. This is the manner in which a bankruptcy case is commenced. See Bankruptcy Code, § 301 et seq.

Petitioning creditor. The creditor at whose instance an adjudication of bankruptcy is made against a debtor.

Petition of right. In old English law, a proceeding in chancery by which a subject may recover property in the possession of the king. See Petition de droit.

Petition of rights. A parliamentary declaration of the liberties of the people, assented to by King Charles I, in 1629. It is to be distinguished from the bill of rights, (1689), which has passed into a permanent constitutional statute.

Petit jury. See Jury.

Petit larceny. See Larceny.

Petitory action /ˈpetɪtəriˈækʃən/. A driotural action; that is, one in which the plaintiff seeks to establish and enforce, by an appropriate legal proceeding, his right of property, or his title, to the subject-matter in dispute; as distinguished from a possessorial action, where the right to the possession is the point in litigation, and not the mere right of property. In admiralty, suits to try title to property independent of questions concerning possession are referred to as “petitory suits,” which suits must be based on a claim of legal title; the assertion of a mere equitable interest is not sufficient. Hunt v. A Cargo of Petroleum Products Laden on Steam Tanker Hilda, D.C.Pa., 378 F.Supp. 701, 703.

In Louisiana, an action brought by an alleged owner out of possession against one having possession to determine ownership, in which plaintiff must recover on strength of his own title, not on weakness of defendant’s title. Saucier v. Crichton, C.C.A.La., 147 F.2d 430, 433.

Petronian law. See Lex Petronia.

Pettifogger /ˈpetɪfɔɡər/. A lawyer who is employed in a small or mean business, or who carries on a disreputable business by unprincipled or dishonorable means.

Petty. Small, minor, of less or inconsiderable importance. The English form of “petit,” and sometimes used instead of that word in such compounds as “petty jury,” “petty larceny,” and “petty treason.”

See Misdemeanor; Petit. As to petty Average; Constable; Jury; Larceny; and Session, see those titles.

Petty cash. Currency maintained for expenditures that are conveniently made with cash on hand. A fund used by business to pay small expenses for such items as travel, stationery, etc. Sometimes called imprest fund, it is operated by a voucher system in which the person desiring the money submits a voucher properly authorized and receives the cash.

Petty larceny. See Larceny.

Petty offense. A minor crime, the maximum punishment for which is generally a fine or short term in jail or house of correction. In some states, it is a classification in addition to misdemeanor and felony. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 19.

A six month sentence is the constitutional dividing line between serious offenses for which a trial by jury must be afforded and petty offenses. In contempt cases, it is the sentence actually imposed, rather than the penalty authorized by law which is determinative. Dishpiti v. Pennsylvania, 418 U.S. 506, 519, 94 S.Ct. 2687, 2694, 41 L.Ed.2d 912.

See also Infraction; Misdemeanor.

Petty officers. Inferior officers in the naval service, of various ranks and kinds, corresponding to the non-commissioned officers in the army. U. S. v. Fuller, 160 U.S. 593, 16 S.Ct. 386, 40 L.Ed. 549.

Peyote. A type of cactus called mescal, found in Mexico and southwestern U.S. It contains button-like tubercles that are dried and chewed as an hallucinatory drug. Mescaline is an alkaloid of it.

Phantom stock plan. An employee benefit plan in which benefits are determined by reference to the performance of the corporation’s common shares. A deferred compensation unit plan for corporate executives and employees which credits to the unit account of the employee so-called excess market appreciation measured by the difference between the market value of the corporate stock at the time of termination of employment and the market value when the employee entered into the plan. Lieberman v. Becker, 38 Del.Ch. 540, 155 A.2d 596.
P.H.V. An abbreviation for "pro hac vice," for this turn, for this purpose or occasion.

Phylasist. A jailer.

Physical. Relating or pertaining to the body, as distinguished from the mind or soul or the emotions. Material, substantive, having an objective existence, as distinguished from imaginary or fictitious; real, having relation to facts, as distinguished from moral or constructive.

Physical cruelty. As used in divorce law means actual personal violence, or such a course of physical treatment as endangers life, limb or health, and renders cohabitation unsafe. Gibson v. Gibson, 283 S.C. 318, 322 S.E.2d 680, 682.

Physical disability. See Disability.

Physical fact. In the law of evidence, a fact having a physical existence, as distinguished from a mere conception of the mind; one which is visible, audible, or palpable, such as the sound of a pistol shot, a man running, impressions of human feet on the ground. See Demonstrative evidence.

Physical fact rule. In evidence, a judge is required to take case from jury if plaintiff's evidence as to physical fact rule is that if a driver does not see that which he could or should have seen, he is guilty of negligence as a matter of law. Pennsylvania Nat. Mut. Cas. Ins. Co. v. Dennis, 195 Kan. 594, 408 P.2d 575, 579.

Physical force. Force applied to the body; actual violence.

Physical harm. The words "physical harm" are used throughout the Restatement of Torts to denote the physical impairment of the human body, or of land or chattels. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 7. See also Physical injury.

Physical incapacity. In the law of marriage and divorce, impotence, incapacity to accomplish sexual coition, arising from physical imperfection or malformation.

Physical injury. Bodily harm or hurt, excluding mental distress, fright, or emotional disturbance. See also Physical harm.

Physical necessity. A condition in which a person is absolutely compelled to act in a particular way by overwhelming superior force; as distinguished from moral necessity, which arises where there is a duty incumbent upon a rational being to perform, which he ought at the time to perform. See Necessity.

Physician. A practitioner of medicine; a person duly authorized or licensed to treat diseases; one lawfully engaged in the practice of medicine.

Physiotherapy /fiziyowétherapu/. Treatment of disease by physical remedies rather than drugs. Physical therapy.

Piace /páyakal/. An obsolete term for a serious crime.

Pia fraus /pyá fros/. Lat. A pious fraud; a subterfuge or evasion considered morally justifiable on account of the ends sought to be promoted. Particularly applied to an evasion or disregard of the laws in the interests of religion or religious institutions, such as circumventing the statutes of mortmain.

Picaroon /pikarúwn/. A robber; a plunderer.

Picketing. Term refers to presence at an employer's business by one or more employees and/or other persons to publicize labor dispute, influence employees or customers to withhold their work or business, respectively, or show union's desire to represent employees; picketing is usually accompanied by patrolling with signs. C. Comella, Inc. v. United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, 33 Ohio App.2d 61, 292 N.E.2d 647, 655, 62 O.O.2d 128. Patrolling the entrance of a business by members of a labor union in order to inform other employees and the public of the existence of a strike and to influence or deter them from entering. See also Labor picketing; Secondary picketing; Unlawful picketing. Compare Boycott.

Peaceable picketing, in which laboring men and women have right to participate during labor dispute, means tranquil conduct, conduct devoid of noise or tumult, the absence of a quarrelsome demeanor, and a course of conduct that does not violate or disturb the public peace. Ex parte Bell, 37 Cal.App.2d 582, 100 P.2d 339, 340. It connotes peaceable methods of presenting a cause to the public in the vicinity of the employer's premises. Music Hall Theatre v. Moving Picture Mach. Operators Local No. 165, 249 Ky. 639, 61 S.W.2d 283.

Pick of land. A narrow slip of land running into a corner.

Pickpocket. A thief who secretly steals money or other property from the person of another.

Piepoudre. See Court of Piepoudre.

Pierage /pir:;,j/. The duty for maintaining piers and harbors.

Piercing the corporate veil. Judicial process whereby court will disregard usual immunity of corporate officers or entities from liability for wrongful corporate activities; e.g. when incorporation exists for sole purpose of perpetrating fraud. The doctrine which holds that the corporate structure with its attendant limited liability of stockholders may be disregarded and personal liability imposed on stockholders, officers and directors in the case of fraud or other wrongful acts done in name of corporation. The court, however, may look beyond the corporate form only for the defeat of fraud or wrong or the remedying of injustice. Hanson v. Bradley, 298 Mass. 371, 381, 10 N.E.2d 259, 264. See also Instrumental-ity rule.

Pignorative contract /pignorátis št(k)iyjow/. Lat. The usual and the contract of pledge; and also the obligation of such contract. Sealing up (obsignatio). A shutting up of an animal caught in one’s field and keeping it till the expenses and damage have been paid by its master.

Pignoratitia actio /pignoratish(y)ä akš(i)yjow/. Lat. In the civil law, an action of pledge, or founded on a pledge, which was either directa, for the debt, after payment of the debt, or contraria, for the creditor.

Pignorative contract /pignorátiv kontrræk/. In the civil law, a contract of pledge, hypothecation, or mortgage of realty. In such contract the nominal vendor continues to be the owner and the nominal purchaser has only a pledge or mortgage for his debt which he must enforce in the usual way. Jackson v. Golson, La.App., 91 So.2d 394, 399.

Pignoris capio /pignóras kápìjow/. Lat. In Roman law, this was the name of one of the legis actiones. It was employed only in certain particular kinds of pecuniary cases, and consisted in that the creditor, without preliminary suit and without the co-operation of the magistrate, by reciting a prescribed formula, took an article of property from the debtor to be treated as a pledge or security. The proceeding bears a marked analogy to distress at common law.

Pignus /pignás/. Lat. In the civil law, a pledge or pawn; a delivery of a thing to a creditor, as security for a debt. Also a thing delivered to a creditor as security for a debt.

Pilfer /pilfär/. To pilfer, in the plain and popular sense, means to steal. See Larceny; Theft.

Pilferage /pilf(r)aj/. Petty larceny; stealing of small items, generally of stored goods.

Pilferer /pilferar/. One who steals petty things, or a small part of a thing.

Pillage /pilaj/. Plunder; the forcible taking of private property by an invading or conquering army from the enemy’s subjects.

Pillory /pilary/. A frame erected on a pillar, and made with holes and movable boards, through which the heads and hands of criminals were put.

Pimp. One who obtains customers (“tricks”) for a whore or prostitute. See also Pander.

Pin-money. A small allowance set apart by a husband for the personal expenses of his wife; for her dress and pocket money.

Pint. A liquid measure of half a quart, or the eighth part of a gallon.

Pioneer patent. See Patent.

Pious uses /páyos yúwšz/. See Charitable use.

Piracy. Those acts of robbery and depredation upon the high seas which, if committed on land, would have amounted to a felony. Brigandage committed on the sea or from the sea. Whoever, on the high seas, commits the crime of piracy as defined by the law of nations, and is afterwards brought into or found in the United States, shall be imprisoned for life. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1651. See also Air piracy.

The term is also applied to the illegal reprinting or reproduction of copyrighted matter or to unlawful plagiarism from it; and, similarly, to the unlawful reproduction or distribution of property protected by patent and trademark laws. See also Infringement; Plagiarism.

Pirata est hostis humani generis /paréyta ét sostá hýuwéynay jénarás/. A pirate is an enemy of the human race.

Pirate. One guilty of the crime of piracy.

Piscary /piskaríy/. The right of fishing. Thus, common of piscary is the right of fishing in waters belonging to another person.

PITI. Principal, interest, taxes and insurance; the most common components of monthly mortgage payments.

P.J. An abbreviation for “presiding judge” (or justice).

PKPA. See Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act.

P.L. An abbreviation for “Pamphlet Laws” or “Public Laws.”

Placard. An edict; a declaration; a manifesto. Also an advertisement or public notification.

Place. An old form of the word “pleas.” Thus the “Court of Common Pleas” was sometimes called the “Court of Common Place.”

Place, n. This word is a very indefinite term. It is applied to any locality, limited by boundaries, however large or however small. It may be used to designate a country, state, county, town, or a very small portion of a town. The extent of the locality designated by it must generally be determined by the connection in which it is used. In its primary and most general sense means locality, situation, or site, and it is also used to designate an occupied situation or building. See also Site; Situs.

Place, v. To arrange for something as to place a mort­gage or to place an order. See also Placement.

Place lands. Lands granted which were within certain limits on each side of the road, and which became instantly fixed by the adoption of the line of the road. There is a well-defined difference between place lands and “indemnity lands.” See Indemnity.
Placement. The act of selling a new issue of securities or arranging a loan or mortgage. The act of finding employment for a person as in the case of an employment agency. See also Finder; Offering.

Place of abode. One’s residence or domicile (q.v.).

Place of business. The location at which one carries on his business or employment. Under many state statutes, service of process may be made at one’s place of business and jurisdiction may be acquired by a court whose territorial district includes one’s place of business. See also Domicile.

Place of contract. The place (country or state) in which a contract is made, and whose law must determine questions affecting the execution, validity, and construction of the contract. Scudder v. Union Nat. Bank, 91 U.S. 406, 412, 23 L.Ed. 245.

Place of delivery. The place where delivery is to be made of goods sold. If no place is specified in the contract, the articles sold must, in general, be delivered at the place where they are at the time of the sale. Hatch v. Standard Oil Co., 100 U.S. 124, 25 L.Ed. 554. See U.C.C. §§ 2-503, 2-504.

Place of employment. Within the safe place statutes, a place where active work, either temporary or permanent, is being conducted in connection with a business for profit; that is, where some process or operation related to such industry, trade or business is carried on and where any person is directly or indirectly employed by another.

Placer /pléysər/. In mining law, a superficial deposit of sand, gravel, or disintegrated rock, carrying one or more of the precious metals, along the course or under the bed of a watercourse, ancient or current, or along the shore of the sea. Under the acts of congress, the term includes all forms of mineral deposits, except veins of quartz or other rock in place. 30 U.S.C.A. § 35.

Placer claim. A mining claim located on the public domain for the purpose of placer mining, that is, ground within the defined boundaries which contains mineral in its earth, sand, or gravel; ground which includes valuable deposits not “in place,” that is, not fixed in rock, or which are in a loose state. U. S. v. Iron Silver Min. Co., 128 U.S. 673, 9 S.Ct. 195, 32 L.Ed. 571; Clipper Min. Co. v. Eli Min. Co., 194 U.S. 220, 24 S.Ct. 632, 48 L.Ed. 944.

Placer location. A placer claim located and occupied on the public domain.

Place where. A phrase used in the older reports, being a literal translation of locus in quo (q.v.).

Placit /plést/, or placitum /pléstom/. Decree; determination.

Placita /pléstə/. See Placitum.

Placitabile /pléstébably/. In old English law, pleadable.

Placita communia /pléstə kamýůwn(i)yo/. Common pleas. All civil actions between subject and subject.

Placita coronæ /pléstə korówniy/. Pleas of the crown. All trials for crimes and misdemeanors, wherein the king is plaintiff, on behalf of the people.

Placita de transgressione contra pacem regis, in regno Anglia vi et armis facta, secundum legem et consuetudinem Anglie sine brevi regis placitari non debent /pléstə diy tréezgrés/i wy ni kontrə péysam rýjəs, in régnəw áŋgliiwy və iərəməs fækə, skándam líjəm ét kónswat(y)uwdənam áŋgliiwy sáyniy břiyvəy rýjəs pléstərərə nôn démbt/. Pleas of trespass against the peace of the king in the kingdom of England, made with force and arms, ought not, by the law and custom of England, to be pleaded without the king’s writ.

Placita juris /pléstə júrəs/. Pleas or rules of law; particular and positive learnings of laws; grounds and positive learnings received with the law and set down; as distinguished from maxims or the formulated conclusions of legal reason.

Placita negativa duo exitum non faciunt /pléstə négatəvé do d’yəwəv égzəstəm nôn fəsh(ɪ)ənt/. Two negative pleas do not form an issue.

Placitare /pléstəriy//. To plead.

Placitory /pléstəriy/. Relating to pleas or pleading.

Placitum /pléstəm/. In civil law, an agreement of parties; that which is their pleasure to arrange between them.

An imperial ordinance or constitution; literally, the prince’s pleasure.

A judicial decision; the judgment, decree, or sentence of a court.

In old English law, a public assembly at which the king presided, and which comprised men of all degrees, met for consultation about the great affairs of the kingdom.

A court; a judicial tribunal; a lord’s court. Placita was the style or title of the courts at the beginning of the old nisi prius record.

A suit or cause in court; a judicial proceeding; a trial. Placita were divided into placita coronæ (crown cases or pleas of the crown, i.e., criminal actions) and placita communia (common cases or common pleas, i.e., private civil actions).

A fine, mulct, or pecuniary punishment.

A pleading or plea. In this sense, the term was not confined to the defendant’s answer to the declaration, but included all the pleadings in the cause, being nomen generalissimum.

In the old reports and abridgments, “placitum” was the name of a paragraph or subdivision of a title or page where the point decided in a cause was set out separately. It is commonly abbreviated “pl.”

Placitum aliusd personale, aliusd reale, aliusd mixtum /pléstəm állyəd pársənələli, állyəd rɪəˈjɛli, állyəd mɪkstəm/. Pleas [i.e., actions] are personal, real, and mixed.
PLACITUM FRACTUM

Placitum fractum /plásátəm fræktəm/. A day past or lost to the defendant.

Placitum nominatum /plásátəm nöminætəm/. The day appointed for a criminal to appear and plead and make his defense.

Plagiarism /plæʒərizəm/. The act of appropriating the literary composition of another, or parts or passages of his writings, or the ideas or language of the same, and passing them off as the product of one's own mind. If the material is protected by copyright, such act may constitute an offense of copyright infringement.

To be liable for plagiarism it is not necessary to exactly duplicate another's literary work, it being sufficient if unfair use of such work is made by lifting of substantial portion thereof, but even an exact counterpart of another's work does not constitute plagiarism if such counterpart was arrived at independently. O'Rourke v. RKO Radio Pictures, D.C. Mass., 44 F. Supp. 480, 482, 483.

See also Copyright; Fair use doctrine; Infringement.

Plagiarist /plæʒərəst/, or plagiar /plæʒərə/. One who publishes the thoughts and writings of another as his own.

Plagiarus /plæʒərə/. Lat. In the civil law, a kidnapper.

Plagium /plæʒiəyəm/. Lat. In the civil law, kidnapping. The offense of enticing away and stealing men, children, and slaves. The persuading a slave to escape from his master, or the concealing or harboring him without the knowledge of his master.

Plaideur /pləjdər/. Fr. An obsolete term for an attorney who pleaded the cause of his client; an advocate.

Plain error rule. This rule that plain errors affecting substantial rights may be considered on motion for new trial or on appeal though not raised in trial court if manifest injustice or miscarriage of justice has resulted, is invoked on case to case basis, but there must be sound, substantial manifestation, a strong, clear showing, that injustice or miscarriage of justice will result if the rule is not invoked. State v. Meiers, Mo., 412 S.W.2d 478, 480. For there to be "plain error" warranting reversal absent objection, there must be legal impropriety affecting defendant’s substantive rights, sufficiently grievous to justify notice by reviewing court and to convince it that, of itself, error possessed clear capacity to bring about unjust result. State v. Harris, A.D., 174 A.2d 645, 646, 70 N.J. Super. 9. Doctrine which encompasses those errors which are obvious and highly prejudicial, which affect the substantial rights of the accused, and which, if uncorrected, would be an affront to the integrity and reputation of judicial proceedings. U. S. v. McCord, 166 U.S. App. D.C. 1; 501 F.2d 334, 341.

Plain sight rule. See Plain view doctrine.

Plaint /plæント/. In civil law, a complaint; a form of action, particularly one for setting aside a testament alleged to be invalid. This word is the English equivalent of the Latin "querela."

In English practice, a private memorial tendered in open court to the judge, wherein the party injured sets forth his cause of action. A proceeding in inferior courts by which an action is commenced without original writ. This mode of proceeding is commonly adopted in cases of replevin.

Plaintiff. A person who brings an action; the party who complains or sues in a civil action and is so named on the record. A person who seeks remedial relief for an injury to rights; it designates a complainant. City of Vancouver v. Jarvis, 76 Wash.2d 110, 455 P.2d 591, 593. The prosecution (i. e. State or United States) in a criminal case.

Plaintiff in error. In current nomenclature, "appellant" is the accepted word to indicate the party who seeks appellate review, and not plaintiff in error, as formerly.

Plain view doctrine. In search and seizure context, objects falling in plain view of officer who has the right to be in position to have that view are subject to seizure without a warrant and may be introduced in evidence. Harris v. U. S., 390 U. S., 234, 236, 88 S.Ct. 992, 993, 19 L.Ed.2d 1069. Under "plain view doctrine," warrantless seizure of incriminating evidence may be permitted when police are lawfully searching specified area if it can be established that police had prior justification for intrusion into area searched, that police inadvertently came across item seized, and that it was immediately apparent to the police that the item seized was evidence. Washington v. Chrisman, 455 U. S., 5, 102 S.Ct. 812, 816, 70 L.Ed.2d 778. However, the plain view doctrine may not be used to extend a general exploratory search from one object to another until something incriminating at last emerges. Coolidge v. New Hampshire, 403 U. S., 443, 466, 91 S.Ct. 2022, 2038, 29 L.Ed.2d 564.

Plan. A delineation; a design; a draft, form or representation. The representation of anything drawn on a plane, as a map or chart; a scheme; a sketch. Also, a method of design or action, procedure, or arrangement for accomplishment of a particular act or object. Shainwald v. City of Portland, 153 Or. 167, 55 P.2d 1151, 1156. Method of putting into effect an intention or proposal.

Planned unit development (PUD). An area with a specified minimum contiguous acreage to be developed as a single entity according to a plan, containing one or more residential clusters or planned unit residential developments and one or more public, quasi-public, commercial or industrial areas in such ranges of ratios of nonresidential uses to residential uses as shall be specified in the zoning ordinance.

Area of land controlled by landowner to be developed as a single entity for a number of dwelling units, and commercial and industrial uses, if any, the plan for which does not correspond in lot size, bulk or type of dwelling or commercial or industrial use, density, lot coverage and required open space to the regulations established in any one or more districts, created from time to time, under the provisions of a municipal zoning ordinance enacted pursuant to the conventional zoning enabling act of the state.
Planning. In municipal law, term connotes systematic development of municipality to promote general welfare and prosperity of its people with greatest efficiency and economy, while zoning is concerned primarily with use of property. Forest Const. Co. v. Planning and Zoning Commission of Town of Bethany, 155 Conn. 169, 236 A.2d 917, 922.

Planning board or commission. The agency of a local government which recommends approval or disapproval of proposed building projects, real estate developments, and the like, in their jurisdiction. A higher authority such as the city council usually makes the final decision based on the recommendation of such board or commission.

Plantation. In English law, a colony; an original settlement in a new country.

In American law, a farm; a large cultivated estate. Term used chiefly in the southern states to refer to large farms on which cotton, tobacco, sugar, and like crops are grown.

Plat or plot. A map of a specific land area such as a town, section, or subdivision showing the location and boundaries of individual parcels of land subdivided into lots, with streets, alleys, easements, etc., usually drawn to a scale. See also Plat map.

Platform. A statement of principles and of policies adopted by a party convention as a basis for the party’s appeal for public support.

Plat map. A plat which gives legal descriptions of pieces of property by lot, street, and block numbers. A plat map is generally drawn after the property has been described by some other means, such as a Government Survey System. Once a plat map is set, legal descriptions are defined by referring to the given map, in a lot and block description.

Play-debt. Debt contracted by gaming.

Plea. In common law pleading (now obsolete with adoption of Rules of Civil Procedure) a pleading; any one in the series of pleadings. More particularly, the first pleading on the part of the defendant. In the strictest sense, the answer which the defendant in an action at law made to the plaintiff’s declaration, and in which he set up matter of fact as defense, thus distinguished from a demurrer, which interposed objections on grounds of law.

In equity pleading (now obsolete with adoption of Rules of Civil Procedure) a special answer showing or relying upon one or more things as a cause why the suit should be either dismissed or delayed or barred. A short statement, in response to a bill in equity, of facts which, if inserted in the bill, would render it demurrable.

Affirmative plea. In equity pleading, one which sets up a single fact, not appearing in the bill, or sets up a number of circumstances all tending to establish a single fact, which fact, if existing, destroys the complainant’s case. Such is obsolete under Rules of Civil Procedure. See Affirmative defense.

Anomalous plea. One which is partly affirmative and partly negative. Obsolete under Rules of Civil Procedure.

Common pleas. In common law pleading, common causes or suits; civil actions brought and prosecuted between subjects or citizens, as distinguished from criminal cases. Such are obsolete under Rules of Civil Procedure.

Criminal pleas. The defendant’s response to a criminal charge (guilty, not guilty, or nolo contendere). If a defendant refuses to plead or if a defendant corporation fails to appear, the court shall enter a plea of not guilty. Fed.R.Crim.P. 11(a). See also Affidavit plea; Arraignment; Guilty plea; Insanity; Nolo contendere; Not guilty; Plea bargaining; Standing mute.

Dilatory pleas. See Dilatory.

Double plea. In common law pleading, one having the technical fault of duplicity; one consisting of several distinct and independent matters alleged to the same point and requiring different answers. This does not present any problem under Rules of Civil Procedure which permits party to plead as many separate claims or defenses, regardless of consistency. Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(e)(2).

False plea. A sham plea (q.v. infra).

Insanity plea. See Insanity.

Negative plea. In equity pleading, one which does not undertake to answer the various allegations of the bill, but specifically denies some particular fact or matter the existence of which is essential to entitle the complainant to any relief. Abolished under Rules of Civil Procedure. See Denial.

Peremptory pleas. In common law pleading, "pleas in bar" are so termed in contradistinction to that class of pleas called "dilatory pleas." The former, viz., peremptory pleas, are usually pleaded to the merits of the action, with the view of raising a material issue between the parties; while the latter class, viz., dilatory pleas, are generally pleaded with a view of retarding the plaintiff's proceedings, and not for the purpose of raising an issue upon which the parties may go to trial and settle the point in dispute. Peremptory pleas are also called "pleas in bar," while dilatory pleas are said to be in abatement only. Abolished under Rules of Civil Procedure.

Plea agreements. See Plea bargaining.

Plea in abatement. In common law pleading, a plea which, without disputing merits of plaintiff’s claim, objects to place, mode, or time of asserting it. It allows plaintiff to renew suit in another place or form, or at another time, and does not assume to answer action on its merits, or deny existence of particular cause of action on which plaintiff relies. A plea in abatement sets forth facts extrinsic to merits which affect only manner in which action is framed or circumstances under which it is sought to be prosecuted, and does not destroy the right of action but merely suspends or postpones its plea

Plea in bar. A plea which goes to bar the plaintiff's action; that is, to defeat it absolutely and entirely. A plea in bar sets forth matters which per se destroy right of action and bar its prosecution absolutely, such as bar of statute of limitations or constitutional guarantee against self-incrimination. U. S. v. Brodson, C.A.Wis., 234 F.2d 97, 99. A plea in bar is one that denies a plaintiff's right to maintain the action and which, if established, will destroy the action. Gillikin v. Gillikin, 248 N.C. 710, 104 S.E.2d 861, 862.

Plea in discharge. In common law pleading, one which admits that the plaintiff had a cause of action, but shows that it was discharged by some subsequent or collateral matter, as, payment or accord and satisfaction. Abolished under Rules of Civil Procedure. See Affirmative defense.

Plea in reconvention. In the civil law, a plea which sets up new matter, not in defense to the action, but by way of cross-complaint, set-off, or counterclaim.

Plea of confession and avoidance. In common law pleading, one which admits that plaintiff had a cause of action, but avers that it has been discharged by some subsequent or collateral matter. Abolished under Rules of Civil Procedure. See Affirmative defense.

Plea of guilty. A confession of guilt in open court. See also Criminal pleas, above, and Guilty plea.

Plea of nolo contendere /pliy sv nólow kantén′dér/.' See Nolo contendere.

Plea of release. In common law pleading, one which admits the cause of action, but sets forth a release subsequently executed by the party authorized to release the claim. Abolished by Rules of Civil Procedure. See Affirmative defense.

Sham plea. A false plea; a plea of false or fictitious matter, subtly drawn so as to entrap an opponent, or create delay. A vexatious or false defense, resorted to under the old system of pleading for purposes of delay and annoyance. Such a plea may be ordered struck on motion under Rules of Civil P. 12(f).

Special plea. In common law pleading, a special kind of plea in bar, distinguished by this name from the general issue, and consisting usually of some new affirmative matter, though it may also be in the form of a traverse or denial. Abolished under Rules of Civil Procedure.

Special plea in bar. In common law pleading, one which advances new matter. It differs from the general, in this: that the latter denies some material allegation, but never advances new matter. Abolished under Rules of Civil Procedure.

Plea agreement. See Plea bargaining.

Plea bargaining. The process whereby the accused and the prosecutor in a criminal case work out a mutually satisfactory disposition of the case subject to court approval. It usually involves the defendant's pleading guilty to a lesser offense or to only one or some of the counts of a multi-count indictment in return for a lighter sentence than that possible for the graver charge. Plea bargaining procedures in the federal courts are governed by Fed.R.Crim.P. 11(e).

Plead. To make, deliver, or file any pleading; to conduct the pleadings in a cause. To interpose any pleading in a civil action. More particularly, to deliver in a formal manner the defendant's answer to the plaintiff's declaration, complaint or to the indictment, as the case may be. See Pleadings.

Pleader. A person whose business it was to draw pleadings. Formerly, when pleading at common law was a highly technical and difficult art, there was a class of men known as "special pleaders not at the bar," who held a position intermediate between counsel and attorneys. In current usage, the pleader is the party asserting a particular pleading.

Pleadings. The formal allegations by the parties to a lawsuit of their respective claims and defenses, with the intended purpose being to provide notice of what is to be expected at trial.

Rules or Codes of Civil Procedure. Unlike the rigid technical system of common law pleading, pleadings under federal and state rules or codes of civil procedure have a far more limited function, with determination and narrowing of facts and issues being left to discovery devices and pre-trial conferences. In addition, the rules and codes permit liberal amendment and supplementation of pleadings.

The Field Code (q.v.) of New York was the first major state effort to simplify pleading requirements. This was followed by similar state civil procedure codes, and by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure at the federal level.

Under rules of civil procedure the pleadings consist of a complaint, an answer, a reply to a counterclaim, an answer to a cross-claim, a third party complaint, and a third party answer. Fed.R.Civ.P. 7(a).

For amendment of pleadings, see Amendment. For judgment on pleadings, see Judgment. See also Affirmative defense; Alternative pleading; Defective pleading; Responsive pleading; Sham (Sham pleading); Supplemental pleading; Variance.

Affirmative pleadings. See Affirmative defense.

Common law pleading. The system of rules and principles, established in the common law, according to which the pleadings or responsive allegations of litigating parties were framed with a view to preserve technical propriety and to produce a proper issue.

The process performed by the parties to a suit or action, in alternately presenting written statements of their contention, each responsive to that which precedes, and each serving to narrow the field of controversy, until there evolves a single point, affirmed on one side and denied on the other, called the "issue," upon which they then go to trial.

The individual allegations of the respective parties to an action at common law proceeded from them alternately in the order and under the following distinctive names: The plaintiff's declaration, the defendant's plea, the plaintiff's replication, the defendant's rejoinder, the plaintiff's surrejoinder, the defendant's rebutter, the plaintiff's surrebutler; after which they have no distinctive names.

Pleading Fifth Amendment. See Self-incrimination.

Plead over. To pass over, or omit to notice, a material allegation in the last pleading of the opposite party; to pass by a defect in the pleading of the other party without taking advantage of it. In another sense, to plead the general issue, after one has interposed a demurrer or special plea which has been dismissed by a plaintiff's surrejoinder, rebutter, plea, or rejoinder.

Much of the law of pledges has been replaced by the provisions for secured transactions in Article 9 of the U.C.C.

See also Bailment; Collateral; Hypothecate; Pawn; Secured transaction; Security. Compare Assignment.

Pledgery. Suretyship, or an undertaking or answering for another.

Pledges. In common law pleading, those persons who became sureties for the prosecution of the suit. Their names were anciently appended at the foot of the declaration. In time it became purely a formal matter, because the plaintiff was no longer liable to be amerced for a false claim, and the fictitious persons John Doe and Richard Roe became the universal pledged, or they might be omitted altogether; or inserted at any time before judgment; they are now omitted.

Pledgor /plëjör/. The party delivering goods in pledge; the party pledging.

Plegii de retorno habendo /plëjiyay diy rtôrñow hsbéndon/. In common law, pledges to return the subject of distress, should the right be determined against the party bringing the action of replevin.

Plegis acquietandis /plëjiyos skwàyatándas/. A writ that anciently lay for a surety against him for whom he was surety, if he paid not the money at the day.

Pleito /pléytow/. In Spanish law, the pleadings in a cause.

Plena atas /pliynä iytäzs/. Lat. In old English law, full age.

Plena et celeris justitia fiat partibus /pliynä èt sélaras jástish(iy)a fátay pártaños/. Let full and speedy justice be done to the parties.

Plena forisfactura /pliynä fôrasfæktýyrä/. A forfeiture of all that one possesses.

Plena probatio /pliynä prowbéysh(iy)ow/. In the civil law, a term used to signify full proof (that is, proof by two witnesses), in contradistinction to semi-plena probatio, which is only a presumption.

Plenarity /pliynartiy/plén/. In old English law, fullness; a state of being full. A term applied to a benefice when full, or possessed by an incumbent. The opposite state to a vacation, or vacancy.

Plenary. Full, entire, complete, absolute, perfect, unqualified. Mashunkashe v. Mashunkashey, 191 Okl. 501, 134 P.2d 976, 979.

Plenary action. A complete and formal hearing or trial on the merits as distinguished from a summary hearing which is commonly less strict and more informal. May v. Henderson, 268 U.S. 111, 45 S.Ct. 456, 69 L.Ed. 870.

Plenary confession. A full and complete confession. An admission or confession, whether in civil or criminal law, is said to be “plenary” when it is, if believed, conclusive against the person making it.

Plenary jurisdiction. Full and complete jurisdiction or power of a court over the subject matter as well as the parties to a controversy. See also Jurisdiction.

Plenary powers. Authority and power as broad as is required in a given case.

Plenary proceedings. See Plenary action.

Plenary session. A meeting of all members of a deliberative body, as distinguished from a meeting of a committee of the same body.

Plenary suit. One that proceeds on formal pleadings.

Central Republic Bank and Trust Co. v. Caldwell, C.C.A. Mo., 58 F.2d 721. See also Plenary action.

Plen /pliyniy/. Lat. Completely; fully; sufficiently.

Plene administravit /pliyniy adnistrévyat/. A plea by an executor or administrator that he has fully administered all the assets that have come to his hands, and that no assets remain out of which the plaintiff’s claim could be satisfied.

Plene administravit præter /pliyniy adnistrévyat pryta/. A plea by an executor or administrator that he has “fully administered” all the assets that have come to his hands, “except” assets to a certain amount, which are not sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff.

Plene computavit /pliyniy kóméstévyat/. He has fully accounted. A plea in an action of account render, alleging that the defendant has fully accounted.

Plenipotentiary /plënapoténsh(y)ari/. One who has full power to do a thing; a person fully commissioned to act for another. A term applied in international law to ministers and envoys of the second rank of public ministers.

Plenum dominium /pliynom daminiyam/. Lat. In the civil law, full ownership; the property in a thing united with the usufruct.

Plein /plévan/. A warrant, or assurance.

Plight. In old English law, an estate, with the habit and quality of the land; extending to a rent charge and to a possibility of dower.

Plot. See Plat or plot.

Plottage. A term used in appraising land values and particularly in eminent domain proceedings to designate the additional value given to city lots by the fact that they are contiguous, which enables the owner to utilize them as large blocks of land. Plottage is a recognized concept in the field of eminent domain, referring to an added increment of value which may accrue to two or more vacant and unimproved contiguous parcels of land held in one ownership because of their potentially enhanced marketability by reason of their greater use adaptability as a single unit; simplistically stated, an assemblage of vacant and unimproved contiguous parcels held in one ownership may have a greater value as a whole than the sum of their values as separate constituent parcels and, hence, plottage value may be considered in determining fair market value. State ex rel. State Highway Commission of Missouri v. Armacost Motors, Inc., Mo.App., 552 S.W.2d 360, 364.

Plow back. To retain earnings for continued investment in the business. To reinvest the earnings and profits into the business instead of paying them out as dividends or withdrawals by partners or proprietor.

Plunder, v. To pillage or loot. To take property from persons or places by open force, and this may be in course of a war, or by unlawful hostility, as in the case of pirates or robbers. The term is also used to express the idea of taking property from a person or place, without just right, but not expressing the nature or quality of the wrong done.

Plunder, n. Personal property belonging to an enemy, captured and appropriated on land; booty. Also the act of seizing such property. See Booty; Prize.

Plunderage. In maritime law, the embezzlement of goods on board of a ship is so called.

Plural. Containing more than one; consisting of or designating two or more.

Plurality /pluréldy/. The excess of the votes cast for one candidate over those cast for any other. Where there are only two candidates, he who receives the greater number of the votes cast is said to have a majority; when there are more than two competitors for the same office, the person who receives the greatest number of votes has a plurality, but he has not a majority unless he receives a greater number of votes than those cast for all his competitors combined, or, in other words, more than one-half of the total number of votes cast.

A plurality normally refers to the state of being numerous; a large number or quantity; while it may perhaps mean two, it embraces any number in excess of two. Technograph Printed Circuits, Limited v. Bendix Aviation Corp., D.C.Md., 218 F.Supp. 1, 52.

An opinion of an appellate court in which more justices join than in any concurring opinion (though not a majority of the court) is a plurality opinion as distinguished from a majority opinion in which a larger number of the justices on the panel join than not.

Plural marriage. See Marriage; Polygamy.

Pluries fi. fa. /pl(y)iriyiyz fá(aray) fé(y)shiyas/. A writ issued where other commands of the court have proved ineffectual. Process that issues in the third instance, after the first and the alias have been ineffectual.

Pluries writs of execution. Third and subsequent writs of execution issued to enforce a judgment that was not satisfied by the sheriff acting under the original and alias writs of execution.

Plus exempla quam peccata nocent /plås ægzêmplå kwaːm pokêytō nōsnt/. Examples hurt more than crimes.

Plus peccat author quam actor /plås pέkst ətʰɔr kwaːm ãktɔr/* /plås pέkst ãktɔr*/. The originator or instigator of a crime is a worse offender than the actual perpetrator of it. Applied to the crime of subornation of perjury.

Plus petitio /plås pέtjio/. In Roman law, a phrase denoting the offense of claiming more than was just in one's pleadings. Prior to Justinian's time, this offense was in general fatal to the action; but, under the legislation of the emperors Zeno and Justinian, the offense (if re, loco, or causa) exposed the party to the payment of three times the damage, if any, sustained by the other side, and (if tempore) obliged him to postpone his action for double the time, and to pay the costs of his first action before commencing a second.

Plus valet consuetudo quam concessio /plås vélst kōnswstiyôwdow kwaːm kànšēsh(i)yôw/. Custom is more powerful than grant.

Plus valet unus oculatus testis quam auriti decem /plås vélst yùwnas ôkɔlətəs tɛstəs kwaːm ãrɔtəy dɛsəm/. One eye-witness is of more weight than ten ear-witnesses [or those who speak from hearsay].

Plus vident oculi quam occlus /plås vídənt ôkɔləy kwaːm ôkɔləs/. Several eyes see more than one.

P.M. An abbreviation for "postmaster;" also for "post-meridiem," afternoon.

P.O. An abbreviation of "public officer;" also of "post-office."

Poach. To steal or destroy game on another's land. See Poaching.

Poaching. In criminal law, the unlawful entry upon land for the purpose of taking or destroying fish or game. The illegal taking or killing of fish or game.

Pocket veto. The act of the President in retaining a legislative bill without approving or rejecting it at the end of the legislative session and, in effect, vetoing it by such inactivity. See U.S. Constitution, Art. I, Sec. 7, Cl. 2.

P.O.D. account. An account payable on request to one person during lifetime and on his death to one or more P.O.D. payees, or to one or more persons on their lifetimes and on the death of all of them or one or more P.O.D. payees. Uniform Probate Code, § 6-101(11).
Poison. The word "point" as used in home mortgage finance industry denotes a fee or charge equal to one percent of principal amount of loan which is collected by lender at time the loan is made. It is a fee or charge which is collected only once, at inception of loan, and is in addition to constant long-term stated interest rate on face of loan. B. F. Saul Co. v. West End Park North, Inc., 250 Md. 707, 246 A.2d 591, 595, 597.

Point reserved. When, in the progress of the trial of a cause, an important or difficult point of law is presented to the court, and the court is not certain of the decision that should be given, it may reserve the point, that is, decide it provisionally as it is asked by the party, but reserve its more mature consideration for the hearing on a motion for a new trial, when, if it shall appear that the first ruling was wrong, the verdict will be set aside. The point thus treated is technically called a "point reserved."

Points. See Point.

Points of law. Those distinct propositions of law on which each side relies in a lawsuit, and on which the court bases its decision (opinion) on.

Point system. The "point system", with respect to suspension of license of operator of a motor vehicle, automatically fixes penalty points following conviction of moving traffic violations and provides for mandatory suspension of the driver's license of a person who has accumulated a statutorily prescribed number of points within a year involved. Sturgill v. Beard, Ky., 303 S.W.2d 908, 909.

Poison. A substance having an inherent deleterious property which renders it, when taken into the system, capable of destroying life. A substance which, on being applied to the human body, internally or externally, is capable of destroying the action of the vital functions, or of placing the solids and fluids in such a state as to prevent the continuance of life.

Poisonous tree doctrine. Doctrine refers to an illegal arrest or search which leads officers to evidence seized in a proper manner that may be inadmissible because of the taint of the original illegality. Com. v. Spofford, 343 Mass. 703, 180 N.E.2d 673. Sometimes also referred to as "fruit of poisonous tree" doctrine (q.v.).

Poison pill. A defensive tactic used by a company that is a target of an unwanted takeover to make its shares or financial condition less attractive to an acquirer. For instance, a firm may issue a new series of preferred shares that give shareholders the right to compel their redemption at a premium price after a takeover. See also Lockup; Porcupine provisions; White knight.

Polar star rule. The rule that the intent of the maker of a written document, as gathered from its four corners, shall prevail unless such intent conflicts with some statutory provision within the jurisdiction, or is against public policy. Hanks v. McDanell, 307 Ky. 243, 210 S.W.2d 784, 786.

Pole. A measure of length, equal to five yards and a half.

Police. Branch of the government which is charged with the preservation of public order and tranquility, the promotion of the public health, safety, and morals, and the prevention, detection, and punishment of crimes. See also Internal police; Peace (Peace officers); Sheriff.

Police court. The name of an inferior court in several of the states, which has jurisdiction over minor offenses and city ordinances, concurrent jurisdiction in certain matters with justices of the peace, and the powers of a committing magistrate in respect to more serious crimes, and, in some states, a limited jurisdiction for the trial of civil causes.

Police jury. In Louisiana, the governing bodies of the parishes, which are political subdivisions of the state, comparable to counties in other states. National Liberty Ins. Co. of America v. Police Jury of Natchitoches Parish, C.C.A.La., 96 F.2d 261, 262.

Police justice. A magistrate charged exclusively with the duties incident to the common-law office of a conservator or justice of the peace; the prefix "police" serving merely to distinguish them from justices having also civil jurisdiction.

Police magistrate. An inferior judicial officer having jurisdiction of minor criminal offenses, breaches of police regulations, and the like; so called to distinguish them from magistrates who have jurisdiction in civil cases also, as justices of the peace.

Police officer. One of the staff of persons employed in cities and towns to enforce the municipal laws and ordinances for preserving the peace, safety, and good order of the community. Also called "policeman" or "policewoman"; "patrolman" or "patrolwoman", or "peace officer". See also Peace (Peace officers).

Police power. An authority conferred by the American constitutional system in the Tenth Amendment, U.S. Const., upon the individual states, and, in turn, delegated to local governments, through which they are enabled to establish a special department of police; adopt such laws and regulations as tend to prevent the commission of fraud and crime, and secure generally the comfort, safety, morals, health, and prosperity of its citizens by preserving the public order, preventing a conflict of rights in the common intercourse of the citizens, and insuring to each an uninterrupted enjoyment of all the privileges conferred upon him or her by the general laws.

The power of the State to place restraints on the personal freedom and property rights of persons for the protection of the public safety, health, and morals or the promotion of the public convenience and general prosperity. The police power is subject to limitations of the federal and State constitutions, and especially to the requirement of due process. Police power is the exercise of the sovereign right of a government to promote order, safety, security, health, morals and general welfare within constitutional limits and is an essential attribute Policy. The general principles by which a government is guided in its management of public affairs, or the legislature in its measures.

A general term used to describe all contracts of insurance. See Policy of insurance.

This term, as applied to a law, ordinance, or rule of law, denotes its general purpose or tendency considered as directed to the welfare or prosperity of the state or community.

A species of "lottery" whereby the chance is determained by numbers; "numbers game" also being a lot-141, 142. Policy is a lottery or game of chance where bettors select numbers to bet on and place the bet with a policy writer. State v. Harris, Mo.App., 325 S.W.2d 352, 354. See Lottery.

Public policy. That principle of the law which holds that no subject can lawfully do that which has a tendency to be injurious to the public or against the public good. The principles under which the freedom of contract or private dealings is restricted by law for the good of the community. The term "policy," as applied to a statute, regulation, rule of law, course of action, or the like, refers to its probable effect, tendency, or object, considered with reference to the social or political well-being of the state. Thus, certain classes of acts are said to be "against public policy," when the law refuses to enforce or recognize them, on the ground that they have a mischievous tendency, so as to be injurious to the interests of the state, apart from illegality or immorality.

Policyholder. The person who owns the policy of insurance whether he is the insured or not. In most states, any person with an insurable interest may be a policy-holder.

Policy of insurance. An instrument in writing, by which one party (insurer), in consideration of a premium, engages to indemnify another (insured) against a contingent loss, by making him a payment in compensation, whenever the event shall happen by which the loss is to accrue. Contract whereby insurer, in return for premiums, engages, on happening of designated event, to pay certain sum as provided. In re O'Neill's Estate, 143 Misc. 69, 255 N.Y.S. 767, 771. The evidence delivered to the insured of the contract of the insurer, and ordinarily, of itself, constitutes complete evidence of the Neb., 414 F.2d 928, 932.

The written instrument in which a contract of insurance is set forth.

See also Face of policy; Floater policy; Homeowners policy; Master policy.

Assessable policy. A policy under which a policyholder may be held liable for losses of the insurance company beyond its reserves.

Blanket policy. A policy of fire insurance which contemplates that the risk is shifting, fluctuating, or varying, and is applied to a class of property rather than to any particular article or thing.

The term "specific" as applied in insurance phraseology is frequently used in contrast with "blanket insurance" and denotes coverage of a particular piece of property or property at a specific location, as contrasted with blanket insurance which covers the same and other property in several different locations.

Class of life insurance policies. Those policies issued in the same calendar year, upon the lives of persons of the same age, and on the same plan of insurance.

Endowment policy. A policy which agrees to pay to the insured, if living at the expiration of a certain period, a specified amount of money, and in the event of his death in the interim, agrees to pay the face amount of the policy to his designated beneficiary. Silen v. Silen, 44
Wash.2d 884, 271 P.2d 674, 676.

Extended policy. A policy which provides protection beyond the time when premiums are no longer paid.

Floater policy. A policy of fire insurance not applicable to any specific described goods, but to any and all goods which may at the time of the fire be in a certain building.

Incontestable policy. A policy which contains a provision to the effect that the company after the policy has been in force cannot contest, challenge or cancel the policy on the basis of statements made in the application. The period of contestability may be one, two or three years.

Interest policy. One where the assured has a real, substantial, and assignable interest in the thing insured;
as opposed to a wager policy.

Master policy. In group life, medical, etc. insurance, the single policy under which the participants are covered.
The individuals covered by the master policy receive a certificate indicating their participation.

Mixed policy. A policy of marine insurance in which not only the time is specified for which the risk is limited, but the voyage also is described by its local termini; as opposed to policies of insurance for a particular voyage, without any limits as to time, and also to purely time policies, in which there is no designation of local termini at all.

Open policy. One in which the value of the subject insured is not fixed or agreed upon in the policy as between the assured and the underwriter, but is left to be estimated in case of loss. The term is opposed to "valued policy," in which the value of the subject insured is fixed for the purpose of the insurance, and expressed on the face of the policy. But this term is also sometimes used to describe a policy in which an aggregate amount is expressed in the body of the policy, and the specific amounts and subjects are to be indorsed from time to time.

Assessable policy. A policy under which a policyholder may be held liable for losses of the insurance company
beyond its reserves.
POLICY OF INSURANCE

Paid-up policy. In life insurance, a policy on which no further payments are to be made in the way of annual premiums.

Participating policy. A policy commonly found in mutual insurance companies and in some stock companies in which the insured participates in the profits by receiving dividends or rebates from future premiums.

Policy loan. An advancement on life policy without a personal obligation on the part of the policyholder as to repayment. Board of Assessors of the Parish of Orleans v. New York Life Ins. Co., 216 U.S. 517, 30 S.Ct. 385, 54 L.Ed. 597. A loan made by an insurance company which takes the policy's cash reserve as security for the loan.

Policy reserves. Funds held by insurance company specifically to meet its policy obligations.

Term policy. In life insurance, a policy which gives protection for a specified period of time but no cash or reserve value is created in the policy. See Insurance.

Time policy. In fire insurance, one made for a defined and limited time, as, one year. In marine insurance, one made for a particular period of time, irrespective of the voyage or voyages upon which the vessel may be engaged during that period.

Valued policy. One in which the value of the thing insured, and also the amount to be paid thereon in the event of loss, is settled by agreement between the parties and inserted in the policy.

Voyage policy. A policy of marine insurance effected for a particular voyage or voyages of the vessel, and not otherwise limited as to time.

Wager policy. An insurance upon a subject-matter in which the party assured has no real, valuable, or insurable interest. A mere wager policy is that in which the party assured has no interest in the thing assured, and could sustain no possible loss by the event insured against, if he had not made such wager. Such policies are generally illegal, or not otherwise written, because the insured does not have an insurable interest.

Policy value. The amount of cash available to the policyholder on the surrender or cancellation of the insurance policy.

Policy year. In insurance, the year which commences with the date of the commencement or anniversary of the policy.

Politics are to be adapted to the laws, and not the laws to politics.

Political. Pertaining or relating to the policy or the administration of government, state or national. Pertaining to, or incidental to, the exercise of the functions vested in those charged with the conduct of government; relating to the management of affairs of state, as political theories; or of pertaining to exercise of rights and privileges or the influence by which individuals of a state seek to determine or control its public policy; having to do with organization or action of individuals, parties, or interests that seek to control appointment or action of those who manage affairs of a state. State ex rel. Maley v. Civic Action Committee, 238 Iowa 851, 28 N.W.2d 467, 470.

Political action committees. See PAC.

Political corporation. A public or municipal corporation; one created for political purposes, and having for its object the administration of governmental powers of a subordinate or local nature.

Political crime. In general, any crime directly against the government; e.g. treason; sedition. It includes any violent political disturbance without reference to a specific crime. See also Political offenses.

Political law. That branch of jurisprudence which treats of the science of politics, or the organization and administration of government. More commonly called "Political science."

Political liberty. See Liberty.

Political offenses. As a designation of a class of crimes usually excepted from extradition treaties, this term denotes crimes which are incidental to and form a part of political disturbances; but it might also be understood to include offenses consisting in an attack upon the political order of things established in the country where committed, and even to include offenses committed to obtain any political object. Under extradition treaties an offense committed in the course of an incidental to a violent political disturbance, such as war, revolution and rebellion; an offense is not of a political character simply because it was politically motivated. Escobedo v. U.S., C.A.Fila., 623 F.2d 1098, 1104. See also Political crime.

Political office. See Office.

Political party. An association of individuals whose primary purposes are to promote or accomplish elections or appointments to public offices, positions, or jobs. State ex rel. Corrigan v. Cleveland-Cliffs Iron Co., 169 Ohio St. 42, 157 N.E.2d 331, 333. A committee, association, or organization which accepts contributions or makes expenditures for the purpose of influencing or attempting to influence the election of presidential or vice presidential electors or of any individual whose name is presented for election to any federal, state, or local elective public office, whether or not such individual is elected. Cal.Rev. & Tax Code § 24434(b)(1)(C).

Political questions. Questions of which courts will refuse to take cognizance, or to decide, on account of their purely political character, or because their determination would involve an encroachment upon the executive or legislative powers.

"Political question doctrine" holds that certain issues should not be decided by courts because their resolution is committed to another branch of government and/or because those issues are not capable, for one reason or

A matter of dispute which can be handled more appropriately by another branch of the government is not a "justiciable" matter for the courts. However, a state apportionment statute is not such a political question as to render it nonjusticiable. Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 208-210, 82 S.Ct. 705-706, 7 L.Ed.2d 663.

Compar Justiciable controversy.

Political rights. Those which may be exercised in the formation or administration of the government. Rights of citizens established or recognized by constitutions which give them the power to participate directly or indirectly in the establishment or administration of government.

Political subdivision. A division of the state made by proper authorities thereof, acting within their constitutional powers, for purpose of carrying out a portion of those functions of state which by long usage and inherent necessities of government have always been regarded as public. State ex rel. Maisano v. Mitchell, 155 Conn. 256, 231 A.2d 539, 542.

Political trial. Term loosely applied to trials in which the parties represent fundamentally different political convictions and in which the parties or one of them attempts to litigate their political beliefs.

Politics. The science of government; the art or practice of administering public affairs.

Polity. The form of government; civil constitution.

Polity approach. The "polity approach" under which a civil court may properly resolve church property disputes requires court to determine whether church organization is congregational or hierarchical and then resolve dispute in accordance with decision by proper church-governing body. Bernson v. Koch, 35 Colo.App. 257, 534 P.2d 334, 337.

Poll, n. To single out, one by one, of a number of persons. To examine each juror separately, after a verdict has been given, as to his concurrence in the verdict. See Polling the jury.

Poll, n. A head; an individual person; a register of persons. In the law of elections, a list or register of heads or individuals who may vote in an election; the aggregate of those who actually cast their votes at the election, excluding those who stay away.

Polling the jury. A practice whereby the jurors are asked individually whether they assented, and still assent, to the verdict. State v. Linder, 276 S.C. 304, 278 S.E.2d 335, 337. To poll a jury is to call the names of the persons who compose a jury and require each juror to declare what his verdict is before it is recorded. This may be accomplished by questioning them individually or by ascertaining fact of unanimous concurrence by general question, and once concurrence has been determined, the polling is at an end. Fortenberry v. New York Life Ins. Co., C.A.Tenn., 459 F.2d 114, 115.

If upon the poll there is not unanimous concurrence, the jury may be directed to retire for further deliberations or may be discharged. Fed.R.Crim.P. 31.

Polls. The place where electors cast in their votes.

Poll-tax. A capitation tax; a tax of a specific sum levied upon each person within the jurisdiction of the taxing power and within a certain class (as, all males of a certain age, etc.) without reference to his property or lack of it. A tax upon the privilege of being; it is a sum levied upon persons without regard to property, occupation, income or ability to pay. Tiefel v. Gilligan, Ohio Com.Pl., 41 Ohio Misc. 76, 322 N.E.2d 916, 920.

Poll taxes as a prerequisite to voting in federal elections are prohibited by the 24th Amendment and as to state elections such were held to be unconstitutional in Harper v. Virginia Bd. of Elections, 383 U.S. 663, 86 S.Ct. 1079, 16 L.Ed.2d 169.

Po. lo. suo. An old abbreviation for the words "ponit loco suo" (puts in his place), used in warrants of attorney.

Pollute. To corrupt or defile. The contamination of soil, air and water by noxious substances and noises. See also Pollution.

Pollution. Contamination of the environment by a variety of sources including but not limited to hazardous substances, organic wastes and toxic chemicals. Pollution is legally controlled and enforced through various federal and state laws and agencies, including common law nuisance laws, e.g., Boomer v. Atlantic Cement Co., 26 N.Y.2d 219, 309 N.Y.S.2d 312, 257 N.E.2d 870. Examples of federal laws are the Clean Water Act, 33 U.S.C.A. § 1251 et seq. and the Clean Air Act, 31 U.S.C.A. § 7401 et seq. See also Environmental Protection Agency; Hazardous substance; Superfund; Toxic waste.

Polyandry /pɔliˈɛndri/. The civil condition of having more husbands than one to the same woman; a social order permitting plurality of husbands.

Polygamy est plurium simul virorum uxorumve conubium /pɔlɪˈɡəmi/ èst pl(y)ür(y)ús máy jám varórm əkṣərəmviy kan(y)wɜbiyam/. Polygamy is the marriage with many husbands or wives at one time.

Polygamy /pɔlɪˈɡəmi/. The offense of having several wives or husbands at the same time, or more than one wife or husband at the same time. Bigamy literally means a second marriage distinguished from a third or other; while polygamy means many marriages,—implies more than two. Polygamy is a crime in all states.

A person is guilty of polygamy, a felony of the third degree, if he marries or cohabits with more than one spouse at a time in purported exercise of the right of plural marriage. The offense is a continuing one until all cohabitation and claim of marriage with more than one spouse terminates. This section does not apply to parties to a polygamous marriage, lawful in the country of which they are residents or nationals, while they are in transit through or temporarily visiting this State. Model Penal Code, § 230.1.
Polygarchy /póлагъаркий/. A term sometimes used to denote a government of many or several; a government where the sovereignty is shared by several persons; a collegiate or divided executive.

Polygraph. Also known as a lie detector, it is an electro-mechanical instrument used to determine whether an examinee is truthfully answering questions. It simultaneously measures and records certain physiological changes in the human body which it is believed are involuntarily caused by an examinee's conscious attempt to deceive an interrogator. U.S. v. DeBetham, D.C. Cal., 348 F. Supp. 1377, 1384. Though historically inadmissible on grounds of unreliability, polygraph evidence is increasingly being admitted if, for example, the parties stipulate in advance to its admission or it is being offered to impeach or corroborate witness testimony. U.S. v. Piccinonna, C.A. Fla., 885 F.2d 1529.

With certain exceptions, employers engaged in commerce are statutorily prohibited from requiring employees or prospective employees to submit to a polygraph test. Employee Polygraph Protection Act of 1988, 29 U.S.C.A. § 2001 et seq.

See also Lie detector.

Polyopsony. The condition of a market characterized by the fewness of buyers. The fewness has an effect on the price of the materials or products.

Polyopoly. A market condition characterized by the fewness of sellers where this has a direct effect on prices.

Pond. A body of stagnant water without an outlet, larger than a puddle and smaller than a lake; or a like body of water with a small outlet.

Great ponds. In Maine and Massachusetts, natural ponds having a superficial area of more than ten acres, and not appropriated by the proprietors to their private use prior to a certain date.

Private pond. A body of water wholly on the lands of a single owner, or of a single group of joint owners or tenants in common, which did not have any such connection with any public waters that fish could pass from one to the other. At common law, if pond was so connected with public waters that at time of high water, fish could go in and out, it was not "private pond" from which defendants could seize fish whether fish might go out same day or next season.

Public pond. In New England, a great pond; a pond covering a superficial area of more than ten acres.

Ponderantur testes, non numerantur /póndarántar testiyz nón n(y)úwmorántar/. Witnesses are weighed, not counted.

Pondus /póndas/. In old English law, poundage; i.e., a duty paid to the crown according to the weight of merchandise.

Pondus regis /póndas riyjas/. The king's weight; the standard weight appointed by the king.

Pone /pówniy/. In old English practice, an original writ formerly used for the purpose of removing suits from the court-baron or county court into the superior courts of common law. It was also the proper writ to remove all suits which were before the sheriff by writ of justices. But this writ is now in disuse, the writ of certiorari being the ordinary process by which at the present day a cause is removed from a county court into any superior court.

Ponendis in assisis /pónéndás in àsáyzas/. An old writ directing a sheriff to impanel a jury for an assize or real action.

Ponendum in ballium /pónéndám in bélīyəm/. An old writ commanding that a prisoner be bailed in cases bailable.

Ponendum sigillum ad exceptionem /pónéndám səjiləm əd əksəphiyəwnəm/. A writ by which justices were required to put their seals to exceptions exhibited by a defendant against a plaintiff's evidence, verdict, or other proceedings, before them.

Pone per vadium /póni nyə pər vədɪyəm/.

In English practice, an obsolete writ to the sheriff to summon the defendant to appear and answer the plaintiff's suit, on his putting in sureties to prosecute. It was so called from the words of the writ, "pone per vadium et salvo plegios," "put by gage and safe pledges, A. B., the defendant."

Ponit se super patriam /póniıt sɪ yə s(y)wəpə pətrɪəm/. Lat. He puts himself upon the country. The defendant's plea of not guilty in a criminal action was recorded, in old English practice, in these words, or in the abbreviated form "po. se."

Pool. A combination of persons or corporations engaged in the same business, or for the purpose of engaging in a particular business or commercial or speculative venture, where all contribute to a common fund, or place their holdings of a given stock or other security in the hands and control of a managing member or committee, with the object of eliminating competition as between the several members of the pool, or of establishing a monopoly or controlling prices or rates by the weight and power of their combined capital, or of raising or depressing prices on the stock market, or simply with a view to the successful conduct of an enterprise too great for the capital of any member individually, and on an agreement for the division of profits or losses among the members, either equally or pro rata. Also, a similar combination not embracing the idea of a pooled or contributed capital, but simply the elimination of destructive competition between the members by an agreement to share or divide the profits of a given business or venture, as, for example, a contract between two or more competing railroads to abstain from "rate wars" and (usually) to maintain fixed rates, and to divide their earnings from the transportation of freight in fixed proportions. Such type pooling arrangements are illegal under the Sherman Antitrust Act. See also Cartel; Trust.
In various methods of gambling, a “pool” is a sum of money made up of the stakes contributed by various persons, the whole of which is then wagered as a stake on the event of a race, game, or other contest, and the winnings (if any) are divided among the contributors to the pool pro rata. Or it is a sum similarly made up by the contributions of several persons, each of whom then makes his guess or prediction as to the event of a future contest or hazard, the successful bettor taking the entire pool. Such pools are distinct from the practice of bookmaking. U. S. v. Berent, C.A. Nev., 523 F.2d 1360, 1361.

A body of standing water, without a current or issue, accumulated in a natural basin or depression in the earth, and not artificially formed. See Pond.

Pooling agreement. A contractual arrangement among shareholders relating to the voting of their shares. So long as such agreement is limited to voting as shareholders, it is enforceable.

Pooling of interests. A method of accounting for mergers in which the acquired company’s assets are recorded on the acquiring company’s books at their cost when originally acquired. No goodwill account is created under the pooling method.

Poor debtors’ oath. See Pauper’s oath; Poverty affidavit.

Pope. The bishop of Rome, and supreme head of the Roman Catholic Church.

Popular sense. In reference to the construction of a statute, this term means that sense which people conversant with the subject-matter with which the statute is dealing would attribute to it.

Populiscitum /pōpy̞lasáytam/. Lat. In Roman law, a law enacted by the people; a law passed by an assembly of the Roman people, in the comitia centuriata, on the motion of a senator; differing from a plebiscitum, in that the latter was always proposed by one of the tribunes.

Populus /pōp(y)las/. Lat. In Roman law, the people; the whole body of Roman citizens, including as well the patricians as the plebeians.

Porción /pōr̲i̞iy̞ōn̲/. In Spanish law, a part or portion; a lot or parcel; an allotment of land.

Porcupine provisions. Defensive provisions in articles of incorporation or bylaws designed to make unwanted takeover attempts impossible or impractical without the consent of the target’s management. See also Lockup; Poison pill; White knight.

Pornographic. That which is of or pertaining to obscene literature; obscene; licentious. Material is pornographic or obscene if the average person, applying contemporary community standards, would find that the work taken as a whole appeals to the prurient interest and if it depicts in a patently offensive way sexual conduct and if the work taken as a whole lacks serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value. Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 24-25, 93 S.Ct. 2607, 2615, 37 L.Ed.2d 419. See also Dominant theme; Obscene; Pandering (Pandering of obscenity); Prurient interest.

Pornography. See Pornographic.

Port. A place for the loading and unloading of the cargoes of vessels, and the collection of duties or customs upon imports and exports. A place, on the seacoast, great lakes, or on a river, where ships stop for the purpose of loading and unloading cargo, or for purpose of taking on or letting off passengers, from whence they depart, and where they finish their voyage. A port is a place intended for loading or unloading goods; hence includes the natural shelter surrounding water, as also sheltered water produced by artificial jetties, etc. The Baldhill, C.C.A. N.Y., 42 F.2d 123, 125.

Foreign port. One exclusively within the jurisdiction of a foreign nation, hence one without the United States. But the term is also applied to a port in any state other than the state where the vessel belongs or her owner resides. Port other than home port.

Free port. See that title.

Home port. The port at which a vessel is registered or enrolled or where the owner resides.

Port charges, dues, or tolls. Pecuniary exactions upon vessels availing themselves of the commercial conveniences and privileges of a port. Christianssand Shipping Co. v. Marshall, D.C. Pa., 22 F.2d 192, 194.

Port of call. Port at which ships usually stop on a route or voyage.

Port of delivery. The port which is to be the terminus of any particular voyage, and where the vessel is to unload or deliver her cargo, as distinguished from any port at which she may touch, during the voyage, for other purposes.

Port of departure. The port from which vessel clears and departs upon start of voyage. As used in the United States statutes requiring a ship to procure a bill of health from the consular officer at the place of departure, is not the last port at which the ship stops while bound for the United States, but the port from which she cleared.

Port of destination. The port at which a voyage is to end. In maritime law and marine insurance, the term includes both ports which constitute the termini of the voyage; the home port and the foreign port to which the vessel is consigned as well as any usual stopping places for the receipt or discharge of cargo.

Port of discharge. In a policy of marine insurance, means the place where the substantial part of the cargo is discharged, although there is an intent to complete the discharge at another basin.

Port of entry. One of the ports designated by law, at which a custom-house or revenue office is established for the execution of the laws imposing duties on vessels and importations of goods. Port where immigrants arrive. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1221.

Port-reeve, or port-warden. An officer maintained in some ports to oversee the administration of the local regulations; a sort of harbor-master.
Port-risk. In marine insurance, a risk upon a vessel while lying in port, and before she has taken her departure upon another voyage. See also Port risk insurance.

Port toll. The toll paid for bringing goods into a port.

Portal-to-Portal Act. Federal statute regulating pay for non-productive time required of employee to reach place of employment and to return in some instances.

Port authority. Governmental agency authorized by a state or the federal government to regulate and plan traffic through a port, and also commonly charged with responsibility of encouraging or securing businesses to locate on land or areas served by port. Sometimes such authorities also have responsibility over establishment and maintenance of airports, bridges, tollways, and surface transportation in metropolitan area of port; e.g., New York Port Authority, which is operated jointly by New York and New Jersey under an interstate compact.

Portfolio. In investments, the collective term for all the securities (which may consist of various types) held by one person or institution.

Portfolio income. Income from interest, dividends, rentals, royalties, capital gains, or other investment sources. Portfolio income is not considered passive income; Passive loss.

Portio legitima /pórsh(i)yow lajídəma/. Lat. In the civil law, the birthright portion; that portion of an inheritance to which a given heir is entitled, and of which he cannot be deprived by the will of the decedent, without special cause, by virtue merely of his relationship to the testator.

Portion. An allotted part; a share, a parcel; a division in a distribution; a share of an estate or the like, received by gift or inheritance. Lecompte v. Davis' Ex'r, 285 Ky. 433, 148 S.W.2d 292, 295. See Per capita; Per stirpes.

Portion disponible. Fr. In French law, that part of a man's estate which he may bequeath to other persons than his natural heirs. A parent leaving one legitimate child may dispose of one-half only of his property; one leaving two, one-third only; and one leaving three or more, one-fourth only; and it matters not whether the disposition is inter vivos or by will.

Portoria /portóriyə/. In the civil law, duties paid in ports on merchandise. Taxes levied in old times at city gates. Tolls for passing over bridges.

Port risk insurance. In contradistinction to voyage or time insurance, means insurance upon a vessel while lying in port, and before she has taken her departure on another voyage. Bristol S.S. Corp. v. London Assur., D.C.N.Y., 404 F.Supp. 749, 752.

Portsale. In Old English law, an auction; a public sale of goods to the highest bidder; also a sale of fish as soon as it is brought into the haven.

Portus est locus in quo exportantur eurimportantur merces / pórtæ st láowkæ in kwó èksportántær éd impórtántær mársïyz/. A port is a place where goods are exported or imported.

Position. Extent of person's investment in a particular security or market.

Positive. Laid down, enacted, or prescribed. Express or affirmative. As to positive Condition; Fraud; Proof; and Servitude, see those titles.

Positive evidence. Direct evidence. Eye witness testimony. Direct proof of the fact or point in issue; evidence which, if believed, establishes the truth or falsehood of a fact in issue, and does not arise from any presumption. It is distinguished from circumstantial evidence. See also Evidence.

Positive law. Law actually and specifically enacted or adopted by proper authority for the government of an organized jural society. See also Legislation.

Positivi juris /pózstáivvay júrəs/. Lat. Of positive law.

Posito uno oppositorum, negatur alterum /pazish(i)yow yúwnow apózstórm náqeytər oltərm/. One of two opposite positions being affirmed, the other is denied.

Posse /pósiy/. Lat. A possibility. A thing is said to be in posse when it may possibly be; in esse when it actually is. Group of people acting under authority of police or sheriff and engaged in searching for a criminal or in making an arrest. Same as Posse comitatus (q.v.).

Posse comitatus /pósiy kómtətətəs/. Lat. The power or force of the county. The entire population of a county above the age of fifteen, which a sheriff may summon to his assistance in certain cases, as to aid him in keeping the peace, in pursuing and arresting felons, etc. Williams v. State, 253 Ark. 973, 490 S.W.2d 117, 121.

Possess. To occupy in person; to have in one's actual and physical control; to have the exclusive detention and control of; to have and hold as property; to have a just right to; to be master of; to own or be entitled to.

Term "possess," under narcotic drug laws, means actual control, care and management of the drug. Collini v. State, Tex.Cr.App., 487 S.W.2d 132, 135. Defendant "possesses" controlled substance when defendant knows of substance's presence, substance is immediately accessible, and defendant exercises "dominion or control"
Possessio

Possessio fratris de feodo simplici facit sororem esse. This condition of fact is called "detention," and it forms the substance of possession in all its varieties.

Old English law. Possession; seisin. The detention of a corporeal thing by means of a physical act and mental intent, aided by some support of right.

General Classification

Pedis possessio /piydas pazésh(i)yow/. A foothold; an actual possession of real property, implying either actual occupancy or enclosure and use.

Possessio bona fide /pzésh(i)yow bównóðafyádyi/. Possession in good faith. Possessio mala fide, possession in bad faith. A possessor bona fide is one who believes that no other person has a better right to the possession than himself. A possessor mala fide is one who knows that he is not entitled to the possession.

Possessio bonorum /pzésh(i)yow bownóðróm/. In the civil law, the possession of goods. More commonly termed "bonorum possessio" (q.v.).

Possessio civilis /pzésh(i)yow sívalas/. In Roman law, a legal possession, i.e., a possessing accompanied with the intention to be or to thereby become owner; and, as so understood, it was distinguished from "possessio naturalis," otherwise called "nuda detentio," which was a possessing without any such intention. Possessio civilis was the basis of usucapio or of longi temporis possessio, and was usually (but not necessarily) adverse possession.

Possessio fratris /pzésh(i)yow frétrás/. The possession or seisin of a brother; that is, such possession of an estate by a brother as would entitle his sister of the whole blood to succeed him as heir, to the exclusion of a half-brother. Hence, derivatively, that doctrine of the older English law of descent which shut out the half-blood from the succession to estates; a doctrine which was abolished by the descent act, 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 106.

Possessio longi temporis /pzésh(i)yow lónjay témperas/. See Usucapio.

Possessio naturalis /pzésh(i)yow nátýyaréylos/. See Possessio civilis, above.

Possessio est quasi pedis positio /pzésh(i)yow ést kwéyssay piydas pazésh(i)yow/. Possession is, as it were, the position of the foot.

Possessio fratris de feodo simplici facit sororem esse haredem /pzésh(i)yow frétrás dyi fyúwdow símplasay féysat sorórem ésy harýdám/. The brother's possession of an estate in fee-simple makes the sister to be heir.

Possession. Having control over a thing with the intent to have and to exercise such control. Oswald v. Weigel, 219 Kan. 616, 549 P.2d 568, 569. The detention and control, or the manual or ideal custody, of anything which may be the subject of property, for one's use and enjoyment, either as owner or as the proprietor of a qualified right in it, and either held personally or by another who exercises it in one's place and name. Act or state of possessing. That condition of facts under which one can exercise his power over a corporeal thing at his pleasure to the exclusion of all other persons.

The law, in general, recognizes two kinds of possession: actual possession and constructive possession. A person who knowingly has direct physical control over a thing, at a given time, is then in actual possession of it. A person who, although not in actual possession, knowingly has both the power and the intention at a given time to exercise dominion or control over a thing, either directly or through another person or persons, is then in constructive possession of it. The law recognizes also that possession may be sole or joint. If one person alone has actual or constructive possession of a thing, possession is sole. If two or more persons share actual or constructive possession of a thing, possession is joint.

Generally, "possession" within context of title insurance policies refers to open, visible and exclusive use. Happy Canyon Inv. Co. v. Title Ins. Co. of Minnesota, Colo.App., 560 P.2d 839, 842. See also Adverse possession; Constructive possession; Contentious possession; Exclusive possession; Hold; Notorious possession; Occupancy; Repossession.

Actual possession. Exists where the thing is in the immediate occupancy and physical control of the party. Field Furniture Co. v. Community Loan Co., 257 Ky. 825, 79 S.W.2d 211, 215. See also general definition above.

Adverse possession. See Adverse possession.

Chose in possession. A thing (subject of personal property) in actual possession, as distinguished from a "chose in action," which is not presently in the owner's possession, but which he has a right to demand, receive, or recover by suit.

Civil possession. In modern civil law and in the law of Louisiana, that possession which exists when a person ceases to reside in a house or on the land which he occupied, or to detain the movable which he possessed, but without intending to abandon the possession. It is the detention of a thing by virtue of a just title and under the conviction of possessing as owner. A fiction resulting from the registry of the title of the original owner.

Constructive possession. Possession not actual but assumed to exist, where one claims to hold by virtue of some title, without having the actual occupancy, as, where the owner of a tract of land, regularly laid out, is in possession of a part, he is constructively in possession of the whole. See also general definition above.

Corporeal possession. The continuing exercise of a claim to the exclusive use of a material thing. The elements of this possession are first, the mental attitude of the claimant, the intent to possess, to appropriate to oneself; and second, the effective realization of this attitude.
the authorities agree that an intent to exclude others must coexist with the external facts, and must be fulfilled in the external physical facts in order to constitute possession.

Criminal law. Possession as necessary for conviction of offense of possession of controlled substances with intent to distribute may be constructive as well as actual, U.S. v. Craig, C.A.Tenn., 522 F.2d 29, 31; as well as joint or exclusive, Garvey v. State, 176 Ga.App. 268, 335 S.E.2d 640, 647. The defendants must have had dominion and control over the contraband with knowledge of its presence and character. U.S. v. Morano-Alvarez, C.A. Ariz., 520 F.2d 882, 884. See also Possess.

Possession, as an element of offense of stolen goods, is not limited to actual manual control upon or about the person, but extends to things under one's power and dominion. McConnell v. State, 48 Ala.App. 523, 266 So.2d 328, 333.

Possession as used in indictment charging possession of stolen mail may mean actual possession or constructive possession. U.S. v. Ellison, C.A.Cal., 469 F.2d 413, 415.

To constitute "possession" of a concealable weapon under statute proscribing possession of a concealable weapon by a felon, it is sufficient that defendant have constructive possession and immediate access to the weapon. State v. Kelley, 12 Or.App. 496, 507 P.2d 837, 839.

Derivative possession. The kind of possession of one who is in the lawful occupation or custody of the property, but not under a claim of title of his own, but under a right derived from another, as, for example, a tenant, bailee, licensee, etc.

Dispossession. The act of ousting or removing one from the possession of property previously held by him, which may be tortious and unlawful, as in the case of a forcible amotion, or in pursuance of law, as where a landlord "dispossesses" his tenant at the expiration of the term or for other cause by the aid of judicial process. See Dispossess proceedings; Ejectment; Eviction; Process (Summary process).

Estate in possession. An estate whereby a present interest passes to and resides in the tenant, not depending on any subsequent circumstance or contingency. An estate where the tenant is in actual pernancy, or receipt of the rents and other advantages arising therefrom.

Exclusive possession. See Exclusive possession.

Hostile possession. This term, as applied to an occupant of real estate holding adversely, is not construed as implying actual enmity or ill will, but merely means that he claims to hold the possession in the character of an owner, and therefore denies all validity to claims set up by any and all other persons. See Adverse possession.

Naked possession. The actual occupation of real estate, but without any apparent or colorable right to hold and continue such possession; spoken of as the lowest and most imperfect degree of title.

Natural possession. That by which a man detains a thing corporeally, as, by occupying a house, cultivating ground, or retaining a movable in possession; natural possession is also defined to be the corporeal detention of a thing which we possess as belonging to us, without any title to that possession or with a title which is void.

Notorious possession. See Notorious possession.

Open possession. Possession of real property is said to be "open" when held without concealment or attempt at secrecy, or without being covered up in the name of a third person, or otherwise attempted to be withdrawn from sight, but in such a manner that any person interested can ascertain who is actually in possession by proper observation and inquiry. See Adverse possession.

Peaceable possession. See Peaceable.

Pedal possession. In establishing title by adverse possession this means actual possession; that is, living upon or actually occupying the land, or placing improvements directly upon it.

Possession, writ of. Where the judgment in an action of ejectment is for the delivery of the land claimed, or its possession, this writ is used to put the plaintiff in possession. It is in the nature of execution.

Quasi possession. Is to a right what possession is to a thing, it is the exercise or enjoyment of the right, not necessarily the continuous exercise, but such an exercise as shows an intention to exercise it at any time when desired.

Scrambling possession. By this term is meant a struggle for possession on the land itself, not such a contest as is waged in the courts, or possession gained by an act of trespass, such as building a fence.

Unity of possession. Joint possession of two rights by several titles, as where a lessee of land acquires the title in fee-simple, which extinguishes the lease. The term also describes one of the essential properties of a joint estate, each of the tenants having the entire possession as well of every parcel as of the whole.

Vacant possession. An estate which has been abandoned, vacated, or forsaken by the tenant. The abandonment must be complete in order to make the possession vacant, and, therefore, if the tenant have goods on the premises it will not be so considered.

Possession is nine-tenths of the law. This adage is not to be taken as true to the full extent, so as to mean that the person in possession can only be ousted by one whose title is nine times better than his, but it places in a strong light the legal truth that every claimant must succeed by the strength of his own title, and not by the weakness of his antagonist's.

Possession vaut titre /pəzeshən vɔ̃ tʁiʁ/ /Fr. In English law, as in most systems of jurisprudence, the fact of possession raises a prima facie title or a presumption of the right of property in the thing possessed. In other words, the possession is as good as the title (about).
Possessio pacifica per annos 60 facit jus /posézhi(ˈjʌw) pəsəˈfiːkə pər ñənɔwz ˈsɛkʊsˌdʒiːntə fɨˈsæt ˈjəs/. Peaceable possession for sixty years gives a right.

Possessor. One who possesses; one who has possession. See also Occupant.

Possessor bona fide /pozɛzarˈbɔnə fəˈdiː/. He is a bona fide possessor who possesses as owner by virtue of an act sufficient in terms to transfer property, the defects of which he was ignorant of. He ceases to be a bona fide possessor from the moment these defects are made known to him, or are declared to him by a suit instituted for the recovery of the thing by the owner.

Possessor mala fide /pozɛzarˈmələ fəˈdiː/. The possessor in bad faith is he who possesses as master, but who assumes this quality, when he well knows that he has no title to the thing, or that his title is vicious and defective.

Possessory. Relating to possession; founded on possession; contemplating or claiming possession.

Possessory action. See next title.

Possessory action. An action which has for its immediate object to obtain or recover the actual possession of the subject-matter; as distinguished from an action which merely seeks to vindicate the plaintiff's title, or which involves the bare right only; the latter being called a "petitory" action; e.g. summary process action to dispossess tenant for non-payment of rent. A "possessory action" is one brought by a possessor of immovable property to be maintained in his possession when his possession has been disturbed or to be restored to possession from which he has been evicted. Mott v. Smith, La.App., 273 So.2d 675, 677. See also Ejectment; Eviction; Process (Summary process).

An action founded on possession. Trespass for injuries to personal property is called a "possessory" action, because it lies only for a plaintiff who, at the moment of the injury complained of, was in actual or constructive, immediate, and exclusive possession.

Admiralty practice. One which is brought to recover the possession of a vessel, had under a claim of title.

Old English law. A real action which had for its object the regaining possession of the freehold, of which the demandant or his ancestors had been unjustly deprived by the present tenant or possessor thereof.

Possessory claim. The title of a pre-emptor of public lands who has filed his declaratory statement but has not paid for the land.

Possessory interest. Right to exert control over specific land to exclusion of others. Right to possess property by virtue of an interest created in the property though it need not be accompanied by title; e.g. right of a tenant for years.

A possessory interest in land exists in a person who has (a) a physical relation to the land of a kind which gives a certain degree of physical control over the land, and an intent so to exercise such control as to exclude other members of society in general from any present occupation of the land; or (b) interests in the land which are substantially identical with those arising when the elements stated in Clause (a) exist. Restatement, Property, § 7.

Possessory lien. A lien is possessory where the creditor has the right to hold possession of the specific property until satisfaction of the debt or performance of an obligation.

Possessory warrant. The proceeding by possessory warrant is a summary remedy for the recovery of a personal chattel which has been taken by fraud, violence, enticement, or seduction from the possession of the party complaining or which, having been in his recent possession, has disappeared and is believed to be in the possession of the party complained against. The purpose of the proceeding is to protect and quiet the possession of personality, but only as against acts which are inhibited by statute.

Possibilitas /possihliˈtæs/. Lat. Possibility; a possibility. Possibilitas post dissolutionem executionis nunquam reviviscatur, a possibility will never be revived after the dissolution of its execution. Post executionem status, lex non patitur possibilitatem, after the execution of an estate the law does not suffer a possibility.

Possibility. An uncertain thing which may happen. A contingent interest in real or personal estate.

It is either near (or ordinary), as where an estate is limited to one after the death of another, or remote (or extraordinary), as where it is limited to a man, provided he marries a certain woman, and that she shall die and he shall marry another.

See also Impossibility; Probability.

Bare possibility. The same as a naked possibility. See below.

Naked possibility. A bare chance or expectation of acquiring a property or succeeding to an estate in the future, but without any present right in or to it which the law would recognize as an estate or interest.

Possibility coupled with an interest. An expectation recognized in law as an estate or interest, such as occurs in executory devises and shifting or springing uses. Such a possibility may be sold or assigned.

Possibility of reverter. Future estate left in creator or in his successors in interest upon simultaneous creation of estate that will terminate automatically within a period of time defined by occurrence of specified event. United Methodist Church in West Sand Lake v. Kunz, 78 Misc.2d 565, 357 N.Y.S.2d 637, 640. The interest which remains in a grantor or testator after the conveyance or devise of a fee simple determinable and which permits the grantor to be revested automatically of his estate on breach of the condition.

Possibility on a possibility. A remote possibility, as if a remainder be limited in particular to A.'s son John, or Edward, it is bad if he have no son of that name, for it is too remote a possibility that he should not only have a son, but a son of that particular name.
Possible. Capable of existing, happening, being, becoming or coming to pass; feasible, not contrary to nature of things; neither necessitated nor precluded; free to happen or not; contrasted with impossible. In another sense, the word denotes improbability, without excluding the idea of feasibility. It is also sometimes equivalent to "practicable" or "reasonable," as in some cases where action is required to be taken "as soon as possible." See also Potential.

Post. Lat. After; as occurring in a report or a textbook, term is used to send the reader to a subsequent part of the book. Same as "infra."

Post, n. Military establishment where body of troops is stationed; also place where soldier is stationed.

Post, v. To bring to the notice or attention of the public by affixing to a post or wall, or putting up in some public place; to display in a conspicuous manner; to announce, publish or advertise by use of placard. To place in mails. In accounting, to transfer an entry from one original record to a ledger. As regards posting of bail, see Bail. See also Posting.

Post-act. An after-act; an act done afterwards.

Postal. Charges for postal service.

Postal currency. During a brief period following soon after the commencement of the civil war in the United States, when specie change was scarce, postage stamps were popularly used as a substitute; and the first issues of paper representatives of parts of a dollar, issued by authority of congress, were called "postal currency." This issue was soon merged in others of a more permanent character, for which the later and more appropriate name is "fractional currency."

Postal order. A money order. A letter of credit furnished by the government, at a small charge, to facilitate the transmission of money.

Postal Service. The United States Postal Service replaced the Post Office Department in 1971. It is administered by a governing board whose members are appointed by the President. The head of the Service is the Postmaster General.

Post-conviction remedies. Federal. A federal prisoner, attacking the constitutionality of his sentence, may move the court which imposed the sentence to vacate, set aside or correct the same. This motion, under 28 U.S.C.A. § 2255, must normally be made before the prisoner can seek habeas corpus relief.

State. Almost every state has one or more post-conviction procedures that permit prisoners to challenge at least some constitutional violations. A substantial group of states have adopted special post-conviction statutes or court rules, roughly similar to section 2255 of 28 U.S.C.A., that encompass all constitutional claims. Case v. Neb., 381 U.S. 336, 338, 85 S.Ct. 1486, 14 LEd.2d 422. Others, following the federal habeas corpus statute, have held that at least some constitutional violations are jurisdictional defects cognizable under a common law or statutory writ of habeas corpus. Ex Parte Story, 88 Okl.Cr. 358, 203 P.2d 474. The writ of coram nobis is also viewed in several states as an appropriate remedy for presenting certain types of constitutional claims. People v. Cooper, 307 N.Y. 253, 120 N.E.2d 813. In addition, several states have adopted the Uniform Post Conviction Procedure Act. See also Habeas corpus.

Post-date. To date an instrument as of a time later than that at which it is really made. The negotiability of an instrument is not affected by the fact that it is post-dated. U.C.C. § 3–114.

Post-dated check. A check issued before the stated date of the instrument. One delivered prior to its date, generally payable at sight or on presentation on or after day of its date. See Post-date.

Post diem /pôwst dáym/. After the day; as, a plea of payment post diem, after the day when the money became due.

Post disseisin /pôwst disiyzän/. In old English law, the name of a writ, which lies for him who, having recovered lands and tenements by force of a novel disseisin, is again dispossessed by a former disseisor.

Postea /pôwstiya/. In the common-law practice, a formal statement, indorsed on the nisi prius record, which gives an account of the proceedings at the trial of the action.

Posted waters. Waters flowing through or lying upon inclosed or cultivated lands, which are preserved for the exclusive use of the owner or occupant by his posting notices (according to the statute) prohibiting all persons from shooting, trapping, or fishing thereon, under a prescribed penalty.

Posteriora derogant prioribus /pôstiriyóra déragant prayórâbas/. Posterior things derogate from things prior.

Postiores /pôsteriyóriyz/. Lat. This term was used by the Romans to denote the descendants in a direct line beyond the sixth degree.

Posteriority /pôstérhiyóhratîy/. This is a word of comparison and relation in tenure, the correlative of which is the word "priority." Thus, a man who held lands or tenements of two lords was said to hold of his more ancient lord by priority, and of his less ancient lord by posteriority. It has also a general application in law consistent with its etymological meaning, and, as so used, it is likewise opposed to priority.

Posterity /pôstéhratîy/. All the descendants of a person in a direct line to the remotest generation.

Post executionem status lex non patitur possibilitatem /pôwst èksksyúyéwshiyówném stéytás léks nôn péttartor póssibiltéytam/. After the execution of the estate the law suffers not a possibility.

Post facto /pôwst fákto/. After the fact. See Ex post facto.
Post-factum, or post factum /pœwstfâktam/. An after-act; an act done afterwards; a post-act.

Post-fine. In old conveyancing, a fine or sum of money, (otherwise called the "king's silver") formerly due on granting the licentia concordandi, or leave to agree, in levying a fine of lands. It amounted to three-twentieths of the supposed annual value of the land, or ten shillings for every five marks of land.

Post hoc /pœwst hâk/. Lat. After this; after this time; hereafter.

Posthumous. That which is done after the death of a person as the publication of a book after the death of the author, or the birth of a child after the death of its father.

Posthumous child /pœstyalmas châyl/. Child born after the death of his or her father. See Unborn child.

Posthumous work /pœstyalmas wârk/. Work on which original copyright has been taken out by someone to whom literary property passed before publication. Shapiro, Bernstein & Co. v. Bryan, C.C.A.N.Y., 123 F.2d 697, 699.

Posthumus pro nato habetur /pœstyalmas prɔw néytow habiytâr/. A posthumous child is considered as though born [at the parent's death].

Posting. In accounting, the act of transferring an original entry to a ledger. The act of mailing a document. Form of substituted service of process consisting of displaying the process in a prominent place when other forms of service are unavailing.

The process of posting of a check means the usual procedure followed by a payor bank in determining to pay an item and in recording the payment including one or more of the following or other steps as determined by the bank: verification of any signature; ascertaining that sufficient funds are available; affixing a "paid" or other stamp; entering a charge or entry to a customer's account; correcting or reversing an entry or erroneous action with respect to the item. U.C.C. § 4-109.

In connection with trespass statutes, the act of placing or affixing signs on private property in a manner to give notice of the trespass. E.g. La.R.S. 14:63.5

Postliminium /pœwstlimiiniy/. Lat. In the civil law, a doctrine or fiction of the law by which the restoration of a person to any status or right formerly possessed by him was considered as relating back to the time of his original loss or deprivation; particularly in the case of one who, having been taken prisoner in war, and having escaped and returned to Rome, was regarded, by the aid of this fiction, as having never been abroad, and was thereby reinstated in all his rights.

The term is also applied, in international law, to the recapture of property taken by an enemy, and its consequent restoration to its original owner.

Postliminium fingit eum qui captos est in civitate semper fuisse /pœwstlimiiniyam finjat iyam kwâ kâptows est in sivatîtyiy semper fyuwisiy/. Postliminy feigns that he who has been captured has never left the state.

Postliminum /pœwstlimiiniy/. See Postliminium.

Post item motam /pœwst lâytam mowtâm/. Lat. After suit moved or commenced. Depositions in relation to the subject of a suit, made after litigation had commenced, were formerly sometimes so termed.

Postman. A letter-carrier; mailman. In England, a senior barrister in the court of exchequer, who had precedence in motions, so called from the place where he sat; such ceased to exist when the court was absorbed into the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court in 1873.

Postmark. A stamp or mark put on letters or other mailable matter received at the post-office for transmission through the mails.

Postmaster. An officer of the United States Postal Service appointed to take charge of a local post-office and transact the business of receiving and forwarding the mails at that point, and such other business as is committed to him under the postal laws.

Postmaster general. The head of the U.S. Postal Service.

Post-mortem /pœwstmört/. After death; pertaining to matters occurring after death. A term generally applied to an autopsy or examination of a dead body, to ascertain the cause of death, or to the inquisition for that purpose by the coroner.

Postnati /pœwstnâytâ/. Those born after. See Post natus.

Post natus /pœwst néytâs/. Born afterwards. A term once used in private international law to designate a person who was born after some historic event (such as the American Revolution or the act of union between England and Scotland), and whose rights or status will be governed or affected by the question of his birth before or after such event.

Post-notes /pœwstnôwts/. A species of bank-notes payable at a future time, and not on demand.

Post-nuptial /pœwstnâpshal/. After marriage.

Post-nuptial agreement. Agreements or settlements made after marriage between spouses still married to determine the rights of each in the others' property in the event of divorce or death. They take the form of separation agreements, property settlements in contemplation of a separation or divorce, or property settlements where there is no intention of the parties to separate. Friedlander v. Friedlander, 80 Wash.2d 293, 494 P.2d 208, 212. Compare Pre-nuptial agreement; Separation agreement.

Post-nuptial settlement. See Post-nuptial agreement.

Post-obit. Lat. An agreement by which the obligor borrows a certain sum of money and promises to pay a larger sum, exceeding the lawful rate of interest, upon the death of a person from whom he has some expectation, if the obligor be then living.
Post-obit bond. A bond given by an expectant, to become due on the death of a person from whom he will have property. A bond or agreement given by a borrower of money, by which he undertakes to pay a larger sum, exceeding the legal rate of interest, on or after the death of a person from whom he has expectations, in case of surviving him. Such are common in England.

Postpone. To put off; defer; delay; continue; adjourn; as when a hearing is postponed. Also to place after; to set below something else; as when an earlier lien is for some reason postponed to a later lien. The term carries with it the idea of deferring the doing of something or the taking effect of something until a future or later time. Gartner v. Roth, 26 Cal.2d 184, 157 P.2d 361, 363.

Post prolem suscitatam /pòwst prówlam sâsstéytam/. After issue born (raised). After term, or postponed.

Post-conviction remedies. See Post-conviction remedies; Post-trial motions.

Post-conviction remedies. See Post-conviction remedies; Post-trial motions.

Postulantio /pòshálysh(i)yow/. Lat. In old English ecclesiastical law, a species of petition for transfer of a bishop.

In Roman law, a request or petition. This was the name of the first step in a criminal prosecution, corresponding somewhat to "swearing out a warrant" in modern criminal law. The accuser appeared before the prætor, and stated his desire to institute criminal proceedings against a designated person, and prayed the authority of the magistrate therefor.

Postulatio actionis /pòsáléysh(i)yow ákshiyównás/. In Roman law, the demand of an action; the request made to the prætor by an actor or plaintiff for an action or formula of suit; corresponding with the application for a writ in old English practice. Or, as otherwise explained, the actor's asking of leave to institute his action, on appearance of the parties before the prætor.

Pot. Jargon name for marihuana.

Potable. Suitable for drinking; drinkable.

Pot-de-vin /pòwd(a)vèn/. In French law, a sum of money frequently paid, at the moment of entering into a contract, beyond the price agreed upon. It differs from arrha, in this: that it is no part of the price of the thing sold, and that the person who has received it cannot, by returning double the amount, or the other party by losing what he has paid, rescind the contract.

Potentate /pòwtántéyt/. A person who possesses great power or sway; a prince, sovereign, or monarch.

By the naturalization law of the United States, an alien is required to renounce all allegiance to any foreign "prince, potentate, or sovereign whatever."

Potentia /pòthi(n)iy/. Lat. Possibility; power.

Potentia debet sequi justitiam, non antecedere /pòtènsh(i)yà débòt sèkwà jàsìsh(i)yàm, nòn àntèséydràry/. Power ought to follow justice, not go before it.

Potentia est duplex, remota et propinqua; et potentia remotissima et vana est que nunquam venit in actum /pòtènsh(i)yà èst d(y)úwpèlks, ròmòwtà èt pràpìńkwà; èt pòtènsh(i)yà ròmòtwìssìs èt vèynà èst kwiì nàyçkwàm vìynàt èn åkòm/. Possibility is of two kinds, remote and near; that which never comes into action is a power the most remote and vain.

Potentia inutilis frustra est /pòtènsh(i)yà iñúwòtàs frèstra èst/. Useless power is to no purpose.

Potential. Existing in possibility but not in act. Naturally and probably expected to come into existence at some future time, though not now existing; for example, the future product of grain or trees already planted, or the successive future installments or payments on a contract or engagement already made. Things having a "potential existence" may be the subject of mortgage, assignment, or sale. See Possible.

Potentia non est nisi ad bonum /pòtènsh(i)yà nòn èst nàýsày èd bòwònm/. Power is not conferred but for the public good.

Potentia propinquia /pòtènsh(i)yà pràpìńkwà/. Common possibility. See Possible.

Potestas /pòtestas/. Lat. In the civil law, power; authority, domination; empire. Imperium, or the jurisdiction of magistrates. The power of the father over his children, patria potestas. The authority of masters over their slaves.

Potestas stricte interpretatur /pòtestas striktìy intròprétàtìr/. A power is strictly interpreted.

Potestas suprema seipsum dissolvvere potest, ligare non potest /pòtestas spàprüìçì mìyìpìésm dàzòlvàry pòwtést lèrgèrìy nòn pòwtést/. Supreme power can dissolve [unloose] but cannot bind itself.

Potest quis renunciare pro se et suis juri quod pro se introductum est /pòwtést kwìs rànnìshìéryìr pròw síì èt sìì yùwàs jùrùy kòwò pòr síì inèradàktìm èst/. One may relinquish for himself and his heirs a right which was introduced for his own benefit.

Potior est conditio defendentis /pòwsh(i)yòr èst kàndish(i)yòw dàfèndènts/. Better is the condition of the defendant [than that of the plaintiff].
Poundage fees. A fee awarded to the sheriff in the nature of a percentage commission upon monies recovered pursuant to a levy or execution or attachment.

Pour acquit. Fr. In French law, the formula which a creditor prefixes to his signature when he gives a receipt.

Pour appuyer. For the support of, or "in the support of."

Pour appuyer nouvelle demande. In support of his new action.

Pour autrui. For others.

Pour compte de qui il appartient. Fr. For account of whom it may concern.

Pour faire proclamer. L. Fr. An ancient writ addressed to the mayor or bailiff of a city or town, requiring him to make proclamation concerning nuisances, etc.

Pour-over. Provision in a will which directs the distribution of property into a trust. Also, a similar provision in a trust which directs property into a will.

Pour-over trust. See Pour-over; Trust.

Pour-over will. See Pour-over.

Pourparler. Fr. In French law, the preliminary negotiations or bargainings which lead to a contract between the parties. As in English law, these form no part of the contract when completed. The term is also used in this sense in international law and the practice of diplomacy.

Pourparty /púrpárty/pár'/. To make pourparty is to divide and sever the lands that fall to parencers, which, before partition, they held jointly and pro indiviso.

Pourpresture /púrrpréstryər/pár'/. In old English law, an inclosure. Anything done to the nuisance or hurt of the public demesnes, or the highways, etc., by inclosure or building, endeavoring to make that private which ought to be public. The difference between a pourpresture and a public nuisance is that pourpresture is an invasion of the jus privatum of the crown; but where the jus publicum is violated it is a nuisance.

Pour seisin terres /púr syżər (tɛhriʒə)/. L. Fr. An ancient writ whereby the crown seized the land which the wife of its deceased tenant, who held in capite, had for her dower, if she married without leave.

Poursuivant /púrsuəvənt/. The king's messenger; a royal or state messenger. In the heralds' college, a functionary of lower rank than a herald, but discharging similar duties, called also "poursuivant at arms"; originally attendants of the king during battle.

Pourveyance /púrvîyen/zər/pər'/. In old English law, the providing corn, fuel, victuals, and other necessaries for the king's house.

Pourveyor, or purveyor /pərvəyar/. A buyer; one who provided for the royal household.

Poverty. The state or condition of being poor. See also Indigent.

Poverty affidavit. An affidavit, made and filed by person seeking public assistance, appointment of counsel, waiver of court fees, or other free services or benefits, that he or she is in fact, financially unable to pay for such.

Document signed under oath which may be the basis of a court's permitting one to proceed in forma pauperis. See e.g. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1915; Fed.R.App.P., Form 4. Leave to proceed on appeal in forma pauperis from district court to court of appeals is governed by Fed.R.App.P. 24. See also Pauper's oath.

A power is an ability on the part of a person to produce a change in a given legal relation by doing or not doing a given act. Restatement, Second, Agency, § 6; Restatement, Property, § 3.

In a restricted sense a "power" is a liberty or authority reserved by, or limited to, a person to dispose of real or personal property, for his own benefit, or benefit of others, or enabling one person to dispose of interest which is vested in another.

See also Authority; Beneficial power; Capacity; Concurrent power; Control; Delegation of powers; Donee of power; Enumerated powers; Executive powers; Governmental powers; Judicial power; Legislative power; Police power; Right.

Appendant or appurtenant powers. Those existing where the donee of the power has an estate in the land and the power is to take effect wholly or in part out of that estate, and the estate created by its exercise affects the estate and interest of the donee of the power.

Collateral powers. Those in which the donee of the power has no interest or estate in the land which is the subject of the power. Also called naked powers.

Constitutional powers. The right to take action in respect to a particular subject-matter or class of matters, involving more or less of discretion, granted by the constitution to the several departments or branches of the government, or reserved to the people. Powers in this sense are generally classified as legislative, executive, and judicial (q.v.) and further classified as enumerated (or express), implied, inherent, resulting, or sovereign powers.

Commerce powers. Power of Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states. Art. I, § 8, Cl. 3, U.S.Const.

Enforcement powers. The 13th, 14th, 15th, 19th, 23rd, 24th, and 26th Amendments each contain a section providing, in these or equivalent words, that "Congress shall have the power to enforce by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article."

Enumerated or express powers. Powers expressly provided for in Constitution; e.g., U.S.Const. Art. I, § 8.

Implied powers. Such as are necessary to make available and carry into effect those powers which are expressly granted or conferred, and which must therefore be presumed to have been within the intention of the constitutional or legislative grant. See Enforcement powers, above; also Necessary and proper powers, below. See also Penumbra doctrine.

Inherent powers. Powers which necessarily inhere in the government by reason of its role as a government; e.g. conducting of foreign affairs. United States v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corp., 299 U.S. 304, 315, 316, 57 S.Ct. 216, 81 L.Ed. 255. See also Supremacy clause.

Necessary and proper powers. Art. I, § 8, Cl. 18 gives Congress power "To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers (i.e. those enumerated in clauses 1–17), and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof." See also Penumbra doctrine.

Preemptive powers. See Preemption; Supremacy clause.

Reserved or residual state powers. The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people. 10th Amend., U.S.Const.

Resulting powers. Those powers which "result from the whole mass of the powers of the National Government and from the nature of political society." American Ins. Co. v. Canter, 26 U.S. (1 Pet.) 516, 7 L.Ed. 242.

Spending power. Power of Congress to "pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." Art. I, § 8, Cl. 1, U.S.Const.

Corporate powers. The right or capacity to act or be acted upon in a particular manner or in respect to a particular subject; as, the power to have a corporate seal, to sue and be sued, to make by-laws, to carry on a particular business or construct a given work.

General and special powers in trust. A power is general in trust when any person or class of persons other than the grantee of such power is designated as entitled to the proceeds or any portion of the proceeds or other benefits to result from the alienation. A special power is in trust (1) when the persons or class of persons to whom the disposition of the lands under the power is to be made are designated, or (2) when the power authorizes the alienation, by means of a conveyance, will, or charge, of a particular estate or interest less than a fee.

General and special powers in trust. A power is general in trust when any person or class of persons other than the grantee of such power is designated as entitled to the proceeds or any portion of the proceeds or other benefits to result from the alienation. A special power is in trust (1) when the persons or class of persons to whom the disposition of the lands under the power is to be made are designated, or (2) when the power authorizes the alienation, by means of a conveyance, will, or charge, of a particular estate or interest less than a fee.

Implied powers. Powers not granted in express terms but existing because they are necessary and proper to carry into effect some expressly granted power. See also Constitutional powers, above.

Inherent powers. Those which are enjoyed by the possessors of natural right, without having been received from another. Such are the powers of a people to establish a form of government, of a father to control his children. Some of these are regulated and restricted in their exercise by law, but are not technically considered in the law as powers.

Inherent agency power is a term used in the Restatement of Agency to indicate the power of an agent which is derived not from authority, apparent authority or estoppel, but solely from the agency relation and exists for the protection of persons harmed by or dealing with a servant or other agent. Restatement, Second, Agency § 8A.

Ministerial powers. See Ministerial.

Naked power. One which is simply collateral and without interest in the donee, which arises when, to a mere stranger, authority is given of disposing of an interest, in which he had not before, nor has by the instrument creating the power, any estate whatsoever.

Power of revocation. A power which is to divest or abridge an existing estate.

Powers in gross. Those which give a donee of the power, who has an estate in the land, authority to create such estates only as will not attach on the interest limited to him or take effect out of his interest, but will take effect after donee's estate has terminated.

Real property law. An authority to do some act in relation to real property, or to the creation or revocation of an estate therein, or a charge thereon, which the owner granting or reserving such power might himself perform for any purpose. An authority expressly reserved to a grantor, or expressly given to another, to be exercised over lands, etc., granted or conveyed at the time of the creation of such power. See Power of alienation.

For other compound terms, such as Power of appointment; Power of sale; etc., see the following titles.

Power coupled with an interest. A right or power to do some act, together with an interest in the subject-matter on which the power is to be exercised. It is distinguished from a naked power, which is a mere authority to act, not accompanied by any interest of the donee in the subject-matter of the power. Arcweld Mfg. Co. v. Burney, 12 Wash.2d 212, 121 P.2d 360, 365.

Power of acceptance. Capacity of offeree, upon acceptance of terms of offer, to create binding contract.

Power of alienation. The power to sell, transfer, assign or otherwise dispose of property.

Power of appointment. A power or authority conferred by one person by deed or will upon another (called the "donee") to appoint, that is, to select and nominate, the person or persons who are to receive and enjoy an estate or an income therefrom or from a fund, after the testator's death, or the donee's death, or after the termination of an existing right or interest.

A power of appointment may be exercisable by deed or by will depending upon the terms established by the donor of the power, and is defined, generally, as power or authority given to person to dispose of property, or interest therein, which is vested in person other than donee of the power. In re Conroy's Estate, 67 C.A.3d 734, 136 Cal.Rptr. 807, 809.

Powers are either: Collateral, which are given to strangers; i.e., to persons who have neither a present nor future estate or interest in the land. These are also called simply "collateral," or powers not coupled with an interest, or powers not being interests. Or they are powers relating to the land. These are called "appendant" or "appurtenant," because they strictly depend upon the estate limited to the person to whom they are given. Thus, where an estate for life is limited to a man, with a power to grant leases in possession, a lease granted under the power may operate wholly out of the life-estate of the party executing it, and must in every case have its operation out of his estate during his life.

Such an estate must be created, which will attach on an interest actually vested in himself. Or they are called "in gross," if given to a person who had an interest in the estate at the execution of the deed creating the power, or to whom an estate is given by the deed, but which enabled him to create such estates only as will not attach on the interest limited to him. Of necessity, therefore, where a man seised in fee settles his estate on others, reserving to himself only a particular power, the power is in gross.

An important distinction is established between general and particular powers. By a general power we understand a right to appoint to whomsoever the donee pleases including himself or his estate. By a particular power it is meant that the donee is restricted to some objects designated in the deed or will creating the power.

A general power is beneficial when no person other than the grantee has, by the terms of its creation, any interest in its execution. A general power is in trust when any person or class of persons, other than the grantee of such power, is designated as entitled to the proceeds, or any portion of the proceeds, or other benefits to result from the alienation.

When a power of appointment among a class requires that each shall have a share, it is called a "distribution" or "non-exclusive" power; when it authorizes, but does not direct, a selection of one or more to the exclusion of the others, it is called an "exclusive" power, and is also distributive; when it gives the power of appointing to a certain number of the class, but not to all, it is exclusive only, and not distributive. A power authorizing the donee either to give the whole to one of a class or to give it equally among such of them as he may select (but not to give one a larger share than the others) is called a "mixed" power.

For the estate tax and gift tax effects of powers of appointment, see I.R.C. §§ 2041 and 2514.

See also General power of appointment; Illusory appointment; Limited power of appointment.

Special power of appointment. A power of appointment that cannot be exercised in favor of the donee or his or her estate but may be exercised only in favor of identifiable person(s) other than the donee. See also Limited power of appointment.

Testamentary power. A power of appointment that can only be exercised through a will (i.e., upon the death of the holder).

Power of attorney. An instrument in writing whereby one person, as principal, appoints another as his agent and confers authority to perform certain specified acts or kinds of acts on behalf of principal. Complaint of Bankers Trust Co., C.A.Pa., 752 F.2d 874, 885. An instrument authorizing another to act as one's agent or attorney. The agent is attorney in fact and his power is revoked on the death of the principal by operation of law. Such power may be either general (full) or special (limited).

Durable power of attorney. Exists when person executes a power of attorney which will become or remain effective in the event he or she should later become disabled. Uniform Probate Code § 5–501.

Power of disposition. Every power of disposition is deemed absolute, by means of which the donee of such power is enabled in his life-time to dispose of the entire fee for his own benefit; and, where a general and beneficial power to devise the inheritance is given to a tenant for life or years, it is absolute, within the meaning of the statutes of some of the states. See Power of appointment.

Power of sale. A clause commonly inserted in mortgages and deeds of trust, giving the mortgagee (or trustee) the right and power, on default in the payment of the debt secured, to advertise and sell the mortgaged property at public auction (but without resorting to a court for authority), convey by deed to the purchaser, return the surplus, if any, to the mortgagor, and thereby divest the latter's estate entirely and without any subsequent right of redemption.

Power of termination. The interest left in the grantor or testator after the conveyance or devise of a fee simple on condition subsequent or conditional fee, e.g. “to A on condition that the property be used for church purposes.” When such property is no longer used for church purposes, the grantor may enter or commence an action for entry based on the breach of the condition. However, he is not automatically revested. He must enter or commence an action.

P.P. An abbreviation for "propria persona," in his proper person, in his own person, and for per procuration (q.v.).

P.P.I. Policy proof of interest, i.e., in the event of loss, the insurance policy is to be deemed sufficient proof of interest.

Practicable, practicably. Practicable is that which may be done, practiced, or accomplished; that which is performable, feasible, possible; and the adverb practicably means in a practicable manner. Within liability policy providing that when accident occurred, written notice should be given by or on behalf of insured to insurer or any of its authorized agents as soon as practicable, "practicable" was held to mean feasible in the circumstances. Frey v. Security Ins. Co. of Hartford, D.C.Pa., 331 F.Supp. 140, 143.

Practice. Repeated or customary action; habitual performance; a succession of acts of similar kind; custom; usage. Application of science to the wants of men. The exercise of any profession.

The form or mode or proceeding in courts of justice for the enforcement of rights or the redress of wrongs, as distinguished from the substantive law which gives the right or denounces the wrong. The form, manner, or order of instituting and conducting an action or other judicial proceeding, through its successive stages to its end, in accordance with the rules and principles laid down by law or by the regulations and precedents of the courts. The term applies as well to the conduct of criminal as to civil actions, to proceedings in equity as well as at law, and to the defense as well as the prosecution of any proceeding. Wells Lamont Corp. v. Bowles, Em.App., 149 F.2d 364, 366.

Practice of law. The rendition of services requiring the knowledge and the application of legal principles and technique to serve the interests of another with his consent. R.J. Edwards, Inc. v. R.L. Hert, Okl., 504 P.2d 407, 416. It is not limited to appearing in court, or advising and performing of services in the conduct of the various shapes of litigation, but embraces the preparation of pleadings, and other papers incident to actions and special proceedings, and in larger sense includes legal advice and counsel and preparation of legal instruments by which legal rights and obligations are established. Washington State Bar Ass'n v. Great Western Union Federal Sav. and Loan Ass'n, 91 Wash.2d 48, 586 P.2d 870. A person engages in the "practice of law" by maintaining an office where he is held out to be an attorney, using a letterhead describing himself as an attorney, counseling clients in legal matters, negotiating with opposing counsel about pending litigation, and fixing and collecting fees for services rendered by his associate. State v. Schumacher, 214 Kan. 1, 519 P.2d 1116, 1127.

Practice of medicine. The treatment of injuries as well as the discovery of the cause and nature of disease, and the administration of remedies, or the prescribing of treatment therefor.

Practice acts. Statutes that govern practice and procedure in courts (e.g., Title 28, United States Code). Such acts are frequently supplemented with court rules (e.g., Fed.Rules of Civil Procedure).

Practice court. In English law, a court attached to the court of king's bench, which heard and determined common matters of business and ordinary motions for writs of mandamus, prohibition, etc. It was usually called the "bail court." It was held by one of the puisne justices of the king's bench. See also Moot court.

Practices. A succession of acts of a similar kind or in a like employment.

Practitioner. He who is engaged in the exercise or employment of any art or profession as contrasted with one who teaches such. See Practice.

Præceptores /priysetpoiriz/. Lat. In old English law, masters. The chief clerks in chancery were formerly so called, because they had the direction of making out remedial writs.

Præceptor /praséptary/. In feudal law, a kind of benefices, so called because they were possessed by the more eminent templars whom the chief master by his authority created and called "Præceptores Templi."

Præcipite /préspiy/. Lat. In practice, an original writ drawn up in the alternative, commanding the defendant to do the thing required, or show the reason why he had not done it. It includes an order to the clerk of court to issue an execution on a judgment already rendered.
A paper upon which the particulars of a writ are written. It is filed in the office out of which the required writ is to issue. Also an order, written out and signed, addressed to the clerk of a court, and requesting him to issue a particular writ.

Prrepece, tenant to the. A person having an estate of freehold in possession, against whom the prrepece was brought by a tenant in tail, seeking to bar his estate by a recovery.

Prprechipitium. The punishment of casting headlong from some high place.

Prreco. Lat. In Roman law, a herald or crier.

Prrecognita. Things to be previously known in order to the understanding of something which follows.

Prredia. In the civil law, lands; estates; tenements; properties. See Prredium.

Prredia bellica. Booty. Property seized in war.

Prredial servitude. A right which is granted for the advantage of one piece of land over another, and which may be exercised by every possessor of the land entitled against every possessor of the servient. It always presupposes two pieces of land (prredia) belonging to different proprietors; one burdened with the servitude, called "prredium serviens," and one for the advantage of which the servitude is conferred, called "prredium dominans."

Prredial tithes. Such as arise merely and immediately from the ground: as, grain of all sorts, hay, wood, fruits, herbs, and the like.

Prredia tributaria. In the civil law, provincial lands belonging to the emperor.

Prreductus. Lat. Aforesaid. In civil law, pleading, of the three words, "idem," "prreductus," and "prrefatus." The name of an estate which suffers a servitude or easement to another estate; the servient tenement.

Prredium dominans. In the civil law, the name given to an estate to which a servitude is due; the dominant tenement.

Prredium serviens. In the civil law, the name of an estate which suffers a servitude or easement to another estate; the servient tenement.

Prredium servit pradio. Land is under servitude to land [i.e., servitudes are not personal rights, but attach to the dominant tenement].

Prredium urbanum. In the civil law, a building or edifice intended for the habitation and use of man, whether built in cities or in the country.

Prado. Lat. In Roman law, a robber.

Prrefectura. In Roman law, conquered towns, governed by an officer called a "prefect," who was chosen in some instances by the people, in others by the praetors.

Prrefectus vigilum. The mayor of a town.

Prrefine. The fee paid on suing out the writ of covenant, on levying fines, before the fine was passed.

Prrejuramentum. A preparatory oath.

Prrefectum. In old English law, a préparatori oath.

Prremunire. Lat. Reward; compensation. Prremunire facias A. B. quod sit coram nobis. The statutes establishing this offense, the first of which was made in the thirty-first year of the reign of Edward I, were framed to encounter the perceived papal usurpations in England; the original meaning of the offense called "praemunire" being the introduction of a foreign power into the kingdom, and creating imperium in imperio, by paying that obedience to papal process which constitutionally belonged to the king alone. The penalties of praemunire were afterwards applied to other heinous offenses. 4 Bl.Comm. 103-117.

Prenomen /priyónowman/. Lat. Forename, or first name. The first of the three names by which the Romans were commonly distinguished. It marked the individual, and was commonly written with one letter, as "A." for "Aulus," "C." for "Caius," etc.

Prepositus /priyposétsas/. In old English law, an officer next in authority to the alderman of a hundred, called "prepositus regius;" or a steward or bailiff of an estate, answering to the "uisncere."

Also the person from whom descents are traced under the old canons.

Prepositus villa /priyposétsas vilii/. A constable of a town, or petty constable.

Preprocura consilia raro sunt prospera /prriyprépwpară̊ kansiilii y rérow sînt sporspara/. Hasty counsels are rarely prosperous.

Prescriptio /prriypréshiyow/. Lat. In the civil law, that mode of acquisition whereby one becomes proprietor of a thing on the ground that he has for a long time possessed it as his own; prescription. It was anciently distinguished from "usucapio" (q.v.), but was blended with it by Justinian.

Prescriptio est titulus ex usu et tempore substantiam /prriypréshiyowniy/. It is presumed for the negative. The rule of the law, forms of words (of a qualifying character) inserted with the words "dare," "facere," "oportere," denoted obligations of a personal character, as opposed to real rights.

Præsentia corporis tollit errorem nominis; et veritas nominis tollit errorem demonstrationis /praʃzéshiyow kórparas tólat aróman nómanas, ét véhratás nómanas tólat aróman démonstréshiyownwais/. The presence of the body cures error in the name; the truth of the name cures an error of description.

Præses /prlisij/. Lat. In Roman law, a president or governor. Called a "nomen generale," including pro-consuls, legates, and all who governed provinces.

Præstare /pristéri/. Lat. In Roman law, "praestare" meant to make good, and, when used in conjunction with the words "dare," "facere," "oportere," denoted obligations of a personal character, as opposed to real rights.

Præstare cautela quam medela /prisystat kótiyló kwaʃm madyló/. Prevention is better than cure.

Præsumatur pro justitia sententiae /prisyziyaméyter prów jistishiyow senténtshiyiy/. The presumption should be in favor of the justice of a sentence.

Præsumitur pro legitimione /praziyowmató prów lájtáméyshiyowniy/. The presumption is in favor of legitimacy.

Præsumitur pro negante /praziyowmató prów nagéntiy/. It is presumed for the negative. The rule of the house of lords when the numbers are equal on a motion.

Præsumptio /prazímpshiyow/. Lat. Presumption; a presumption; a presumption of fact entitled to strong presumption; a presumption of law; that is, one in which the claims in actions were in favor of the justice of a sentence. A presumption of law and of right; a presumption which the law assumes the existence of something until it is disproved by evidence; a conditional, inconclusive, or rebuttable presumption.

Præsumptio juris et de jure /prazímpshiyow júras et die fiyiy/. A presumption of law and of right; a presumption which the law will not suffer to be contradicted; a conclusive or irrebuttable presumption.

Præsumptio muciana /prazímpshiyow myúwshiyéyni/. In Roman law, a presumption of law that property in the hands of a wife came to her as a gift from her husband and was not acquired from other

Prayer. The request contained in a bill in equity that the court will grant the process, aid, or relief which the complainant desires. Also, by extension, the term is applied to that part of the bill which contains this request. Under modern rules practice, the pleader does not pray for relief, but, rather, demands it. Fed.R.Civil P. 8(a). See Prayer for relief.

Prayer for relief. That portion of a complaint (more properly called "demand for relief") in a civil action which sets forth the requested relief or damages to which the pleader deems himself entitled. This is a requisite element of the complaint. Fed.R.Civil P. 8(a).

Prayer of process. A petition with which a bill in equity used to conclude, to the effect that a writ of subpœna might issue against the defendant to compel him to answer upon oath all the matters charged against him in the bill.

Pray in aid. In old English practice, to call upon for assistance. In real actions, the tenant might pray in aid or call for assistance of another, to help him to plead, because of the feebleness or imbecility of his own estate.

In current English practice, term refers to practice of attorney in action involving several parties to claim benefit for his client of argument used by another counsel for his client.

Preamble. A clause at the beginning of a constitution or statute explanatory of the reasons for its enactment and the objects sought to be accomplished. Generally, a preamble is a declaration by the legislature of the reasons for the passage of the statute and is helpful in the interpretation of any ambiguities within the statute to which it is prefixed. Griffith v. New Mexico Public Service Comm., 86 N.M. 11 3, 520 P.2d 269, 271. It has been held however to not be an essential part of act, and neither enlarges nor confers powers. Portland Van & Storage Co. v. Hoss, 139 Or. 434, 9 P.2d 122, 126.

Preappointed evidence. The right of being heard before another. A privilege belonging to the English bar, the members of which are entitled to be heard in their order, according to rank, beginning with the Attorney and Solicitor General, and Queen's Counsel, and ending with barristers at large.

Prebend. In English ecclesiastical law, a stipend granted in cathedral churches; also, but improperly, a prebendary. A simple prebend is merely a revenue; a prebend with dignity has some jurisdiction attached to it. The term "prebend" is generally confounded with "canonicate," but there is a difference between them. The former is the stipend granted to an ecclesiastic in consideration of his officiating and serving in the church; whereas the canonicate is a mere title or spiritual quality which may exist independently of any stipend.

Fixed portion of rents and profits of cathedral church used for maintenance of prebendaries.
Prebendary /prēbendērē/. An ecclesiastical person serving on the staff of a cathedral, and receiving a stated allowance or stipend from the income or endowment of the cathedral, in compensation for his services.

Precarize /prəkərīzi/ or preces /prəsēz/. In old English law, day-works which the tenants of certain manors were bound to give their lords in harvest time. Magna precaria was a great or general reaping day.

Precarious /prəkərēyəs/. Liable to be returned or rendered up at the mere demand or request of another; hence, held or retained only on sufferance or by permission; and, by an extension of meaning, doubtful, uncertain, dangerous, very liable to break, fail, or terminate.

Precarious loan. A bailment by way of loan which is not to continue for any fixed time, but may be recalled at the mere will and pleasure of the lender (e.g., a demand loan). A loan, the repayment of which is in doubt or uncertain. A non-performing loan.

Precarious possession. In modern civil law, possession is called "precautionary" which one enjoys by the leave of another and during his pleasure.

Precarious right. The right which the owner of a thing transfers to another, to enjoy the same until it shall please the owner to revoke it.

Precarious trade. In international law, such trade as may be carried on by a neutral between two belligerent powers by the mere sufferance of the latter.

Precarium /prəkərēyəm/. Lat. In the civil law, a convention whereby one allows another the use of a thing or the exercise of a right gratuitously until revocation. The bailee acquires thereby the lawful possession of the thing, except in certain cases. The bailor can redeem the thing at any time, even should he have allowed it to the bailee for a designated period.

Precatory /prəkətəri/. Having the nature of prayer, request, or entreaty; conveying or embodying a recommendation or advice or the expression of a wish, but not a positive command or direction.

Precatory trust. A trust created by certain words, which are more like words of entreaty and permission than of command or certainty. Examples of such words, which the courts have held sufficient to constitute a trust, are "wish and request," "have fullest confidence," "heartily beseech," and the like. See Trust.

Precatory words. Words of entreaty, request, desire, wish, or recommendation, employed in wills, as distinguished from direct and imperative terms. Mere precatory words or expressions in a trust or will are ineffective to dispose of property. There must be a command or order as to the disposition of property.

Precaution /prəkəsən/. Previous action; proven foresight; care previously employed to prevent mischief or to secure good result; or a measure taken beforehand; an active foresight designed to ward off possible problems, accidents, liability, or secure good results. Rincon v. Berg Co., Tex.Civ.App., 60 S.W.2d 811, 813.

Precedence /prəsədəns/ or precedency /prəsədənsi/. The act or state of going before; adjustment of place. The right of being first placed in a certain order. See also Preference; Precedent; Priority.

Precedence, patent of. In old English law, a grant from the crown to such barristers as it thinks proper to honor with that mark of distinction, whereby they are entitled to such rank and precedence as are assigned in their respective patents.

Precedent /prəsədənt/. An adjudged case or decision of a court, considered as furnishing an example or authority for an identical or similar case afterwards arising or a similar question of law. Courts attempt to decide cases on the basis of principles established in prior cases. Prior cases which are close in facts or legal principles to the case under consideration are called precedents. A rule of law established for the first time by a court for a particular type of case and thereafter referred to in deciding similar cases. See also stare decisis.

A course of conduct once followed which may serve as a guide for future conduct. See Custom and usage; Habit.

Precedent condition. Such as must happen or be performed before an estate can vest or be enlarged. See Condition.

Precedents sub silentio /prəsədənts səb sələnsh(y)əw/. Silent uniform course of practice, uninterrupted though not supported by legal decisions.

Prece partium /prəsəsiə pərsh(y)əm/. The continuance of a suit by consent of both parties.

Precept /prəsəp/. An order, writ, warrant, or process. An order or direction, emanating from authority, to an officer or body of officers, commanding him or them to do some act within the scope of their powers. An order in writing, sent out by a justice of the peace or other like officer, for the bringing of a person or record before him. Precept is not to be confined to civil proceedings, and is not of a more restricted meaning than "process." It includes warrants and processes in criminal as well as civil proceedings.

Rule imposing standard of conduct or action.

In English law, the direction issued by a sheriff to the proper returning officers of cities and boroughs within his jurisdiction for the election of members to serve in parliament. The direction by the judges or commissioners of assize to the sheriff for the summoning a sufficient number of jurors. The direction issued by the clerk of the peace to the overseers of parishes for making out the jury lists. Written command of justice of the peace or other like officer for the bringing of a person or record before him. In old English criminal law, instigation to commit a crime.

In old French law, a kind of letters issued by the king in subversion of the laws, being orders to the judges to do or tolerate things contrary to law.

Precept of attachment. Precept of attachment is an order to attach the goods and property of the defendant issued by a court generally after the action has been commenced when a writ of attachment has not been used.

Preciput /pri'siiz/. Lat. In Roman law, prayers. One of the names of an application to the emperor.

Precipsis primaria /pri'siiz prim'eriyyiy/. In English ecclesiastical law, a right of the crown to name to the first prebend that becomes vacant after the accession of the sovereign, in every church of the empire. This right was exercised by the crown of England in the reign of Edward I.

Precinct /pri'siikt/. A constable's or police district. A small geographical unit of government. An election district created for convenient localization of polling places. A county or municipal subdivision for casting and counting votes in elections.

Precipice /pre'sispiy/. Another form of the name of the written instructions to the clerk of court; also spelled "præcipice" (q.v.).

Precipitation /præsipta'yshan/. Hastening occurrence of event or causing to happen or come to crisis suddenly, unexpectedly or too soon.

Preciput. In French law, a portion of an estate or inheritance which falls to one of the coheirs over and above his equal share with the rest, and which is to be taken out before partition is made.

Precise /pras'yaas/. Having determinate limitations. To the point.

Preclude /prəkI(y)uhwd/. Estop. To prohibit or prevent from doing something; e.g. injunction.

Precludi non /prəkI(y)uhday non/. Lat. In common law pleading, the commencement of a replication to a plea in bar, by which the plaintiff "says that, by reason of anything in the said plea alleged, he ought not to be barred from having and maintaining his aforesaid action against him, the said defendant, because he says," etc.

Preclusion order. Under Fed.R.Civ. P. 37(b)(2)(B), a party to an action who fails to comply with an order for discovery may be precluded from supporting or opposing designated claims or defenses.

Preemption /priyem(p)shan/. Proclamation.

Precontract. A contract or engagement made by a person, which is of such a nature as to preclude him from lawfully entering into another contract of the same nature.

Predatory intent. In pursuance of Robinson-Patman Act, means that alleged price discriminator must have at least sacrificed present revenues for purpose of driving competitor out of market with hope of recouping losses through subsequent higher prices. International Air Industries, Inc. v. American Excelsior Co., C.A.Tex., 517 F.2d 714, 723. See also Predatory pricing.

An inference to be drawn from predatory pricing is that defendant is acting with anticompetitive intent. Double H Plastics, Inc. v. Sonoco Products Co., D.C.Pa., 575 F.Supp. 389, 394. See also Predatory intent.

Predecessor. One who goes or has gone before; the correlative of "successor." One who has filled an office or station before the present incumbent. Applied to a body politic or corporate, in the same sense as "ancestor" is applied to a natural person.

Predial servitude /priydiyal zarv(y)uhwd/. A charge laid on an estate for the use and utility of another estate belonging to another owner. A charge on one estate for the stipulated benefit of another estate; the benefit must be attributable to any person who may own the dominant estate at any time. Guillotte v. Wells, C.A.La. App., 485 So.2d 187, 189. To exist, there must be two different estates, servient and dominant, belonging to different owners, with benefit to dominant estate. Marina Enterprises v. Ahoy Marine Services, C.A.La.App., 496 So.2d 1080, 1082. See also Predial servitude.

Predisposition. For purposes of entrapment defense, may be defined as defendant's inclination to engage in illegal activity for which he has been charged, i.e., that he is ready and willing to commit the crime. It focuses on defendant's state of mind before government agents suggest that he commit crime. U.S. v. Ortiz, C.A.Utah, 804 F.2d 1161, 1165. See also Premeditation.

Predominant. Something greater or superior in power and influence to others with which it is connected or compared.

Preemption /priyem(p)shan/. Doctrine adopted by U.S. Supreme Court holding that certain matters are of such a national, as opposed to local, character that federal laws preempt or take precedence over state laws. As such, a state may not pass a law inconsistent with the federal law. Examples are federal laws governing interstate commerce. See also Federal preemption; Supremacy clause.

As applied to state action versus local action, "preemption" means that where legislature has adopted scheme for regulation of given subject, local legislative control over such phases of subject as are covered by state regulation ceases. Hutchcraft Van Service, Inc. v. City of Urbana Human Relations Commission, 60 Ill. Dec. 532, 536, 104 Ill.App.3d 817, 433 N.E.2d 329, 333.

In international law, the right of pre-emption was formerly the right of a nation to detain the merchandise of strangers passing through her territories or seas, in order to afford to her subjects the preference of purchase.

In old English law, the first buying of a thing. A privilege formerly enjoyed by the crown, of buying up provisions and other necessaries, by the intervention of the king's purveyors, for the use of his royal household, at an appraised valuation, in preference to all others, and even without consent of the owner.
Preemption claimant. One who has settled upon land subject to pre-emption, with the intention to acquire title to it, and has complied, or is proceeding to comply, in good faith, with the requirements of the law to perfect his right to it. Hosmer v. Wallace, 97 U.S. 575, 581, 24 L.Ed. 1130. See Preemption right.

Preemption doctrine. See Preemption.

Preemption entry. See Entry.

Preemption right. A privilege accorded by the government to the actual settler upon a certain limited portion of the public domain, to purchase such tract at a fixed price to the exclusion of all other applicants. Nix v. Allen, 112 U.S. 129, 5 S.Ct. 70, 28 L.Ed. 675. One who, by settlement upon the public land, or by cultivation of a portion of it, has obtained the right to purchase a portion of the land thus settled upon or cultivated, to the exclusion of all other persons.

Preemptive right. The privilege of a stockholder to maintain a proportionate share of ownership by purchasing a proportionate share of any new stock issues. An existing stockholder in most jurisdictions has the right to buy additional shares of a new issue to preserve his equity before others have a right to purchase shares of the new issue. The purpose of such rights is to protect shareholders from dilution of value and control when new shares are issued. In modern corporation statutes, preemptive rights may be limited or denied. See also Stock.

Pre-existing duty. See Duty.

Preferential claim. A privilege accorded by the government to the settler upon a certain limited portion of the public domain, to purchase such tract at a fixed price to the exclusion of all other applicants. Nix v. Allen, 112 U.S. 129, 5 S.Ct. 70, 28 L.Ed. 675. One who, by settlement upon the public land, or by cultivation of a portion of it, has obtained the right to purchase a portion of the land thus settled upon or cultivated, to the exclusion of all other persons.

Preference. To bring before; to prosecute; to try; to proceed with. Thus, preferring an indictment signifies prosecuting or trying an indictment.

To give advantage, priority, or privilege; to select for first payment, as to prefer one creditor over others.

Preference. The paying or securing to one or more of his creditors, by an insolvent debtor, the whole or a part of their claim, to the exclusion or detriment of the rest. The act of an insolvent debtor who, in distributing his property or in assigning it for the benefit of his creditors, pays or secures to one or more creditors the full amount of their claims or a larger amount than they would be entitled to receive on a pro rata distribution. Jackson v. Coons, 285 Ky. 154, 147 S.W.2d 45, 47. It imports the relation of existing creditors having equal equities at the time of the transfer whereby the rights of one are advanced over those of another. In re George Rodman, Inc., C.A.Okl., 792 F.2d 125, 127.

In bankruptcy law, a transfer by an insolvent debtor to one or more of his or her creditors whereby the creditor to whom the property was transferred is put in a better position than other creditors with respect to their priority claims to the assets of the insolvent. The bankruptcy trustee may disallow such preferential payments or transfers of property. Bankruptcy Code § 547. See also Secured creditor; Voidable preference.

Preference share. One giving its holder a preference, either as to receipt of dividends, or as to payment in case of winding up, or both. In re Schaffer Stores Co., 224 App.Div. 268, 229 N.Y.S. 735, 739.

Preferential assignment. An assignment of property for the benefit of creditors, made by an insolvent debtor, in which it is directed that a preference (right to be paid first in full) shall be given to a creditor or creditors therein named over other creditors. Such assignments are controlled by statute in most states, normally requiring recording, filing of schedules of assets and liabilities, giving notice to creditors, etc. Most all state statutes prohibit preferential assignments as being fraudulent conveyances. See Preference.

Preferential claim. See Preferential assignment.

Preferential debts. In bankruptcy, those debts which are payable in preference to all others; as, wages of employees and administrative costs. Such debts are classified according to priority of claim. See Bankruptcy Code § 507.

Preferential dividend. See Preferred stock.

Preferential shop. A place of employment in which union members are given preference over nonunion members in matters of employment by agreement with the employer. A labor situation in a business in which preference is given to union men in hiring and layoff, but nonunion men may be hired when members of the union are not available. See Right to work laws.

Preferential tariff. A tariff which imposes lower rates of duty on goods imported from some countries ("preferred countries") than on the same goods imported from other countries. See also Most favored nation clause.

Preferential transfer. See Preference; Preferential assignment.

Preferred. Possessing or accorded a priority, advantage, or privilege. Generally denoting a prior or superior claim or right of payment as against another thing of the same kind or class; e.g. creditor with perfected security interest.

Preferred creditor. Creditor with preferential right to payment over junior creditors; e.g. creditor with perfected security interest has priority over unsecured creditor. U.C.C. § 9–301. See also Preferential debts.

Preferred dividend. See Dividend.
Preferred dockets. Lists of preference cases prepared by the clerks when the cases are set for trial. For example, because of the constitutional right to a speedy trial in criminal cases, criminal dockets are normally given preference over civil dockets.

Preferred stock. Stock shares that have preferential rights to dividends or to amounts distributable on liquidation, or to both, ahead of common shareholders. Preferred shares are usually entitled only to receive specified limited amounts as dividends or on liquidation. If preferred shares are entitled to share in excess distributions with common shareholders on some defined basis, they are participating preferred shares. Participating preferred shares may also be called class A common, or some similar designation to reflect its open-ended rights. See also Stock.

Callable. Preferred stock which is subject by its terms to being called in for payment at a predetermined price.

Cumulative dividend. If a dividend is passed, it must be paid to the preferred stockholders before the common stockholders receive their current dividend, and hence, the dividends accumulate in connection with this type of preferred stock.

Non-cumulative dividend. Once a preferred dividend is passed in a particular period, the right to that dividend has passed though the preferred stockholder is entitled to his dividend in the next period before the common stockholders receive their dividend.

Participating. That type of preferred stock which is entitled to additional dividends beyond its stated dividend after the common stock dividend has been paid.

Preferred stock bailout. A procedure whereby the issuance, sale, and later redemption or a preferred stock dividend was used by a shareholder to obtain long-term capital gains without any loss of voting control over the corporation. In effect, therefore, the shareholder was able to bail-out corporate profits without suffering the consequences of dividend income treatment. This procedure led to the enactment by Congress of I.R.C. § 306 which, if applicable, converts the prior long-term capital gain on the sale of the stock to ordinary income. In these circumstances, the amount of ordinary income is limited to the shareholder's portion of the corporation's earnings and profits existing when the preferred stock was issued as a stock dividend. However, the enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1986 has changed the impact of I.R.C. § 306 substantially due to the repeal of the favorable tax treatment previously given to long term capital gains.

Prior. Preferred stock which takes precedence over other issues of preferred stock of the same corporation.

Preferred stockholders. Beneficial holders of preferred stock shares.

Preferred stockholders' contract. Term used to describe the provisions of the articles of incorporation, the bylaws, or the resolution of the board of directors, creating and defining the rights of holders of the preferred shares in question. Preferred shareholders have only very limited statutory or common law rights outside of the preferred shareholders' contract.

Pregnancy. The condition resulting from the fertilized ovum. The existence of the condition beginning at the moment of conception and terminating with delivery of the child.

Extra uterine or ectopic pregnancy is the development of the ovum outside of the uterine cavity, as in the Fallopian tubes or ovary. Extra uterine pregnancy commonly terminates by rupture of the sac, profuse internal hemorrhage, and death if not relieved promptly by a surgical operation.

Pregnancy, plea of. A plea which a woman capitally convicted may plead in stay of execution; for this, though it is no stay of judgment, yet operates as a respite of execution until she is delivered. See also Matrons, jury of.

Pregnant negative. See Negative pregnant.

Prejudice. A forejudgment; bias; partiality; preconceived opinion. A leaning towards one side of a cause for some reason other than a conviction of its justice.

Evidence. Within rule allowing exclusion of relevant evidence if probative value is substantially outweighed by danger of unfair prejudice, means undue tendency to move tribunal to decide on improper basis. State v. Trafton, Me., 425 A.2d 1320, 1324. See Fed.Evid.R. 403.

Of judge. That which disqualifies judge is condition of mind, which sways judgment and renders judge unable to exercise his functions impartially in particular case. It refers to mental attitude or disposition of the judge toward a party to the litigation, and not to any views that he may entertain regarding the subject matter involved. State ex rel. Mitchell v. Sage Stores Co., 157 Kan. 622, 143 P.2d 652, 655.

Speedy trial. Prejudice with respect to right to speedy trial means actual prejudice to defendant's ability to present effective defense, U.S. v. Menke, D.C.Pa., 339 F.Supp. 1023, 1026, and such prejudice is not confined to merely an impairment of the defense but includes any threat to what has been termed an accused's significant stakes, psychological, physical and financial, in the prompt termination of a proceeding which may ultimately deprive him of life, liberty or property. U.S. v. Dreyer, C.A.N.J., 533 F.2d 112, 118.

Without prejudice. Where an offer or admission is made "without prejudice," or a motion is denied or a bill in equity dismissed "without prejudice," it is meant as a declaration that no rights or privileges of the party concerned are to be considered as thereby waived or lost, except in so far as may be expressly conceded or decided. See also Dismissal with prejudice; Dismissal without prejudice.

PRELIMINARY PROOF. In insurance, the first proof offered of a loss occurring under the policy, usually sent in to the underwriters with the notification of claim.

PRELIMINARY PROSPECTS. See Red herring.

PREMARI TAL AGREEMENTS. See Antenuptial agreements.

PREMEDITATE. To think of an act beforehand; to contrive and design; to plot or lay plans for the execution of a purpose. See Deliberate; Premeditation.

PREMEDITATED DESIGN. In homicide cases, the mental purpose, the formed intent, to take human life. Premeditated murder is murder in the first degree.

PREMEDITADELY. Thought of beforehand, for any length of time, however short.

PREMEDITATION. The act of meditating in advance; deliberation upon a contemplated act; plotting or contriving; a design formed to do something before it is done. Decision or plan to commit a crime, such as murder, before committing it. A prior determination to do an act, but such determination need not exist for any particular period before it is carried into effect. Thought of beforehand for any length of time, however short. State v. Marston, Mo., 479 S.W.2d 481, 484. Premeditation is one of the elements of first degree murder, and in this context, means that defendant acts with either the intention or the knowledge that he will kill another human being when such intention or knowledge precedes the killing by a length of time to permit reflection. State v. Clabourne, 142 Ariz. 335, 690 P.2d 54, 64. See also Deliberate; Deliberation; Malice aforethought; Willful.

PREMISES. That which is put before; that which precedes; the foregoing statements. Thus, in logic, the two introductory propositions of the syllogism are called the "premises," and from them the conclusion is deduced. So, in pleading, the expression "in consideration of the premises" means in consideration of the matters hereinbefore stated.

PREMISES AND PROPERTY. Land with its appurtenances and structures thereon. Premises is an elastic and inclusive term, and it does not have one definite and fixed meaning; its meaning is to be determined by its context and is dependent on circumstances in which used, and may mean a room, shop, building, or any definite area. Allen v. Genry, Ala., 97 So.2d 828, 832.

A dwelling unit and the structure of which it is a part and faculties and appurtenances therein and grounds, areas, and facilities held out for the use of tenants generally or whose use is promised to the tenant. Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, 1.301(a).

In criminal law. The term as used in a search warrant includes land, buildings, and appurtenances thereto. State v. Trujillo, 95 N.M. 535, 624 P.2d 44.

In workers' compensation acts. "Premises" of the employer as used in workers' compensation acts is not restricted to the permanent site of the statutory employer's business nor limited to property owned or leased by him but contemplates any place under the exclusive control of employer where his usual business is being carried on or conducted. Boatman v. Superior Outdoor Advertising Co., Mo.App., 482 S.W.2d 743, 745.

A bounty or bonus; a consideration given to invite a loan or a bargain, as the consideration paid to the assignor by the assignee of a lease, or to the transferer by the transferee of shares of stock, etc. So stock is said to be "at a premium" when its market price exceeds its nominal or face value. The excess of issue (or market) price over par value. See Par.

In granting a lease, part of the rent is sometimes capitalized and paid in a lump sum at the time the lease is granted. This is called a "premium." The sum paid or agreed to be paid by an insured to the underwriter (insurer) as the consideration for the insurance. The price for insurance protection for a specified period of exposure. See also Earned premium; Net premium; Net single premium.

Advance premium. Payment made at the start of the period covered by the insurance policy.

Premium note. A promissory note given by the insured for part or all of the amount of the premium.

Securities. The amount by which a preferred stock or bond may sell above its par (face) value. In the case of a new issue of bonds or stocks, premium is the amount the market price rises over the original selling price. Also refers to a charge sometimes made when a stock is borrowed to make delivery on a short sale. May refer, also, to redemption price of a bond or preferred stock if it is higher than face value.

Unearned premium. Portion of original premium not yet earned by insurance company and therefore due policyholder if the policy should be cancelled. In accounting, the account which reflects that portion of a premium that has been paid for insurance coverage which has not yet been extended. The basic insurance reserve in the casualty insurance business. Since policyholders typically pay the full premium in advance, the premium is wholly "unearned" when the primary insurer receives it. United States v. Consumer Life Ins. Co., 430 U.S. 725, 729, 97 S.Ct. 1440, 1443, 52 L.Ed.2d 4. See I.R.C. § 801(c).

Prenomen. Lat. The first or Christian name of a person.

Pre-nuptial agreement. One entered into by prospective spouses prior to marriage but in contemplation and in consideration thereof; by it, the property or other financial rights of one or both of the prospective spouses are determined or are secured to one or both of them or their children. Friedlander v. Friedlander, 80 Wash.2d 293, 494 P.2d 208, 212. A number of states have adopted the Uniform Premarital Agreement Act which prescribes the content, execution, amendment, etc. of such agreements. See also Antenuptial agreement; Marital agreements; Post-nuptial agreement.

Prepaid expense. An expense paid before it is currently due. In accounting, an expenditure for a benefit not yet enjoyed, e.g. pre-paid insurance premiums from the standpoint of the insured. Cash basis as well as accrual basis taxpayers are generally required to capitalize pre-payments for rent, insurance, etc. that cover more than one year. Deductions are taken during the period the benefits are received.

Prepaid income. In accounting, income received but not yet earned; also referred to as deferred revenue.

Prepaid interest. Interest paid before the time it is earned.

Prepaid legal services. System by which taxpayers may pay premiums to cover future legal services much the same as payments are made for future medical expenses. Such plan may be either open-ended whereby the person can secure legal services from the attorney of his choice, or closed-end whereby he must secure the services of a particular attorney, group of attorneys, or list of attorneys.

Preparation. With respect to criminal offense, consists in devising or arranging means or measures necessary for its commission, while attempt is direct movement toward commission after preparations are made. State v. Quick, 199 S.C. 256, 19 S.E.2d 101, 103. See also Aid and abet.

Prepare. To provide with necessary means; to make ready; to provide with what is appropriate or necessary.

Prepayment. Payment of debt obligation or expense before it is due.

Prepayment clause. Provision in mortgage or note giving borrower right to pay off the indebtedness before it becomes due. See also Prepayment penalty.
